Petition for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 16th November, 1927.

Mr. H. C. Kumar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. L. Kapur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revision of an order passed by the trial Court on the 30th of November, 1927, whereby it reviewed its previous order of the 16th November, 1927, modifying the conditions on which it had set aside ex parte proceedings against the defendant-respondent.

This suit in which these orders were passed has not yet been decided. The relevant facts are that the defendant failed to appear on a particular date and the Court directed ex parte proceedings to be taken against him. Before the judgment was announced an application was made to set aside the ex parte proceedings and this was granted on certain conditions. On review, one of these conditions was modified and the Court directed the parties to produce their evidence. As these various orders have been passed in a pending case and are interlocutory they are not orders in a "case which has been decided by a subordinate Court" within the meaning of s. 44 of the Punjab Courts Act and a revision is not competent in view of the Full Bench decision in Firm Lal Chand-Mangal Sen v. Firm Behari Lal-Mehr Chand (1).

Mr. H. C. Kumar, for the petitioner, relies on Piroj Shah v. Qarib Shah (2) and Dittu Ram v. Nawab (3) in support of his contention that this Court has got the power to interfere with such orders on revision. I am, however, of opinion that these cases are clearly distinguishable as in each of them the suits had (at least for the time being) been decided by the passing of an ex parte decree. In the present case the suit is still pending and no decree has yet been passed. The orders are, therefore, of a purely interlocutory nature and no revision lies. Accordingly I dismiss the petition for revision, but having regard to all the circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

The Deputy Registrar will see that the record is returned to the lower Court tomorrow.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 7—Court's power to appoint as guardian person who has not applied—Practice—Court entering into correspondence on matter judicially before Court—Taking notice of statements in such correspondence, legality of.

It is not open to a Court acting proprio motu to appoint as guardian of the property of a minor a person who has not applied to be so appointed. [p. 399, col. 1.]

Badr Bakhsh v. Jangbaz Khan (1) and Jaiwanti Kumri v. Gajadhar Upadhyaya (5), followed.
Haji Hirji v. Kasim Hirji (6) and Islāman v. Maqbulan (7), dissented from.

It is objectionable for a Court to enter into correspondence with a person with regard to a matter pending judicially before it, and it is illegal to take notice of the statements made in such correspondence by such person who has not chosen to substantiate them either by himself going into the witness-box or by leading other evidence. Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Kangra at Dharamsala, dated the 7th March, 1927.

Mr. Muhammad Tufail, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Musammât Sakina Begam against the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Kangra appointing the respondent Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan as the guardian of the property of her son Farrakh Muhammad, minor, aged nine years. The proceedings which led to the appointment of the respondent as guardian are not described in the order under appeal. It is, therefore, necessary to give them in some detail in this judgment.

It appears that one Faiz Muhammad

Khan of Rehlu, died about eight years ago, leaving him surviving his widow Musammât Sakina Begam, appellant, and a minor son Farrakh Muhammad who was then about one year old. His property consisted of two squares of land in the Lyallpur District and some immoveable property in the Kangra District, to which the minor succeeded. On the 12th of October, 1926, Ali Muhammad, who was a first cousin of Faiz Muhammad Khan deceased, applied to be appointed as the guardian of the property of the minor. It was alleged that the mother of the minor had not been managing the property satisfactorily. The mother opposed the application and contended that she had been managing the property in the best interests of the minor. An issue was framed as to whether it was necessary to appoint a guardian at all, and, if so, whether the applicant Ali Muhammad, was a fit person to be so appointed. Ali Muhammad, however, led no evidence to prove this issue but Musammât Sakina Begam produced two witnesses. On the 21st of December, 1926, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge instead of proceeding to adjudicate upon the application of Ali Muhammad sent a robkar to Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan, respondent, Honorary Magistrate, Rehlu, who is an uncle of the deceased father of the minor, asking him to make suggestions for the protection of the property of the minor. No reply having been received from the Raja a reminder was sent to him. On the 21st of February, the Raja replied saying that the lands of the minor were not being properly managed, that it was necessary to appoint a guardian for the protection of his property and that he was prepared to assist in the management of the estate if a "paid guardian" was appointed. He suggested that one Munir Ullah Khan was a fit person to be appointed the "paid guardian" on Rs. 15 per mensem. This reply was laid before the Court on the 7th of March, 1927.

In the meantime the original applicant Ali Muhammad had died on the 4th of February, 1927, and no application had been made either by Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan or by any other person to be substituted on the record in his place with a view to continue the proceedings started at his instance. On the 7th of March, neither Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan nor any agent on his behalf was present but the Court, on reading the reply received from him to the robkar sent by it, proceeded to appoint the Raja as guardian of the property of the minor. In the order it was stated that it was not necessary to take any security from the guardian, and that he could entertain a paid manager on a suitable salary.

Against this order the present appeal has been preferred by Musammât Sakina Begam and various objections have been taken on her behalf against the appointment of the respondent. The first point to be considered is whether, the application made by Ali Muhammad for appointment as guardian of the property of the minor had or had not abated on the date that the order under appeal was passed.

As already pointed out, Ali Muhammad had died on the 4th of February, 1927, and no application had been made to substitute any other person in his place. Mr. Muhammad Tufail for the appellant urges that the proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act are personal to the applicant and on his death the "right to sue" does not survive and the Court has no power to proceed with that application any further, but that it is open to any other person to apply for his own appointment as guardian on a fresh application. Mr. Niaz Muhammad for the respondent contends, on the other hand, that the "right to sue" in such a case survives and that the proceedings can be continued by any person interested in the minor. The rulings on the point as to whether the "right to sue" in such proceedings survives or not are not uniform. In Badr Bakhsh v. Jangbaz Khan (1) and Gangabai v. Khashabai (2) it was held that the right to sue does not survive, but a contrary view was taken in a Single Bench judgment of the Chief Court in Arjan Singh v. Gujri (3) which has been cited with approval by the Madras High Court in Samid Chetti v. Adaikalani Chetti (4). I do not think it necessary for the purposes of this case to decide which of these rival views is correct, for, in my opinion, the procedure adopted by the lower Court is erroneous—according to either view. If the law was correctly laid down in Arjan Singh v. Gujri (3) and in the Madras case above cited and it be presumed that the “right to sue” survives, it would be necessary under O. XXII, rr. 1 and 3, Civil Procedure Code, for someone to apply to be made a representative of the deceased applicant and the proceedings could be continued only after such application had been granted. In this case no such application was admittedly made. Indeed, as pointed out already, Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan, the respondent, was not even present in Court personally or by agent, and, of course, there was no representation on behalf of any of the heirs or legal representatives of the original applicant Ali Muhammad. In the absence of such substitution, there being no applicant before the Court, the proceedings had terminated and it had no jurisdiction to proceed further with the case. If, on the other hand, the contrary view be correct, that the “right to sue” was personal to the original applicant and did not survive after his death, the proceedings automatically abated on the 4th of February, 1927, and should have been consigned to the record room. In this view, also, it must be held that the proceedings had abated and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the order appealed against.

The appointment of the respondent is irregular for the additional reason that no application had been made on his behalf for his appointment as guardian. Under the leading authority of the Chief Court, Badr Bakhsh v. Jangbaz Khan (1) which has, so far as I am aware, not been doubted in any subsequent ruling of the Chief Court or of this Court, it was not open to the Senior Subordinate Judge acting proprio motu to appoint as guardian of the property of the minor a person who had not applied to be so appointed. The Calcutta High Court has also taken the same view in Jaiwanti Kumri v. Gajadhar Upadhyaya (5). I am not unmindful of the fact that a contrary view has been taken by the Judicial Commissioners of Sind and Oudh in Haji Hirji v. Kasim Hirji (6) and Islamān v. Maqbulan (7). But after giving the matter my fullest consideration, and having regard to the clear wording of ss. 7 and 8 of the Guardians and Wards Act, I venture to think with all respect; that the sounder view is that taken in Badr Bakhsh v. Jangbaz Khan (1). I, therefore, hold that the appointment of the respondent was irregular for this reason also.

There is yet another ground on which the order of the lower Court cannot be sustained. The lower Court had of its own motion sent a robkar to the respondent, but he had not expressed his willingness to be appointed as guardian of the property of the minor and all that he had stated was that he would be prepared to assist the “paid” guardian (whatever that expression might mean) if one was appointed by the Court. In his reply the Raja had made allegations of mismanagement against the appellant and the Court seems to have accepted them as proved without any legal evidence on the record and without even calling upon the mother to meet these allegations, if she could. It seems to me that the entire procedure followed by the learned Subordinate Judge in this matter was misconceived. It is hardly necessary to point out that it is objectionable for a Court to enter into correspondence of this kind, with regard to a matter pending judicially before it, and it is illegal to take notice of the statements made in such correspondence by a person, who has not chosen to substantiate them either by himself going into the witness-box or by leading other evidence. In these circumstances there were no materials on the record to justify the conclusion that the mother was incapable of managing the property and the appointment of a guardian was necessary. It may be noted that similar allegations had been made by the original applicant Ali Muhammad in his application but he had failed to support them by any evidence and had closed the case on the 27th of December, 1926. Therefore, even if the Senior Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to proceed with the matter after the death of Ali Muhammad and to consider the respondent as eligible for appointment as guardian without any application by him, it was necessary to make a proper enquiry in accordance with law on the issue which arose in the proceedings.

For the foregoing reasons I accept the appeal and set aside the order appointing the respondent as guardian. As the respondent through Counsel has strenuously opposed this appeal, he must pay the appellant her costs in this Court.

I wish to make it clear that this order is not intended to indicate in any way that Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan, respondent, is not a fit person to be appointed guardian of the property of the minor or to preclude him or any other person from applying to be appointed as such in proceedings instituted and conducted in accordance with law.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 75—Order dismissing claim of stranger to money ordered to be paid to Official Receiver—Appeal—Creditors, whether necessary parties.

An order of a District Judge dismissing a claim preferred by a stranger to money ordered to be paid to a Receiver in insolvency is a decision on a question of title within the meaning of s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and is appealable under s. 75 of that Act. The creditors of the insolvent are not necessary parties to an appeal from such an order.

East India Cigarette Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Ananda Mohan Basak (1), followed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 4th March, 1927.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellant.

Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., for Mr. Jaggan Nath Aggarwal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Amar Singh of Jullundur City authorised three gentlemen of that City to sell his property for the purpose of paying off his debts. These gentlemen who are described as trustees sold by auction a house of Amar Singh to Munshi Ram, appellant, for Rs. 5,200. A deed of sale was now to be executed by the trustees and registered. Munshi Ram deposited Rs. 5,200 with Lala Dwarka Das, Treasurer, to be paid to the trustees before the Sub-Registrar but no deed was executed because the trustees refused to enter therein an indemnity clause.

Long after that Amar Singh was adjudged an insolvent and the Official Receiver applied to the District Judge for orders about the money that was in the hands of Lala Dwarka Das. The District Judge endorsed the following order on that application:—

"All moneys in hand should be made over to the Official Receiver. 25th February 1927."

On the 4th March, 1927, Munshi Ram presented a petition to the District Judge stating that the money was his, and praying that it may not be handed over to the Official Receiver. But the District Judge ordered Lala Dwarka Das, who was with the petitioner at that time, to pay the money to the Official Receiver. This order is in vernacular and runs thus:—

"Munshi Ram wants to get back the money. For the reasons recorded in the order in English the money be made over to the Official Receiver."

The order in English referred to above was presumably the order of the 25th February, 1927, which, however, contains no reasons whatsoever.

Now it is clear that it was highly unsatisfactory to dispose of in this summary manner, without any enquiry a matter involving a question of title to a sum of Rs. 5,200. Before making any order the District Judge should have decided whether the money belonged to Munshi Ram or to the insolvent.

Counsel for the Official Receiver objects that the order of the District Judge is not appealable and that even if it is, the appeal must fail because the creditors of the insolvent have not been made respondents. Both these contentions are untenable. The order of the District Judge disposes of a question of title and hence falls under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 and is appealable under cl. (2) of s. 75 of that Act. The creditors are not necessary parties to this appeal as held in East India Cigarette Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Ananda Mohan Basak (1).

I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and direct that the application of the appellant be disposed of in accordance with law after a proper enquiry.

CIVIL SUIT No. 740 of 1920.

August 18, 1924.

Present:—Justice Sir C. V. Kumaraswami
Sastri, Kt.GURUMOORTHY IYER, MINOR, BY HIS NEXT FRIEND MEENAMBAL—PLAINTIFF
versusP. S. SUBRAMANIAM AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS.*Hindu Law—Debts of father—Liability of son—Illegal and immoral debts—Burden of proof—Direct connection between debt and immorality, proof of, whether necessary—Open reckless life—Duty of creditors —Want of inquiry, effect of—Constructive notice—
Mortgage—Subrogation—Mortgagee directed to pay off prior mortgage, right of, to subrogation.*

Although in the case of a joint Hindu family the sons are ordinarily liable for their father's debts even if the debts are contracted by the father for his own benefit without any legal necessity so long as the debts are not incurred for an unlawful or immoral purpose, yet where a youngman who has just attained majority and who has inherited valuable property which would yield an income more than sufficient to keep him in comfort having regard to the position of the family and its requirements, leads an openly reckless and immoral life and borrows large sums of moneys, which will not in the ordinary circumstances be necessary for any lawful purpose, and the lenders make no enquiries and are merely satisfied with the fact that there were antecedent debts or with the statement of the borrower that he wants money for family expenses, the lenders cannot as against the minor sons of such borrower get the protection which is usually given to bona fide lenders, unless they prove that they made reasonable enquiries. [p. 410, col. 2; p. 411, col. 1.]

It is not necessary in such a case that direct connection should be shown between the debt and the purpose for which it was borrowed. Constructive notice or the absence of any enquiry would be sufficient. [p. 410, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

It is not the law that, in order to absolve themselves from liability, the sons must prove not merely the purpose for which such loans were contracted but also that the lenders knew of the immoral purpose of the loan. It would be quite sufficient to prove that the borrower was at that time leading a licentious life beyond his means, indulging in drink, riot, prostitution and debauchery, and that at the same time he was without any business or occupation upon which the money might legitimately have been spent without showing on which particular act of immorality the money was spent. If it is proved clearly that at the time the borrower was notoriously wasting his substance on riotous living and spending large sums beyond his income and above his station in life in this way only, a loan contracted in the midst of such living and spent upon it would be a loan contracted for immoral purposes. [p. 412, col. 1.]

[Case-law considered.]

The question of subrogation is really one of intention and has to be gathered with reference to the terms of the various documents concerned though there is always a presumption that a person discharging a prior mortgage intends to keep it alive for his benefit. [p. 409, col. 1.]

Where a person raises money to pay off a prior mortgage and the mortgagee pays as the agent of the mortgagor there can be no question of subrogation. [p. 409, col. 1.]

The mere fact that a mortgagee keeps money in his hands to pay off a prior encumbrance and does not run the risk he would otherwise incur if he pays money to the mortgagor to pay off the prior encumbrance and he does not do so, will not make the mortgagee an agent of the mortgagor. [p. 403, col. 2.]

Suit by the plaintiff for partition and for a declaration that certain debts incurred by his father were not binding upon him.

Messrs. V. C. Seshachariar, K. Krishnaswami Iyengar and R. Rajagopala Iyengar, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. M. A. Tirunarayanachariar, T. L. Venkatarama Iyer, M. Subbaraya Iyer and S. Gurusami Chetti, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the minor plaintiff represented by his mother as his next friend for a partition against his father the 1st defendant.

Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are mortgagees from the 1st defendant.

The plaint sets out that the plaintiff and the 1st defendant constitute a joint undivided Hindu family, that Gurumurthi Iyya, the father of the 1st defendant and grandfather of the plaintiff was a Subordinate Judge and died in about 1903 leaving considerable properties, mostly immovable, of the value of Rs. 2,37,000, that the 1st defendant was only six years of age when his father died and was under the guardianship of his mother till about the year 1918, that even before he attained majority he fell into bad company and was leading a very dissolute and immoral life, that the 1st defendant attained majority in 1918, and has been borrowing monies very recklessly for illegal and immoral purposes and has incurred considerable debts to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000, that the joint family possesses considerable immovable properties, the income wherefrom is more than sufficient to meet the requirements of the joint family and would even leave a large surplus, if properly managed, that there was no necessity for the 1st defendant to borrow any money for family purposes, that the money-lenders were fully aware of the youth and inexperience and the immoral habits of the 1st defendant and were equally reckless in advancing money at high discount, that most of the transactions are unconscionable in their nature, that the debts are not binding on the plaintiff and the joint family estate, that the 1st defendant's conduct in recklessly borrowing and alienating the pro-parties and not looking after the interests of the family has rendered it necessary in the interest of the minor plaintiff to place the estate in the hands of a Receiver and that the plaintiff's share should be delivered to him.

Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are made parties as they hold mortgages in respect of certain properties belonging to the joint family.

The plaint contains the usual prayers for an account of the assets and liabilities of the joint family, for a declaration that the debts incurred by the 1st defendant are not binding on the plaintiff or the joint family estate and for further reliefs.

The mother of the plaintiff was added as the 5th defendant and his minor sister as the 6th defendant on the ground that they are entitled to maintenance and that the 6th defendant is also entitled to her marriage expenses.

The 1st defendant filed no written statement.

The 2nd defendant filed a written statement pleading that he is not aware of the allegations in the plaint as to the 1st defendant leaving a very dissolute and immoral life or borrowing monies or alienating properties for illegal and immoral purposes, that he lent money to the 1st defendant for the purpose of discharging antecedent and other debts binding on the family, that the consideration for his mortgage went towards discharging prior mortgage debts due by the 1st defendant and the plaintiff to N. R. K. Thathachariar, High Court Vakil, Madras, S. Rathnavelu Chetti, Dubash, Messrs. Best & Co. and Madhavji Govindji and a simple debt to P. A. N. Annamalai Chetti and other sundry debts and for necessary purposes, that he paid the above creditors directly and obtained vouchers for the discharge of these debts, that he made due enquiries as to the necessity for the loan, that the 1st defendant executed a registered deed of mortgage on the 28th of November, 1919, for Rs. 58,000 agreeing to re-pay the same with interest at 12 per cent. per annum within the 31st of December, 1920, that the mortgage is binding on the minor and that the suit as framed for taking an account of the joint family properties with mesne profits and for a declaration that the debts incurred by the 1st defendant are not binding on the plaintiff is not maintainable.

The 3rd defendant filed a written statement denying the allegations in the plaint as to the illegality and immorality of the debts contracted by the 1st defendant and pleading that he is a mortgagee with possession under a deed of mortgage deed, dated the 16th of July, 1919, of items Nos. 1 and 4 of the plaint to secure the re-payment of Rs. 6,500 advanced to the 1st defendant, that the 1st defendant subsequently received another sum of Rs. 1,000 and executed a further charge on the said properties on the 18th of September, 1919, that both the mortgages were executed for full and adequate consideration and for purposes binding on the plaintiff and not for any illegal or immoral purpose, that at any rate he was not aware that the monies were borrowed for such purposes, that Rs. 6,500 is due for principal and Rs. 772-14 for interest on the first mortgage and Rs. 1,000 for principal and Rs. 156-5-4 for interest on the second mortgage and that he has no objection to the partition asked for by the plaintiff provided provision is made for the payment of the money due to him.

The 4th defendant filed a written statement pleading that he is not aware of the allegations made in paras. 5 to 10 of the plaint and knows nothing of the alleged dissolute and immoral habits of the 1st defendant, that the 1st defendant applied to him for a loan for the purpose of discharging antecedent debts and to redeem family jewels and he lent the 1st defendant Rs. 10,000 for that purpose, that he is not a money-lender by profession, that he advanced the money after careful enquiry and bona fide, that the debt is binding on the plaintiff and that the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable.

The 5th defendant filed a written statement stating that she has been living apart from her husband, the 1st defendant, since February, 1921, for the reasons given by her in her written statement filed in C. S. No. 946 of 1921 which was filed by the 1st defendant for restitution of conjugal rights and which was withdrawn by the plaintiff therein that she is entitled to live separately and to claim separate maintenance and that an adequate provision of Rs. 50 a month should be made for her maintenance the same being created as a charge on the joint family properties.

The 6th defendant filed a written statement through her guardian ad litem claiming maintenance at Rs. 50 per mensem and Rs. 5,000 for her marriage expenses,

As there was no dispute raised as to the necessity for a partition between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant and as it was suggested that the property which would fall to the share of the 1st defendant would be sufficient to meet all the debts created by him irrespective of any question of necessity, the suit was referred to the Official Referee to suggest a scheme for partition and he submitted an interim report on the 26th of September, 1921 wherein he estimates the total value of the house properties at Rs. 90,000 and as regards the land in Perambore he states that there was evidence given before him at the enquiry showing that there was a bona fide offer for Rs. 1,25,000 and that in making the offer the person who was making the offer was not putting a fancy price on the property. He made a proposal that pending the final adjustment of the rights of the parties the house properties in Madras should be allotted to the 1st defendant as against his share in the family properties, that the properties should be sold free from the encumbrances created by the 1st defendant and the proceeds brought into Court and applied towards the discharge of the mortgage debts contracted by the 1st defendant and the balance towards the discharge of other debts and that the other matters outstanding between the parties including the determination of the value of the Perambore land (item No. 1 in the plaint) should be adjourned till the sales were effected. It appears that the Counsel for the defendant accepted the proposal but the Counsel for the plaintiff felt doubtful whether he would be justified in accepting the proposal on behalf of the minor plaintiff. The matter came on before me for consideration and I passed an order on the 27th of September, 1921, in which after setting out the report of the Official Referee I observed as follows:—

"In these circumstances I think the best thing will be to direct that the houses in Madras be sold by the Official Referee free from encumbrance at the earliest possible date and that the sale proceeds be brought into Court, the mortgagees and plaintiffs having the same rights over the monies as they now have on the properties. The question of the binding nature of the mortgages will be determined later on. The 1st defendant will bring the sale proclamation at once, and have the conduct of the sale, and bear the necessary expenses in respect of the same. The Receiver will pay the necessary funds to the 1st defendant for bearing the Court expenses in connection with the sale."

An order was passed on the 26th April, 1921, directing the Official Referee to advertise and call for claims against the 1st defendant and to take an account of the liabilities due by the 1st defendant in respect of such claims and the Official Referee submitted his report on the 23rd of August, 1921. The concluding portion of his report sets out the names of the claimants and the amount allowed by him in respect of each claim. Objections were filed to this report and I confirmed the report with certain modifications in my order dated the 4th of October, 1921. One other claim—the claim of Kishanchand Chellaram was asked to be disposed of by the Official Referee and he submitted his report on that matter on the 2nd of May, 1922.

Sales were held in pursuance of my order referred to above of the Madras properties. As regards the debts due by the 1st defendant, irrespective of the question of their legality and illegality and their binding nature on the plaintiff, there would have been probably no necessity to enquire into the nature of those debts or their binding nature of the plaintiff but for the very heavy fall in prices which took place very shortly after the report of the Official Referee. The basis of his report as regards partition being thus swept away and as it is admitted by all parties that the present value of all the properties is much lower than the value put by the Official Referee, it is necessary to enquire into the binding nature of the debts.

So far as the factum of some of the simple debts incurred by the 1st defendant is not much disputed before me and the trial mainly related to the necessity for and the binding nature of those debts so far as the minor plaintiff was concerned.

Before dealing with the evidence adduced I think it is necessary to refer to certain facts as to which there is no dispute. The plaintiff's grandfather Mr. Gurumurthi Ayya was a Subordinate Judge and died on the 30th of July, 1903, leaving the 1st defendant his only son. In 1904 the 1st defendant was about seven years old. The 1st defendant's mother obtained a Succession Certificate from the District Court of Tanjore on the 17th of October, 1903, and applied to this Court in 1904 to be appointed guardian of the person and property of the minor and her petition (O. P. No. 6 of 1904) has been filed as Ex. G in this suit. The value of the properties in 1904 after deducting the debts was said to be Rs. 24,130 5-4 and it was also stated that the minor would be entitled to certain bazaars in China Bazaar Road and to some houses situated in Malayaperumal Street and Anderson Street which were in the name of his mother. The value of the properties is as given in 1904 and there can be no doubt that having regard to the fact that properties went on increasing in value they would be worth a great deal more now. The Official Referee valued the properties at over two lakhs in 1921. An order was passed on the 15th of March, 1904, appointing the mother of the 1st defendant as guardian of his person and property allowing Rs. 75 a month for the expenses of maintenance and directing the guardian to file accounts. Accounts were filed from time to time. An order was obtained by the guardian permitting her to borrow Rs. 3,000 from the Mylapore Fund and this amount was borrowed and the debt has subsequently been discharged. Accounts were filed in Court from time to time and it is not suggested that the income was insufficient to meet the needs of the family or that it was necessary to borrow any more monies during the period of the 1st defendant's minority. The age of the 1st defendant as given in the petition, Ex. G, is not disputed by any of the parties and there can be no doubt as to its correctness. The 1st defendant became a major in 1918 and it is not disputed that at the time the value of the properties left by his father increased considerably and the properties were worth over a lakh and half and that the rents which the properties were yielding also increased. It is clear from the evidence which I shall refer to later on that the 1st defendant began to lead a vicious life even during his minority and that he borrowed moneys for immoral purposes before he was a major.

Meenambal Ammal, plaintiff's first witness, is the mother-in-law of the 1st defendant. She states that her daughter was married to the 1st defendant in 1912 and she joined him in 1914, that in 1917 she came to know that the 1st defendant was drinking and leading an immoral life and was keeping a Eurasian woman in his house and that he was visiting Bangalore, the Nilgris and other places with that woman. She states that the property was then yielding Rs. 500 a month; that Rs. 150 was the income that his mother was getting from her own properties, that the only members of the 1st defendant's family who had to be maintained were himself, his wife, his mother and an infant son and a daughter, that the house in which the family was living was the property of the 1st defendant's mother and, therefore, no rent was being paid and that the expenses of the family would not be more than Rs. 80 a month. She states that in 1917 the 1st defendant went to Malabar and brought a woman from there, and that she was living with the 1st defendant for about a year, that the Eurasian lady Mrs. C. came to live with the 1st defendant in his house and she was kept upstairs from the year 1918 or 1919 and that the lady left the 1st defendant only after the institution of the suit in 1921. Plaintiff's 2nd witness Swarnammal who is the wife of the 1st defendant states that she joined her husband in 1914, that the monthly income of the 1st defendant at that time was Rs. 600, that she first came to know of the 1st defendant's bad ways in 1917 when he borrowed monies and went to Octacamunda and Malabar and brought a woman from Malabar with him and that subsequently Mrs. C. was living with the 1st defendant in his house, meals being brought to her from Harrison and Co. Plaintiff's 3rd witness Subba Rao who is a Medical Practitioner states that he has known the 1st defendant from 1916, that he knew the 1st defendant in the company with Mrs. C. in 1st defendant's house and that he treated the 1st defendant for gonorrhoea. He also states that he saw bottles of whisky in 1st defendant's house. Vadivelu Mudaliar, plaintiff's 4th witness, states that he has known the 1st defendant since he was a student, that the 1st defendant went to Malabar and brought a Malayalee woman with him and kept her in Royapettah, that he was borrowing monies and squandering the same, that after sometime he got a Eurasian lady and kept her in his own house and that he was borrowing monies to go to Pondicherry, the Nilgris, Bombay and other places with the lady. Raymond Victoria, plaintiff's 5th witness, states that he was formally employed as an accountant in Morrison and Co. and has known the 1st defendant from about 1918, that Mr. C. was employed for sometime in Morrison and Co. that in 1918 the 1st defendant became intimate with Mrs. C. when she was living in Dents Gardens, that the 1st defendant afterwards brought her and kept her in the upstairs of his own house and that she ultimately left the 1st defendant in the latter part of 1921 after the present suit was filed and a Receiver was appointed. He also states that Mr. C. threatened proceedings and that he was paid Rs. 3,000. He produces certain letters written by Mr. C. to the 1st defendant which I shall refer to later on. He states that the 1st defendant borrowed monies on the pledge of his wife's jewels which he redeemed subsequently. He gives details of the sordid attempts which the 1st defendant made to keep Mr. C. ignorant of his intimacy with Mrs. C. and the ultimate buying off of Mr. C. by payment of money. He also states that the 1st defendant purchased a motor-car for Mrs. C. for Rs. 1,400 and that he used to go out of Madras to various places the Nilgris, Pondicherry with Mrs. C. and borrow monies for that purpose. He states that the 1st defendant was addicted to drink and produces letters written to the 1st defendant complaining that he could not get even a drop of whisky. He also states that Rs. 3,000 was paid to a relation of the Malayalee lady who threatened trouble. He also produces bills from various firms which were given to him by the 1st defendant. He refers to various mortgages and other debts. I shall deal with his evidence in detail in regard to those items later on.

Exhibit A is a letter dated the 25th of September, 1919, from Mr. C. to the 1st defendant wherein Mr. C. states that the conduct of the 1st defendant has been most despicable and that the 1st defendant has been the cause of ruination of his domestic happiness. He also states that he has a good mind to take criminal proceedings against the 1st defendant. Exhibit A-2 is a letter dated the 20th of December, 1919, written by the 1st defendant to Mr. Victoria from Bangalore in which he says "What about Mr. C. He has not come. Please give us the real truth as to the affairs of Mr. C. if starting. Because you wrote that he was coming I had to send all of them away for two days. Enquire every day and in case he is starting please wire. Do not fail." The 1st defendant evidently refers to Mrs. C. and her children in this letter and wants to know of Mr. C's movements. Exhibit A-3 is a letter, dated the 20th September, 1920, written by the 1st defendant to Victoria in which he says: "To-day Mrs. C. took a run down to Madras about the Ally Brother's affairs and I believe he was not there. In the end he had to go to Vadiveloo Mudaliar and get Rs. 10 and buy me a bottle of W. (meaning whisky), and a few little things for Re. 1-8-0 and come back again to the destination. One other thing that worries me is that when Mrs. C. was coming to the bungalow one Brahmin chap followed her at a distance and waited a little while and went away again." Exhibit A-4 is a letter dated the 13th of September, 1920, in which the 1st defendant asks Victoria to tell the manager of Y. M. C. A. Restaurant not to worry Mr. C. and his people, for the boarding fees and that he the 1st defendant would pay the same on Wednesday morning. Exhibit A-5 is a letter dated the 5th of November, 1920, written by the 1st defendant from Pondicherry to Victoria in which he says: "As for food we have got rice and other things in stock but only thing is for mutton and wisky. There is no whisky for to night and moreover I cannot go and ask Mr..... for the simple reason that unless I return his Rs. 25 cannot borrow from him." One of the Ex. A-10 series is a bill of 1920, showing dress materials purchased for Mrs. C. of the value of Rs. 144 of which Rs. 100 was paid on the 10th of June, 1920, and the balance still remains to be paid. Another bill dated the 8th of March, 1921, relates to a Piano hired for Mrs. C. Exhibit A-12 is a letter dated the 9th of January, 1921, written by the 1st defendant to Victoria wherein the 1st defendant refers to Mrs. C. having taken Rs. 75 from him and having gone from Bombay and to Mrs. C. taking a divorce from her husband. He also refers to Mrs. C. going to Madras and from there to Bombay and to her writing to her husband for money.

These letters and the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff make it clear that the 1st defendant was leading a shameless and immoral life even before he attained his majority that he was addicted to drink, that he was so utterly destitute of any sentiments of honour or respect for the members of his family, that he actually brought Mrs. C. and made her live upstairs in his own house while his mother and his wife were living downstairs and that he had to buy off Mr. C. by payment of money to him. Mrs. C. left the 1st defendant only after the present suit was filed and after he had run through a very large portion of his fortune and was in a desperate state for a few rupees. First defendant was admittedly carrying on no business. The family was not large, consisting only of himself, his wife who was young girl, his mother and two children. The plaintiff was born in 1917, and his sister later. He had to pay no house rent as he was living in the house belonging to his mother. There was, therefore, absolutely no necessity for the 1st defendant to borrow any monies and the evidence which I shall refer to later on shows that with the exception of the amounts due to persons from whom he brought provisions and cloth for himself and the members of his family, all the other monies which he borrowed went to meet the expenses which were occasioned by his profligate life. I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the way of his living was so notorious that anybody who had made the slightest enquiry would have known that not only was there no necessity for the 1st defendant to borrow any money but that the monies borrowed by him were borrowed to meet the expenses incurred during the few years of his shameful life.

I shall now deal with the mortgages created by the 1st defendant. On the 19th of November, 1919, about one and a half year after he attained majority he executed a mortgage for Rs. 58,000 in favour of the 2nd defendant, Lakshmanan Chetty. The mortgage deed has been marked as Ex. 6. It purports to be executed by the 1st defendant for himself and on behalf of his minor son the plaintiff and the consideration of Rs. 58,000 is recited as follows:

1. Rs. 16,000 reserved with the mortgagee for the payment and discharge of the equitable mortgage of Rs. 15,000 carrying interest at 9 per cent. per annum created by the 1st defendant in favour of N. R. K. Thathachari by executing a promissory note and depositing the deeds on the 4th of April, 1919.

2. Rs. 16,000 reserved with the mortgagee for the purpose of discharging the principal sum of Rs. 15,000 and interest due on the mortgage executed by the 1st defendant in favour of S. Rathnavelu Chetty for Rs. 25,000, dated the 12th of June, 1918.

3. Rs. 10,000 reserved with the mortgagee for the purpose of discharging the debt due on a registered mortgage executed by the 1st defendant in favour of Madhavji Govindji for Rs. 9,250 carrying interest at 9 per cent. per annum.

4. Rs. 7,000 reserved with the mortgagee for the discharge of a promissory note, dated the 7th of June, 1919 executed by the 1st defendant in favour of P. M. P. A. N. Annamalai Chetty for Rs. 7,000 carrying interest at 12 per cent per annum; and

5. Rs. 6,000 and Rs. 3,000 paid to the mortgagors in cash. The mortgage deed stipulated that interest at 12 per cent. per annum was payable every three months and that the principal amount was payable on or before the 1st of December 1920.

The Vakil for the 2nd defendant admits that out of the above consideration, a sum of Rs. 6,000 was not paid to the 1st defendant and that another sum of Rs. 1,040 which was retained by the mortgagee for the discharge of a mortgage dated the 18th of September, 1919, in favour of one Udai Kavar was also not paid.

As regards the sum of Rs. 16,000 alleged to be due to Mr. N. R. K. Thathachari, the evidence of Mr. Thathachari who is a Vakil of this Court, is that he lent Rs. 15,000 on Ex. I dated the 4th of May, 1919, to discharge the debt due to one Govindaraja Iyengar and that he paid the amount directly to Govindaraja Iyengar.

The whole transaction of Thathachari and Govindaraja Iyengar appears to me to be very suspicious.

The mortgage executed in favour of Mr. Rathnavelu Chetty is dated the 12th of June, 1918. In the letter Ex. 3-B dated the 26th of July, 1918, the 1st defendant writes to Mr. Rathnavelu Chetty not to pay Rs. 10,000 out of the mortgage amount to Govindaraja Iyengar as he had made other arrangements to pay him and to give him (1st defendant) credit for Rs. 10,000 on the mortgage document. As I said before, Govindaraja Iyengar has not been called and there is nothing to show for what purpose he lent the money to the 1st defendant. Mr. Thathachari makes no enquiries when he says he paid the amount of Rs. 15,000 to Govindaraja Iyengar and the agent of the 2nd defendant Rangasami Iyengar states that he was satisfied with the promissory note that Mr. Thathachari handed to him and that he made no further enquiries.

As regards the sum of Rs. 15,709 said to have been paid to Mr. Rathnavelu Chetty the mortgage, Ex. 2, is dated the 12th June, 1918, and is executed by the 1st defendant very shortly after he attained majority. The consideration for the mortgage viz., Rs. 25,000 is said to be the discharge of a debt of Rs. 10,500 borrowed for discharging the equitable mortgage dated the 31st of May, 1918, in favour of V. E. V. R. Lakshmanan Chetty; the payment of Rs. 1,500 borrowed on the 4th of June, 1918, from Ekambara Iyer on a mortgage, the payment of Rs. 8,000 being the principal sum due to Govindaraja Iyengar and his wife Singarammal on a mortgage and Rs. 1,000 due to them on a promissory note Rs. 9,000 being the sum retained by the mortgagee for payment of the principal and interest due to Govindaraja Iyengar and his wife as above stated and Rs. 3,000 received in cash for family expenses and for commission business carried on by the 1st defendant. It is not even suggested by any witness called that any commission agency or other business was carried on by the 1st defendant and this recital is obviously false. The mortgage-deed Ex. II bears an endorsement dated the 30th November, 1919, which runs as follows:—"Consideration of Rs. 15,709 received by cheque of V. E. V. R. Lakshmanan Chetty on behalf of Hon. Mr. S. R. M. M. C. T. Muthiah Chettiar as per letter of date of P. S. Subramaniam the executant herein. This document cancelled and returned to the agent of the said Hon. S. R. M. M. C. T. Muthiah Chettiar together with all its enclosures.

The promissory notes and documents in favour of Madhavados Govindaji have been marked as Ex. 4 series. Exhibit 4-A is a promissory note dated the 12th of December, 1918, for Rs. 5,000. The amount purports to have been borrowed for discharging decrees and other debts. Exhibit 4-B is a promissory note dated the 2nd January, 1919, for Rs. 2,000 said to be borrowed for paying the price of a motor-car and for meeting Court and other expenses. Exhibit 4-C is a promissory note dated the 16th of September, 1919, for Rs. 125. The purpose for which the money was borrowed is not stated in the promissory note. Exhibit 4-D is a mortgage deed dated the 4th of February, 1919, executed by the 1st defendant for himself and on behalf of his minor son the plaintiff in favour of Madhavados Govindaji for Rs. 9,250. The deed recites the amount due on the above promissory notes and a further sum of Rs. 2,000 advanced. The document bears an endorsement dated the 2nd of December, 1919, which runs as follows:—"Consideration received and the document cancelled and returned." This transaction was on the security of the title-deeds of certain properties belonging to the 1st defendant. Exhibit 5 series are vouchers in respect of debts which the 1st defendant had to discharge. As regards one of these vouchers which relates to money required for paying the price of a motor car the evidence adduced on the plaintiff's side is that the money was borrowed for purchasing a car for Mrs. C. and it is likely that Madhavados Govindjee would have been aware of this fact if he made enquiries. It appears from the evidence of the second defendant's agent that a sum of Rs. 10,309 was paid to Madhavados Govindajee. So far as Madhavados Govindajee's claim is concerned there can be little doubt that the 1st defendant did borrow money from him though probably as is usual with sowcars a portion of the alleged commission and advance interest were deducted, I have little doubt that the debts contracted by the 1st defendant were for his immoral purposes neither Madhavados Govindajee nor any person connected with him having been called. As regards the sum of Rs. 7,000 reserved with the mortgagee for discharging a promissory note dated the 7th of June, 1919, executed by the 1st defendant in favour of P. M. P. A. N. Annamalai Chettiar for Rs. 7,000 I am of opinion that there was no debt in favour of Annamalai Chettiar and that this sum was put in for the purpose of swelling the consideration. The 2nd defendant's agent states that Rs. 7,000 was paid to Annamalai Chettiar.

and his debt was discharged. He admits in cross-examination that he has no personal knowledge of the payment to Annamalai Chettiar but that Lakshmanan Chetti (2nd defendant) told him (the witness) that he paid the amount to Annamalai Chettiar. It appears from the evidence of the agent that the 1st defendant complained before the Registrar that the full consideration was not paid. So far as Annamalai Chettiar's alleged debt is concerned the only document filed is the promissory note, Ex. X, dated the 7th of June, 1919. It bears the endorsement "cancelled" and is signed by the 1st defendant but bears no date. The 1st defendant who was examined before the Official Referee stated that the consideration for the mortgage was only Rs. 50,960. He now wants to support the 2nd defendant's agent and says that Rs. 58,000 was received by him but I do not think it is possible to place any reliance on the 1st defendant. His condition is such that he would say anything if he gets a few rupees to satisfy his craving for drink and women. During the course of the trial I had considerable doubts as to the genuineness of Annamalai Chetti's claim and I thought it is probable that this was a bogus transaction entered into to swell the consideration. It is not unusual for money-lenders to recite fictitious debts and support them by promissory notes. I wanted the accounts of Annamalai Chetti and Lakshmanan Chetti to be produced which would show the payment. While other payments are made by cheques there is nothing to support this payment except the statement of Lakshmanan Chetti and no accounts were produced to support this payment.

This evidence leaves little doubt in my mind that Muthayya Chettiar had a great deal to do with this transaction. In the inception it is clear from the endorsement on the mortgage bond Ex. II that it was Muthayya Chettiar who was really acting in the matter and that Lakshmanan Chetti was only his agent. Subsequently for some reason or other the document was taken in Lakshmanan Chetti's name. It is not necessary for me to find that Lakshmanan Chetti is a benamidar as it has now been settled by their Lordships of the Privy Council that even a benamidar can sue in his own name and that the fact of the transaction being benami is no defence to the claim. It is, however, important when testing the nature of this transaction and the bona fides of the parties.

As regards the mortgage in favour of the 3rd defendant Udaya Kavar, Mr. Thirunarayanachari, Counsel for the 3rd defendant, states that he would be satisfied with a decree against the share of the 1st defendant in the mortgaged properties as the share of the 1st defendant would be ample to cover the amount due to him. It is, therefore, unnecessary to discuss the evidence as regards the binding nature of that debt. Were it necessary to do so I would hold that it is not binding on the plaintiff and that the evidence as to consideration is of a very doubtful nature. There is no dispute as to the amount which would be due on the mortgage so far as the first defendant is concerned.

As regards the mortgage in favour of Chockalinga Chetti, he is now dead and his estate is now vested in the Official Trustee. The mortgage in favour of Chockalinga Chetti is dated the 2nd August, 1920, and is marked as Ex. XII. It states that a sum of Rs. 10,000 was borrowed for the purpose of discharging certain unsecured debts, for redeeming certain jewels belonging to the family and for other purposes necessary and beneficial to the family. The rate of interest fixed is 18 per cent. per annum.

* * * * *

I have little doubt that the 1st defendant received only Rs. 3,500 and that the usual trick played in such cases was followed—the cheque being given and the money taken back. I find that this mortgage is supported by consideration only to the extent of Rs. 3,500. I am of opinion that this sum was borrowed to meet the immoral necessities of the 1st defendant.

As regards Batchmain Sahib, he claims Rs. 263-12-0 being the premium paid by him to the 1st defendant in respect of the lease of some property. This is found against by the Official Referee as under the lease the arrangement is that the premium has to be worked off by deductions from the monthly rent. This disposes of the claim made before the Official Referee. Except the claims I have specifically held to be binding on the 1st defendant and claims in respect of creditors referred to in the Official Referee's report not disputed before me I hold the other claims not binding on the plaintiff and his share in the family properties. The question as to subrogation has been raised by the 2nd defendant who claims priority in so far as he has discharged the debt due under Ex. II the mortgage in favour of Rathnavelu Chetti. So far as the claim of Udai Kavar is concerned, I have already stated that Mr. Tirunarayanachari, Counsel for the 3rd defendant, stated that he would be satisfied with a decree against the half share of the 1st defendant. The two mortgages in favour of the 3rd defendant are dated the 16th of July, 1919; (Ex. VIII) and the 18th of September, 1919, (Ex. IX). The mortgage in favour of Rathnavelu Chetti is dated the 12th of June, 1918, (Ex. II). The mortgage in favour of Lakshmanan Chetti is dated the 29th November, 1919, (Ex. VI). It is argued that as the mortgage Ex. VI in favour of Lakshmanan Chetti was created, inter alia, to discharge the debt due to Rathnavelu Chetti under Ex. II, Lakshmanan Chetti should be subrogated to the rights of Rathnavelu Chetti and that he should thus have priority over the mortgages in favour of Udai Kavar (Exs. VIII and IX) to the extent to which Rathnavelu Chetti's mortgage was discharged.

The question of subrogation is really one of intention and has to be gathered with reference to the terms of the various documents though of course there is always the presumption that a person discharging a prior mortgage intends to keep it alive for his benefit. Where a person raises money to pay off a prior mortgage and the mortgagee pays as the agent of the mortgagor there can be no question of subrogation. In Malireddi Ayyareddi v. Adusumilli Gopalakrishnayya (1). Their Lordships of the Privy Council at page 167* observe as follows:—

"It is now settled law that where in India there are several mortgages on a property, the owner of the property subject to the mortgages may, if he pays off an earlier charge, treat himself as buying it and stand in the same position as his vendor or to put in another way, he may keep the encumbrance alive for his benefit and thus come in before a later mortgagee. This rule would not apply if the owner of the property had covenanted to pay the later mortgage debt, but in this case there was no such personal covenant. It is further to be presumed, and indeed the Statute so enacts (Transfer of Property Act, s. 101), that if there is no indication to the contrary the owner has intended to have kept alive the previous charge if it would be for his benefit."

In Ex. VI, the mortgagor, has added a clause at the end which runs as follows:—

"As regards items Nos. 2 to 5 in Sch. B, a sum of Rs. 1,040 out of charging a further charge with possession in those properties, of one Udai Kavar executed on the 1st September, 1919. After the discharge, there is only one mortgage left with Udai Kavar dated 16th July 1919, and there are no other encumbrances."

It is argued by Counsel for the 3rd defendant that where a mortgagee undertakes to discharge a previous mortgage out of the moneys which he lends to the mortgagor and thus puts himself under a personal liability to pay and where the mortgagee expressly states that of all the previous mortgages there is only one mortgage left undischarged, the fair inference is that the parties intended, that all the other mortgages should be treated as discharged and not kept alive for the benefit of the mortgagee. I do not think it can be said from the tenor of the mortgage-deed in favour of the 2nd defendant that he intended to give up any right he had to use the mortgage in favour of Ratna Chetty as a shield against subsequent encumbrances. The mere fact that a mortgagee keeps money in his hands to pay off a prior encumbrance and does not run the risk he would otherwise incur if he pays money to the mortgagor to pay off the prior encumbrance and he does not do so will not make the mortgagee an agent of the mortgagor. The recital in Ex. VI that only one mortgage is outstanding simply means that the other mortgages have been paid off. It does not mean that the claim to subrogation, should it arise, is intended to be negated. I think the 2nd defendant is entitled to subrogation to the extent to which he discharged Ex. II Rathnavelu Chetty's mortgage. It is, however, clear that Udai Kavar will be entitled to marshal the properties under s. 81 of the Transfer of Property Act. As I have already shown, there can absolutely be no doubt that the 1st defendant even before he attained majority began to lead a reckless and immoral life and began to borrow monies recklessly and that there was absolutely no necessity for any loans being raised for his own ordinary personal family expenses. The 1st defendant was carrying on no business and the recital in some of the documents that he was carrying on business or that moneys were required for family expenses is false. An ordinary enquiry set on foot by a person who wanted to lend money to the 1st defendant would have disclosed not only that there was no necessity for the 1st defendant to borrow any money but that he was leading a grossly immoral life. He had a Eurasian woman living in his own house which is situate in one of the busy and central parts of Mylapore, and there can be little doubt that the 1st defendant's mode of life must have been notorious. The evidence which I have alluded to shows that though the 1st defendant attained majority only on the 16th of May, 1918, he borrowed from Govindaraja Iyer, Rs. 8,000 on the 1st of October, 1917, a year before he attained majority, and another sum of Rs. 1,000 on the 5th of April, 1918, immediately before he attained age. On the 12th of June, 1918, i. e., a month after he attained age, he executed a mortgage in favour of Rathnavelu Chetti for Rs. 25,000 I have already referred to the recitals in that mortgage. On the 4th of May, 1919, almost within a year of his attaining majority, he creates an equitable mortgage in favour of Mr. Thathachari for Rs. 16,000. In December, 1918, within six months of his attaining majority he again borrows Rs. 5,000 from Madhawaji Govindji on an equitable mortgage. On the 16th of July, 1919, he borrows from Udai Kavar Rs. 6,500 alleged to be for the purchase of jewels none of which were for his wife or any member of his family and on 18th of September, 1919, Rs. 1,000. On the 29th November, 1919, about 1½ years after attaining age he executed a mortgage for Rs. 58,000 in favour of Lakshmanan Chetti. The various other simple debts which I have referred to were all contracted between 1918 and 1919. So that within two years of his attaining majority the 1st defendant borrowed over a lakh of rupees. I have already given my reasons for holding that almost all the debts contracted by the 1st defendant were for no necessity, but for the purpose of meeting the expenses necessary for his illegal and immoral habits. It is clear from the evidence that the lenders made no enquiries and were merely satisfied with the fact that there were antecedent debts or with statement of the 1st defendant that he wanted money for family expenses. That bona fide enquiries are necessary is clear. See Saravana Tevan v. Muttayi Ammal (2) Savumian v. Narayanan Chettiar (3). The question is whether in the circumstances I have referred to and on the facts I have found these debts are binding on the plaintiff. The law is clear that in the case of a joint family the sons are liable for their father's debts even if the debts are contracted by the father for his own benefit without any legal necessity so long as the debts are not incurred for an unlawful or immoral purpose. The difficulty often arises out of a limitation imposed by some decided cases which finds no place in the Smirities or ancient commentators that the lender must have notice of the purpose for which the loan was made. Some cases go to the length of holding that direct connection should be shown between the debt and the necessary purpose for which it was borrowed. I think that constructive notice or the absence of any enquiry would be sufficient in cases like the present. Where a father carries on some business or trade, or where there is reasonable ground for thinking that the loans were required for purposes which though not necessary would still not be immoral or illegal the son seeking to evade liability has to show that the creditor knew that the money borrowed was going to be used for immoral purposes. The position however is different where a young man who has just attained majority and who has inherited valuable property which would yield an income more than sufficient to keep him in comfort having regard to the position of the family and its requirements, leads an openly reckless and immoral life and borrows large sums of moneys, which will not in the ordinary circumstances be necessary for any lawful purpose. In the case of expectant heirs and young men who had just attained majority borrowing money from money-lenders, Courts have thrown the burden of proving the factum of the loans upon the money-lenders. I need only refer to Moti Gulabchand v. Mahomed Mehdi Tharia Topan (4), Sundarammal v. Subramania Chettiar (5), Sami Sah v. Parthasarathy Chetty (6) and Official Assignee of Madras v. Sambanda Mudaliar (7). In such cases I think that a lender to a young man in the circumstances above mentioned who is the father of minor children who cannot protect themselves, cannot get the protection which is usually given to bona fide lenders, unless he proves that he made reasonable enquiries. In the present case I am of opinion that the 1st defendant who is a young man, and who had recently attained majority, got into the hands of unscrupulous money-lenders who took advantage of his youth and vicious habits, lent him moneys, got documents for larger sums than those he actually received and put in fictitious recitals and they have not made out even a shadow of a claim for protection as bona fide lenders without notice, or that they have any reasonable belief that the moneys which the 1st defendant borrowed were borrowed for lawful purposes.

Numerous authorities were cited on both sides, and it is not easy to reconcile all the views taken. I think the law as to fixing creditors with notice of the illegality or immorality is correctly laid down in the cases which I shall refer to.

In Sunlara Goundan v. Arumuga Goundan (8) Sir Abdur Rahim and Moore, JJ., observed as follows:—

"It would no doubt be difficult in many cases to prove that a particular debt was incurred for some specific immoral or illegal purpose and it may be sufficient if the evidence is such that the Court would be in a position to infer that the debt incurred by the father must have been incurred for immoral purposes."

That seems to be the principle underlying the decision in Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer, (9) In Bhagat Mal Sahu v. Abdul Karim (10) the learned Judge observed:—

"We think that while you need not have direct proof that the money was raised to be spent on any particular person, one must be reasonably satisfied that the father was a man of vicious, extravagant and lustful habits and that he raised the money for the purpose of applying it for immoral purpose. In some way, by reasonable legal proof, it must be shown that there is a connection with the debt and the immoral purpose."

In Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh (11) Sir John Stanley, C. J., and Justice Sir William Burkitt observe as follows:—

"The evidence irresistably leads us to the conclusion that there was no necessity for those debts or any of them other than that which the gratification of his vicious habits created. He had more than ample income for the maintenance in luxury of himself and his family. There is not even a suggestion of the existence of any family necessity for the loans. Under all the circumstances we think the appellant has made out his case. The facility with which Hindu fathers can obtain loans from money-lenders on the security of ancestral property has proved disastrous to many respectable and well-to-do families in these Provinces. . . . It is common experience that money lenders readily advance loans on any class of landed security taking considerable risks, but charging high if not exorbitant rates of interest. It is no easy matter for sons to satisfy the heavy onus which lies upon them in impeaching loans obtained for immoral purposes, but it would, we think, be the death-blow to the rule of Hindu Law which gives immunity to sons when defending their title to ancestral property from liability to their father's immoral debts, if it were the law that in order to absolve themselves from liability the sons must prove, not merely the purpose for which such loans were contracted, but also that the lenders knew of the immoral purpose of the loan."

In Babu Singh v. Behari Lal (12) Banerjee and Richards, J.J., observed that the passage above referred to was obiter but with great respect I think it correctly sets out the law. This case went on appeal to the Privy Council but the decision of the High Court was confirmed on another point. In Ram Nath v. Bulagi Ram (13) the learned Judges observed as follows:—

"But it would, in our opinion, equally be sufficient to prove that the borrower was at the time living a licentious life, beyond his means, indulging in drink, riot, prostitution and debauchery, and that at the same time he was without any business or occupation upon which the money might legitimately have been spent, without showing on which particular act of immorality the money was spent. In fact, if it is proved clearly that at the time the borrower was notoriously wasting his substance on riotous living, and spending large sums beyond his income and above his station in life in this way only, a loan contracted in the midst of such living and spent upon it would be a loan contracted for immoral purposes. Indeed, it can hardly ever, if ever, be possible and must always be extremely difficult to prove specific expenditure on one specific act of immorality."

I am, therefore, of opinion that the mortgages referred to in my judgment are not binding on the plaintiff but are only enforceable against the half share of the 1st defendant. The mortgagees who have taken out the moneys will, therefore, bring into Court the one half share of the plaintiff. I have already given my views as to the simple debts and decree. As regards the properties which have not yet been sold and which are subject to mortgages the mortgage claims will be enforceable against the one half share of the 1st defendant and those properties will be sold and the half share of the plaintiff will be paid into Court.

As regards the debts which I have found to be binding on the minor plaintiff they will, in the first instance, be paid out of any surplus, if any, that may remain to the credit of the 1st defendant after the payment of the mortgage debts and any balance will be paid out of the minor's share in Court. As regards creditors whose claims have been held not to be binding, they will be paid out of any surplus standing to the credit of the 1st defendant after the mortgagees are satisfied. As regards the maintenance to be awarded to the plaintiff's mother and sister, I think that the matter can best be disposed of after it is ascertained what is the net amount that will remain to the credit of the plaintiff. As regards the costs of the suit the costs of the plaintiff will be paid out of the estate and the defendants will bear their own costs.

Having regard to the difficulty of the case, I allow fees for two Vakils.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been very fully and ably argued on both sides. The plaintiff took a sub-lease of some property from the lessees of the Sivaganga semindari and contracted to transfer it to the 2nd defendant's father. As he refused to carry out the contract O. S. No. 195 of 1911 was filed for specific performance of the contract. It was decreed by the District Munsif, and on appeal the District Court confirmed the District Munsif's decree and the plaintiff, who was the defendant in that suit, preferred S. A. No. 248 of 1916 which was dismissed by a Bench of the High Court. Thereupon the plaintiff executed Ex. B in accordance with the decree of the High Court in second appeal. He now sues the defendants for recovery of rents and charges paid by him during the pendency of the suit for specific performance. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit and the District Judge of Ramnad has given him a decree for Rs. 2,644-5-7. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and the legal representatives of the 5th defendant have preferred this second appeal. Two contentions are raised by Mr. Varadachariar for the appellants.

1. The liability of the defendants to pay rent and charges in respect of the property which is the subject of the sub-lease arose only on the date of Ex. B and they are not liable to pay rent and charges which accrued due before that date and the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendants in respect of them.

2. The cause of action, if any, is barred by limitation as the suit was filed more than three years after the date of the payments made by the plaintiff.

A few facts are necessary to understand the contention. The sub-lease in favour of the plaintiff was on 27th April, 1908. The contract to transfer the sub-lease in favour of the 2nd defendant's father was on 10th September, 1908. The suit for specific performance O. S. No. 195 of 1911 was filed on 2nd May, 1911, and the District Munsif's decree was passed on 31st March, 1914. The decree of the High Court in S. A. No. 248 of 1916 was on 8th March, 1917. Exhibit B, the transfer deed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendants according to the decree of the High Court, was executed on 19th June, 1917. The present suit was filed on 11th November, 1917. The payments by the plaintiff in respect of the leasehold property were between 1909 and 1915. It is admitted that if the three years' rule were held applicable to the present suit all but Rs. 200 and odd would be barred by limitation.

Taking the first point, "The seller is bound to pay all public charges and rent accrued due in respect of the property up to the date of the sale and the liability of the vendee to pay them arises only on the date of the sale" (vide s. 25, cls. (1) (g) and (5) (d) of the Transfer of Property Act). "In the absence of a contract to the contrary the liability of a vendee of property or the transferee of a lease to pay rents and charges arises only on the date of sale or transfer of the lease." There is no distinction between the sale of immoveable property and the transfer of a lease in this respect. This contention is sought to be met by the argument that the defendant's title related back to the date of the contract for transfer of the sub-lease. It is difficult to follow the argument of Mr. Rajah Iyer that the title of the defendants should be held to relate back to the date of the contract to transfer the sub-lease. The title passes in the case of a sale on the date of the execution of the sale-deed and in the case of a lease on the date of the execution of the transfer-deed. Though a sale-deed is registered sometime after its execution it takes effect from the date of the execution and not from the date of registration. This is specifically provided for in the Registration Act. The title of the defendants cannot on any principle of law be held to relate back to the date of the contract for the transfer of the sub-lease and the terms of Ex. B do not warrant such a contention. Under Ex. B the right of the plaintiff, as it was on the date of the sub-lease, was transferred to the defendants. The defendants have only acquired the right of the plaintiff under the sub-lease as it was on the day, the sub-lease was executed and not as it was on the date of the contract of sale or at any other time. This does not mean that the defendants' title to the lease should be taken to relate back to the date of the contract of sale. The sub-lease and the contract to transfer it were on different dates, and if the contention of the respondent is tenable the question would arise whether the title of the defendants related back to the date of the sub-lease or the date of the contract to transfer it. The only answer to this contention is that the title of the defendants commenced only from the date of Ex. B.

It is contended that the defendants had an equitable right to the sub-lease by reason of the contract to transfer it to them and, therefore, they were liable to pay the rent and charges. A mere contract of sale of immoveable property does not confer any right to the property on the prospective vendee. His right is only to have a conveyance effected in his favour. The defendants, therefore, cannot be said to have acquired any right to the sub-lease on the date of the contract for its transfer.

In Theathalan v. The Eralpod Rajah (1) it was held that a privity of estate arises only when the whole of the lessee's interest is assigned over and not where a subsidiary interest is carved out of the lessee's interest. It is only on the execution of the transfer-deed Ex. B that the defendants could be said to have acquired a title to the sub-lease. In law, therefore, the liability of the defendants to pay rent and charges in respect of the property sub-leased arose only on the date of Ex. B and that too for the rent and charges accruing due on or after the date of Ex. B.

Let us see whether there was any contract under which the defendants were liable to pay the rent and charges before they became owners of the sub-lease. The judgment in Second Appeal No. 248 of 1916 does not create a contract between the parties. The observation of the learned Judges that "the plaintiffs are no doubt bound as soon as the ownership passes to them to pay all public charges and rent, etc., from the date of such passing (s. 55, cl. (5) (d) of Act IV of 1882). But as the document of conveyance has not yet been executed and delivered to the plaintiffs they cannot be compelled to pay the public charges and rent paid already by the defendant as a condition precedent to the execution of the conveyance by the defendant who must be left to recover the same after plaintiffs' title becomes perfected when only plaintiffs' obligation to pay such charges accrues," was only in answer to the contention of the defendant in that suit that the plaintiffs therein should be made to pay the rent and charges which he had paid as a condition precedent to the execution of the transfer-deed. This observation of the learned Judges cannot be taken to have either created a contract between the parties or to have decided on the liability of the defendants herein to pay rent and charges already paid by the plaintiff herein.

Though ordinarily in the case of vendees of property and the transferees of leases the liability to pay rents and charges arises only on the date of sale or transfer, yet in this case under a contract to transfer the lease the 2nd defendant's father agreed to take over the lease on payment of Rs. 100 to the plaintiff as profit and got possession of the property on the date of the contract and he and the defendants remained in possession all along. The possession of the defendants was not that of trespassers but that of transferees whose title had to be perfected by the execution of a proper deed and the suit for specific performance was instituted only for getting that deed executed and when the deed was executed it did not alter the character of the possession of the defendant but made it only secure; to put the matter slightly differently could the plaintiff have successfully sued to eject the defendants from possession of the property, and if he did bring a suit for possession would not the defendants have pleaded the contract to transfer the sub-lease and set up the plea of part performance of the contract inasmuch as possession had been given and Rs. 100 was paid to the plaintiff as profit. I think they would have had a good defence if an action for ejectment had been brought by the plaintiff.

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 841; 40 M. 1111; 32 M. L. J. 442; 21 M. L. T. 401.

iff and, therefore, their position was that of transferees of the sub-lease. Such being the case they were bound to pay rent and charges on the property in their possession.

It is fairly conceded by Mr. Varadarachariar that the payments by the plaintiff were not voluntary payments and that he as sub-lessee was bound by the terms of the sub-lease in his favour to pay rent and charges even though he agreed to transfer his right to another, and his liability continued till the Sivaganga lessees consented to the transfer of the sub-lease and to release him from his liability. The question of voluntary payment, therefore, does not arise in this case. Section 69 of the Contract Act applies to this case. The question is when did the plaintiff's cause of action against the defendants arise? Did it arise on the date of the payments by the plaintiff or on the date of the execution of Ex. B. Mr. Rajah Iyer very naturally relies upon the observation of the learned Judges in the judgment in the Second Appeal No. 248 of 1916 which is as follows:—

"Who must be left to recover the same after the plaintiff's title becomes perfected when only the plaintiff's obligation to re pay such charges accrues."

The observation that the liability of the defendants to pay rent and charges paid by the plaintiff during the pendency of the suit would arise only on the defendants' title being perfected by the execution of a transfer-deed is only obiter. At best it is only an expression of opinion and cannot be treated as a decision on the point as to the liability of the defendants to pay rent and charges paid before the date of the decree. This point has to be decided in this case and with all respect to the learned Judges I am unable to hold that the cause of action for the plaintiff's claim arose only on the date of Ex. B. As the execution of the transfer-deed was required by law only in order to give a legal title to the defendants who were already in possession of the leasehold property and enjoyed the income in the capacity of transferees, the cause of action arose on the dates of the several payments made by the plaintiff. This brings us to the second point which is one of limitation.

Mr. Rajah Iyer urges that if Art. 61 were really applicable to the case there was no one whom he could sue, for the defendants had not acquired a title to the sub-lease and, therefore, his cause of action did not arise till there was some one who could be sued. Article 61 gives three years, for money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant and time begins to run from the day when the money is paid. The defendants, being in possession of the property and suing only for perfecting their title, were in equity bound to pay the rent and charges and the plaintiff who paid them could have brought a suit against them after the decision of the District Munsif in their favour. The District Munsif passed a decree in O. S. No. 195 of 1911 on 31st March, 1914. On that day the defendants had by reason of the decree become entitled to the sub-lease. There was nothing to prevent the plaintiff from suing them after 31st March 1914. The cause action which arose on 31st March, 1914, could not be said to have been suspended till the decision of the second appeal in No. 248 of 1916. The principle of the decision in Hukam Chand Boid v. Pirithchand Lal (2) applies to the present case. In that case the question was, when did the cause of action arise for recovery of money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards failed under Art. 97 of the Limitation Act. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council observes at page 678*: "Both Courts have held that the failure of consideration was at the date of the 1st Court's decree. Their Lordships feel no doubt that as between these two decrees this is the correct view, for whatever may be the theory under other systems of law, under the Indian Law and procedure an original decree is not suspended by presentation of an appeal nor is its operation interrupted where the decree on appeal is one of dismissal." The plaintiff who could have brought a suit the day after the District Munsif gave a decree in defendants' favour is not entitled to plead that the title of the defendants was decreed only when the High Court disposed of the second appeal.

Mr. Rajah Iyer for the respondent has relied upon a number of cases but it is unnecessary to consider all of them. His main contention is that he could not have sued before the date of the decree in second appeal and he relies upon Dwijendra Narain Roy v. Jogesh Chandra Dey (3) as supporting his contention. In that case the plaintiff along with the 3rd defendant instituted a suit against the 1st defendant to enforce the registration of certain documents under the provisions of s. 77 of the Indian Registration Act. The defendant contended that the deeds had been materially altered after he executed them. Finally the suit was decreed. The plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of possession of mesne profits on the strength of his title. The Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit. Mr. Justice Mukerjee and Mr. Justice Suhrawardy held that the plaintiff's suit was not barred. They observed at page 55*: "The cause of action arises when and only when the aggrieved party has the right to apply to the proper tribunals for relief. Whalley v. Whalley (4). The Statute does not attach to a claim for which there is as yet no right of action and does not run against a right for which there is no corresponding remedy or for which judgment cannot be obtained. Consequently the true test to determine when a cause of action has accrued is to ascertain the time when plaintiff could first have maintained his action to a successful result (Angell on Limitations, s. 42)." In that case the plaintiff without getting a registered document could not maintain a claim to the property and he could not, therefore, sue for mesne profits. But here the defendants had obtained a decree for specific performance and they were in possession of the property under the contract to transfer the sub-lease and they were bound to pay the rent and charges on the property. The plaintiff who, no doubt, was under a liability to see that the rent and charges were paid and who paid in consequence of his liability could have brought a suit the day after the decree of the District Munsif was pronounced in favour of the defendants for the execution of a proper transfer-deed.

In Matangini Debya v. Prasannamoyi Debya (5) a putnidar purchased his co-putnidar's share in a sale for arrears of rent, the sale was set aside as the putnidar was not competent to bid having regard to the provisions of s. 9 of the Putni Regulation VIII of 1819. The plaintiff, who after the purchase was the owner of the putni, paid the arrears of rent and instituted a suit for contribution in respect of the payment made by him. Maclean, C. J., held that the cause of action arose when the sale was set aside and that "the payment must be regarded as made on his own account and not for the co-putnidars. In this view the Statute would not begin to run until after the 12th June, 1899. The plaintiff would have no cause of action against the defendants until the 12th June, 1899. To revert, for a moment, to Art. 61, it cannot be said that there was any money paid for the defendants until the sale had been set aside. Up to that time, the money must be taken as paid by the plaintiff on his own account." This case is distinguishable on the facts of the present case. Bijoy Chand Mahatab v. Nilmoni Lahiri (6) does not help the respondent. In that case the learned Judges followed Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal (2).

It is next contended that Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applies to this case. This is a residuary Article and when there is no other Article applicable to the case then only the Court should see whether Art. 120 would be applicable. In this case Art. 61 is clearly applicable and, therefore, Art. 120 cannot be held to apply to the facts of the present case. In this view it is unnecessary to consider at length the cases in Viswanadha Vija Kumara Bangaroo v. Orr (7) and Sundara Aiyar v. Ananthapadbhanaba Aiyar (8). In both the cases the cause of action was held to arise on the date when the defendant had the benefit of the plaintiff's payment or acts. Here the defendant had the benefit of the payments on the dates on which they were made. If the plaintiff had not made those payments the defendants should have paid them and if they defaulted to pay them, due charges, the sub-lease would have been forfeited and the defendants would have lost possession of the property.

Venkatadri Appa Rao Bahadur v. Parthasarathi Appa Rao (9) does not help the respondent. There the Privy Council held that in the case of a legacy time began to run only from the time when the executor had funds with which he could pay the legacy.

After a careful and anxious consideration of the case I hold that Art. 61 applies to this case and the cause of action arose on the dates of the several payments. It is admitted that a sum of Rs. 248-10-9 was paid within three years before suit and, therefore, I modify the decree of the District Judge by reducing the amount to Rs. 248-10-9 with 12 per cent. interest from the date of payment to the date of the District Court's decree and at 6 per cent. interest thereafter. Considering all the circumstances of this case I direct that both the parties should bear their costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—There are no grounds for interfering in second appeal with the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court. The only point for consideration is as to the admissibility of the oral agreement providing for re-payment of the mortgage-debt from the usufruct of the land. The contention that this amounted to a lease is clearly untenable, nor did it constitute an usufructuary mortgage, but only a means of discharging the debt by putting the simple mortgages in possession of the property: [see Ram Bakhsh v. Durjan (1)] and Kamla Sahai v. Babu Nandan Mian (2). As such even an oral agreement may be proved.

JUDGMENT.—This suit is based on an equitable mortgage alleged to have been effected by the 1st defendant in plaintiff's favour supported by a promissory note executed by the 1st defendant, her brother, 2nd defendant, and his wife, the 3rd defendant. As regards the personal remedy against the 1st defendant, the plaintiff withdrew his case, and he also withdrew his case against the 3rd defendant who has no interest whatever in the mortgage property and apparently received no consideration in the transaction. The learned Judge has found first of all that the 1st defendant did not take part in the transaction with the plaintiff. Secondly, he has found that the 1st defendant had previously sold the property to her brother's father in-law, 4th defendant, but he has not dismissed the plaintiff's case because he finds that the plaintiff discharged a mortgage executed by her prior to the sale to the 4th defendant and is entitled to subrogation. The 1st defendant's signature on the promissory note is admitted as also her signature on Exs. D and D-1, two promissory notes in favour of her brother. In her written statement she did not deny execution of the suit promissory note but simply denied any knowledge of the transaction. It is an extraordinary story that she puts forward, namely, that on three different occasions, or even more, according to her evidence, she puts her signature on a stamp affixed to a blank sheet of paper. She is a young woman but it is clear from the manner in which she gave evidence that she is not devoid of intelligence, and it is incredible that she should have on these several occasions put her signature across a stamp on blank paper without making further enquiries especially when she admits that she realised that such a signature is likely to be one on a bond or other document. The learned Judge was inclined to believe that the 1st defendant's case was not true but he has found it true, because he found that she had executed a sale-deed in favour of the 4th defendant prior to the execution of this promissory note and was unlikely to execute a mortgage thereafter. In this appeal it will be unnecessary to decide whether or not that sale to the 4th defendant was a genuine transaction or was merely nominal, because we are of opinion that the 1st defendant did enter into the mortgage transaction with the plaintiff. That being so, we must agree with the learned Judge that plaintiff was also entitled to subrogation to the earlier mortgage. The 1st defendant, at any rate, had not been paid the full consideration for the sale-deed, for the 4th defendant had not paid Rs. 3,000 to the prior mortgagee, Rajagopal, which he had undertaken to do. It is also very doubtful whether he had paid the thousand rupees in cash to the 1st defendant. She was, therefore, still liable personally to Rajagopal for the debt under the mortgage and the property was also liable; consequently it cannot be said that she had no interest in the property. In this view, inasmuch as she entered into a transaction with the plaintiff empowering him to pay off a prior mortgage, and obtain title-deeds deposited with the mortgagee, it cannot be said that the plaintiff was a mere volunteer. He had made a distinct agreement with the debtor to pay off the mortgage and consequently he would be entitled to subrogation, as there is no ground for holding that he is a mere volunteer. The case mainly relied upon by the appellant Govinda Padayachi v. Lokanatha Aiyar (1) is very different to the present one. In that case, the party who paid off the mortgage was perfectly well aware that the previous owner of the property had parted with all rights before entering into the agreement with him. He, therefore, was paying off the mortgage purely as a volunteer and had derived no interest whatsoever in the property by the transaction with a person who he knew had no interest herself.

The plaintiff has not appealed with regard to the portion of his claim disallowed and consequently we need not go into the question off whether the sale to the 4th defendant was nominal or not. As plaintiff has paid off the prior mortgage he is entitled to subrogation and consequently the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Messrs. K. Narasimha Iyer and E. Doraiswami Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. S. Krishnaswami Iyengar and K. G. Ramaswami Ayyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs have brought this suit to recover a share in the family property of themselves and the defendants. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are the illegitimate sons of the deceased brother of the 3rd defendant; defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are sons of the deceased and the 4th defendant is the son of the 3rd defendant. The learned trial Judge has held that, sitting as a Single Judge, he is bound by the decision in Gopalasami Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (1) and has held that the illegitimate sons, plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, are not entitled to any share in the family property of their deceased father as there are collaterals in existence. This point was expressly determined in Gopalasami Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (1) but it is now sought to be argued that that decision is wrong. Reliance is placed chiefly on a decision of the Privy Council reported as Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Sing (2). This case in Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Sing (2) was considered in Ramalinga Muppan v. Pavadaigoundan (3) and it was there held that it did not affect the law as laid down in this Presidency. Similarly in Gopalasami Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (1) the case in Ramalinga Muppan v. Pavadaigoundan (3) more particularly that portion of it referring to the Privy Council decision, was considered, and it was held that an illegitimate son was not entitled to a share in the family property when there were collaterals in the family. The learned Vakil for the appellants has been unable to refer us to any case in which the correctness of Gopalaswami Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (1) has been impeached, and that case only carries a little further the decisions of this Court beginning with Krishnayyan v. Muthuswami (4). That current of decisions has continued for the last 40 years and there appears to be no case in which the principle has been questioned. With all respects we entirely agree with the decision in Gopalasami Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (1) and, as nothing has been urged before us to show that it is in any way wrong, we are prepared to follow it. The appeal accordingly fails.

A memorandum of objections has been filed by the respondents objecting to the grant of maintenance to plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5, the illegitimate daughters of Chinnasami Sah. The question of whether they are entitled to any maintenance has not been discussed in the trial Court, but the learned Judge has remarked:

"As regards them (namely plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5) it is not admitted by the defendants that they would be entitled to maintenance, but still, in order to avoid any further litigation or question, the defendants' Counsel is willing that I should fix a reasonable rate of maintenance for them also."

It is, therefore, now contended for the appellants that the decree for maintenance in their favour is a consent decree and cannot be altered, but we are assured by the respondents' Counsel that this agreement was, as stated in the judgment, "in order to avoid any further litigation" and that it was understood that the agreement was subject to the plaintiffs not appealing against the decree for maintenance. This is consistent with the language of the judgment, and we must accept Counsel's submission that this is the correct interpretation of the learned Judge's order. It has been held very recently in this Court in Vellaiyappa Chetty v. Natarajan (5) that illegitimate daughters are not entitled to maintenance from their father's family. The provision, therefore, for their maintenance and for their marriage expenses must be omitted. In this respect the decree must be modified.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. No order as to costs in the memorandum of objections.

Will—Probate—Grant of Probate, effect of—Caveat—Sufficient interest to support caveat, what amounts to—Testator dealing with objector's property, whether sufficient.

The function of a Court of Probate is to decide whether the Will propounded is the last Will of the testator and whether the right to represent the estate may be conferred upon an applicant for Probate. The Court of Probate does not profess to decide the disputed title to every item of property mentioned in the Will or the disposing power of the testator or the existence of any disposable property. [p. 422, col. 2.]

In dealing with the question whether a caveator has the necessary interest the test is, does the grant displace any right to which the caveator would otherwise be entitled? If so, he has such an interest, if not, he has not. [ibid.]

On an application for grant of Probate of a Will, a person who alleges that the testator has by the Will purported to dispose of such person's property as if it belonged to the testator himself does not possess sufficient interest to support a caveat and oppose the grant of Probate. Application by the plaintiffs for Probate of the Will of Mangadi Ellappa Chetti.

Mr. Radhakrishnaiya, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Venkataramana Rao, for the Caveator.

JUDGMENT.—The question that has been raised, I regard to be a settled point—settled alike by weighty decisions and unbroken practice of the Court. But of late, I have found a tendency at the Bar to raise this point, as if it is a debatable one and requires serious notice. I am delivering this considered judgment, to once for all state definitely what my view is and I am tempted to follow this course in this case on account of the lengthy argument addressed to me.

One Mangadi Ellappa Chetti died leaving assets valued by the petitioners at about 10 lakhs. He is said to have left a Will and this is an application for Probate of that Will. The following pedigree serves to explain the facts of the case.

The Will is propounded by Sowbagiamma shown in the pedigree and her brother Thangavelu Chetti, these two persons being the executors named in the Will. Caveats have been filed as shown in the pedigree by Komalangi and Chengalroya. The caveat of the latter may be summarily dismissed as he has not complied with the rules of the Court and has not cared to appear at the hearing. The former is a minor and is represented in these proceedings by her father. The petitioners take a preliminary objection, namely, that Komalangi does not possess such an interest as to support a caveat. The question I have to decide is, does she possess a sufficient interest and can she be heard as a caveator?

The interest alleged on her behalf is, that the testator purported to dispose of by the Will, her stridhanam jewels, as if they belonged to himself. I am asked to go into the question of the ownership of these jewels and declare by my judgment, that the deceased was not the owner and that his Will in regard to them is inoperative. Two things I regard to be clearly settled by authority, firstly, that the interest alleged is not an interest as would support a caveat, secondly, that a Probate Court does not decide questions of title in regard to the property disposed of by the Will.

The question may be thus shortly stated. The testator has disposed of property belonging to the objector. By reason of this fact, does the latter get an interest to oppose the grant of Probate? One of the earliest cases and one often cited, is Behary Lall Sandyal v. Juggo Mohun Gossain (1). In that case, the grant of Probate was opposed on the ground that the testatrix, who was a Hindu widow, had only a life-interest and that her husband's property passed by survivorship to the latter's brother, the caveator. The District Judge refused the application for Probate, holding that the widow had no power to dispose of the properties mentioned in the Will. Garth, C. J., and McDonald, J., held "that upon an application for Probate of a Will, as long as it is made bona fide, it is not the province of the Court to go into questions of title with reference to the property of which the Will purports to dispose."

The learned Judges add that the grant of Probate does not confer upon the executor any title to property, which the testatrix had no right to dispose of, but that it only perfects the representative title of the executor to the property which belonged to the testatrix and over which she had a disposing power.

This case has been repeatedly followed in Calcutta; but I shall content myself with referring to two more decisions of that Court. In Abhiram Das v. Gopal Das (2) the caveator objected that the testator never owned the property with which the Will dealt as the same belonged to a mutt, to which the testator and the caveator belonged. The learned Judges, reversing the order of the lower Court, held that a person disputing the right of a testator to deal with property as his own, cannot be properly regarded as having an interest in the estate of the deceased. The second case is Sri Gobind Prasad v. Laljhari Kuer (3). Letters of Administration had been granted to a Hindu lady and the application was for revoking those letters inasmuch as the property was joint family property which passed to the petitioner by survivorship. On the ground that the interest to be shown in an application for revocation, is the same as the interest to be possessed by a person opposing the grant, the Court came to the conclusion that the applicant did not have sufficient interest and his application was accordingly rejected.

Now turning to Bombay, the law is very clearly stated in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Sakwarbai (4). That was also a case of revocation of a grant already made, but the learned Judges point out that in this respect the same considerations apply to a revocation of a grant as to a grant itself. The law is thus stated:

"We regard the grant of Probate as decisive only of the genuineness of the Will propounded, and the right of the executors thereby appointed to represent the estate of the testator. It in no respect decides any question as to the disposing power of the testator or as to the existence of any disposable property." It will be sufficient to refer to one other case of the Bombay High Court, Ochava-ram Nanabhai v. Dolatram Jamietram (5). In that case, the grant was opposed on the ground that the property dealt with by the testator was joint family property which could not be disposed of by his Will. The trial Judge Russel, J. dismissed the caveat, holding that the defendant had no interest and adding, that were he to decide differently he should do so contrary to a long series of cases. The case was taken in appeal and this view was confirmed. Jenkins, C. J., observes that this was the view that was uniformly taken in Bombay, Calcutta and Allahabad. On enquiry from the Testamentary Registrar, the learned Judges found that this was the invariable practice on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court. I regard this as a very valuable case and I may cite an important observation from that judgment.

"The grant in no way hurts or prejudices the caveator, for it is general in its terms, specifying no item of property and prejudging nothing to the detriment of the appellant."

As regards the Allahabad High Court, I may refer to Birj Nath De v. Chandar Mohan Banerji (6). In that case again, it was objected that the widow had no disposing power over the property or some of it dealt with by the Will. Edge, C. J., and Blair, J., observe that it is not the practice of the Courts in India to try questions of title and finally decide them on applications for grant of Probate or Letters of Administration. This was the view taken in spite of the fact, that at the Bar, reliance was placed upon Tharp v. McDonald (7) to which the learned Judges also refer in their judgment.

Coming to our own High Court, Rahamtullah Sahib v. Rama Rao (8) (decided by Muthusami Ayyar and Best, JJ.) contains some useful observations. The question arose, whether a creditor of the testator can be said to have an interest in the latter's estate. The answer was in the negative. Discussing the nature of the interest which a caveator must possess, the learned Judges say:

"There must be a possibility of having an interest in the result of setting aside the Will."

A creditor of the testator, they observe, has no right to contest the Will, for the reason that it is indifferent to him whether he shall receive his debt from an executor or an administrator, (I may add) or an heir. In my own experience, I am not aware of a single case, during the last 25 years, when any Judge, sitting on the Original Side, of this Court allowed a question of this kind to be raised in a testamentary proceeding. This is confirmed not only by Mr. Radhakrishnaia who appears for the petitioners but by Mr. Venkataramana Rao himself who represents the caveator.

The view I am taking is thus supported by authority and uniform practice of the Court; furthermore, it is based on reason and sound common sense. The function of the Court of Probate is to decide whether the Will propounded is the last Will of the testator and whether the right to represent the estate may be conferred upon the applicant. The Court of Probate does not profess to decide the disputed title to every item of property mentioned in the Will. If a testator disposes of, say, 15 items of property and 10 different claimants appear before the Court, each claiming one of them as his own, is the Court to postpone its decision on the validity of the Will and on the representative character of the applicant, until it decides the disputed ownership of the various items. By delaying the grant, serious injury may be caused to the estate, there being none during this interval to represent it. Then, again, innumerable persons, each with his grievance, may come to oppose the grant, from one who claims a property worth some lakhs, down to one who sets up title to a property worth a paltry sum. It is certainly not to be expected that the application is to be decided in the presence of each one of these claimants. If, then, the scope of testamentary proceedings is correctly understood, no difficulty can arise. Can the executor to whom Probate is granted, on the strength of that Probate, recover property which is not the testator's? Does the Probate confer on the executor right to property to which he is otherwise not entitled? If it is remembered that these questions ought to be answered in the negative, it does not in the least matter, what the properties are, which the testator professes to treat as his own and to dispose of by his Will. The remarks I have made apply equally to applications for Letters of Administration. In dealing with the question—Has the caveator the necessary interest?—the test is, does the grant displace any right to which the caveator would otherwise be entitled? If so, he has such an interest, if not, he has not. An heir on intestacy has an interest in impeaching the Will; for, but for the Will, he would succeed to the property. A legatee under a previous Will has a similar interest; for, he is interested in establishing the validity of that Will and impeaching the validity of the later Will which deprives him of the benefit. A reversionary heir under the Hindu Law has such an interest; for, normally, a widow has only a limited estate and the reversioner is interested in impeaching a Will, which professes to enlarge that interest, or, again, which purports to confer upon her a right to make an adoption. [See Brindaban Chunder Shaha v. Sureshwar Saha (9).] But in every case it must be shown that the caveator, but for the Will, would be entitled to a right, of which that Will deprives him.

I have said there has been of late a tendency at the Bar, to treat the rule I have stated as open to question, and support is sought in certain observations of a Bench of this Court in a recent case, Jammi Hanumantha Rao v. Aratha Latchamma (10) but I am sure I shall not be wrong if I assert (and I do so with some confidence) that the learned Judges could not have intended by their dicta to cast a doubt on a long settled practice sanctioned in a series of judgments of great authority.

In this case, I have come to the conclusion that the caveator is not possessed of an interest entitling him to oppose the grant and I dismiss his caveat with costs which I fix at Rs. 300.

It came to my notice that citation did not issue to the minor grandsons of the testator, Gopala and Chengalroya. They are certainly persons interested in the estate and I, therefore, directed citation to issue to them. As their mother happens to be one of the petitioners, a Court guardian has been appointed and the latter has filed a written statement. I shall now proceed to hear the application on its merits.

Mr. Venkataramana Rao now says that his client, the caveator, has another kind of interest. According to him, if there is a bare possibility of a person having an interest, that person is entitled to file a caveat. It is needless in this case to enquire whether this proposition is sound or not; the caveator is the wife of Gopala Chetti, the minor grandson of the testator, and whatever interest she may or may not have, she cannot be permitted to oppose the grant, when we find that, as a matter of fact, her husband and her brother-in-law, who alone would be entitled to succeed on intestacy, are before the Court and are taking necessary steps. The contention is overruled and I direct the plaintiffs to examine their witnesses.

An application for the issue of a third party notice should be made promptly and as a rule before the defence is delivered, so that the notice may be served within the time limited for delivering the defence, but in special cases the delay may be excused. [p. 426, col. 1.]

If the third party proceedings will prejudice, embarrass or delay the plaintiff, or where the whole dispute between the defendant and the third party cannot be disposed of in the action itself, the Court may refuse to give directions, but the mere fact that the case presents some difficulty is not a reason for refusing directions. On such an application, the question to be asked is, whether on the facts alleged, a right to indemnity exists. If the right is made out, the applicant has a prima facie claim and the Court should not inquire closely into the merits of that claim. [p. 427, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This application is made under O. V-A of the Original Side Rules. These provisions relate to what is known as "third party procedure" and were framed only recently and I understand that this is the first application made in this Court under this order.

The plaintiff's action is one to enforce a mortgage created by the first defendant and the latter claims indemnity as against the second defendant. The facts which according to the first defendant give rise to his claim are these: The second defendant is the elder brother of the first and they had a sister by name Sitamma. She wanted to help the first defendant who was in difficulties and with that object entrusted the second defendant with a sum of Rs. 50,000 directing him to redeem the suit house which was the ancestral house of the first defendant and thus free it from the suit mortgage to which it was subject and hand it over to the first defendant. The latter who is the applicant asks that the question raised should be determined in this action under these rules and that a decree should be passed in his favour against the second defendant.

On the facts alleged by the applicant there can be no doubt that the transaction amounts to a trust. This word is thus defined in s. 3 of the Indian Trusts Act:

"A 'trust' is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner, or declared and accepted by him, for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner."

Sitamma is the author of the trust, the second defendant is the trustee, the first defendant is the beneficiary, the sum of Rs. 50,000 is the trust money and the beneficial interest of the first defendant is his right against the second defendant as owner of the trust property. It seems to me that all the ingredients necessary to constitute a trust are present in this case but the more important question to decide is, is the claim of the first defendant against the second a claim to damages or a claim to indemnity? It is well settled that the third party procedure is applicable only to claims to indemnity and not to claims to damages. See Birmingham & District Land Co. v. L. & N. W. Ry. (1). Is then a cestui que trust entitled to indemnity as against his trustee? The English cases establish that a right to indemnity may arise in several ways.

(a) First, it may be created by express contract, that is, if it is given in terms by the contract itself between the two parties.

(b) Secondly, it may arise by implied contract, that is, if the true inference to be drawn from the facts is, that the parties intended such indemnity even if they did not express themselves to that effect. As an instance, if A requests B to do a thing for him and B by reason of doing that act is subject to some liability, then, from A's request to do the act, the law implies a contract by him to indemnify B for the loss.

Now in the case of contracts, right to indemnity must be carefully distinguished from right to damages. A right to indemnity is given by the original contract, whereas a right to damages arises in consequence of the breach of that contract. These two rights are confounded and one reason for the confusion is, that when a contract is broken, indemnity is often found to coincide with the measure of damages. In those cases, whether the right is called right to indemnity or right to damages, practically the same result follows, and it is forgotten that these two words express two fundamentally different legal ideas.

(c) The position of the parties is such that either in law or in equity there is an obligation on the one party to indemnify the other.

(d) If there is a state of circumstances to which the law attaches a legal or equitable duty to indemnify.

[Cases (c) and (d) are generally treated as falling under 'implied contract'.]

(e) A right to indemnity may be given by Statute. These are some of the cases—the enumeration may not be exhaustive—where a right to indemnity arises.

We are now concerned with cl. (c), that is, where the Court comes to the conclusion from the position of the parties that either in law or in equity there is an obligation cast upon the one party to indemnify the other. To this class belongs the case of trustee and cestui que trust. From the position the parties occupy, a trustee has a right to be indemnified by the cestui que trust against liabilities which he has incurred. "It is settled," say their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hardoon v. Belilios (2) "that, speaking generally, absolute beneficial owners of property must in equity bear the burdens incidental to its ownership and not throw such burdens on their trustees." The reason is stated in these words: "The plainest principles of justice require that the cestui que trust who gets all the benefit of the property should bear its burden unless he can show some good reason why his trustee should bear them himself. The obligation is equitable and not legal." Page 123*.

The right to indemnity thus exists on the part of a trustee as against his cestui que trust. Does the converse right exist? that is to say, has a cestui que trust a right to indemnity as against his trustee? That is the question I have to decide.

That such a right exists has been decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Eastern Shipping Co. v. Quah Beng Kee (3). After enumerating the cases where a right to indemnity exists which have been very fully dealt with in Birmingham & District Land Co. v. L. & N. W. Ry. (1) and which have been referred to by me above, their Lordships observe thus:

"The question of indemnity commonly arises in the case in which a trustee claims to be indemnified by his cestui que trust. This class of cases was particularly discussed by Lord Lindley in Hardoon v. Belilios (2). The present case is the converse."

The facts of that case were these: The owners of a wharf granted a Shipping Company a right to berth their ships at that wharf subject to certain liability for damage caused. The defendant, the Managing Director of that Company, gave instructions without the Company's authority that a ship which he himself had chartered for his own benefit should berth at the wharf. Owing to the unskilful way in which the ship was unloaded the wharf collapsed. The owners of the wharf sued the Shipping Company for damages and the latter served a third party notice upon the Managing Director and claimed that he should indemnify them against any damages for which they should be held liable. The question that arose was whether the Shipping Company had against their Director a right of indemnity. Their Lordships thus proceed:

"Beng Kee (the Managing Director) has been found to stand in fiduciary relation to the Eastern Shipping Company, and the latter claim indemnity from him in respect of liability imposed upon them by his abuse of powers in the exercise of which he owed them a duty and was responsible as a trustee of those powers. He was not a trustee in the full sense of that word. No property was vested in him. But he was a trustee of his powers in the sense that they were vested in him in such manner that he stood in a fiduciary relation to the Company in respect of his exercise of those powers."

The passage which I find most helpful is the following:

"The nearest simile that was put in argument was that of a trustee in the fullest sense of the word who abuses his powers; say, the trustee of real estate with power to mortgage who mortgages for his own benefit and in breach of his duty as trustee and puts the mortgage money into his own pocket. In such a case an action would lie in the Chancery Division for a declaration that the defendant was guilty of breach of trust and was liable to indemnify the cestui que trust against the mortgage, and for an order that he do redeem the mortgaged property and indemnify the cestui que trust against the mortgage debt."

The facts of the present case seem to closely resemble the facts of the case put. The trustee in the latter case wrongfully mortgages the beneficiary's property and applies the money to his own use. In the present case the trustee wrongfully appropriates the trust money and fails to utilise it in redeeming the beneficiary's property. If in one case the cestui que trust has a right to be indemnified, it seems to me that in the other case he has equally that right—I, therefore, decide this point in favour of the applicant.

I have now dealt with the main question raised, but there are some subsidiary points which have been argued and I shall now proceed to deal with them.

It is contended for the second defendant that the application has been made too late and that the delay is fatal to it.

Under the English rules, it may be taken as settled that the application cannot be made until after the defendant has entered an appearance in the action. It should further be made promptly and as a rule before the defence is delivered, so that the notice may be served within the time limited for delivering the defence. (See The Yearly Practice of the Supreme Court for 1927, Vol. I, page 236). Rule 1 of O. V-A of the Original Side Rules, in effect reproduces this provision in regard to the service of the notice. The second defendant contends that this provision has been infringed. For dealing with this point, it may be useful to glance at the rules. They provide that where a defendant claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity over against any person not a party to the suit, he may by leave of the Court or Judge issue a notice (called the third party notice) to that effect sealed with the seal of the Court. Such notice shall generally be served within the time limited for delivering the defence. This is the procedure to be adopted when the party against whom relief is claimed by the defendant is not a party to the suit. But where the defendant claims relief against any other defendant already on the record, the rule applicable is r. 8 of O. V-A. In this case the same procedure is to be adopted as if the last mentioned defendant were a third party with the exception that no leave of the Court is required for service of the notice. Towse v. Loveridge (4). Bearing these rules in mind, let us see what has happened in the present case. The plaint was filed on the 20th January, 1927, the first defendant filed his written statement on the 26th February, 1927, and the second defendant filed his statement on the 19th April, 1927, on which date the present rules came into force. The application for the issue of the third party notice could, of course, not be made before the 19th of April, as such procedure was unknown on the Original Side before that date. The time for filing the written statement of the first defendant had expired on the 26th of February. Under the rules, strictly, the third party notice ought to have been served before that date. But in this case, that course was impossible, as this procedure did not then obtain on the Original

Side. The Court closed for the long vacation on the 7th of May and re-opened on the 18th of July. The case was posted before me for the settlement of issues on the 19th. On that day, on behalf of the first defendant it was said that he intended to claim under the third party procedure, indemnity from the second, on the allegations already made in the first defendant's written statement. The latter had no defence to the plaintiff's action and I passed a decree on the 19th in favour of the plaintiff against the first defendant. The second defendant's Vakil then raised the contention that the question between the defendants inter se could not be gone into in this action and that this must be tried as a preliminary point. I accordingly made an order on the same date adjourning the case a fortnight for deciding this question. Generally, no doubt, the third party notice must be served within the time I have mentioned, but r. 1 shows that in special cases the delay may be excused, for according to that rule the notice shall be served within the time mentioned "unless otherwise ordered by the Master or Registrar." This is a very fit case for an order being made excusing the delay. Within a few days of the rules coming into force, the Court was closed and the application was made on the next day after the re-opening. Both the English rules and our rules give a discretion to the Judge to extend the time and in this case I am prepared to exercise the discretion in favour of the applicant. Such delay, as there has been, is excusable as the rules were new and it took some time for the parties to become aware of them.

To make my statement of facts complete, I must advert to one circumstance. The suit as originally filed was against the first defendant alone. He applied on the 21st February, 1927, that the present second defendant should be brought on the record as a party and the Registrar made an order on the 22nd directing the second defendant to be impleaded and he was accordingly brought on the record. It will be seen that at that time there were no rules relating to the third party procedure. The first defendant's application was supported by an affidavit in which he set forth his claim to indemnity as against the second defendant. But on those allegations he suggested that the decree in favour of the plaintiff should be passed both against himself and the second defendant. It was in this manner that the second defendant came on the record. These facts are entirely irrelevant for determining the questions that have been raised but I have set them out in order to remove any confusion that may arise on account of the somewhat peculiar facts of this case.

It is next urged by the second defendant that in the exercise of my discretion I must dismiss him from being a third party to the action. It is undoubtedly true that the Judge has a discretion whether he will give directions or not; per Lord Esher in Baxter v. France (5). The very object of the third party procedure is to prevent multiplicity of actions. Some good reason must, therefore, be shown for the course which I am asked to adopt. If the third party proceedings will prejudice, embarrass or delay the plaintiff, the Court may refuse to give directions. As neither of the defendants had any objection to a decree being passed in favour of the plaintiff on the suit mortgage, such a decree was already passed and the ground, therefore, that the plaintiff will be prejudiced or embarrassed does not exist. The Court may refuse to adopt this procedure for another reason, namely that the whole dispute between the defendant and the third party cannot be disposed of in the action itself. For instance, if the claim of the defendant against the third party is in part a claim to indemnity within the meaning of the third party procedure and in part to damages, this procedure will not cover the latter claim and it would remain, therefore, to be tried between the defendant and the third party in another action. In such a case the Court holds that the third party procedure is inapplicable [Baxter v. France (5) already cited.] Then the question remains, is the mere fact that the case presents some difficulty, a reason for refusing directions, as has been urged for the second defendant? The decision of the Privy Council in Eastern Shipping Co. v. Quah Beng Kee (3) (to which I have already referred) shows clearly that the Court will not refuse to apply the procedure merely because the case raises a question of some difficulty. The trial Judge there held that the right claimed against the third party was only a right to damages and not to indemnity and that, therefore, the procedure was not applicable. The Appellate Court affirmed this judgment. The Privy Council taking a different view held that the right was a right to indemnity and applied the third party procedure. Can there be a clearer case than this to show that the mere fact that some doubtful question arises is not a reason to refuse to apply these rules? [Baxter v. France (5) does not decide differently.] In that case the Court refused to apply the procedure for various reasons, one reason being that the question raised was complicated and difficult. The discretion having been exercised by the Court of first instance, the Court of Appeal refused to interfere. Apart from this consideration, I do not find that the question raised in the present case is so difficult or complicated that I must decline to adopt the procedure. In my opinion, the point is, as I have shown, covered by clear authority.

It is next urged that the first defendant has not made out a prima facie case and that on that ground his application fails. The question is, what is meant by a prima facie case. In Carshore v. North Eastern Ry. (6) Cotton, L. J., observes:

"If it could be shown that their claim, if substantiated, was not one for indemnity, but for something else, it would have been different; but this is a claim for indemnity within the meaning of the rule."

Fry, L. J., makes an observation to the same effect. The question to be asked is, on the facts alleged, does a right to indemnity exist? If this right is made out, the applicant has a prima facie claim and the Court will not enquire closely into the merits of that claim. Bacon, V. C., thus puts it tersely in the following passage:

"There is no doubt that the defendants were clearly right in taking out this summons; and to go into the nature of the indemnity would be a most idle and absurd thing for me to do. The rule is sufficient; the rule is plain; it is a case where an indemnity has been given." [Edison Electric Light Co. v. Holland (7).]

(6) (1885) 29 Ch. D. 344; 54 L. J. Ch. 760; 52 L. T. 232; 33 W. R. 420.

(5) (1895) 1 Q. B. 591 at p. 593; 64 L. J. Q. B. 337; 14 R. 285; 72 L. T. 183; 43 W. R. 341.

The Court might come to a different conclusion if the claim is entirely frivolous. [Carshore v. North Eastern Ry. (6).]

In the result, I am of the opinion that no valid ground has been shown for my refusing to give directions.

There remains one further question to be dealt with. For the second defendant it is urged that there have been some irregularities in the procedure adopted and that, therefore, the application should be dismissed. I think this argument is scarcely tenable. When indemnity is claimed against a defendant who is already a party to the suit, I have pointed out that no leave of the Court is necessary to serve the notice. In this case, on the 19th of April, the first defendant gave notice to the second defendant in Court that he intended to apply under the rules relating to the third party procedure. As a matter of fact, such an application was then and there made in Court and in the presence of the second defendant, but the Bar not having become familiar with these rules, a written notice was not then served on him although this defect was later remedied. Is the absence of the written notice fatal to the application? I hold, in the circumstances, that it is not.

If the defendant desires the third party proceedings to continue, he must take out a summons for directions as to the further proceedings. On the hearing of this summons, the third party or the defendant already on the record as the case may be, may object that the case is not one in which the third party procedure is applicable. The second irregularity complained of occurred in the taking out of the summons for directions. On the day the case was taken up for hearing the second defendant's objections, there was not before me a formal summons for directions. But it is obvious that every one came to the Court for arguing this very question, for, according to the order of the 19th July, that was the question that was to be argued and decided. The second defendant was not prejudiced for he not only knew that this question was reserved by that order, but he actually came to Court to argue that very question. To cure the defect, a formal Judge's summons has since been filed and, in the circumstances, I must disallow the objection.

The second defendant shall file his written statement on or before the 18th. Post the case for issues on the 19th.

A. No. 40 of 1926 (C. C. No. 142 of 1926 on the file of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Gooty) and petition to revise the judgment in the said C. C. No. 142 of 1926.

Messrs. K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar and C. R. Lakshmikantha Mudaliar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Balarama Aiyar, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—In these petitions the District Board of Anantapur is the petitioner. These arise out of a prosecution instituted by the District Board against the driver and the owner of a bus for infringing the notification issued by the President District Board on 11th June, 1926. The Second Class

Magistrate who tried the case acquitted the owner of the bus and convicted the driver under ss. 166 and 207 of the Local Boards Act.

The Appellate Court set aside the conviction of the driver. The District Board has preferred these revision petitions against the order of the Appellate Magistrate and also against the order of the Second Class Magistrate. The contention for the driver is that it is the owner of the bus that is liable if at all under ss. 166 and 207 and not the driver who is only a servant. Reliance is placed on In re Velayudha Mudali (1). That case has no application to the present. In order to see whether the driver of a vehicle comes within the provisions of the section we have to look at the section itself. The first portion of s. 166 is in these terms:—

"No person shall, on any public road in a District, ply any motor vehicle for hire, or use any such vehicle for carrying passengers or goods at separate fares or rates on such road, except on a license obtained from the President of the District Board."

This covers the case of a person who plies any motor vehicle for hire or uses any vehicle for conveying passengers. It cannot be said that the driver of a car does not ply the car for hire when, as a matter of fact, he collects the fares from passengers. Though the owner may be liable for allowing the car to be taken along the road prohibited by the District Board yet the responsibility of the driver who takes a car knowing that there is such a prohibition is not taken away by the mere fact that the master also is liable. The contention that the servant is merely obeying the orders of his master is no ground for relieving him of his liability when clearly the section covers the case of a person plying for hire whether it is his own car or not. There is no warrant for saying that the driver who drives a vehicle knowing perfectly well that he should not go along a particular road does not contravene the provisions of s. 166. I am clearly of opinion that the case of the driver is covered by s. 166. I, therefore, set aside the Appellate Magistrate's order and direct him to restore the case to file and dispose of it according to law. In considering the sentence to be awarded to the driver he may, of course, take into consideration the fact that the master also is liable. But this is a matter entirely within the discretion of the Magistrate and it is unnecessary for me to say anything more about it.

As regards the owner of the vehicle he is clearly guilty under s. 163. This point is covered by a distinct ruling of my brother Wallace reported as Sivarama Mudaliar v. Muthunnaiengar (2) and it is unnecessary for me to repeat the observations of the learned Judge. I set aside the acquittal order of the owner of the vehicle and direct the Second Class Magistrate to take the case on his file and dispose of it according to law.

Malabar Law—Extinct tavazhi—Inheritance.

Under Malabar Law a tavazhi which has separated last and which is also the nearest in point of propinquity to the last member of an extinct tavazhi is entitled to succeed to that tavazhi in preference to a tavazhi whose only claim is its original connection with the same tarwad. [p. 430, col 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips, in S. A. No. 1494 of 1922, dated the 9th April, 1925, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Calicut, in A. S. Nos. 294 and 295 of 1919, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Manjeri, in O. S. No. 172 of 1916.

FACTS.—The plaintiff alleged that his kunnath tarwad was divided into four tavazhis, his own tavazhi, the tavazhis of the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and one chathakot tavazhi, that chathakot tavazhi became extinct on the death of its last member, that the plaintiff's tavazhi with the tavazhi of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 was, therefore, entitled to its property. The 4th defendant contended that the chathakot tavazhi was not a separate tavazhi as alleged by the plaintiff but was a branch of his Parappathodi tavazhi. The Appellate Court held that the kunnath tavazhi was split into four tavazhis one of which was chathakot, which was divided off from the defendant's Parappathodi tavazhi at a time subsequent to the separation of that tavazhi from the main kunnath tavazhi.

A second appeal was preferred against that decree and his Lordship Mr. Justice Phillips accepted the above finding of fact. On the question of law, his Lordship held as follows:—

"Accepting this evidence we have to consider whether the decree is right. The question of inheritance to the property of an extinct tavazhi or tarwad has never been definitely decided in this Court, but there have been several pronouncements, mostly obiter, on the question. We have the dictum of Sundara Iyer, J., in Krishnan Nair v. Damodaram Nair (1) which is quoted in the Appellate Court's judgment to the effect that in the case of extinction of a marumakkathayam tarwad, the last member's nearest heirs are entitled to succeed to the property. This is not opposed to the dictums of Holloway, J., in Korapen Nayar v. Chenen Nayar (2) which says 'on the extinction of a particular house, it goes over to the other houses traditionally connected, but long severed in point of rights of property.' That does not definitely state that it shall be only the nearest heir, but it is not opposed to such a contention. Again it has been held in Travancore [Lakshmi Narayani v. Eachotty Mathani (3)] that the property of the last surviving member of a tarwad would lapse jointly to the tarwads having community of pollution, that is to the koottukars or dayadies, the nearer, however, excluding the more remote and the nearness being determined not by the degree of propinquity alone, but also by the fact that they remained united in interest with the tarwad longer than the others who divided off at an earlier period.

Nair (4). He does not agree with the dictum of Sundara Iyer, J., but he agrees with a portion of the decision of the Travancore Court. His opinion, which I take to be his personal opinion, is that the property goes to the branch which has last separated from the extinct tarwad. Whichever view is taken in the present case, the lower Appellate Court's decree is correct. If 4th defendant's tavazhi is the last separated tavazhi, it is entitled. If the question of propinquity is considered the 4th defendant's tavazhi is again the heir; similarly also if it is held that Lakshmi Ammal's heir would succeed.

In any view, therefore, the decree is right and it is unnecessary to decide which of these conflicting views both in this Court and Travancore is correct.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs."

Against this decree, a Letters Patent Appeal was filed.

JUDGMENT.—The 4th defendant in his written statement pleaded that chathakot was a branch of Parappathodi and also pleaded that chathakot was never divided from Parappathodi. The first issue dealt with this plea of the 4th defendant and the second part of the issue raised the point whether chathakot was a portion of Parappathodi. It is true that in the issue it meant undivided portion as shown by the contract to the former part of the issue. Still it raised the question whether, divided or undivided, it was really an off-shoot of Parappathodi.

The Subordinate Judge found in para. 3 that all the four tarwads including chathakot are separate but he gave no date for the separation of chathakot. The earliest of the documents he refers to is dated 1894 Ex. JJ. In the next para. 4 he took up the question whether chathakot is nearer than the others and finds that it is an off-shoot of Parappathodi. We do not think there is any surprise to the plaintiff in recording such a finding.

We agree with Phillips, J., in accepting the finding chathakot is nearer the Parappathodi and also chathakot separated last. On any view of the law, the 4th defendant's Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), s. 381—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 16—Succession Certificate, conclusiveness of—Certificate in name of wrong person, whether invalid.

Under the 1st part of s. 16 of the Succession Certificate Act of 1889 (corresponding to s. 381 of the Succession Act of 1925), a Succession Certificate is conclusive against the debtor.

Kuchu Iyer v. Vengu Ammal (1), followed.

The fact that a Succession Certificate is issued in the name of a person different from that of the person ultimately found to be the real heir does not render the certificate invalid.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Chittoor, in S. C. S. No. 499 of 1924.

FACTS.—The plaintiff, alleging that he was the husband of one Aliamma, deceased, sued on a promissory note executed by the defendant in favour of Aliamma. Defendant admitted execution but denied that the plaintiff was the husband of the deceased Aliamma or that he was her heir and contended that the suit was not maintainable without a Succession Certificate. The plaintiff thereupon obtained and filed a Succession Certificate in respect of the debt.

The learned District Munsif held that Aliamma, the payee under the promissory note was only the concubine of the plaintiff and not his wife and that the obtaining of the Succession Certificate, by itself, did not entitle the plaintiff to a decree since admittedly the payee had a daughter who was the proper heir to sue on the note and accordingly the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff applied for revision.

Mr. Gopal Menon, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Srinivasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Under the 1st part of s. 16 of the Succession Certificate Act (now s. 381 of the Succession Act of 1925) the certificate (Ex. B) is conclusive against the debtor [vide, Kuchu Iyer v. Vengu Ammal (1)].

The learned Vakil for the respondent refers to s. 386 of the Succession Act of 1925 (s. 22 of Act VII of 1889) which shows that he need not pay if the certificate is invalid. But I do not see why the certificate is invalid.

Even if another person (such as the daughter) turn out to be the heir of the deceased, it does not follow that the certificate is invalid. Section 374 has no bearing in the case.

The petition is allowed and the plaintiff is given a decree with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1 (4), O. XXXII, r. 4—Suit by adult and minor sons to set aside alienation by father—Compromise between adult son and defendant, whether binding on minor son—Splitting of compromise, legality of—Co-plaintiffs—Withdrawal of suit by one without consent of others, validity of.

During the course of a suit by two brothers one an adult, and the other a minor represented by the adult as next friend, to set aside an alienation by their father, the defendant set up a compromise between the adult plaintiff and himself under which it was agreed between them that the suit should be dismissed on the defendant paying Rs. 100 to the plaintiff.

Held, (1) that the compromise was not binding on the minor plaintiff;

(2) that no portion of the joint estate was bound by it inasmuch as the compromise could not be split up into two different compromises.

Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row (1), followed.

Under O. XXIII, r. 1, cl. (4), Civil Procedure Code, one plaintiff cannot withdraw from a suit without the consent of his co-plaintiff especially in a case where such other plaintiff is a minor represented by the adult plaintiff as next friend.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bapatla, dated the 30th November, 1925, and made in C. M. A. No. 27 of 1925, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif at Ongole, dated the 27th July, 1925, and made in C. M. P. No. 396 of 1925, in O. S. No. 257 of 1924 (O. S. No. 517 of 1925, Principal District Munsif's Court, Ongole).

FACTS.—The plaintiffs (2nd plaintiff being a minor represented by 1st plaintiff as next friend) sued to set aside an alienation by their father and for possession. During the trial of the suit, the defendant contended that the parties had entered into a compromise of the suit by which on payment of Rs. 100, the 1st plaintiff was to get the suit dismissed and that the said sum of Rs. 100 was paid. The plaintiff denied the compromise but the District Munsif found in favour of the compromise and dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge also found that the compromise was true but held that it was binding only on the 1st plaintiff.

Against this order a Civil Revision Petition was filed.

Mr. T. V. Venkatrama Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Raghava Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In revision petition, I am bound by the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the compromise was, as a fact, entered into by the 1st plaintiff. I may add that I am of opinion that the post cards, Exs. B and C, are genuine and, therefore, agree with his findings.

The razinama is that the suit should be withdrawn. This razinama is certainly not binding on the 2nd plaintiff. The question is whether the 1st plaintiff should be held to be bound by it. Mr. Raghava Rao at first contended that the 1st plaintiff is bound by it so far as his share is concerned. But this amounts to splitting up the compromise into two separate compromises and the facts do not justify it. The decision in Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row (1) shows that no portion of the joint estate is bound by the compromise. Mr. Raghava Rao then contended that 2nd plaintiff may press his claim for the whole of the suit property and he would confine his contention to the 1st plaintiff only and not his share of the property. But this seems to be a distinction by which nothing is gained. If the whole suit is to be tried, I do not see any object in saying that the 1st plaintiff (though not his share) is bound. Moreover, there is O. XXIII, r. 1, cl. (4) which shows that one plaintiff cannot withdraw from a suit without the consent of the others. If the 1st plaintiff wished to withdraw, he could not do so as the 2nd plaintiff is a minor, and the next friend is the 1st plaintiff himself. In all the circumstances, I think the best course is to give no effect to the compromise and allow the whole suit to proceed. But the 1st plaintiff will have to refund Rs. 100 to the defendant. To this extent the Civil Revision Petition is allowed.

If the plaintiffs succeed and in the final decree they get mesne profits, the 1st plaintiff's half share of the profits will be diminished by Rs. 100 and if it be less than Rs. 100 there will be a direction in the decree directing the 1st plaintiff to refund the balance to the defendant. If the plaintiffs do not succeed, the final decree will contain a direction directing the 1st plaintiff to refund the sum of Rs. 100 to the defendant. In this Court each party will bear his own costs.

A Court is not bound to accept a composition proposed by an insolvent and accepted by a majority in number and three-fourths in value of creditors who have proved their claim, simply because none of the creditors opposes its approval by the Court. Before accepting a proposed composition or scheme a Court should satisfy itself that such composition or scheme fulfils certain conditions, inter alia, that it is both reasonable and for the benefit of the general body of the creditors. ORDER.—In this case the Composition Scheme proposed by the debtor has been accepted by a majority in number and three-fourths in value of the creditors who have proved their claims and has the support of the Official Assignee. In answer to the notices issued by the Court under s. 29, cl. (i) of the Act none of the creditors have appeared to oppose its approval by the Court. It has been strenuously argued that under these circumstances, the Court is bound to accept it.

This argument, however, completely loses sight of the Statute. A composition, stands on a different footing than a compromise to which all persons concerned are parties. The Statute intentionally and on set purpose imposes an obligation on the Court of approving a composition or scheme to which the creditors or a great majority of them have agreed. As pointed by Lord Esher, M. R., in Ex parte Reed, In re Reed (1), creditors of an insolvent were generally careless, and as a rule wrote off their debts as bad and agreed to terms which might give some possibility of getting something out of the wreck, and that the Legislature had, therefore, thought it proper to vest the controlling power in the hands of the Court for the purpose of protecting the creditors against their own recklessness; for the purpose of preventing a majority of creditors for dealing recklessly not only with their own property but with that of the minority, and of enforcing so far as the Legislature could, a more careful and moral conduct on the part of the debtors. The Legislature has, therefore, made it incumbent on the Court that before accepting the proposed composition or scheme it should satisfy itself that such composition or scheme fulfils certain conditions inter alia that it is both reasonable and for the benefit of the general body of creditors. If it is deficient in either of those qualities it fails; per Fry, L. J., in Ex parte Bischoffsheim, In re Aylmer (2). In that event the Court is bound to withhold its consent, for cl. (iv) of s. 29 of the Act which is a verbatim reproduction of similar provisions in the English Statute declares that the Court "shall" and not "may" refuse to approve the proposal. It is also well settled that a composition or scheme is neither reasonable nor for the benefit of the general body of creditors unless it affords some advantage to the creditors which they would not have if the insolvency proceedings were allowed to continue. In re Walter Wood (3), In re Browne & Wingrove, Ex parte the Debtors (4) and In re E. A. B. (5). On the very face of it the proposed composition in issue in the present case confers no greater benefits on the creditors whatsoever and is, therefore, one which cannot be accepted. The only property so far disclosed by the debtors is certain piecegoods valued by him at Rs. 10,000 and valued by the Official Assignee at much less than Rs. 7000 and certain outstandings not exceeding Rs. 250 in value altogether. The debtor offers to pay nothing more. According to the proposed terms the property is to be handed over by the Official Assignee to five private trustees who are empowered to realise the profits and to distribute it amongst the scheduled creditors. The debtor is not required to do anything more than to help the trustees in selling the piecegoods and recovering the outstandings which he is even otherwise bound to do. He wants the order of adjudication to be annulled forthwith so that he may be able to carry on his trade again as a free man.

I am not at all impressed with the only argument advanced in support of this proposal that the private trustees would obtain better prices for piecegoods by private retail sale than the Official Assignee by a public auction. In my opinion this procedure is as much likely to result in loss as in profit on account of the extra expenditure involved in such retail sale by way of shop rent, etc., and on account of fluctuation in prices which is unfortunately not uncommon in Karachi. Even otherwise it is open to the proposed trustees who are some of the biggest creditors to act as the agents of the Official Assignee free of charge, in selling the goods in the same manner as they would under the composition. The composition not only affords no greater benefits to the creditors but is, in my opinion, one which is positively disadvantageous to them. It deprives them of at least the possibility of participating in the property, if any, which the debtor might have failed to disclose or which the debtor might acquire before he is able to obtain his discharge in the ordinary course.

As the condition precedent required by cl. (iv) to the acceptance by me of the proposed composition is wanting, no question of any discretionary powers under cl. (vii) of that section arises, and I have no other option but to refuse to approve the same, and I order accordingly.

Where a submission clause in a contract provides for a reference to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, but makes no provision for the appointment of an arbitrator on behalf of the defaulting party in the event of his refusal to appoint his arbitrator, the Court has a discretion under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act to stay a suit brought by such party, as, otherwise, it would be permitting a party to take advantage of his own wrong. All that an applicant for stay of a suit under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act is required to show is that he was ready and willing to go to arbitration at the time of the commencement of the proceedings. Mr. Assudomal Rewachand, for the Opponents.

ORDER.—This is an application under s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act for stay of an ordinary commercial suit instituted by the opponents against the applicants in the Court of Small Causes, Karachi.

The main ground on which this application is opposed is that the submission clause, as contained in the contract, provides for a reference to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, but it contains no provision for the appointment of an arbitrator on behalf of the opponents in the event of their refusal to appoint one.

It is urged that in the absence of such a provision, and further in the absence of any provision in the Arbitration Act empowering the Court to appoint an arbitrator on failure or refusal of one of the parties to a submission to do so, s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act has no application.

A somewhat similar plea was raised in the case of Manchester Ship Canal Co. Ltd. v. S. Pearson & Son Ltd. (1) and was disallowed by the Court of Appeal. In that case the agreement to refer disputes to arbitration provided for a reference to three arbitrators, one to be appointed by each of the parties and the third by the two so appointed. One of the parties refused to appoint an arbitrator and brought an action against the other party to the submission, which was sought to be stayed. Reliance was placed on the case of In re Smith & Service and Nelson & Sons (2) as an authority for the proposition that in such a case there should be no stay. Their Lordships distinguished the case of In re Smith & Service and Nelson & Sons (2) on the ground that in that case no suit had been filed and, therefore, there was no occasion for the application of s. 4 of the English Act corresponding to s. 19 of the Indian Act. It was held that the provisions of s. 4 were wide enough to enable the Court to order a stay of the suit notwithstanding that it had no power to appoint an arbitrator on behalf of the plaintiff who had refused to do so.

All that s. 4 of the English Act and s. 19 of the Indian Act contemplate is that a party to a submission who is sued should apply to the Court for stay at the earliest opportunity, that is to say, immediately "after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings," and that such party should have been ready and willing at the time when the proceedings were commenced and should continue thereafter to be ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration. To hold that a party to the submission may refuse to appoint an arbitrator and thereby frustrate the arbitration, would be nothing short of permitting a party to take advantage of his own wrong. And this could never have been the intention of the Legislature. There is no hardship whatsoever on the opponents if the suit is stayed. It is open to them to appoint an arbitrator on their behalf if they so wish. If they decline to do so, and are thereby prevented from recovering the amount alleged to be due to them they have only to thank themselves for it. Even before the Indian Arbitration Act came into operation, a suit of this nature was barred by the proviso to s. 21 of the Specific Relief Act. The Indian Arbitration Act no doubt confers discretionary powers on the Court to stay suits instituted in breach of an agreement to refer but this is not one of those cases in which these powers could be exercised in favour of the opponents who are themselves the wrong doers. This objection, therefore, fails.

(2) (1890) 23 Q. B. D. 545.

The only other objection urged on behalf of the opponents is, that though the applicants were threatened with legal proceedings, they never called the attention of the opponents to the arbitration clause and never suggested that they were willing to refer the disputes to arbitration. There is no substance in this plea either. In Anglo Persian Oil Co. v. Panchapakesa Ayyar (3) where the lower Court had refused to stay a suit, inter alia, on a somewhat similar ground, the High Court held that it was not sufficient to justify the refusal of an order for stay of the suit. The words of s. 19 are clear. As pointed out above, they require the applicant to be ready and willing to go to arbitration at the time of the commencement of the proceedings and not before. There is also nothing in the section to require the applicant to give intimation in that behalf to the other party before the institution of the suit.

I, therefore, allow the application with costs and order that Suit No. 1227 of 1927 filed by the opponents in the Court of Small Causes, Karachi, be stayed.

JUDGMENT.

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the order of Mr. Tyabji, Additional Judicial Commissioner, directing that the award in the case should be filed.

The facts of the case briefly, so far as they only refer to this application, are that there were three appointments made of an arbitrator. The first respondents (now opponents) first appointed Mr. Statham arbitrator and they gave notice accordingly under s. 9 (b) of the Arbitration Act to the other side, that is, to the second respondents. The second respondents failed to appoint their arbitrator, and Mr. Statham became sole arbitrator, but afterwards refused to act. The same procedure was adopted in respect of Mr. Penn Simkins, and he also refused to act as arbitrator. Finally the same course was a second time adopted in the case of Mr. Statham. On this occasion Mr. Statham acted as a sole arbitrator, and made the award which is now under consideration.

The record also shows that the first respondents filed a suit within three years of the date of the claim, which suit was admittedly in time. After the suit had proceeded for two years the second respondents relied on the arbitration clause and had the suit stayed; and the suit was still pending when the order was passed by Mr. Tyabji.

The two points raised in this application are, firstly, that the procedure adopted for the appointment of the arbitrator was not correct, and that the arbitration was, therefore, invalid; and, secondly, that the reference to the arbitration was made too late, and that the claim is, therefore, time barred.

On the first point, the question depends on ss. 8 and 9 of the Indian Arbitration Act. It is argued on behalf of the present applicant that s. 8 (b) applies in this case, because, when a sole arbitrator has once been appointed under s. 9, then you have to turn back to s. 8 to see what procedure is to be adopted in case the sole arbitrator refuses to act. I am, however, unable to accede to this argument, because, in s. 8 of the Act, it is provided that, if the arbitrator neglects or refuses to act, any party may serve the other parties or the arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to concur in appointing an arbitrator umpire, or third arbitrator. I think that this makes it clear that s. 8 (1) (b) cannot refer to such a case as is dealt with in s. 9, where the submission provides for reference to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party. This view of the law, it appears, was approved in Gopalji Kuverji v. Morarji Jeram Naranji (1) where it was stated that s. 9 applies only to joint appointment by consent.

We come back, therefore, to the position that the procedure to be adopted is that laid down in s. 9. In respect of s. 9, it is argued by the learned Pleader for the applicant that that section does not state what is to be done in case the person who becomes a sole arbitrator refuses to act. I think, however, that, when cls. (a) and (b) of s. 9 are read together, it may fairly be inferred that the party who appointed the arbitrator, who became a sole arbitrator, may appoint a fresh arbitrator, after giving fresh notice to the other side. That is to say the procedure provided by s. 9 is to be repeated, and that is exactly what was done in this case.

For these reasons, the objection based on ss. 8 and 9 of the Indian Arbitration Act does not appear to be valid.

Turning to the objection on the ground of limitation it is argued that the claim is time-barred because reference to arbitration was made (it is contended) three years after the claim became due. It appears to me, however, that it is not necessary to go into the question whether the reference to arbitration was made after the requisite time or not. All that we have to consider here is whether the suit was filed within the requisite period of limitation. Here there is no doubt that the suit was so filed, and it was the second respondent who relied on the arbitration clause and had the suit stayed.

I do not propose to go into other points connected with the question of limitation. It appears to be that the claim cannot be held to be time-barred because the suit was filed within a requisite period of limitation.

The application is, accordingly, dismissed with costs.

Bilaram, A. J. C.—I concur. The submission clause in the contract in dispute provides for the appointment of two arbitrators one by each party and contains no machinery for compelling one of the parties to the submission to make an appointment on behalf of the other.

It, therefore, falls clearly within the purview of s. 9 of the Indian Arbitration Act which supplements the requisite machinery for enforcement of an agreement to submit disputes to arbitration of that nature. I can find nothing in s. 9 to suggest that the same machinery may not be invoked over again and the whole procedure gone through from the beginning to the end if on account of any unforeseen circumstance the nominee of one of the parties who is appointed as the sole arbitrator under the provisions of cl. (b) of that section refuses or neglects to act. The repetition of the procedure laid down by the section, on a refusal or neglect of the sole arbitrator so appointed, affords a fresh opportunity to the party who has made default in the first instance to re-consider his position and to appoint if he so wishes his own nominee when he is called upon to do so again.

Now, if cls. (a) and (b) of s. 8 of the Indian Arbitration Act are carefully analysed they clearly show that neither of them applies to a submission which provides for the appointment of two arbitrators one by each party. Clause (a) clearly contemplates a submission to a single arbitrator from its very inception and does not apply to a submission which provides for more than one arbitrator acting in the matter at any time. Clause (b) which follows cl. (a) deals with appointment of a substitute and prima facie refers to the substitute of a sole arbitrator appointed under a submission of the nature contemplated by cl. (a) that is to say, a sole arbitrator appointed in pursuance of a submission which does not contemplate the appointment of more than one arbitrator in any event. The words "the parties do not supply the vacancy" in that clause as also the words "concur in the appointment of an arbitrator" used in the latter part of that section indicate beyond doubt that the submission is one which requires the parties themselves to concur in the appointment of a sole arbitrator.

Our attention has not been drawn to any decided case in which a different view has been taken. On the contrary the case reported as Gopalji Kuverji v. Moraji Jeram Naranji (1) supports the view that cls. (a) and (b) of s. 8 refer to submissions which provide for the appointment of a single arbitrator. The first ground, therefore, fails.

In dealing with the second objection the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has proceeded on the broad ground that the Limitation Act does not apply to settlement of disputes by arbitration and, therefore, it is open in every case to a party to enforce the submission clause, notwithstanding the fact, that the claim in dispute is statute-barred on the date on which he claims to refer the dispute to arbitration. With all respect I am unable to accept this broad proposition of law. Where the agreement between the parties falls within the four corners of Exception I to s. 28 of the Indian Contract Act which Exception is based upon the ruling in Scott v. Avery (2) no question of limitation can ever arise, for, in that case the claimant has no cause of action for instituting a suit so long as his damages have not been ascertained by recourse to arbitration. In such a case no question of limitation arises and the observation of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner would indubitably apply. As an authority for that proposition reference may be made to the case of Cayzer, Irvine & Co., Ltd v. Board of Trade (3).

But different considerations apply to an ordinary submission clause contained in a commercial contract which provides for a reference to arbitration of disputes arising out of the contract and does not purport to bar the right of a party to enforce his claim in Court before he has obtained an award in respect thereof. In that case a cause of action immediately arises to the aggrieved party; and if he wishes to enforce his claim he should be vigilant. He may take early steps either to enforce his claim by arbitration or by a regular suit. If he sleeps over his right for over the statutory period prescribed for the institution of his suit he is liable to be defeated by the plea that as his claim is barred by limitation and as no suit is maintainable in respect thereof there is no subsisting dispute under or arising out of the contract which may be enforced by arbitration. This was the view taken by me in In the matter of the Arbitration Act (4).

As observed by Lord Sumner in Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. (5) the jurisdiction of an arbitrator depends on the question whether or not there was any submission, and that again on the question whether, at the time when it purported to be submitted to him, there was a dispute subsisting between the parties under the contract. I think it goes without saying that if there is no dispute subsisting between the parties under the contract there can be no reference to arbitration in pursuance of the submission clause contained in such contract. Where a party is called upon to nominate his arbitrator after the expiry of the period of limitation and raises the plea that he is not prepared to go to arbitration as the claim is time-barred, it is difficult to see how such a plea can be said to arise out of the contract which may be adjudicated upon by the arbitrator. His refusal to do so would, therefore, give no right to the opposite party to nominate an arbitrator on behalf of his opponent or to nominate his arbitrator as the sole arbitrator to settle such disputes. From this point of view no question arises as to the applicability of the Limitation Act to arbitrations. And there is no occasion, therefore, to consider whether the case of In re Astley & Tyldesley Coal Co., and The Tyldesley Coal Co. (6) which held that an arbitrator was bound to give effect to the plea of the Statute of Limitation if it was raised before him as a defence, was rightly decided or not. That point has been left undetermined in the more recent case of Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. (5) referred to above, and may be dealt with when a proper case for its consideration arises. So far as the facts of this case are concerned the second objection is easily disposed of on a much narrower ground. The opponents' claim was not barred by the Statute. As a matter of fact, they had already instituted the suit. It was stayed under s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act and could easily be revived again by leave of the Court in the event of the arbitration proving infructuous. It was also not open to the applicant to approbate and reprobate. It was he who had asked for arbitration. Furthermore the application which was in writing contained a clear acknowledgment of the liability of the applicant to pay such amount as was found due by the arbitrators and revived the period of limitation. The second plea was, therefore, without any foundation whatsoever and was one which should never have been raised.

The application will, therefore, stand dismissed with costs.

[ORIGINAL CIVIL INSOLVENCIES NOS. 3 AND 24 OF 1922, 48 OF 1923 AND 32 OF 1921.]

In re SUNDERJI BHIMJI AND OTHERS—INSOLVENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 33 (3), 64
—Notice of final dividend—Creditors whose claims are not entered in schedule, whether entitled to notice.

Under s. 64 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the Official Receiver is bound to give notice of a final dividend not only to those creditors who have notified their claims and whose names are entered in the schedule by him but to all such creditors whose claims have been notified to the Official Receiver either by the creditors themselves or by the insolvent. The notice is not confined to debts referred to in s. 62, cl. (4), sub-cl. (b) and (c) but extends to debts referred to in sub-cl. (a) of that section; and if the Official Receiver has any assets in his hands he is bound to adjudicate on all such claims as are preferred to him in response to the notice of final dividend so issued by him. [p. 440, col. 1.]

Sivasubramani. Pillai v. Theethiappa Pillai (2), relied upon.

Hiranand Mulchand v. Official Receiver (1), dis-sented from.

Instructions sought by the Official Receiver from the Court.

Mr. Suganlal Hussanand, for the Insolvent.

Mr. Nadirshah Naoraji, for the Creditor.

ORDER.—In several insolvencies the former Official Receiver has failed to comply with the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act. He has, inter alia, declared dividends without retaining in his hands sufficient assets to meet debts provable under the Act and appearing from the Insolvent's statement or otherwise, but not proved (s. 62) and has failed to declare final dividends and has also failed to give notices in that behalf (s. 64). The insolvents have been discharged, but certain amounts are standing to the credit of the insolvents, either as the balance due after payment of the dividends declared to the scheduled creditors or being the amount realized after the declaration of such dividends. The present Official Receiver has applied for instructions and advice as to the manner in which such amounts should now be disposed of. He has referred me to certain obiter dicta of Kennedy, A. J. C., in Hiranand Mulchand v. Official Receiver (1) where it was held that a notice under s. 64 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for the declaration of a final dividend should be issued only to such creditors as have notified their claims.

If this decision is correct then all creditors whose names were disclosed by the insolvent in his petition but who had themselves failed to notify their claims to the Official Receiver would not be entitled to notice or to prove their claims after discharge so as to enable them to participate in the money now in the hands of the Official Receiver, and that such money could only be distributed among the scheduled creditors or else credited to Government.

If, on the other hand, it is still open to the Official Receiver to issue notices for declaration of a final dividend not only to the creditors who have notified their claims but to all those whose names have been notified to the Official Receiver by the insolvent himself, the amount in his hands should in the first instance be applied to all such creditors who now prove their claim for payment to them of a dividend equal to that received by the scheduled creditors and for payment pro rata of the balance, if any, to all the creditors who have and who may now prove their claims.

On notices issued by me to the creditors who had not proved their claims, to show cause why they should not be excluded from sharing in the money in the hands of the Official Receiver, Mr. Nadir Shah has appeared in Insolvency No. 3 of 1922 on behalf of some of the creditors and has urged that the order passed by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner is not justified by the words of s. 64.

With all respect I am unable to find in s. 64 of the Act anything to require the creditors themselves to notify to the Official Receiver their claims, so as to entitle them to a notice under that section. The relevant words of the section are the following:—

"He shall give notice in manner prescribed to the persons whose claims to be creditors have been notified but not proved etc." The interpretation put upon these words by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner may to a certain extent find prima facie support from s. 33, cl. (3) which reads as follows:—

"Any creditor of the insolvent may, at any time before the discharge of the insolvent, tender proof of his debt and apply to the Court for an order directing his name to be entered in the schedule as a creditor in respect of any debt provable under this Act, etc."

In Sivasubra Mania Pillai v. Theethiappa Pillai (2) the effect of s. 34 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 which corresponds to s. 23, cl. (3) of the present Act was held to be controlled by the provisions of s. 39 (4) of that Act corresponding to s. 64 of the present Act and to be directory only, and that non-compliance by the creditor in applying before the discharge of the insolvent for his name being included in the schedule under s. 33 (3) was not considered sufficient to deprive such creditor of his right or limit his right to prove on a notice issued under s. 64 of the Act.

I agree with the view taken by the Madras High Court. This view is in consonance with the general policy of the Insolvency Law. In my opinion the Official Receiver is bound to give notice under s. 64 of the Act not only to those creditors who have notified their claims but to all such creditors whose claims have been notified to the Official Receiver either by the creditors themselves or by the insolvent, that is to say the notice is not to be confined to debts referred to in s. 62, cl. (1), sub-cl. (b) and (c), etc., but extends to debts referred to in sub-cl. (a) of that section.

I hold that the Official Receiver is bound to issue notices for a final dividend to all creditors of the insolvent specified in s. 62, cl. (1) sub-cl. (a), (b) and (c) and notwithstanding the discharge of the debtor he is bound to adjudicate on all such claims as are preferred to him in response to such notices.

I direct him to act in accordance with the above instructions in all the matters which are now pending before him.

FIRM OF RAHIMBUX-KADERBUX—PLAINTIFFS

versus

FIRM OF TOPANDAS-HARBHAGWANDAS—DEFENDANTS.

Contract—Repudiation before time of performance not accepted by other party—Contract kept alive—Anticipatory breach—Contract on 'Office Dhara' or usual terms in Karachi—Miti khari, importance of—Mention of wrong steamer therein, whether mere irregularity or vitiates contract—Pleading—Change of case at final hearing—Amendment, necessity of.

A repudiation of a contract before the time for performance arrives which is not accepted by the other party, the contract being kept alive, cannot be treated as an anticipatory breach of the contract. [p. 441, col. 1.]

Berners v. Fleming (1), relied upon.

In a contract on "Office Dhara" or "usual terms" in Karachi the making of miti khari by the seller is an essential act towards the completion of the contract, and the mention in the miti khari notice of a steamer which has not in fact brought goods of the shipment contracted for is not a mere irregularity but constitutes a breach of the contract on the part of the seller. [p. 441, cols. 1 & 2.]

South Indian Export Co., Ltd. v. Condiiah Chetty (3), distinguished.

A party cannot be allowed to change his case at the last moment, without even having made an application to amend his plaint. [p. 441, col. 1.]

Ramchand Gurdasmal v. Gobindram Gurdasmal (2), relied upon.

Mr. Pamanmal Valabdas, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Srikishendas H. Lulla, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This suit has been remanded for determination of the questions whether there was any breach of the contract on the part of the defendant in respect of the December shipment, and if so, what damages are recoverable.

The facts in the case relating to the alleged repudiation are very similar to those in Suit No. 1018 of 1918. The repudiation relied on in this suit is the same as in that suit. The evidence is the same as in that suit and for the reasons mentioned in my judgment in that suit, I am of opinion that there was no breach on the part of the defendant.

There is, however, an additional ground, in my opinion, why the plaintiff cannot rely on the so-called repudiation as breach of the contract for the repudiation was not accepted and it was not set out in the plaint as the basis of the breach of contract. The plaintiff kept the contract alive, made miti khari and sued on the basis of the breach after miti khari. He made no mention of the incident repudiation and cannot now change his case at the last moment without even having made an application to amend his plaint: see Berners v. Fleming (1) and Ramchand Gurdasmal v. Gobindram Gurdasmal (2).

In one particular, however, the circumstances of the present case differ from those in Suit No. 1018 of 1918. The evidence shows that the ss. Kangean arrived in Karachi with the December shipment on the 25th February. It follows that miti khari notice of the 28th February, 1918, would be in time. The miti khari sent by the plaintiff, however, did not mention the ss. Kangean but the ss. Karimoean, which did not bring December shipment. But for the name of the steamer, the miti khari notice was undoubtedly a valid notice. Did the insertion of the wrong steamer amount to a breach on the part of the seller? or was it merely an irregularity which could be cured by the subsequent tender of delivery orders of the correct steamer. Reliance is placed by the plaintiff on South Indian Export Co., Ltd. v. Condiiah Chetty (3). It was held in that case that:—

“Where a condition in a contract that notice should be given of the arrival of the goods by a particular ship is not an essential part of the contract, failure to give such notice or a mistake in the notice given, is not a breach of contract entitling one party to avoid it for that reason.”

It seems to me the contracts on “Office Dhara” or “usual terms” in Karachi are clearly distinguishable from the contract in that case. In the first place the making of miti khari in a contract on usual terms is an essential act towards the completion of the contract. Until the seller has made miti khari there is no obligation on the buyer to pay the price and take delivery and unless the seller makes miti khari within three days of the arrival of the steamer, the breach is on his part. The making of miti khari on “usual terms” is not an offer of an act of performance, but it is far more. It is in itself an essential act towards the completion of the contract. The evidence moreover in the case shows that the making of miti khari is closely connected with a steamer, thus for instance Gidoomal the President of the Indian Merchants' Association admitted that the seller can make miti khari for any steamer of a particular shipment. Ismail Haji admitted that on usual terms the delivery order of any importing firm can be given provided the goods of that firm have arrived in the ship in respect of which miti khari is made. Haridas Lalji said “if a steamer brings correct shipment of 300 tons merchants can make miti khari in respect of thousands of tons. Mahomed Ali Husseinbhoi stated that the seller can make miti khari for any steamer bringing goods of that shipment.” Sobhraj Chetumal says, “In the miti khari notice the name of the steamer bringing the shipment is mentioned.” Hasanand said the same thing. The same fact was to be implied or inferred from the evidence of Hormusji for he stated “a seller can give a miti khari notice before he buys the goods. He buys that steamer's goods from the market. The evidence in the present case shows that a person can make miti khari without having imported any goods. He can make miti khari hoping to be able to secure delivery orders before the due date for giving delivery arrives, and if the miti khari is made in respect of the steamer which has brought the correct shipment, the validity of the miti khari notice does not in any way depend on the amount of the goods of that shipment in the steamer. There is no doubt evidence to the effect that where two steamers arrive at or about the same time, the name of the steamer is sometimes omitted from the miti khari notice. It is not necessary for the purposes of this suit to determine what the effect would be in usual terms if miti khari was made without mentioning the name of any steamer. I am, however, satisfied from the evidence that if a miti khari is made in respect of a particular steamer and that steamer has no goods of the correct shipment, the miti khari is not a valid miti khari in Office Dhara or "usual terms." In the circumstances I am of opinion that there was no breach on the part of the defendant and I would answer the question which has been remanded for decision as follows:—

There was no breach on the part of the defendants and no damages are recoverable from them. I dismiss the suit with further costs on the plaintiffs. Pleador's fee to be taxed as fifteen rupees.

INSOLVENCY APPLICATION NO. 45 OF 1925.

September 21, 1927.

Present:—Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.

In the matter of AN APPLICATION BY FIRM OF UTMA MALLOK

VISHENDAS BY THEIR MANAGING PARTNER JAMNADAS NARAINDAS

TO BE DECLARED INSOLVENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 72, 79—
Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXX—
General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 18 (2)—English Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. V, Ch. 59), s. 155—Adjudication of "debtor" which is a firm, effect of, on partners—"Obtaining credit", meaning of.

An application was presented on behalf of a firm for being adjudicated insolvent. The names of the partners of the firm were disclosed in the application and the Court passed an order that the applicant be adjudicated insolvent. One of the partners was adjudicated an insolvent some years later in another insolvency, and a question arose in respect of an application under s. 72, Provincial Insolvency Act, whether he was an undischarged insolvent with reference to the first insolvency:

Held, that the applicant in the first insolvency was the firm and not the individual partner who filed the application and the order of adjudication was an order against the firm and against each and every partner in that firm. [p. 444, col. 1.]

In considering an application under s. 72, Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court has to consider (a) if the opponent is an undischarged insolvent, (b) if he obtained credit to the extent of Rs. 50 or upwards, and (c) if he in fact informed the person from whom he obtained credit that he was an undischarged insolvent. [p. 443, col. 2.]

R. v. Duke of Leinster (1), relied upon.

The expression "obtaining credit" would include within its ambit the securing of goods on trust that they will be sold and sale-proceeds handed over. [p. 444, col. 2.]

For the purpose of giving sanction for prosecution under s. 72, Provincial Insolvency Act, against an individual partner of a firm, it is immaterial that credit was obtained by him as a partner of the firm. [p. 444, col. 2.]

Application under s. 69, Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920, by Messrs. Strauss & Co., Ltd. (Creditors of Insolvents) for sanctioning prosecution of the Insolvent Jamnadas Naraindas.

Mr. Pahlajsing B. Advani, for the Creditors-Applicants.

Mr. Suganlal H. Jeswani, for the Insolvent.

ORDER.—These are two applications asking the Court to institute criminal proceedings against the insolvent Jamnadas Naraindas for offences falling under ss. 69 and 72 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The broad facts on which the applications are based are hardly in dispute. Prior to 1922 the insolvents worked as a partner in the firm of Pokardas Kishindas. That firm failed in business in the beginning of that year. On November 7, 1921, the insolvent joined his brothers in mortgaging the house jointly owned by them for the sum of Rs. 1,500.

On April 10, 1922, an application was filed in this Court, being Insolvency Application No. 26 of 1922, for an order of adjudication being passed against the firm of Pokardas Kishindas and its partners whose names including that of the insolvent were disclosed therein.

On that application which was not opposed Kennedy, J. C., who then presided over the Insolvency Court passed an order of adjudication, the effect of which is a matter of dispute as will presently appear. In pursuance of that order the Official Receiver dealt with the estate of the insolvent firm and the insolvent Jamnadas appeared before him as an adjudicated insolvent. He, however, handed over no property as he had none to give and failed to apply for his discharge. For two years after the failure of that firm he worked as a paid servant of the firm of Rassomal Ramchand on a monthly salary of Rs. 100 plus Rs. 25 for messing. Partly due to the usual laxity of the creditors of that firm he was not made to pay to the Official Receiver a part of these earnings for the benefit of his creditors. Evidently emboldened by what had transpired, he started a new business in the name of Utma Mallik Vishindas. He states that this new firm consisted of (1) himself (2) his father-in-law Utma Mallik and (3) his son Vishindas. Vishindas was a young boy who had just then left school, and like his father, he possessed no tangible property whatsoever, which in the event of a loss in the business could be made liable to his creditors. Utma Mallik was equally a man of no ostensible means. He was seventy years old and worked as a petty broker at Multan earning about Rs. 30 a month. The only immoveable property possessed by him is said to have been gifted by him to the wife of his predeceased son in the year 1913. That lady, however, continued to live with him, and for reasons which may well be surmised, in her own turn gifted that property to her daughters in the year 1924, just about the time the business of Utma Mallik Vishindas was started in Karachi. Utma Mallik never came down to Karachi and Vishindas took no active part in the business which was solely conducted by Jamnadas. The object of Jamnadas in trading in this assumed name is not far to seek. If he made a profit, he could easily avoid its being made liable for the debts of the firm of Pokardas Kishindas by pleading that he was a paid servant of his father-in-law. If there was a loss there was nothing for his creditors to fall back upon. Under this assumed name Jamnadas was able to induce certain up-country constituents to send down their goods to him on commission sale. He entered into extensive speculative forward transactions on his own behalf with local merchants and for some time paid up his losses by misappropriating to his own use the money of his constituents particularly one Shamdas Bhagwandas. The period of his new activities was about a year. During that period he converted to his own use Rs. 9,750 out of the moneys payable to Shamdas Bhagwandas. He has passed an acknowledgment in their favour for this amount on Chaita Dino 5th, i. e., March, 1925. For two months more he continued to carry on his business and in May, 1925, applied for his firm being adjudicated as insolvent and his firm and he have been adjudicated as such.

In support of the application under s. 72, cl. (1) it is urged that Jamnadas obtained credit from diverse constituents by inducing them to send their goods to him on commission sale on the express or implied promise that he will hand over the sale proceeds to them and that in any case he obtained credit from Shamdas Bhagwandas in March, 1925, when he passed an acknowledgment in their favour for Rs. 9,750 and when according to the admission made by him in his evidence recorded by me on August 30, 1927, he "promised to re-pay this amount in a short time." It has also been urged that his conduct in pledging some of their goods to the Punjab National Bank on 3rd December, 1925, coupled with the diverse means employed by him in putting off payment render him liable for an offence under s. 409, Indian Penal Code.

Now, with regard to the application under s. 72 (1) for which the opponent has due notice, the questions to be answered by the Court are very simple and as laid down in R. v. Duke of Lenster (1) are the following :

(1) Is the opponent an undischarged insolvent?

(2) Did he obtain credit to the extent of Rs. 50 or upwards?

(3) Did he in fact inform the person from whom he obtained credit that he was an undischarged insolvent?

With regard to the first question it has been contended that in order to be an undischarged insolvent the opponent must be an adjudicated bankrupt and that as no specific order was passed by Kennedy, J. C., in Insolvency No. 26 of 1922, adjudicating Jamnadas as an insolvent the answer to the first question must be in the negative. I am not prepared to accept the second part of this contention.

It is no doubt true that the rules recently framed by this Court under s. 79, cl. (2) sub-cl. (c) require that a petition filed by one of the partners of the insolvent firm for its adjudication should either be verified by all the partners or be supported by an affidavit by the person filing it that he has the authority of others.

These rules were, however, not in force when the Insolvency Application No. 26 of 1922 was filed. That application complied with the provisions of O. XXX, Civil Procedure Code, and was accepted as a proper application on behalf of the firm under the procedure then in force.

(1) (1924) 1 K. B. 311; 93 L. J. K. B. 144; (1924) B. & C. R. 78; 17 Cr. App. R 176; 130 L. T. 318; 87 J. P. 191; 27 Cox C. C. 574; 68 S. J. 211; 40 T. L. R. 33.

The order passed by the learned Judicial Commissioner, no doubt, refers to the applicant being adjudicated as an insolvent but the singular includes the plural, vide s. 13 cl. (2) of the General Clauses Act X of 1897. Section 79, cl. (2), sub-cl. (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides for the procedure to be followed when "the debtor" is a firm. The order of the learned Judicial Commissioner cannot but be read in the light of the application itself. The applicant was the firm and not an individual, and the order of adjudication against the applicant was an order against the firm and against each and every partner in that firm.

This order was at no time misunderstood. The subsequent proceedings were continued against the firm and each partner therein and all notices issued by the Court were to that effect. Jamnadas himself appeared before the Official Receiver in those proceedings and took part as an adjudicated insolvent, and even in the present proceedings he has admitted on solemn affirmation that he was a partner of the firm of Pokardas Kishindas and was adjudicated as an insolvent. He is undoubtedly an adjudicated insolvent and has not so far applied or obtained his discharge in these proceedings. My answer to the first question is, therefore, in the affirmative.

Now, there can be no doubt that the fact that Jamnadas traded in an assumed name would by itself be an offence under s. 155 of the English Bankruptcy Act, but the whole of that section does not find place in the Indian Statute. It is only cl. (a) of that section which with certain minor amendments has been reproduced in s. 72, cl. (1) of the Indian Act. It is urged by Mr. Suganlal that obtaining goods from constituents for sale on commission on an express or implied promise to hand over the sale-proceeds is not obtaining credit within the meaning of the section. It is further urged that as the words "alone or jointly" which appear in cl. (a) of s. 155 of the English Act find no place in the Indian Act, the obtaining of credit, whatever be its meaning, by the opponent on behalf of a firm which consisted of others besides him is likewise no offence.

Different meanings are attached to the expression "credit". It has, inter alia, been defined in Webster's Dictionary and in Oglive's Dictionary as "Trust, transfer of goods in confidence of future payment" in Murray's Dictionary as "Trust or confidence in a buyer's ability or intention to pay at some future time exhibited by entrusting him with goods without present payment", and also as "Reputation of solvency and probity in business enabling a person or body of persons to be trusted with goods or money in expectation of future payment," and in Johnson as correlative of debt.

The different definitions referred to above appear to be very wide, and it is a fairly arguable point that the expression "obtaining credit" includes within its ambit the securing of goods on trust that they will be sold and sale-proceeds handed over. In the present case, however, I do not feel myself bound to give any definite finding on that point as there can be no doubt that when the opponent passed an acknowledgment promising to pay Rs. 9,750 in the future he obtained credit for it. I am also not prepared to hold that the words "either alone or jointly with any other person" which do not appear in s. 72 make any difference. Both the Insolvency Acts render the very person who obtains credit liable to be prosecuted; and it is immaterial if he obtains such credit solely on his own behalf or on behalf of himself and another person or if he joins another person and both together obtain such credit. The fact that the words referred to above have not been reproduced in s. 72 does not, in my opinion, limit the scope of that section, but if at all, it is intended to expand its scope.

I, therefore, hold on this question also against the opponent.

With regard to the third question it is not only disputed that the opponent failed to disclose the fact that he was an undischarged insolvent, but it has on the contrary been contended that as he was not an adjudicated insolvent he could not inform the firm of Shamdas Bhagwandas that he was an undischarged insolvent.

There can be no doubt that this is one of the worst instances brought to the notice of the Court where an undischarged insolvent has attempted to speculate with other men's money, and that it is incumbent on the Court to apply to him such penal provisions of this or other Acts as may be applicable. I, therefore, order that the case of the opponent Jamnadas be sent to the City Magistrate, Karachi, for trial under s. 72, cl. (1) for obtaining credit from the firm of Shamdas Bhagwandas of the sum of Rs. 9,750 by signing an acknowledgment in his favour—on March, 1925.

I further order that the opponents should remain in custody pending his trial unless he gives bail in the sum of Rs. 1,000 (one thousand only) for his appearance before the Magistrate.

During the course of the inquiry, it has been brought to my notice that the conduct of the opponent in raising a loan of Rs. 5,000 from the Punjab National Bank on December 3, 1924, on the pledge of certain goods of Shamdas Bhagwandas is such as prima facie renders him liable to a prosecution under s. 409, Indian Penal Code.

As commission agent the opponent had implied authority to pledge the goods of his principals for the purpose of honouring his hundis but not otherwise. On December 3, he had in his possession large sums of moneys belonging to the firm of Shamdas Bhagwandas from which he could honour these hundis. As he had spent their money for his own purposes he pledged on that day 330 bags belonging to his constituents with the Punjab National Bank for Rs. 5,000, and according to him honoured on that day hundis for that amount. Of these 330 bags, 141 were consigned to the Punjab National Bank and were intended to be pledged with that Bank for the purpose of meeting some future hundis. Whatever may be said in favour of the opponent in pledging these 141 bags with the Punjab National Bank for meeting future hundis and his failure to honour these hundis, prima facie he had no jurisdiction for pledging the remaining 189 bags which were consigned to him. The opponent not only raised a loan on the 330 bags but falsely intimated to the constituents that he was not able to raise the loan and on that pretext he dishonoured other hundis drawn by them which were payable in the following month. In Ex. 12 dated January 18, 1925, he falsely wrote to his constituents that their goods were of inferior quality and that, therefore, the Bank would not make an advance, and in Ex. 13 dated January 22, 1925, he wrote that he was trying to make arrangement with the Bank, and that he would inform them by wire as soon as he succeeded with the Bank.

It is urged and not without considerable force that he wrote these letters with no other object but to avoid detection that he had already converted to his own use large sums of money belonging to them. It was not till March, 1925, that the constituents were apprised of the pledge and were compelled to redeem their goods by payment of the money.

The English Larceny Act 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. V, c. 50) refers in detail to the different kinds of fraudulent conversion of property and s. 22 (1) of that Act inter alia as follows: "22 (1) Every person who, being a factor or agent entrusted either solely or jointly with any other person for the purpose of sale or otherwise with the possession of any goods or any document of title to goods contrary to or without the authority of his principal in that behalf for his own use or benefit, or the use or benefit of any person other than the person by whom he was so entrusted, and in violation of good faith—

(i) Consigns, deposits, transfers, or delivers any goods or document of title so entrusted to him as and by way of a pledge, lien, or security for any money or valuable security borrowed or received, or intended to be borrowed or received by him; or

(ii) Accepts any advance of any money or valuable security on the faith of any contract or agreement to consign, deposit, transfer, or deliver any such goods or document of title; shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction thereof, liable to penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years: Provided that no such factor or agent shall be liable to any prosecution for consigning, depositing, transferring or delivering any such goods or documents of title, in case the same shall not be made a security for or subject to the payment of any greater sum of money than the amount which at the time of such consignment, deposit, transfer, or delivery, was justly due and owing to such agent from his principal, together with the amount of any Bill of Exchange drawn by or on account of such principal and accepted by such factor or agent."

It would appear that the pledge of 189 bags by the insolvent was prima facie without authority and for his personal use or benefit and as such a misdemeanour. His act in doing so would equally fall within the purview of the very wide and comprehensive provisions of s. 409, Indian Penal Code, read with ss. 403 and 405 of the Indian Penal Code.

A complaint under s. 409 or such other sections of the Indian Penal Code as are applicable to the circumstances of this case does not require any sanction of the Court and it will be for the Official Receiver to consult the Public Prosecutor, and if so advised to institute further proceedings against the insolvent under those sections. If he is advised to ask for specific sanction, it is open to him to apply for it.

With regard to the application under ss. 69 and 70 of the Act, I have no materials before me at present to hold that the mortgage of his house property by the insolvent and his brothers for Rs. 1,500 was based on the requisite fraudulent intent of concealing his interest in the property from his creditors in the prior insolvency or that his failure to disclose that property in the present proceedings was necessarily wilful. The schedules filed along with the present application have been drawn up and verified as true without due care and caution. There is no doubt that the insolvent was bound to and should have disclosed the existence of the property and of the mortgage created on it. But it is possible that his failure to disclose these facts was due to want of care and as at the very first hearing when the insolvent was examined by me in Court he readily disclosed its existence I am prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt. I accordingly discharge the Rule under ss. 69 and 70.

JUDGMENT.—The short question raised in this second appeal is as to the number of members which was necessary to form the quorum at the first meeting of the Shikarpur School Board at which the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman are said to have been elected.

It is common ground that the Bombay Primary Education Act of 1923 under which the School Board is constituted contains no express provision in that behalf and the rules framed under the powers vested in Government by s. 27, cl. (1) of the Act provide that the School Board shall from time to time make Regulations not inconsistent with the Act or the Rules framed thereunder inter alia with respect to the number of members which should constitute a quorum at the meetings of the Board. This was the first preliminary meeting of the quorum convened for the sole purpose of electing a Chairman and Vice-Chairman, as contemplated by s. 4, cl. (5) of the Act read with r. 21 framed thereunder. This rule reads as follows:—

"At its first meeting, which shall be convened by the President of the local authority, a School Board shall elect from among its members a Chairman and a Vice-Chairman, whose terms of office shall be co-extensive with that of the Board. If either of them resigns his office or ceases to be a member of the Board, a fresh election shall be made."

The total number of members on the Board is seven out of whom one is a lady. She was admittedly absent from the meeting. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 who are respondents Nos. 1 to 3 in this appeal assembled together outside the meeting hall but kept themselves away from the meeting. They, however, stayed near enough to keep a watch on what was being done inside the hall. The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who are the present appellants met together and elected defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the Board respectively. They then dissolved the meeting without doing any further act.

The plaintiffs have, inter alia, contended that in the absence of a rule prescribing the number of members which should form a quorum at the meetings of the Board and which was necessary before the Chairman could be selected, the Common Law rule applied, and no Chairman or Vice-Chairman could be selected until and unless a majority of the total number of members was present at the meeting and that, therefore, the appointment of both these officers was ultra vires.

However objectionable the conduct of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 may have been in keeping themselves aloof from the meeting, there can be no doubt that the plea raised by them is well-founded and has been rightly given effect to by both the Courts.

The School Board is a public corporation as opposed to a private corporation and has been created by Statute. In the absence of a quorum having been prescribed either by the Statute creating it or by the rules framed thereunder, there is no reason why the ordinary common law rule prevailing in England, which seems to have been followed in the United States as well, should not apply here. It is a wise and a just rule and is based on sound reason. If this rule were not to apply the position of the appellants would be much worse. The School Board like every other statutory corporation consists of persons who exist in contemplation of law only and not physically. Its members individually are not the Board and cannot individually exercise their corporate powers or rights or perform their corporate duties. If that is so, it would appear that in the absence of any law or rule to the contrary every one of the members must join in doing corporate acts. This would mean a very serious hardship and would defeat the very objects for which the Board has been constituted. It is for the purpose of relieving this hardship which would be caused otherwise that the Common Law rule has come into existence. It provides that when a Statute grants powers on any definite number of persons in respect to a public as opposed to a private trust and contains no indication to the contrary, it is necessary that a majority of that number should act together and should attend every meeting when any corporate act is done or purported to be done.

In King v. Beston (1) while referring to the exercise of powers vested in certain church-wardens and overseers by 9 Geo. I, c. 7, s. 4, Lord Kenyon, C. J., said:—

"Besides, in common understanding, what is required to be done by the church-wardens and overseers is satisfied by being done by a majority. And indeed if we were to determine otherwise, the inconvenience would be so great as to make it necessary for the Legislature to interfere and pass another law."

In Blacket v. Blizzard (2) Mr. Justice Bayley said that it is a general rule of law that where a public trust is to be executed by a definite number of persons it must be exercised at a meeting where a majority of that number is present unless there be a usage to the contrary. And Mr. Justice Parke said:—

"Unless we were to hold that a majority of the number required to constitute (in that case) the select vestry should be present, it is possible that they might be reduced to a number so small as to be unfit to manage the affairs of the parish. It cannot be supposed that that was the intention of the Legislature."

A distinction was drawn in that case between trust of a public and private nature and it was observed that in the latter case, in the absence of any intention to the contrary, the trust must be executed by all the persons to whom it was given.

It would appear that the Common Law Rule of a majority binding the minority in the case of statutory corporations of a public nature is based on the presumed intention in that behalf of the statutory authority; and is in relaxation of the general rule that a trust should ordinarily be executed by all the persons on whom it is conferred.

England (3) Wills J., has stated the law thus:—

"The acts of a corporation are those of the major part of the corporators, corporately assembled: Com. Dig. tit. Franchise F. 11; and, omitting the words 'corporately assembled,' this is declared by 33 Hen. VIII, c. 27, to be the Common Law. This means that, in the absence of special custom, the major part must be present at the meeting, and that of that major part there must be a majority in favour of the Act or Resolution. It was so decided in Easter Term, 1693; Hascard v. Somany (4) quoted in Viner's Abridgment, tit. Corporations, G. 3, pl. 7; and it was said by Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Monday (5) to be undoubted law. By 'corporately assembled' it is meant that the meeting shall be one held upon notice which gives every corporator the opportunity of being present: See Smyth v. Darley (6)."

It has been faintly suggested that the School Board exercised certain delegated functions of the Municipality and that, therefore, in the absence of any quorum having been prescribed by the Primary Education Act, the quorum prescribed for meetings of the parent body under s. 35, cl. (7) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, which is one-third of the total should prevail. The obvious answer to that argument is that the School Board is a separate corporate body created by a separate Statute which is self-contained. It is applicable not only to areas under the control of City Municipalities governed by the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901 but to other areas under the control of smaller Municipalities created by a separate Statute and under the control of Local Boards governed by the District Local Boards Act. It will appear that the School Board consists not only of Municipal Councillors but also others who are in no way governed by and in no way amenable to the provisions of the Bombay District Municipal Act. Under the circumstances, it would be a violation of every canon of construction to incorporate the provisions of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901 into the Primary Education Act of 1923.

There is a further difficulty in the way of the acceptance of this argument. Sections 35 and 43 of the so-called parent Act provide for different quorums in the case of general meetings and meetings of the Committees of the Municipality. A question, therefore, immediately arises which of the two should apply to the School Board which at most resembles a Committee appointed for a specific purpose and is delegated with only some of the functions of the Municipality.

It was also suggested that the election of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman were not corporate acts. There is no substance in this plea either. Indubitably the election of both the officers was a corporate act. At any rate the election of the Chairman was a corporate act which had to be performed as a preliminary to further corporate acts being performed by the Board. His election entitled him to exercise certain powers throughout the whole period of the Board and in the absence of any special method provided by the Statute as applicable to his election, such election could only take place at a corporate meeting of the Board duly convened and constituted.

We have no hesitation in holding that the election of both the defendant No. 1 and the defendant No. 2 as the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman respectively was ultra vires and has been rightly set aside.

With regard to costs we think that it is a fit case in which each party should bear his own costs throughout. In the Court of the first instance the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 raised several other pleas on which they have failed. They are also considerably to blame for this litigation, and it would appear that they purposely kept themselves aloof from the meeting so as to break the quorum. The defendant No. 4 was awarded costs in the Court of the first instance and has not been made a party to this appeal. That order will, however, stand good.

This appeal is, accordingly, dismissed. The appellants should bear their own costs throughout and also the costs of the defendant No. 4 awarded by the lower Court against the appellants. The respondents should likewise bear their own costs throughout.

The interim injunction issued by this Court ipso facto stands dissolved.

Hindu Law—Alienation by father—Sham alienation—Father's share, whether passes—Finding that transfer was not bona fide—Remand by Appellate Court for definite finding as to whether transfer was real, legality of—Decree conditional on payment of amounts defrayed by transferee—Appellate Court—Reversal of decree in favour of defendants who have not appealed.

The plaintiff sued to set aside two sale-deeds executed in favour of the third and fourth defendants and a gift deed executed in favour of the fifth defendant and for recovery of possession of the properties covered by the deed. The first sale-deed was executed by the plaintiff's grandfather and the second by the plaintiff's grandfather and the plaintiff's father jointly, and the deed of gift was executed by the plaintiff's father alone. The Subordinate Judge found that the sale-deeds were invalid, as against the plaintiff and his share, and that the gift deed was wholly invalid. On appeal by the third and fourth defendants the District Judge held that the sale-deeds were not bona fide ones and made a decree that the plaintiff should recover the properties covered by the sale-deeds on payment to the fourth defendant of a certain sum of money which was found to have been used for defraying family debts. On second appeal, the High Court remanded the case for a formal decision on the question whether the sale-deeds effected a real alienation. The District Judge submitted a finding that no consideration really passed and that the transactions were not genuine, and the High Court declared that the sale-deeds and the gift deeds were null and void and decreed possession of the properties covered by the deeds. On Letters Patent appeal the Judges accepted the finding that the transactions were purely sham, but made the decree for possession of the properties dependent upon payment by the plaintiff of the amount specified by the District Judge. On appeal by the plaintiff to the Privy Council:

Held, (1) that the decree made in Letters Patent appeal was erroneous in so far as it made the recovery of the properties covered by the gift deed also conditional on payment of the sum specified inasmuch as the fifth defendant had not preferred any appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and the decree so far as he was concerned had become final; [p. 452, col. 2.]

(2) that the Division Bench of the High Court did not act wrongly in calling for a definite finding on the question whether the sale-deeds effected real transfers; [ibid.]

(3) that the finding of the District Judge that the transfers were sham and that there was no consideration for them must be considered to have eradicated his previous finding that the fourth defendant had discharged certain family debts, and that the decree of the Letters Patent Bench was, consequently, wrong in so far as it made recovery of possession conditional on payment of the amounts specified in the decree of the District Judge; [p. 453, pl. 1.]

(4) that in view of the finding of the District Judge that no real transfers were intended or effected between the parties, it was not necessary to consider the question whether the third and fourth defendants were entitled to the share of the transferors. [ibid.]

Consolidated appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court dated the 19th April, 1920, modifying a decree of the Division Bench of the same Court, dated the 16th February, 1918.

JUDGMENT.

Sir Lancelot Sanderson.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff, Krishna Reddi, and a cross-appeal by Gandavaram Raghava Reddi and Kodur Venkataperumal Reddi, defendants Nos. 3 and 4, from a judgment and decree, dated the 19th April, 1920, of the High Court of Madras, in Letters Patent Appeal No. 23 of 1918. The suit was brought as long ago as 1910, and it has had a chequered career. The first defendant, Varada, was the father of the second defendant, Venkatarama, and the plaintiff is the son of the second defendant, and they are members of a joint undivided Hindu family. Venkatarama, the second defendant, had two wives; by his first wife he had a daughter, and by the second he had an only son, viz., the plaintiff.

It was alleged on behalf of the plaintiff that he and his mother were obliged to leave the home of the second defendant and to live with the plaintiff's mother's people for some three and a half years before the suit was brought.

The third, fourth, and fifth defendants were alleged to be close friends of the second defendant.

By a document, dated the 22nd January, 1910, the first defendant, Varada, purported to sell to the third defendant the properties comprised therein and specified in schedule A to the plaint. The consideration was alleged to be Rs. 15,000, and the property was alleged to be the self-acquired property of the first defendant.

On the same day, the first and second defendants (the second defendant purporting to act for himself and his minor son, the plaintiff), by another document, purported to convey to the fourth defend, ant the property comprised therein, and described in schedule B to the plaint. The consideration was alleged to be Rs. 20,000, through a bond executed in favour of the second defendant for discharging certain debts specified therein, and also other family debts.

On the 9th February, 1910, the second defendant purported by means of an alleged deed of gift of that date, to give certain properties, specified in schedule C to the plaint in favour of a temple, of which the fifth defendant was trustee.

The plaintiff alleged that the properties specified in schedules A, B and C were joint family properties of the family, of which the plaintiff and the first and second defendants were members, that the above mentioned alleged deeds of sale and the deed of gift were fraudulent and devoid of consideration, that there was no legal necessity, and that the alleged deeds were nullities.

On the 31st January, 1910, the alleged deeds of sale were registered, in spite of the plaintiff's mother's objection before the Registrar.

The suit was brought on the 15th April, 1910, and the plaintiff claimed therein a declaration that the sale-deeds and the deed of gift were null and void and that he should be put in possession of the above-mentioned properties on behalf of the joint family. There was an alternative prayer for partition in case it was held that the deeds were in any way binding on the interests of the first and second defendants.

The case of the contesting defendants, viz., defendants Nos. 3 and 4, was that the sales were bona fide and that consideration passed for them, and that title was intended to and did actually pass to them.

The first defendant was an old man, and it was alleged that the second defendant was acting as manager of the family.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the sale-deeds were made to defraud the plaintiff, that they were not bona fide to discharge antecedent debts, and that they were not valid as against the plaintiff to the extent of his share, viz., one-quarter. He held that the properties in schedule A were joint family properties. This finding is not now disputed. He held, further, that the gift of the properties in schedule C was invalid. This finding also is not now disputed.

While holding that there was consideration and that title was intended to pass under the two deeds of sale, he found there was no necessity for the sale and made a decree, dated the 15th April, 1913, that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 should put the plaintiff in possession of his share of the properties on his paying into Court Rs. 2,945-11-6 (i. e., one-quarter of Rs. 11,782-14-0), to be paid to the third and fourth defendants in the way they might arrange between themselves. It was further ordered that the fifth defendant should put the plaintiff in possession of the properties comprised in schedule C.

The above-mentioned sum of Rs. 11,782-14-0 is explained by the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge found that debts to the extent of Rs. 11,782-14-0 had been discharged by the fourth defendant.

The plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 appealed against this decree to the learned District Judge. The plaintiff alleged that the alienations should have been set aside in toto as void, and the third and fourth defendants urged that the alienations were made for justifiable necessity and should have been upheld, and the plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed.

The learned District Judge held that Exs. I and II, which are the alleged sale-deeds of the 22nd January, 1910, were not bona fide sales, but were resorted to to screen the properties in case the plaintiff should bring a suit. In a later part of his judgment he held that in pursuance of a scheme to defraud the plaintiff or his family the alienations were made, and the third and fourth defendants actively participated in the fraud. He held, further, that the transactions were void even if consideration passed.

He made a decree reversing the decree of the trial Court, in so far as it was against the plaintiff, and declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to get the sales of A and B schedule lands set aside, and that the plaintiff should recover possession of the said A and B schedule lands on behalf of the family on payment of Rs. 11,782-14-0, the amount of the debts which had been discharged by the fourth defendant. The plaintiff's appeal was allowed and the appeal of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 was dismissed.

Their Lordships understand that the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, as regards the properties comprised in schedule C was not interfered with.

The defendants Nos. 3 and 4 appealed to the High Court of Madras and the plaintiff filed cross-objections. The learned Judges of the High Court who heard the appeal remanded the case to the lower Appellate Court on the grounds that the learned District Judge had not recorded a formal decision on the question whether the alleged sale-deeds effected any real alienations, and that the learned District Judge had apparently decided the appeal on the ground that in any event a finding that the sales were merely fraudulent was a sufficient basis for the grant of the relief asked for. They required the learned District Judge to submit findings on the following issues:—

(1) Whether the alienation of A and B scheduled properties is not supported by consideration?

(2) Did either or both of the documents, Exs. I and II, effect a real transfer of the property which they purported to convey?

Exhibit I is the deed of 22nd January, 1910, in favour of Raghava (third defendant), and Ex. II is the deed of 22nd January, 1910, in favour of Venkataperumal (the fourth defendant).

The learned District Judge on remand found that the real object in resorting to the sales was to screen the properties from the plaintiff, and that no consideration really passed; that the parties did not intend that the transactions should be genuine, and that the promissory notes only served to give an appearance of truth to the transactions.

On the two above-mentioned issues he found that Exs. I and II were not supported by consideration and that those documents did not effect a real transfer of the properties which they purported to transfer.

On the further hearing of the appeal and upon the above-mentioned findings of the learned District Judge, the learned Judges of the High Court were agreed that the lower Court's findings must be accepted, and said that they would deal with the decree on the footing that as against the plaintiff at least the alienations of A and B scheduled properties were not for consideration and that Exs. I and II effected no real transfers.

Unfortunately, the learned Judges could not agree as to the course which should be adopted. They, however, came to the conclusion that the opinion of the Senior Judge should prevail, and accordingly they directed that the learned District Judge should be called upon to submit a further finding as proposed in the judgment of the Senior Judge. The case, therefore, was again remanded to the learned District Judge for a finding on the issue whether as between the first and second defendants and the third and fourth defendants Exs. I and II effected a conveyance wholly or partially valid of the former's shares to the latter.

“For these reasons and for those set forth in my previous finding, I find that, as between the first and second defendants and the third and fourth defendants, Exs. I and II did not effect a conveyance of the former's share to the latter.”

The appeal then came once more before the learned Judges of the High Court.

The Senior Judge came to the conclusion that the appeal of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 should be dismissed and that the plaintiff's memorandum of objections should be allowed.

The other learned Judge agreed that the final order should be as proposed by the Senior Judge, but stated that he still adhered to the opinion which he expressed in his previous judgment and would have passed an order in the terms therein mentioned. The decree of the High Court, dated the 15th February, 1918, therefore, was to the effect that the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and of the Court of first instance should be set aside and a declaration was made that the sale-deeds of the 22nd January, 1910, and the deed of gift, dated the 9th February, 1910, were null and void and not binding on the plaintiff's family, and the Court further decreed that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 should put the plaintiff in possession of the plots A, B and C schedule properties, and that the Subordinate Judge should hold an enquiry regarding future mesne profits until date of delivery or three years from that date, whichever should be nearer, and pass a decree for them under O. XX, r. 12. The decree contained a further direction for the payment by the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 of the plaintiff's costs.

This, however, was not the end of the proceedings in the High Court, for, as the learned Judges had differed, the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 appealed under the provisions of the Letters Patent from the decision of the learned Senior Judge of the Division Bench. This appeal was heard by the learned Chief Justice and two other Judges of the High Court. The three learned Judges accepted the findings of the learned District Judge, which they stated, were also accepted by the learned Judges of the Division Bench, viz., that the sales were purely sham transactions intended to defeat the plaintiff.

They then stated that the only other question for consideration was whether the learned District Judge was right in making relief which he had given to the plaintiff dependent upon the payment of the sum paid by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 for the discharge of the joint family debts. It should be noted that this order of the learned District Judge was not quoted correctly. The relief given by the learned District Judge to the plaintiff was dependent upon the payment of the debts which had been discharged by the fourth defendant; there was no reference to any sum paid for the discharge of debts by the third defendant in the decree of the learned District Judge.

The learned Judges came to the conclusion that there was no reason for interfering with that part of the decree of the learned District Judge. They, therefore, decided to modify the decree made by the learned Senior Judge of the Division Bench of the High Court by making the decree for possession dependent upon the payment by the plaintiff in the manner provided in the decree of the District Judge, and directing that the amount should bear interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The decree, as drawn up, directed that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 should put the plaintiff in possession of the plaint A, B and C schedule properties on payment by the plaintiff of Rs. 11,782-14-0 and that the said amount should carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the 15th April, 1913, until the date of payment.

It is to be noted that the decree, as drawn up, went further than the judgment of the learned Judges who heard the Letters Patent Appeal. The decree of the learned District Judge provided that the plaintiff should recover possession of the said A and B schedule lands on payment of the sum of Rs. 11,782-14-0.

The recovery of the schedule C lands by the plaintiff was not dependent upon the payment of the said sum.

But the decree made by the learned Judges who heard the Letters Patent appeal made the recovery of the schedule C lands dependent upon the above-mentioned payment, as well as the schedules A and B lands.

Since the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, which directed that the fifth defendant should put the plaintiff in possession of the schedule C lands, there had been apparently no question as to this part of the case.

The decree in the Letters Patent appeal directed the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to put the plaintiff in possession of the schedule C lands, although, as far as their Lordships know, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had nothing to do with the schedule C lands.

It is, therefore, apparent that the decree appealed from cannot stand in its present form.

There is, however, a serious question whether there is any reason why the decree of the Division Bench of the High Court, dated the 15th February, 1918, should be interfered with. It was argued on behalf of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 before the Board that the learned Judges of the Division Bench of the High Court were wrong in remanding the case for a finding upon the two issues, which have already been referred to. Their Lordships are not prepared to hold that the learned Judges were wrong in remanding the case for a clear and definite finding upon the issues, whether the alienation of A and B scheduled properties was not supported by consideration, and whether either or both of the documents, Exs. I and II, effected a real transfer of the property which they purported to transfer.

Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges that definite findings on these issues were material and necessary.

If, then, the remand was not wrong, the findings of fact made by the learned District Judge upon these two issues were binding upon the High Court unless it could be said that there was no evidence to support them. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that such an objection to the findings cannot be upheld. The findings of the learned District Judge were adopted by the learned Judges of the Division Bench which heard the second appeal and by the learned Judges who heard the Letters Patent appeal, and their Lordships see no reason for differing from the conclusion arrived at by all the High Court Judges in this respect.

There remains the question whether, in view of these findings, there was any ground for altering the decree of the Division Bench dated the 15th February, 1918.

The learned Judges who heard the Letters Patent appeal apparently concluded that it would not be equitable to allow the plaintiff to recover possession of the A and B schedule property unless he paid the amount of the debts discharged by the fourth defendant. In view, however, of the above-mentioned findings, which must be accepted, it cannot be held that the fourth defendant did discharge family debts as alleged.

The finding to that effect, which may be said to arise from the learned District Judge's decree of the 26th February, 1915, must be considered to have been eradicated, when the learned District Judge, on remand and on further consideration of the evidence, came to the conclusion that there was no consideration for either of the alleged sale-deeds, Exs. I and II, and that these deeds did not effect a real transfer of the properties.

Subject to a further question which was raised by the learned Counsel on behalf of the third and fourth defendants, their Lordships are of opinion that there was no ground for interfering with the decree of the Division Bench of the High Court, dated the 15th February, 1918.

The other point to which reference has been made is as follows:—It was argued on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 that, as between defendant No. 2 (viz., Venkatarama, the father of the plaintiff) and the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, there was no reason for holding that the transfer was not complete, and that a decree should be made declaring that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were entitled to the share of the defendant No. 2 in the above-mentioned properties.

Their Lordships are not satisfied that this point was raised before the learned Judges who heard the Letters Patent appeal, and in view of the findings of the learned District Judge, that no real transfer was intended or effected between the above-mentioned parties, they are not prepared to enter upon the question further.

For the reasons herein contained their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the plaintiff's appeal should be allowed and that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 should pay to him his costs of the appeal before this Board; that the decree of the High Court in the Letters Patent Appeal No. 23 of 1918, dated the 19th April, 1920, be set aside, and that the decree of the High Court in Second Appeal No. 711 of 1915, dated the 15th February, 1918, should be restored, and that the cross-appeal of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 should be dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 247, 251—Minor partner's liability for obligations of firm—Partnership property, what constitutes—Managing partner's power to mortgage.

In accordance with s. 247 of the Contract Decree, applicable in Zanzibar (corresponding to s. 247 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872), where a minor is admitted to the benefit of the partnership, the result of that admission is, that, while he cannot, before he comes of age, be made personally liable for the obligations of the firm, yet his share in the partnership property is liable to the obligations of the firm. Where partners are jointly entitled to property, and the question arises whether that property has been thrown into the assets of a partnership, that is a pure question of fact. [p. 455, col. 1.]

By virtue of the provisions of s. 251 of the Contract Decree, applicable in Zanzibar (corresponding to s. 251 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872), the managing partner of a trading firm has power to mortgage the partnership property, so as to bind the firm. [ibid.]

Appeal by special leave from a judgment of His Majesty's Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa, affirming the judgment of Mr.

Justice Tomlinson of His Majesty's Court of Zanzibar.

The material facts are set out in their Lordships' judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Chancellor.—This is an appeal three of the defendants in this suit from judgment of the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa, affirming the judgment of Mr. Justice Tomlinson of His Majesty's Court at Zanzibar in favour of the present respondents, who were plaintiffs in the suit.

The facts may be quite shortly stated. One Bhaloo Lakha, who was a member of the Khoja community, carried on business as a clove merchant at Zanzibar under the style of Lakha Velani & Co. In the year 1908 he acquired as his separate property the house in which the business was carried on. In the year 1913 he executed a deed of gift of all that he possessed in favour of his six sons. Later on in the same year he made a Will in which he declared that he had no property or estate of any description, and appointed his eldest son, Mahomedali, to be the guardian of his minor children. He died on the 6th October, 1916, leaving living all his six sons, of whom two, the first and second appellants, were then minors under the age of 18, and also leaving surviving him his widow, the third appellant. The business was, in fact, carried on under the management of three of the adult sons. On the 3rd September, 1919, an equitable mortgage of the house and other property was executed in favour of the respondents, the Standard Bank of South Africa, Ltd; but it was afterwards realised that an equitable mortgage was not effective, and, on the demand of the Bank, a mortgage-deed, dated 26th February, 1921, was executed in the name of the firm by Hussein Bhaloo Lakha, one of the three sons who were managing the business. By that deed the firm purported to mortgage to the Bank the house in question, with other property. Afterwards the business got into difficulties, and in the year 1922 this suit was commenced by the Bank against the firm, the Official Assignee of one son who was insolvent, and the other five sons, together with the widow. The claim was to enforce the mortgage, and a decree to that effect was made by the Court in Zanzibar, and was affirmed by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa.

The two sons, who were minors at the date of the death of Bhaloo Lakha, and his widow, bring this appeal.

On these facts three questions in effect arise. The first question is whether the two sons, who are appellants, became, before or on their father's death, partners in the business. It has been found by both Courts that they did so become partners. In that connection the deed of gift has been referred to, and the question has been raised whether that deed was valid or not. That question has now become immaterial, for it is plain that, whether the deed of gift was valid or not, the business and the business assets of Bhaloo Lakha were, or on his death became, vested in his six sons, subject to the widow's right of maintenance; and the real question is whether after his death there was a valid arrangement under which the business was carried on for the benefit of the six sons, but under the management of the three managing partners. On that point it is of vital importance that, immediately after the death of Bhaloo Lakha, a request was signed to the Bank to open an account in the name of the firm, and that request contained a statement by Mahomedali, the guardian of the two minors, that all the six sons were partners in the business. If the guardian had power to bind the minor sons, then that request is decisive; and it appears to their Lordships that, both on the law as stated in Mr. Tyabji's book, and on the terms of the Will appointing him guardian, Mahomedali had that power. He had to decide how the business and the business assets, in which the minors were interested, could best be dealt with for their benefit; in other words, he had to say whether the business should be wound up or whether it should for a time be carried on.

He decided in favour of the latter view; and the profits of the business were divided among all the six sons. The effect was that, in accordance with s. 247 of the Contract Decree, which is applicable in Zanzibar, the two sons who were minors were admitted to the benefit of the partnership; and as the result of that admission, while they could not before they came of age be made personally liable for the obligations of the firm yet their shares in the partnership property were liable to the obligations of the firm. The document signed by the appellants on the 12th June, 1922, in no way affected that liability.

Then arises a second question: Was this house part of the partnership assets? It has been found by both Courts that it was part of the business assets and of the partnership assets, and that concurrent finding of the two Courts cannot now be disturbed. Where partners are jointly entitled to property, and the question arises whether that property has been thrown into the assets of a partnership, that is a pure question of fact. In the present case that question of fact has been decided, and, as far as can be seen, correctly decided, in favour of the respondents.

A third question has been raised, namely, whether one of the partners (Hussein) had power to mortgage the property to the Bank so as to bind the firm. That question is really not material to the appellants; for even if the mortgage was ineffective, the house, being part of the business assets, would be available for the general body of creditors, and no share in it would come to the appellants. But it appears to their Lordships that upon the terms of s. 251 of the Decree the managing partner had power to execute the mortgage.

The result is that the appeal fails as regards the two sons who are appellants. As to the widow's claim to maintenance, the answer is given in the judgment of Mr. Justice Tomlinson, when he says:—

"With regard to the widow, as I understand it, she is entitled by Khoja custom to maintenance out of the estate. She has, however, no specific interest in any particular item of the family property, and her rights are subject to the general dealings with the estate by those in charge."

The result is that this appeal fails, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly; but, as the appellants have come here in forma pauperis, there will be no order as to costs.

MARGARET ALEXANDRA TROY——PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective operation—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)—Interest on compensation awarded.

Generally speaking, a Statute conferring or dealing with substantive rights has no retrospective operation. Accordingly, s. 17 of the Sydney Corporation Act, 1924 (corresponding, in India, to the Land Acquisition Act, 1894), declaring that "the rate of interest payable upon compensation for land acquired by the Council by resumption—or by any compulsory purchase, shall be six per centum per annum" cannot be construed retrospectively so as to affect the rate at which interest was payable before the Act came into operation. [p. 456, col. 1.]

Appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

The material facts are given in their Lordships' judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Viscount Haldane.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, delivered in favour of the respondent who was plaintiff in an action. The appellants were defendants and the question decided was raised by a special case.

Before 1924 the respondent was owner in fee simple of a piece of land in City of Sydney. On June 6th, 1924, appellants, in accordance with the provisions of the Sydney Corporation Act, 1902, and the amending Acts, caused improvement purposes, a notice for acquisition of the piece of land, published in the Gazette and other newspapers and complied in all respects with the provisions necessary for the acquisition. Thereupon, by virtue of the publication of the notice, the land, under the existing statutory provision, became vested in the appellants for an estate in fee simple, and the respondent became entitled to receive compensation. Within due time from the publication, the respondent served a notice of her claim to compensation. The appellants made a valuation, and the amount payable to the respondent was agreed at £60,823. The only question that arises is as to the rate of interest properly payable under the circumstances upon the amount so ascertained as due. At one time, under the Public Works Act, 1900, providing for the acquisition of land for public works, the interest payable on the amount of compensation for land resumed thereunder was 6 per cent. The provisions of this Act were incorporated by reference in the Sydney Corporation Acts, the interest rate being lowered to 4 per cent. Subsequently the interest rate under the Public Works Act was similarly reduced. The provisions as to resumption were altered in other respects in 1905 by an Act of that date, under which, in lieu of service of notice, publication in the Gazette and certain newspapers was substituted for it, and the land was to vest on the publication of the notice and description. There was another amending Act of 1916 into the provisions of which it is not necessary to enter. But in 1924 the Sydney Corporation Act of that year enacted that the 1924 Act and the 1902 Act and the Acts amending it should be construed along with the 1924 Act as the principal Act.

The 1924 Act as thus defined also enabled the appellants to acquire land subject to certain reservations in favour of the owner and to effect re-alignments for the purposes of widening. On these provisions, in the opinion of their Lordships, nothing turns for the purpose of the present question. The only material provision is that contained in s. 17, which is in these terms:—

“Notwithstanding the provisions of any other Act the rate of interest payable upon compensation for land acquired by the Council by resumption or by the re-alignment method, or by any compulsory purchase, shall be six per centum per annum”.

The Act of 1924 came into operation on September, 17th in that year, and, as already stated, the acquisition (called resumption) had taken place under the existing Statute on June 6th.

The respondent claims that on the proper construction of s. 17 of the Act of 1924 interest at 4 per cent. was payable on the agreed amount of compensation as from June, 6th in that year, the date of the publication of the notice and of consequent vesting in the Corporation, up to September 17th and thereafter at 6 per cent. notwithstanding that the Act did not become operative until September 17th when it received the Royal Assent. The appellants contend, on the other hand, that the title to interest at 6 per cent. under s. 17 could not arise in regard to an acquisition before the Act became operative. One reason for this contention is that the Act of 1924 for the first time enabled the “re-alignment method” to be adopted, and that accordingly s. 17, which extends to interests accruing under that method must be treated as limited to land acquired after the Royal Assent was given to the Act, inasmuch as the re-alignment method was established by the Act for the time. The realignment method is thus, according to the argument for the appellants, a key to the scope of this section. But they go further and contend that even as regards ordinary acquisition or resumption there is a similar indication of intention to be found in the language of s. 17, in that the payment of interest at 6 per cent. is to be limited to cases of acquisition or resumption after the Act of 1924 had become operative. Resumption, they argue, by means of public notification instead of by service of notice on the owner, was first authorised by the Act of 1905. The compensation was to be ascertained under the provisions of the Public Works Act, 1900, the scheme of which for this purpose is to be incorporated with the Act of 1905. Under the Public Works Act, 1900, by s. 119 (2) if compensation is payable in respect of land taken by notification in the Gazette (the then mode) it is to bear interest as from the date of this notification. As the Act of 1924 is to be read with the Act of 1905 it is argued that the word “acquired” in s. 17 of the Act of 1924 should be read as meaning acquired after that Act came into operation.

The learned Judges of the Supreme Court of New South Wales agreed in rejecting this contention, and held that the respondent was entitled to succeed. The main ground of their reasoning turned on the ambit and scope of s. 17.

“It cannot be contended,” said the Chief Justice, “and it is not contended, that it is retrospective in its operation so as to affect the rate at which interest was payable before it came into operation, but the question is whether the direction that interest thereafter is to be at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum applies only to subsequent acquisition of land, or applies as well to prior acquisitions, the compensation for which was still unpaid when it came into force. The words used are perfectly general. What is spoken of is the rate of interest payable upon compensation for land acquired by the Council. No distinction is made between land acquired before the Act and that acquired after, and to give effect to the contention of the Municipal Council it would be necessary to substitute for the wide and general word 'acquired' some such words as 'to be acquired', or 'hereafter acquired'. I can find nothing in the section to justify the imposition of any such limitation, and there is no rule or presumption which requires that the word should be so limited in its meaning".

The learned Chief Justice goes on to say that it is plain that the purpose of the section was to bring up the rate of interest from one which was too low to 6 per cent. the lower rate being inadequate to ruling rate of interest.

Their Lordships find themselves in full agreement with the conclusion thus expressed. In their opinion this conclusion is neither affected by the well-known rule of construction against retrospective interpretation, nor by anything to be imported from the expressions used in the earlier Statutes in the series which has to be read in conjunction. Section 17 must in their opinion be read as laying down a principle standing by itself, and to prevail, as the section declares, notwithstanding the provisions of any other Act. The new rate of interest relates to the amount of compensation for land acquired by any of the alternative methods. This provision is a substantive one which is not made to depend on any reference to corresponding provisions in the earlier Statutes, and does not give rise to any question of retrospective operation.

On June 6th, 1924, the entire title to the piece of land in question was acquired by and became vested in the appellants, who became then entitled to compensation. On September 17th 1924, the new standard rate of interest was declared to be applicable to the compensation for all land acquired. Their Lordships think that these words are unambiguous. They give a title to the higher rate of interest as from September 17th and apply subsequently to the passing of the Act which contains this fresh provision to compensation for land acquired prior thereto, notwithstanding that the Act was assented to later. Accordingly, between June 6th and September 17th the rate will remain 4 per cent. and after that is 6 per cent.

They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements.

The material facts are given in their Lordships' judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Darling.—This case was tried by Sir James Murison, Chief Justice, and the nature of the matter in dispute is sufficiently stated by him in these words:—

"The plaintiffs in this case sue the defendants for $10,164 for breach of contract to take delivery of fifteen tons of Singapore Standard Flat Bark Crepe at $1.03½ per pound. The defendant denies that he ever made such a contract. The damages represent the difference in price when the rubber in question was sold in the open market after defendant's repudiation of the agreement.

"The only issue is whether defendant made the agreement or not.

"The plaintiff says that the agreement was made on his behalf by Cheng Kee, clerk of Messrs. Green and Collier, Brokers, with the defendant on the 4th August, 1925.

"The burden of proof lies upon the plaintiff. His witnesses are Cheng Kee, clerk to Messrs. Green and Collier, and Mr. Green.

The Chief Justice was not satisfied that the plaintiffs had proved the making of the alleged contract, and he, therefore, entered judgment for defendant. On appeal to the Supreme Court of The Straits Settlements, this judgment was set aside and judgment entered for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, Mr. Justice Reay dissenting from the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Brown and Mr. Justice Deane, the other members of that Court.

The evidence given by Mr. Green for the plaintiffs, although accepted entirely by the learned Chief Justice, was rightly declared by him to be of itself quite insufficient to prove the making of the contract. For that purpose, therefore, reliance was placed on the testimony of Cheng Kee, a clerk or broker employed by the plaintiffs. This man the learned Chief Justice qualified as "not a very bad witness", and added that if he could get definite corroboration of his story the denials of the defendant and his witnesses would not have availed to displace the evidence called on behalf of the plaintiffs. "But", said the Chief Justice, "I find very great difficulty about the corroboration of Cheng Kee's evidence". He, therefore, held that the burden of proof was not discharged; and so he pronounced in favour of the defendant.

The corroboration of Cheng Kee mainly relied upon by plaintiffs' Counsel was the established fact that a confirmation slip of the contract was prepared in the plaintiffs' office, and, further, that Cheng Kee swore that he himself on 4th August gave this note into the defendant's own hand. This statement was denied by the defendant, who swore that he did not see Cheng Kee on that day.

It was stated by Mr. Green that on 11th August he, with Cheng Kee, went to the defendant's office and there saw his manager, Ah Choon, "who said he had seen Cheng Kee hand our confirmation slip to the defendant". It was not alleged that the defendant was then present, and it is clear that, he being absent, this conversation was not evidence against him. Further, Cheng Kee, in his evidence, was allowed to say: "On the 11th August the defendant's manager (Ah Choon) told the plaintiffs' towkay and Green, that he had seen the confirmation slip." This also is not evidence against the defendant, and regarding it Ah Choon swore "Cheng Kee did not call on the 4th August. I did not see him. I never said I had seen the confirmation slip—Cheng Kee said that."

Now all this evidence was relied on by the two learned Judges, who allowed the appeal, and especially by Mr. Justice Deane, as being sufficient corroboration of Cheng Kee's testimony to justify the reversal of the judgment of the Chief Justice.

It is true that the evidence of what Ah Choon, who was not alleged to have any authority to represent the defendant, had said in his absence was not objected to by the defendant's Counsel, but still the fault of an Advocate cannot so alter the character of testimony as to convert into corroborative evidence that which the law regards as merely fit for rejection as hearsay, yet this was also accepted as good evidence of the contents of a written document; since the paper, said to have been delivered to Ah Choon, was treated as a note confirming a contract. Moreover, it was impossible to treat statements by Cheng Kee as corroborating his own evidence, for these were merely parts of that very evidence itself.

To their Lordships it appears that the two learned Judges of the Supreme Court, who came to a conclusion opposed to that of the Chief Justice who had tried the case, did so upon grounds which cannot support their conclusion.

Their Lordships agree with Mr. Justice Reay—who dissented from the opinions expressed by his colleagues in the Supreme Court—that the Chief Justice's decision was attacked on the ground that he "overlooked, or did not attach sufficient weight to this (Ah Choon's) admission. It is a sufficient and it is obviously a fair answer to this attack that the admission was irrelevant, and that the evidence regarding it should not have been admitted. If it was disregarded, it was rightly disregarded."

Applying the well-established rules as to the amount of regard to be paid to the findings of a Judge who has decided matters of fact deposed to by witnesses at the trial before him, and having considered all the evidence admitted, their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of Chief Justice Murison should stand, and they will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed with costs, the judgment of the Court of Appeal set aside, and the judgment of the Chief Justice restored with costs in both Courts.

This pronouncement of the Privy Council has led to some conflict of judicial opinion in India; see (inter alia) 1 O. W. N. 530—2 Ind. Cas. 998;—9 Ind. Cas. 211; 13 C. L. J. 18—28 C. 142—66 Ind. Cas. 15; 49 C. 93; 34 C. L. J. 107; A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 267. Their Lordships' present judgment, although on an appeal from the Straits Settlements, will be a useful guide to the Courts in this country, as it reiterates the principle laid down by the Board as far back as 1896 in Miller's case.—[K. J. R.]

Where a partnership is entered into for a fixed term, and the term expires but the partners continue the business as partners at will without fresh articles, the business is deemed to be continued upon the old terms so far as they are applicable to a partnership at will. [p. 460, col. 1.]

Where under partnership articles it was provided that in the event of a partner dying or becoming insane, and during the term of the partnership, the surviving or remaining partner would pay to the representatives of the partner so dying etc., a share of the "nett annual profits" of the partnership business:

Held, that the nett annual profits, by which the amount of the sum to be paid by the surviving partner was to be measured, should be ascertained by deducting from the receipts and earnings of the business such outgoings and ordinary business expenses as were under the partnership articles or by the practice of the partners so deducted during the partnership, the business being for this purpose treated as a continuation of the partnership business. A payment, however, which under the partnership articles ceased with the dissolution of the partnership could not be properly deducted. [ibid.]

Ex parte Harper (1), referred to.

Where a partnership is dissolved by death of a partner the business, if carried on by the surviving partner, is so carried on by him on his own sole account and for his own benefit, the annual sum payable (under the partnership articles) to his deceased partner's executors being, in substance, purchase-money for his interest in the assets of the business. [p. 461, col. 1.]

Upon the construction of the partnership articles in this case, their Lordships held that, without an express provision to that effect, the surviving partner was not entitled to a salary. [p. 461, col. 1.]

In construing the provisions of an agreement there is no rigid rule that the same meaning ought to be given to an expression in every part of the document in which it appears. A difficulty or ambiguity may be solved by resorting to such a device, but it is only in such cases that it is necessary or permissible so to do. [ibid.]

Appeal from the Court of Appeal of New Zealand.

The material facts are given in their Lordships' judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Warrington of Clyffe.—This appeal raises a question of construction upon articles of partnership between the appellant John Lachlan Mc Gillivray Watson and Arthur Bryam Haggitt. The business of the partnership was that of Barristers and Solicitors.

The articles were dated the 18th May, 1905, and the term of the partnership was 15 years from that date. The term expired on the 18th May, 1920, but the partners continued the business as partners at will without fresh articles, and, therefore, upon the old terms so far as they were applicable to a partnership at will,

BERTHA ELINOR LILIAN HAGGITT AND OTHERS.—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 253, 256—Partnership business continued after expiry of term agreed upon—Partnership at will—Presumption of continuance of old terms—Share of nett annual profits payable to the executors of deceased partner—Ascertainment of profits—Surviving partner's claim for salary—Construction of documents—Meaning of expression used in several parts.

Mr. Haggitt died on the 5th January, 1926, and the partnership was thereby dissolved. The respondents are his executors.

The articles contained the following clause (No. 21):—

"If at any time during the terms of the said partnership either of the said partners shall die or become permanently incapacitated for work or shall become insane or of unsound mind to such an extent as to render him unable or unfit to carry on the business of the partnership then and in any such case the surviving or remaining partner shall during the period of five years from the occurrence or happening of such event of contingency pay to the executors and administrators of such partner so dying as aforesaid or as the case may be to the Committee or representatives of such partner so incapacitated as aforesaid a sum equivalent to a one-third part or share of the nett annual profits of the said partnership business for each year of the said term of five years."

Taken by itself that clause presents no difficulty of construction. The nett annual profits, by which the amount of the sum to be paid by the surviving partner in each of the five years is to be measured, would be ascertained by deducting from the receipts and earnings of the business such outgoings and expenses as were under the articles or by the use and want of the partners so deducted during the partnership, the business being for this purpose treated as a continuation of the partnership business [Ex parte Harper (1)]. A payment however, which under the articles ceased with the dissolution of the partnership would not be properly deducted.

The appellant, however, contends—and his contention was upheld by the Judge of first instance and by one of the four Judges in the Court of Appeal—that he is entitled to deduct, in addition to the ordinary business expenses and outgoings, an annual sum payable to him by way of "salary" during the partnership. Whether this contention is correct is the question for decision.

The clause of the articles providing for payment of "salaries" to the partners is cl. 3 which is in the following terms:—

"The said Arthur • Bryan Haggitt shall receive a salary of £600 for the first year of the said partnership term, a salary of £750 for the second year of the said partnership term and the said John Lachlan McGillivray Watson shall draw all the nett profits of the said business during the first two years aforesaid. During each of the third, fourth and fifth years of the said partnership term the said J. L. M. Watson shall draw a salary of £1,500 per annum and also one-half of the nett profits for each such year and the said A. B. Haggitt shall draw a salary of £750 per annum for each of the said third, fourth and fifth years and also one-half of the nett profits for each such year. Thereafter and during the continuance of the said partnership term the said J. L. M. Watson shall draw a salary of £1,500 per annum and one-half of the nett profits each year and the said A. B. Haggitt a salary of £1,000 per annum and one-half of the nett profits for each year during the terms of the said partnership, and the said partners shall be allowed to draw the aforesaid amounts by monthly instalments in anticipation of their respective shares or profits in the said partnership business."

Clause 5 is a common form of provision for the payment of expenses, outgoings and losses out of the receipts and earnings of the business. "And in case of deficiency thereof then by the said partners in the shares in which they shall for the time being be entitled to the nett profits of the said business".

The contention of the appellant and the judgments of the two Judges who decided in his favour are based upon a supposed rule of construction that the same meaning ought to be given to an expression in every part of the document in which it appears.

Applying this supposed rule it is said that "nett profits" in cl. 3 and in cl. 5 means what is left after the deduction of salaries, and, therefore, it must have the same meaning in cl. 21. If this conclusion were logically applied the "salary" of A. B. Haggitt should also be deducted and paid to his executors, but the absurdity of paying a "salary" to the executors of a dead partner who cannot give any assistance in the business is recognised and the Judges who were in the appellant's favour stop short of the logical application of their conclusion by deciding that the "salary" of the appellant alone ought to be deducted.

The truth is there is no rule of such general application as is contended for by the appellant. A difficulty or ambiguity may be solved by resorting to such a device, but it is only in such cases that it is necessary or permissible so to do.

In the opinion of their Lordships it is in the present case quite clear that in cl. 21 the expression "nett profits" has a different application to that which it has in cl. 3 and cl. 5. Clause 21 is dealing with a state of things wholly different from that dealt with in cl. 3. The partnership is dissolved, the "salaries" which were payable "during the continuance of the partnership term" have ceased and the business is being carried on by the appellant on his own sole account and for his own benefit, the annual sum payable to his deceased partner's executors being, in substance, purchase money for his interest in the assets of the business. Under such circumstances it is impossible to hold, without an express provision to that effect, that the partners intended to allow a salary to the surviving partner.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal fails and ought to be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Where a deed of trust in relation to immovable property is registered, the instrument must contain a description of such property sufficient to identify the same, as required by s. 21 of the Registration Act, 1908. [p. 464, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Rangoon High Court (Rutledge and Brown, JJ.) dated the 29th September, 1925, confirming that of the District Court, Pegu, dated the 7th June, 1924.

The material facts are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

Messrs. Parikh and Pennell, for the Appellants.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C., and Mr. Raikes, for the Respondents.

Sir George Lowndes, in arguing the respondents' case, took the objection that the immoveable property in suit was not specifically mentioned in the trust deed. He referred to s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act and contended that immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards can only be transferred by a registered document.

Reads s. 21 of the Registration Act. Here the document contains no description at all.

[LORD SINHA.—In fact there is no mention at all of the property in the trust deed.]

Reads s. 28 of the Registration Act.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS.—The question of registration apparently occurred to no one in the case before.]

Mr. Parikh, in replying, objected that the question of registration should not be taken up at this late hour, as it was not mentioned in the Courts in India nor in the respondents' "case."

(Their Lordships considered that it was a point of law which could be urged for the first time in argument.)

You have to look at the Indian Trusts Act,

[SIR JOHN WALLIS.—Do you say that registration is not necessary?]

No, but I contend that we must be guided solely by the Trusts Act and cannot bring in the provisions of the Registration Act.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS.—Refers to the definition of registration as given in s. 3 of the Indian Trusts Act.]

[LORD SINHA.—Is it your point that you do not require a registered instrument for conveying property in trust?]

[SIR JOHN WALLIS.—The procedure for registering document is to be found in the Registration Act.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—Sir Geo Lowndes's point is that this property is not in the trust deed at all. The whole purpose of the Registration Act is that people can come to the Registry Office and get information as to encumbrances on the property. That is the very object of the Registration Act.]

In India, there is no registration of title.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS.—The object of the Registration Act is to give notice to people who want to deal with the property.]

Mr. Parikh again urges that the question of registration was never raised in India. He refers to s. 5 of the Trusts Act.

[LORD ATKINSON.—That section is no authority for registration of a property that is not named. It would be an absolute farce.]

Mr. Parikh reads the definition of "trust" in s. 3 of the Trusts Act. I contend that the trust deed here satisfies the requirements of that definition.

[SIR JOHN WALLIS.—Do you suggest that if the property is not described in the deed, the Registering Officer would accept it for registration?]

[LORD ATKINSON.—You cannot go to the Registry Office and ask them to register a document without specifying the property.]

JUDGMENT.

Sir Lancelot Sanderson.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a judgment and decree, dated the 29th September, 1925, of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon, which affirmed a judgment and decree of the District Court of Pegu, dated the 7th June, 1924, by which the plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs.

The suit was instituted in November, 1922, and thereby the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that he was the owner of the properties described in the schedule to the plaint, delivery of possession of the said properties, and mesne profits.

The material facts were as follows:—

An undivided Hindu Chetty family of Pallatur, in the Ramnad District of Madras, carried on an extensive money-lending business under the style of the K. P. firm in different places, including Pegu, in Burma—and one, K. P. Ramanathan Chetty, was the karta or manager thereof.

On the 10th February, 1906, the said K. P. Ramanathan Chetty, as the manager of the joint family, executed a power-of-attorney in favour of one Singaram Chetty, who was then at Pegu acting as agent for the firm under a salary agreement.

The power-of-attorney authorised Singaram to act under the style of Kana Pana, or K. P. Singaram Chetty, to use the name of Ramanathan Chetty and, amongst other things, to sell or exchange all or any of the immoveable property of or to which Ramanathan Chetty, was or should at any time thereafter become possessed or entitled, for any estate or interest whatsoever or which he then had or at any time thereafter should have power to dispose of.

The properties in suit, which are situated at Pegu, belonged to the above-mentioned joint family, and were undoubtedly part of the subject-matter of the said power-of-attorney.

In 1908 the business of the K. P. firm was in a critical condition, and on the 6th April, 1908, a trust deed was executed between Ramanathan Chetty for himself, and as head and manager of the undivided family, and certain other members of the family of the one part, and V. M. Somasundaram Chetty of the other part.

Somasundaram was to collect the debts owing to the family, pay the creditors, and carry on the business.

By the terms of the deed Somasundaram was given "a right over, by way of trust, all the properties, assets and interests mentioned in schedules A and B" for the purpose of selling the same.

The trust deed contained other powers, such as management, the appointment and removal of agents, including the agents then working in the K. P. firm.

One, M. S. M. Maygappa Chettyar, was appointed coadjutor to counsel and advise the trustee, and it was provided that the trustee should obtain the consent in writing of the coadjutor before appointing agents, or selling or mortgaging immoveable properties in connection with the trust,

It was further provided by cl. 21 of the deed that—"all properties, assets, claimed and suits that may come under dispute (or to Court) of the K. P. firm have in this way been transferred to the trustee. He has power to receive them as they are paid, to convert them all into money and, if convenient, to transfer (or assign) them to creditors."

In 1911 the coadjutor mentioned in the trust deed died, and no other coadjutor was appointed.

On the 4th January, 1912, Somasundaram, purporting to act as trustee by virtue of the powers conferred upon him by the above-mentioned deed, appointed Singaram Chetty his agent, to transact, conduct and manage the affairs, concerns and matters in which he was interested, as trustee, and to use the name of Somasundaram Chetty, trustee to the said estate.

On the 23rd June, 1912, Singaram, by a registered deed of that date, purported to sell to E. N. M. K. Muttaya Chetty, the first respondent, for the consideration of Rs. 12,500, the properties in suit. This deed was not produced at the trial, but a copy of it was put in by consent of the parties at the hearing of this appeal.

The other respondents are purchasers of some of the properties from the first respondent.

On the 1st August, 1913, the trustee was discharged.

On the 7th January, 1918, on the application of a creditor, Ramanathan Chetty individually, and as managing member of the joint family, was adjudicated insolvent by the District Judge of Ramnad, who directed that all the personal assets of Ramanathan and the joint family assets should vest in the Official Receiver.

On the 26th January, 1920, the appellant bought the properties in suit at a public auction for the sum of Rs. 580, and the property was conveyed to him by two deeds, dated the 8th May, 1920, and the 7th December, 1921, and executed by the Official Receiver. The appellant instituted this suit, as already stated, on the 6th November, 1922, basing his title to the properties on the two above-mentioned sale deeds.

The first respondent relied upon his alleged purchase on the 23rd June, 1912.

The learned Additional District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

On appeal, the High Court held that Singaram continued as agent for the K. P. firm in the Pegu District from 1906 until after the conveyance to the first respondent that the power-of-attorney granted in 1906 to Singaram continued unimpaired and uncanceled, and that he had ample power to convey the property and give a good title.

The High Court dealt with certain questions of fraud and collusion, to which reference need not now be made, as they have been raised on the hearing of this appeal.

The learned Counsel, who appeared for the appellant, relied mainly upon two points.

In the first place, it was contended that the power-of-attorney of 1906 in favour of Singaram came to an end by reason of the execution of the trust deed of the 6th April, 1908. It was argued that by the trust deed the whole of the property of the undivided family was transferred to the trustee, that Ramanathan and the family had thereby deprived themselves of all power to sell the property, and that thereafter as the principal had no power to sell, the agent, Singaram, likewise had no authority or power to sell the property.

It was also argued on behalf of the appellant that the power-of-attorney given by the trustee on the 4th January, 1912, was of no effect, as far as the sale of immoveable properties was concerned, inasmuch as the trustee had not obtained the consent in writing of a coadjutor to the sale thereof as provided by the deed.

The last-mentioned point may be disposed of at once.

It was not seriously contended on behalf of the respondents that they could rely on the power-of-attorney executed by the trustee on the 4th January, 1912, as authority for the sale by Singaram of the properties, and their Lordships are of opinion that the appellant's contention on that point may be taken to be correct.

In the second place, it was argued that the trust did not come to an end when the trustee was discharged in August, 1913, that the Court on a proper application would have appointed another trustee, and that the property was still subject to the trust and vested in the trustee.

The learned Counsel for the respondents replied to these points by arguing, first, that the trust deed of the 6th April, 1908, did not include the immoveable property in Pegu which is now in suit, and secondly, that there was a finding of fact by both the Courts in India that the power-of-attorney in favour of Singaram, dated 10th February, 1906, had not come to an end, but that it was in force and of full effect at the time Singaram sold the property to the first respondent.

It is clear that the immoveable properties in Pegu are not specifically mentioned in the trust deed.

The properties mentioned in schedule A are situated at Pallatur and the other places mentioned therein, and they do not include the immoveable properties at Pegu, the subject of this suit.

Schedule B includes "the firm under the mark of K. P. at Pegu and all the rights such as money-lending, etc."

The property mentioned in the schedule to the plaint consists of four lots of paddy land, two houses, and two lots of garden land—situated in Pegu.

In their Lordships' opinion the property so claimed in this suit cannot be said to be covered by the description of the properties in the above-mentioned two schedules to the trust deed.

This opinion is confirmed when reference is made to the provisions of the Registration Act III of 1877—which was in force at the time of the execution of the trust deed, dated the 6th April, 1908. The deed was registered, and if it had been intended to make the immoveable property at Pegu subject to the trust for sale, it would have been necessary to insert in the deed a description of such property sufficient to identify the same, as was in fact done in the case of the property at Pallatur and other places referred to in schedule A of the trust deed.

It was, however, argued on behalf of the appellant that the terms of cl. 21 of the deed, which have already been stated, are sufficient to vest all the property of the K. P. firm, including the immoveable property at Pegu, in the trustee.

The deed has to be construed as a whole, and upon such a construction it is not possible, in their Lordships' opinion, to hold that the above-mentioned words are sufficient to transfer to the trustee the immoveable properties at Pegu, which have not been mentioned in the deed or the schedule containing the description of the immoveable properties which, it was intended by the parties, should be transferred to the trustee.

Their Lordships, therefore, are of the opinion that the properties, which are the subject-matter of the suit, were not transferred to the trustee by the deed of the 6th April, 1908, and that the authority given to Singaram to sell the property was not terminated by reason of the execution of that trust deed.

It was further argued on behalf of the appellant that Singaram was appointed agent at Pegu in 1905 by a salary agreement which usually exists for three years, that he returned to India in or about 1909, and that the power-of-attorney which had been given to him in 1906 must be considered to have come to an end when he left Pegu and returned to India.

It appears, however, that Singaram returned to Pegu in 1911 and again acted as agent for the K. P. firm.

The learned Assistant District Judge, who tried the suit, held that the original power-of-attorney of 1906, in favour of Singaram was evidently never withdrawn or cancelled.

The High Court considered that it was clearly established that Singaram continued as agent of the K. P. firm in the Pegu District from 1906 until after the conveyance in question in the suit, and the learned Judges of the High Court were also of opinion that the trial Judge was fully justified on the evidence in holding that his powers under the power of attorney granted in 1906 continued unimpaired and uncanceled.

These are concurrent findings, and it was argued on behalf of the respondents that they are findings of fact, and, therefore, that their Lordships should not interfere with them.

It may be that, strictly speaking, the question, to which the findings are relevant is not merely one of fact, and that the question whether the power-of-attorney of 1906 was still effective at the time Singaram conveyed the property to the first respondent is a mixed question of law and fact. However that may be, their Lordships, after consideration of the evidence, see no sufficient reason for disagreeing with the above-mentioned conclusions of the two Courts in India in respect of this matter.

Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that Singaram had authority to convey the property and to give a good title, to the first respondent, and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Although as a general proposition one co-sharer has no right to take exclusive possession of a joint property, yet the question whether such exclusive possession amounts to an ouster or not depends on the circumstances of each case, and where the Court is unable to hold that there was an ouster, it would not be right to refuse defendant who is in possession the benefit of the equitable principle that the mere fact of sole occupation by one co-sharer does not necessarily constitute an ouster of the other co-sharers, and does not entitle the latter to a decree for joint possession. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this appeal. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the plaintiff on the allegations that the lands in suit which are described at the foot of the plaint formed part and parcel of a jama of Rs. 32 which at one time belonged to two brothers, Kachimaddi and Madhu Molla, Kachimaddi having two-thirds share Madhu Molla the remaining one-third. The plaintiff's case was that there was a partition between Kachimaddi and Madhu Molla and that the disputed lands together with other lands fell to the share of the latter. Madhu Molla, it is said, died leaving three sons and four daughters and the plaintiff who is one of the daughters became according to the plaintiff, entitled to a twelfth share in the land owned by Madhu and the lands in suit fell in the plaintiff's share on a partition which took place amongst the sons and daughters of Madhu and the plaintiff, therefore, prayed for a declaration of her jote right to the said lands and for confirmation of possession therein. There was an alternative prayer in the plaint asking for a decree for joint possession with the defendant, in case it was found that there was no such partition as was alleged on behalf of the plaintiff. The contesting defendant in the suit was the defendant No. 3 who is in possession of the lands in suit. The trial Court made a decree in plaintiff's favour declaring her right to an one-twelfth share in the lands in suit and giving her a decree for joint possession with the defendant No. 3 who appears to have been the principal contesting defendant in the suit. The case of the defendant No. 3 in so far as it is necessary for the purpose of this appeal was that he had obtained a lease of the said lands from the three sons of Madhu and that Madhu's daughters did not get any of the lands belonging to the latter inasmuch as Madhu had made a gift of his lands in favour of his sons. The parties thereupon preferred an appeal and a cross-appeal with the result that the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed in its entirety by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The contention that has been urged on behalf of the appellant here is that in view of the finding at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived she is entitled to a decree for joint possession to the extent of the share which has been found in her favour by the Court below. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff owned one-tenth share in the property left by Madhu and that the story of partition that had been set up by the plaintiff was not true. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that under these circumstances there is no reason why the plaintiff should not get a decree for joint possession to the extent of her one-tenth share with the defendant No. 3 in the disputed lands. The reasons upon which the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit are mainly the following: (1) that in the suit which the plaintiff instituted she has not prayed for a decree for joint possession. So far as this reason is concerned the learned Subordinate Judge is not perhaps right, because the prayer kha in the plaintiff's plaint is not incapable of being construed as including such a prayer. In support of the learned Subordinate Judge's view it may no doubt be said that the words used in this prayer describing the lands in suit as being the lands marked X are indicative of a distinction which the plaintiff desired to make between the said lands and the entire quantity of lands which fell to the share of all the co-sharers which are intended to be meant by the words Mote Bandal. Any way this matter need not be pursued any further, because I am willing to proceed on this footing that the prayer included the claim for a decree for joint possession to the extent of the plaintiff's share in respect of plot X which forms the subject-matter of the suit. The other reasons are the following: (2) that the plaintiff had no possession in the lands in suit and that the only possession which she could be said to have in the suit lands was through her co-sharers, because the learned Judge below distinctly says that the story of the plaintiff's possession falls to the ground along with the story of partition; (3) that the lessors, that is to say, the plaintiff's co-sharers were in exclusive possession of all the lands left by Madhu but without any denial of the plaintiff's right; (4) that the said lessors let out a plot meaning plot X out of the said lands to defendant No. 3 on receipt of a substantive selami; (5) that on a partition the lessors of defendant No. 3 would be entitled in respect of their share to more lands than what was settled with defendant No. 3, and (6) that so long as the lands were in possession of the sons of Madhu Molla the plaintiff did not object, but when the possession passed to the defendant, the plaintiff instituted a suit perhaps because the land lies adjacent to her homestead. These grounds upon which the learned Subordinate Judge has proceeded disclose equitable considerations which should not be lost sight of in a case of this description. I am clearly of opinion that in view of these grounds which the learned Subordinate Judge has given, the plaintiff in the present suit when she failed to establish her case as to the partition, should not be allowed to have a decree for joint possession to the extent of her share—a decree which if passed would have the effect of disturbing the possession of defendant No. 3. The principles that should be applied to cases of this description have been discussed in a recent decision of this Court in the case of Nawadwip Chandra Chakravarti v. Bhagaban Chandra Chowdhury (1). It has been stated there on consideration of the case-law on the point that as a general proposition one co-sharer has no right to take exclusive possession of a joint property, but the question whether such exclusive possession amounts to an ouster or not depends upon the circumstances of each case and where the Court is unable to hold that there was an ouster, it would not be right to refuse the defendant who is in possession the benefit of the equitable principle that the mere fact of sole occupation by one co-sharer does not necessarily constitute an ouster of other co-sharers, nor does it entitle the latter to a decree for joint possession. My attention has been drawn to a decision of this Court in the case of Lakhan Chandra Mulo v. Gopal Sheikh (2). It will, however, be seen that there is a broad distinction between that case and the present one, because in that case a co-sharer gave a lease of the entire quantity of land belonging to all the co-sharers and in such a case it may be said that when such lease is granted by a body of co-sharers, their intention is to oust the other co-sharers who is not a party to the lease. I am of opinion that the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for refusing to pass in plaintiff's favour a decree for joint possession are good and valid.

There is, however, one point in connexion with which, it seems to me, the learned Subordinate Judge has been in error. His finding being that the plaintiff owns one-tenth share in the property left by Madhu; and there being nothing to show that this title of the plaintiff has in any way been extinguished by adverse possession, there is no reason why the plaintiff should not have a decree declaring her title to a tenth share in the property. The learned Vakil who appears on behalf of the respondents concedes that it would be proper to allow the plaintiff a decree in respect of the said declaration.

The result then is that this appeal fails and is dismissed, subject to the modification in the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, in this respect only, namely, that the plaintiff should be allowed a declaration that she is entitled to a tenth share of the property which forms the subject-matter of the suit.

Provincial Insolvency Act (IV of 1920), ss. 4, 68, 75, (3)—Attachment by Receiver of property of third person—Application to District Judge to set aside Receiver's act—Order dismissing application whether appealable—Person aggrieved, meaning of.

A Receiver in insolvency attached certain properties of the petitioners and sold some of them as belonging to the insolvent. The petitioners applied to the District Judge to enquire into and rectify the acts of the Receiver, but the applications were dismissed by the District Judge on the ground that they were time-barred:

Held, (1) that the orders of the District Judge on the applications were appealable by leave under s. 75 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act;

(2) that even if they were not appealable by leave the matter decided was one under s. 4 of the Act and appealable as such;

(3) that the petitioners were persons aggrieved by the orders, and as such entitled to appeal against them.

The question whether a person is aggrieved or not by an order of Court is a question of fact.

Hanseswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (1), distinguished.

Rules against an order of the Court of the District Judge, 24-Perganas (Alipore), dated the 13th May, 1927.

Babu Prafulla Kamal Das, for the Petitioners.

Babu Nripendra Chandra Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These two Rules have been obtained against an order of the District Judge of 24-Perganas holding that an application to enquire into and rectify certain acts of the Receiver in an insolvency case was out of time and so could not be entertained. It appears that in a certain insolvency case a Receiver was appointed and he attached from the Bargadars of one of the petitioners' paddy and sold it as being the property of the insolvent and in the other case he attached certain furniture. It appears that he also warned the tenants not to pay any more rent except to himself. The two petitioners feeling aggrieved at this order moved the District Judge but he held that the matter came under s. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and so, as the application was made more than twenty-one days after the Receiver had taken possession of the properties, the matter was barred.

Thereupon applications were made to this Court and two Rules obtained on the 24th June, 1927. Subsequently, it appears that in July the two petitioners appeared before the District Judge and applied for leave to appeal to this Court against his order and the Judge granted them leave.

A preliminary point is taken and it seems to me one of substance that as the order of the District Judge in these two matters is appealable, s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application. Now, it is clear to my mind that the case must at least come under s. 75 (3) which makes appealable to this Court by leave. Even if it did not become appealable by leave it is a matter decided by the Judge under s. 4 and is appealable. It is urged, however, for the petitioners that somehow or other they are strangers and not persons aggrieved and in this connection I am referred to the case of Hanseswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (1), but whether a person is aggrieved or not appears to be a question of fact and cannot believe that a man whose paddy has been taken away and a man who has had his furniture taken away are not people who are aggrieved. I must, therefore, hold that the Rules must be discharged as an appeal lies, a fact which the learned Judge himself has admitted and the petitioners have admitted.

I, therefore, discharge both the Rules with costs to the Receiver, hearing-fee one gold mohur in each case.

Let the records be sent down as early as possible.

Landlord and tenant—Kabuliyat—Nature of tenancy—Construction of deed.

The material portion of a kabuliyat relating to a tank with its banks and a plot of land adjoining thereto ran as follows: "I shall graze cattle on the banks after fencing them all round, I shall rear new fish and catch them and shall not make any objection to your catching the old fish. I shall enjoy the fruits of the fruit-bearing trees now existing on the banks." The kabuliyat was further headed as a 'Kabuliyat for nine years' and the executant was described as cultivator for nine years:

Held, that the tenancy created was an agricultural tenancy.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Additional Court, Chittagong, dated the 16th of January, 1925, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, Satkania, dated the 23rd of June, 1923.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The contention that has been urged in this appeal is that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the tenancy in suit is governed by the Transfer of Property Act and that the Munsif who tried the suit had rightly held that the Bengal Tenancy Act applied to it.

The subject-matter of the tenancy is a tank with its banks and a plot of land adjoining thereto. It had its origin in a kabuliyat the material portion of which runs in these words "I shall graze cattle on the banks after fencing them all round, I shall rear new fish and catch them and shall not make any objection to your catching the old fish. I shall enjoy the fruits of the fruit-bearing trees now existing on the banks. I shall be entitled to catch fish throughout year and shall not be competent to raise any objection to your catching fish on any festive occasion. If I fill up the tank without your permission I shall not be entitled to raise any objection to your getting khas possession of it. I shall always clear the weeds of the tank and if the tank is not cleared I shall be liable for damage."

Were these terms the only materials from which the purpose of the tenancy had to be determined, I would have agreed with the respondents' contention that it was not made out that the tenancy was for agricultural or horticulture purposes. The defendant's (appellant's) case in the written statement was that he had cultivated paddy etc. on the lands and had grown fruits trees on the banks of the tank, and that he had not used the lands for the purpose of grazing. The Munsif held that he did not cultivate the lands but used the same for the purposes of grazing. This finding has not been reversed by the Subordinate Judge. On this finding the defendant seeks to argue that the grazing was for a purpose ancillary or incidental to his cultivation of other lands in the village, in respect of which he is a settled ryot as is shewn by the khata. Whether having put forward a definite case which failed, the defendant can be, or at any rate should be, permitted to construct another case upon the findings that have been arrived at against him, may be debatable question. But, in my opinion, there is much surer indication than all this in the kabuliyat itself as regards the status of the defendant which it purported to create.

The kabuliyat is headed as a "Kabuliyat for nine years." Below this heading, when naming the defendant as the executant, it speaks of him as "Naysena Meadi Chasa Sree Makbul Ali" (i. e., Makbulali cultivator for nine years). I am of opinion that it was so said because the object was to create in favour of the defendant an agricultural tenancy for nine years or to make him a cultivating tenant for that period. I think there is no ambiguity in the meaning of the document and that the view taken by the Munsif of the defendant's status is the correct one.

I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Munsif with costs in this as well as the lower Appellate Court.

Practice—Putting parties to box after hearing to note their demeanour, legality of.

The procedure of putting the plaintiff and the defendant to the witness-box, after the case has been concluded without putting them on oath to see them confront each other and to note their demeanour is not warranted by law.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge at Bogra, having power of a Court of Small Causes, dated the 28th April, 1927.

Mr. M. Syed Nasim Ali, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. M. Nur-ud-din Ahmed and M. Amir-ud-din Ahmed, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this matter the plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 500 the balance due on a certain jute transaction. The defendant in his written statement stated that the case was false but, on the other hand, he was entitled to a certain amount from the plaintiff. He did not mention in his written statement in the suit that he had sued in the Court of the Second Munsif for his counter-claim the suit which was dismissed a little over a month after the present suit before the Small Cause Court Judge was disposed of. The case came on for hearing. The Judge heard the plaintiff and his witnesses, the defendant and his witnesses and arguments on both sides. It then appears that he took the ordinary noon-day adjournment and on coming back to the Court, it is admitted by him the explanation he furnished was that he put the plaintiff and the defendant both in the box to confront each other and note their demeanour and did not swear them but heard them argue in support of their cases. It appears that they said nothing more than what they stated in evidence. He then let them leave the box and passed judgment dismissing the suit.

This Rule has been obtained on the ground that his procedure in putting those two parties in the box without putting them on oath and let each talk to the other is not warranted by law and has vitiating the whole trial. No doubt in his explanation the learned Judge says that he decided on the evidence but he had to decide on that evidence considering the probabilities of the case and it is difficult to believe in deciding as to who was more likely to speak the truth that what occurred after the lunch did not weigh with him in some way, even though he does not think that he did and it is clear that this method of putting the two men into the box after the case had been concluded excepting for judgment is not warranted by law. I am, therefore, compelled in the circumstances to set aside the decree in the case and remit the case for a re-hearing. The case must be tried by some Judge with the necessary powers and there is none in the Civil Division of Pabna and Bogra it will be transferred to a Judge exercising such Small Cause Court jurisdiction in the District of Rajshahi.

In the circumstances, I pass no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Application for withdrawal of suit with liberty to bring fresh suit—Order for withdrawal without liberty, legality of—Proper procedure.

The proper course to be adopted where an application is made for withdrawal of a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and the Court considers that such an application should not be granted, is to dismiss the application altogether and proceed with the case. The Court has no power to make a declaration that the plaintiff is permitted to withdraw without liberty to bring a fresh suit.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, Third Court, Bankura, dated the 15th June, 1927.

Mr. Bankim Chandra Mukherjee and Mr. Bansorilal Sarcar, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is heard in parte. In this matter the plaintiff sued to recover a certain share of a tank on declaration of his title thereto. The defendant appeared, the case was adjourned until it was over a year old and on the 15th June it came on for hearing. The plaintiff was examined and the defendant was examined in part. A verbal application followed by a written application was then made on behalf of the plaintiff as there were formal defects—leave was prayed to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. This application was strenuously opposed and the learned Munsif rejected it. But instead of then finishing the case and deciding it on the evidence on the record and on such further evidence in the case as might be adduced he made declaration that the plaintiff is permitted to withdraw from the suit without liberty to bring a fresh suit with costs to be paid to the contesting defendant and subsequently made a memo. of such costs. Now as was pointed out in the case of Mahant Biharidasji v. Parshotamdas Ramdas (1), the proper course is if the Munsif did not consider that the application for withdrawal with liberty to bring a fresh suit should be granted to dismiss the application and then go on with the case. This ruling has been followed also in the case of Kamini Kumar Roy v. Rajendra Nath Roy (2), and is also in accordance with the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Suradhan Debba v. Chandra Nath Pramanik (3). I must hold, therefore, that the order of the Munsif does not amount to a dismissal of the suit or to the suit being withdrawn unconditionally. I, therefore, set aside what appears to be an order disposing of the suit in this way and order that the case do go back to the learned Munsif to proceed to dispose of the suit on the assumption that the application to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit has been refused. It follows too that the present order for costs in favour of the defendants must also be set aside as it will be for the Munsif now to dispose of the suit as a contested suit in the ordinary way.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—Rent decree—Appeal—Decision as to question of amount of rent annually payable.

In order to bring a case within the exception to s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is not necessary that there should be a declaration in the order or decree as to the amount of rent annually payable in respect of the jama. It is sufficient if a question as to the amount of rent annually payable has been decided in the decree or order. [p. 471, col. 2.]

The plaintiff claimed rent in respect of a tenancy alleging that it comprised an area of 41 acres and bore a rental of Rs. 3 per year. His case was that originally the jama consisted of 53 acres on a rental of Rs. 4 but that afterwards 12 or 13 acres were taken out of the jama and the rent reduced to Rs. 3. The defendant contended that the area of the jama was 53 acres and the rent was Rs. 4, and that there ought to be a total suspension of rent inasmuch as he had been dispossessed of a portion of the lands of the jama. The suit was decreed by the District Munsif:

Held, that there was a decision by the District Munsif on the question of the amount of rent annually payable and that his decision was, consequently, appealable under s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 471, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 21st of May, 1927.

Babu Nirmal Chandra Chakravarti, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nuruddin Ahmed, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule relates to a suit for rent which was tried by the Munsif, Second Court, Madaripur. The suit was valued at Rs. 15 and odd. The Munsif decreed the suit. The defendant preferred an appeal to the District Judge and the learned Judge held that the appeal was not maintainable in view of the provisions of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He held that the trial Court could not be considered to have decided any question of the amount of rent annually payable. The Rule has been issued to show cause why this order of the learned District Judge should not be set aside upon two grounds first, "that the decision of the learned Munsif having decided a question of the amount of rent annually payable, the learned Judge ought to have held that he had jurisdiction to hear the appeal", and, second "that the Court of Appeal below ought to have held that the Court of first instance has also decided a question of title to or interest in 12 acres of land between the plaintiff and the defendants in this case and, therefore, the appeal was competent.

So far as the second of these grounds is concerned, I may say at once that I do not feel pressed by the argument advanced in support of it. As regards the first ground the position seems to be different. The facts relevant for the purposes of that ground are these. The plaintiff claimed rent in respect of this tenancy alleging that it comprised of an area of 41 acres and bore a rental of Rs. 3 per year. His case was that originally the jama consisted of 53 acres of land and the rental was Rs. 4, but that afterwards 12 or 13 acres of land was taken out of this jama for digging a tank thereon and the plaintiff paid Rs. 30 for the said quantity that was thus taken; and further that on account of this reduction in the area of the jama the rental was reduced by Re. 1. The defendant's case on the other hand, appears to have been that the area of the jama was 53 and that the rental was Rs. 4 as is evidenced by the Settlement Khatian, Ex. 4-A. The defendant, besides setting up various other defences, also contended that there ought to be a total suspension of rent inasmuch as he had been dispossessed from a portion of the lands of the jama. The questions which had necessarily to be determined amongst others in order to dispose of this suit were: whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, whether the plaintiff's allegation that the original jama of Rs. 4 was reduced to Rs. 3 in consequence of a portion of the lands of the jama having been taken by the plaintiff for digging a tank and whether the rent at the aforesaid rate as was alleged on behalf of the plaintiff was due from the defendant or not. Without determining the question whether the jama bore a rental of Rs. 3 as was the case put forward on behalf of the plaintiff or it bore a rental of Rs. 4 and consisted of additional lands in which case the plaintiff perhaps would not have been entitled to a decree, no decision could be arrived at on the merits of the plaintiff's claim. It is true that there is no declaration in the order or in the decree as to the amount of rent that is annually payable by the defendant to the plaintiff in respect of the jama. But having regard to the wording of the exception contained in s. 153 it does not appear that any such declaration is necessary in order to bring the case within the exception. It is sufficient if a question as to the amount annually payable has been decided in the decree or order. It certainly appears upon the judgment that there has been a decision as regards the amount of the jama payable in respect of this tenancy. The only difference between this case and cases of the type that ordinarily come up before the Courts is that in the latter class of cases the jama alleged on behalf of the plaintiff is more than what is alleged on behalf of the defendant and in this particular case the position is reversed on account of its peculiar circumstances. The fact, however, reminds that the question of the amount of rent annually payable has been decided. In this view of the matter I am of opinion that an appeal lay from the decision of the learned Munsif.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute; the decision of the learned District Judge is set aside and it is directed that the appeal which the petitioner had filed in the Court of the learned District Judge from the decision of the Munsif be now heard and dealt with in accordance with law. Costs of this Rule one gold mohur will abide the result of the appeal.

Rule against an order of the Court of the District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 10th May, 1927.

Babu Pran Sankar Sen Gupta, for the Petitioners.

Babu Nirmal Chandra Chakravarty, for Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule has been made to show cause why the order of the District Judge of Faridpur, dated the 10th May, 1927, should not be set aside. Such other order passed as to this Court may seem fit and proper. The order referred to in the Rule is one by which the District Judge dismissed an appeal in his Court and affirmed the order of the Sadar Munsif of Faridpur, dated the 8th January, 1927, setting aside an execution sale. The Rule has been obtained by the decree holders-auction-purchasers.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the opposite party, namely, that the judgment-debtors, which is to the effect that in point of fact no appeal lay from the learned District Judge from the order of the Munsif inasmuch as the Munsif was vested with final powers under s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and there was no question which could arise in the case within the exception mentioned in that section. In support of this preliminary objection reference has been made to the case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Karani Mai (1). The decision in this case is an authority for the proposition that fraud in publishing or conducting a sale is not meant to be kept separate from irregularities in the publication or conduct thereof for the purpose of the Explanation to s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that where an application is made under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud the mere fact that fraud is alleged would not give rise to a question of title within the meaning of the Exception so as to take the case out of the substantive provision of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and thus give a right of appeal which is forbidden by that section. In opposition to that argument reference has been made to the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Kali Mandal v. Ramsarbaswar Chakravarti (2) and to a very recent decision a note of which is to be found in 31 C. W. N. (Notes portion) page 107 the case being that of Prosad Kumar Dutt v. Surendra Nath Mitra (3). Having read this last mentioned decision and also the cases referred to and relied upon therein I do not find any reason to dissent from the view which I expressed in the case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Karani Mai (1). I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal which was filed before the District Judge from the decision of the learned Munsif was incompetent. The effect of holding that the preliminary objection is well-founded is to hold that the order against which this Rule is directed was passed without jurisdiction and one result of this a very curious result—is that that order will necessarily have to be set aside—a thing which the petitioner also asks for. But the justice of the case demands that the order of the Munsif which would be revived by reason of that of the learned District Judge being set aside should also be considered in this Rule because the order of the District Judge merely affirms the order of the learned Munsif. On perusing the order of the learned Munsif I find that it is not passed upon any sufficient or proper findings. The learned Munsif has set aside the sale holding that the petitioner came to know of the sale in the month of Falgun last when he was resisted in his attempt to plough the land by the decree-holder No. 1's son and he has also found that the processes were concealed. It is needless to say that these two findings even if they are accepted as entirely correct would not be sufficient for an order for setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code. But then there is a further unsatisfactory feature in these proceedings, namely, that this order was passed on the basis of the uncross-examined testimony of the judgment-debtor himself, the petitioner in the present Rule not having appeared on the day when the case was taken up and his application for summoning his witnesses having been refused by the learned Munsif. It may be that there were some laches on the part of the petitioner in summoning his witnesses, but having taken into consideration the various orders that were passed from time to time in connection with the case I am not at all sure that the learned Munsif exercised a proper discretion in refusing the petitioner's application on the 8th January, 1927, and then proceeding with the case ex parte. On the whole in view of the circumstances of the case I think it would be more satisfactory to have the proceedings re-tried in the presence of both the parties, if possible, giving the petitioner an opportunity to adduce such evidence as he may desire. I am accordingly of opinion that the Rule should be made absolute. Having regard, however, to the fact that the petitioner adopted a wrong course in filing an appeal against the order passed by the learned Munsif although no appeal lay from his decision and also in view of the fact that for what has happened the petitioner has got to blame himself, the order that I shall make would be conditional on the petitioner paying the costs to the opposite party.

I accordingly direct that in the event of the petitioner paying to the opposite party within a month of the arrival of the records in the Court of the learned Munsif the decretal costs of this Rule hearing-fee therein being assessed at Rs. 16 together with Rs. 8 as Pleader's fee for the proceedings in the Court of the Munsif the Rule will be made absolute, the orders passed by the learned District Judge and by the learned Munsif will be set aside and the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code will be re-tried. If the petitioner fails to make the said payment within the time aforesaid the Rule will stand discharged with costs—one gold mohur.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 49, 115, 115—Suit for recovery of gold delivered to defendant for making ornaments, or their value—Limitation—Deposit—Wrongful possession after demand, effect of.

A suit for recovery of gold and ornaments delivered to the defendant for making new ornaments, or the price thereof, is governed by Art. 145 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act and the mere fact that depository continued to retain possession of them after demand was made does not take the case out of the said Article.

Kristo Kamini Dassi v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1), Gangahari Chakrabarti v. Nabin Chandra Banikya (2) and Promotho Nath Mullick v. Prodyumno Kumar Mullick (3), followed.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, First Court, Narail (Jessore), exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes, dated the 30th May, 1927.

Babu Prafulla Kamal Das, for the Petitioner.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for refund of certain gold and silver kept in the custody of the defendant or in lieu of the price thereof. His case was that he handed over two tolas of gold and some silver ornaments to the defendant in 1923 for making some ornaments but the defendant never made the ornaments and refused to return the gold and silver. The defendant pleaded among other things limitation and denied receipt of these ornaments from the present plaintiff. The learned Small Cause Court Judge found as a matter of fact that the plaintiff did make over the gold and silver to the defendant but the defendant did not make the ornaments and did not carry out his share of the contract. He held further that Art. 145 of the Limitation Act applied to the case.

A Rule has been obtained on behalf of the defendant and one point is whether Art. 145 of the Limitation Act applies or whether there should be a shorter period of limitation under Art. 49 or 115. It is argued that the handing over of the ornaments for making into other jewellery is not deposit at all. On the other hand, I am ound by the authorities of this Court and it is perfectly clear that Art. 145 does not merely apply even when property is not recovered in species. See the case of Kristo Kamini Dassi v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1). An exactly similar case to this appears to be also the case of Gangahari Chakrabarti v. Nabin Chandra Banikya (2) where it was held that the case was one under Art. 145 of the Schedule. It is argued however, that a time is fixed within which the new jewellery was to be delivered and that after that time expired the defendant ceased to be depository and became a person in wrongful possession, and so Art. 145 will not apply. In this connection I would only refer to the case of Promotho Nath Mullick v. Prodymno Kumar Mullick (3) where the learned Judge points out that the mere fact of possession by the depository after demand becoming wrongful does not take the case out of Art. 145.

In this view, I hold that the proper Article under the Limitation Act has been applied and the suit is in time. The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs, hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Document under which mortgagor gives up his rights to mortgagee, effect of—Necessity of registration.

A document under which a mortgagor gives up his right and possession of the properties mortgaged to the mortgagee and by so doing absolves himself from the mortgage-debt is in effect a document transferring all the right and interest of the mortgagor in the properties to the mortgagee in consideration of the mortgagee foregoing his right to recover the mortgage-debt and is, therefore, compulsorily registrable under s. 17 of the Registration Act.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 13th February, 1925, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, Berhampur, dated the 8th October, 1923.

Babus Jagat Chandra Bose and Sekhar Kumar Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit is brought to recover khas possession of certain land on declaration of the plaintiff's title thereto. The lower Appellate Court has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff in respect of only one of the plots of land in dispute. Now, the plaintiff seeks to recover khas possession. He was a mortgagee of the property in suit and the mortgage-debt and the interest thereon at all material times exceeded Rs. 100 and it has been found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court that the value of the mortgaged property was not Rs. 100. In his capacity as a mortgagee the plaintiff is not entitled to immediate khas possession of the property. But in support of his claim to khas possession he tendered in evidence a document in the following manner. "Being unable to pay up the mortgage-debt principal and interest I give up the right and possession of the properties mortgaged to the mortgagee and by so doing I am absolved from the liability of the mortgage debt." That document was not registered but it was the foundation of the plaintiff's claim to possession in the suit.

The only issue which need be considered upon this appeal is whether or not it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that this document had been duly registered before it became admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving his title to khas possession. The document was in Bengali, but as we apprehend the meaning of the document, (it has been translated into English) we think that the effect of the document was that the mortgagor assigned all his right and interest in the immoveable property subject to the mortgage in consideration of the mortgagee foregoing his right to recover the mortgage-debt and the interest thereon. In our opinion, a document of that description must necessarily be registered under s. 17 of the Registration Act; and if it was not registered it was not permissible for the plaintiff to rely upon that document for the purpose of founding his claim in the suit. The result is that this document was not admissible in evidence and the plaintiff's claim to khas possession of the one plot for which the decree was passed in the lower Appellate Court must fail.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree appealed against set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

The cross-objection is not pressed and is dismissed without costs, Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule against an order refusing an application for addition of a party as a co-respondent in a suit under the Indian Divorce Act. The application was rejected by the Court below. The plaintiff obtained a Rule against that order. As it is not the usual practice of this Court to interfere in revision with an order made by the lower Court in an interlocutory matter this application is rejected. If the petitioner has any real grievance on account of the adverse order by the Court below he has a right of appeal against the final order and upon the appeal this Court will be able to pass the proper order.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged. No order is made as to costs as there is no appearance on behalf of the opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued on a bond to recover a sum of Rs. 10 borrowed in 1922 with interest. The defendant contended that the bond was only for Rs. 5 and that it had been paid off. The learned Small Cause Court Judge found that the consideration was only Rs. 5 and the bond had been tampered with. But he found that the plea of payment of the defendant was not true. He dismissed the suit on the ground that it was based on a false document. Against this order a Rule has been obtained. I have been referred to the case of Parbati Charan Mukherjee v. Amarendra Nath Bhattacharjee (1) for the proposition that although the bond had been tampered with it was admissible to prove the existence of the debt of Rs. 5. On the other hand I have been referred to the English case of Suffel v. Bank of England (2), and the old cases therein cited against such proposition. It appears to me to be an established principle of law that when a deed is altered on a material point by the plaintiff himself, thereby it becomes void. Now, in this case it cannot be said that the plaintiff has really produced any evidence at all apart from the tampered deed to prove the debt. The mere fact that the defendant said in the written statement that the original deed was for Rs. 5 should, not in my opinion, be used for the benefit of the plaintiff who tampered with the deed and, therefore, in my opinion, the learned Judge has rightly dismissed the suit.

An order setting aside a Court sale cannot be treated as a nullity merely because notice on the application for setting aside the sale was not issued to a party who was affected by the order. Babu Prafulla Chandra Nag, for the Petitioner.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to the order against which this Rule is directed are shortly as follows: The petitioners obtained a decree against certain judgment-debtors in 1910 in Money

Suit No. ⁷⁵⁰₁₁₆₄ of that year. In 1920 a jote of the judgment-debtors was sold in execution of a rent decree obtained by the landlords and was purchased by some other parties and the sum of Rs. 525 was deposited by them in Court in two instalments. The petitioners had failed to realise the amount of their decree of 1910 and they, on the amount of Rs. 525 being put in by the auction-purchasers, applied for attachment of a certain portion of the said amount, Rs. 287-10 having gone towards the satisfaction of the decree for rent and Rs. 237-6 being left in Court as surplus sale proceeds. As a result of the proceedings thus instituted by the petitioners, they were allowed to withdraw Rs. 79-2 from Court, out of the aforesaid amount deposited by the auction-purchasers, in part satisfaction of their decree of 1910. In 1922 the amount of Rs. 79-2 was thus withdrawn by the petitioners. It appears that thereafter there were certain proceedings under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, to which the petitioners were not parties and of which, it is said, no notice was given to them, as a result of which the sale in execution of the rent decree to which I have already referred was set aside by the Court. On the sale being set aside, as aforesaid, the auction purchasers applied to get back their purchase-money and upon that the learned Munsif made an order in their favour against which the present Rule is directed.

The substance of the contention that has been urged in support of the Rule is to the effect that the order setting the sale aside was passed in contravention of the provisions of O. XXI, r. 92 of the Code which makes it obligatory on the Court to issue notices of the application for setting aside the sale to all the parties affected by the order that has to be passed on such application. It is urged that, in the present case the petitioners were not given such notices, that the order setting aside the sale was, therefore, one passed without jurisdiction and that inasmuch as the petitioners would suffer irreparable loss, if they are now called upon to refund the amount which they have withdrawn in part satisfaction of their own decree, the learned Munsif acted without jurisdiction and also improperly in making the order aforesaid. The whole basis of the petitioners' contention seems to me to be what is alleged by them in para. 10 of their petition and which is to the effect that the order setting the sale aside was passed without jurisdiction inasmuch as no notice was served on them and further that the proceeding held in connexion with the application for setting the sale aside was a collusive and benami affair. It may be conceded that if the order setting the sale aside may be looked upon as a nullity, the petitioners are entitled to urge that they are not bound by it and that any further or consequential orders that may have been passed on the basis of it should also be set aside. It may also be conceded that in view of the proviso to sub-r. 2 of r. 92 the Court should not have passed an order on the application for setting aside the sale without giving notice of the application to all the persons affected by such an order. But I find it very difficult to hold that merely because no notice was given of the application, the order which the Court passed was one that can be said to have been passed without jurisdiction. It was an order which the Court was wrong in passing and the parties whose interests were affected by the order may very well complain of its validity. But it is quite a different thing to say that it can be regarded as an order passed entirely without jurisdiction. The petitioners do not appear to have challenged the validity of the order itself either by an application for review or by moving against it or by taking such other measures as the law allows. So long as the order is not set aside all consequences that it may legitimately lead to will follow. The present application on which this Rule has been granted is not directed against that order but against a subsequent order, which has been passed directing the petitioners and the judgment-debtors to refund the amount which had been withdrawn by them. I am unable to see what relief the petitioners can expect in this Rule so long as this Court is not competent to go behind the order that was passed setting aside the sale. The provisions of O. XXI, r. 93 of the Code are imperative. The rule runs in these words: "Where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under r. 92, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for re-payment of his purchase-money, with or without interest as the Court may direct, against any person to whom it has been paid". In the present case the sale has been set aside under r. 92. The order by which the sale has been set aside is at the present moment a subsisting order and so long as it subsists it must attract the operation of r. 93. In support of the argument that the equities are in favour of the petitioners and that they should not be made to suffer in consequence of an order passed in the proceedings to which they were not parties, reference has been made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath Marwari (1), and also to a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Raja Rao v. Anantha Narayanan Chetty (2). These two decisions have very little bearing upon the present case as the statutory obligations arising under r. 93 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code did not come in for consideration in either of them. Whatever other remedies the petitioners may have in connexion with this matter, I am clearly of opinion that on the facts, as they are, the present Rule cannot be made absolute. The Rule is accordingly discharged; but in view of the circumstances of the case, I make no order as to the costs.

Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta and Babu Deblal Sen, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. A. S. M. Akram, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Harendra Lal Basak and two minors represented by their mother sued in ejectment certain defendants. On the 14th of June, 1926, the plaintiffs and defendant No. 3 filed a petition of compromise and a petition by the guardian for leave to compromise under the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure was also put in. By the compromise defendant No. 3 was to pay a certain nazar and get the tenancy of some of the lands. With the other defendants there was no proposed compromise. The learned Munsif did not then consider the petition of compromise because, as he expressed in his judgment, he wished to be satisfied after hearing the case as to whether it was in the interests of the minors. But on the 28th August, 1926, the three plaintiffs by another petition sought to withdraw from the compromise on the ground that there had been misrepresentation and that the guardian of the minors in fact knew nothing about it. The Munsif during the trial came to the conclusion that there was no misrepresentation by defendant No. 3 and he found that the compromise was not against the minors' interests and, therefore, so far as the defendant No. 3 was concerned he gave a decree in terms of the compromise. The other defendants had apparently admitted the plaintiffs' title and decrees were also made as against them. The appeal came before the Subordinate Judge and was rejected.

A Rule was then obtained from this Court and it is urged that no compromise on behalf of the minors could be effected except with leave of the Court and that, therefore, as before the compromise was sanctioned by the Court the guardian who wished to compromise had resiled from it the decree on compromise was illegal at least so far as these minors were concerned. Now, it is argued that in view of the cases of Ranga Rao v. Rajagopala Raju (1) and Gulab Dei v. Vaish Moter Co. (2) as the petition for compromise had been followed by another petition for leave to withdraw from compromise before the leave was granted, therefore, the Courts were bound not to accept the compromise as regards these two minors. This case, however, is not similar to those cases. In those cases the next friend of a minor agreed to compromise subject to leave of the Court and withdrew before leave was applied for. In the present case, leave was applied for and the Munsif put off deciding whether he should give leave or not until he knew all about the position of the parties. The action of the Munsif I can quite understand. In the present case, leave was applied for and the learned Munsif's decision on the later petition and the decision in appeal had been that this later petition asking to withdraw was not a bona fide one. It is to be noted that the petition was not by the minors alone. It is by all three of the parties and is mainly concerned on whether there was misrepresentation to the major plaintiff. It is only in the last sentence of the petition that it is said that the lady guardian knew nothing about it. The learned Munsif has found that this petition was not a bona fide one but was got up by other interested parties owing to other facts in the suit. I cannot, therefore, say that the learned Munsif and the learned Subordinate Judge were wrong though the Munsif may not have acted strictly in accordance with the words of the Code in not granting leave to compromise on the first day. In this view and especially as the rulings I have referred to are not on the same facts as in the present case I am not prepared to exercise jurisdiction under s. 115 of the Code and the Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs, hearing-fee one gold mohur.

But where an attachment is made by the Police in the exercise of those powers which the Police have for the prevention of a breach of the peace, either with or without reference to a Magistrate, the latter acting not in his judicial capacity, the attachment cannot be said to have been made under an order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction and the person in whose custody the property is kept cannot be said to be in possession on behalf of the Court. The defendant applied for proceedings being taken against the plaintiff under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code and while the said proceedings were either pending or in contemplation the paddy standing on the land in dispute was attached by the Police and kept in the custody of a third person. Rule against an order of the Judge, Court of Small Causes, Barpeta, dated the 31st March, 1927.

Babu Manmathanath Roy (Jr.), for the Petitioner.

Babu Satindra Nath Roy Chowdhury, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule has been issued to show cause why the decree passed by the Small Cause Court Judge of Barpeta, dated the 31st of March, 1927, should not be set aside. The Rule has been issued at the instance of the defendant in a suit. The plaintiff claimed damages from the defendant on the allegations that certain crops which had been grown by him were attached at the instance of the defendant and that subsequently the land was given back to the plaintiff but that the crops which had been attached were damaged and in consequence thereof, the plaintiff alleged, he was entitled to recover damages. The defence of the defendant, so far as it was necessary for the purpose of the argument that had been advanced on his behalf was that there was a petition filed by the defendant for proceedings being taken against the plaintiffs under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, and that while the said proceedings were either pending or under contemplation, the paddy standing on the land was attached by the Police and kept in the custody of a third person named Ranjit Ram Keot and that the damage that had been caused to the paddy was caused during the time that it was in such custody. The defendant states in his petition to this Court that the said attachment was apparently made under the provisions of s. 146, Criminal Procedure Code. It may be stated, however, that the materials on the record are wholly insufficient for the purpose of arriving at a definite conclusion as to the circumstances under which and the provisions of the law in consonance with which the said order of attachment was made. All that appears from the record is that the paddy was attached by the Police and kept in the custody of Ranjit Keot and that an order was passed by the Criminal Court on the 16th March, 1926, which ran in these words: "This primarily is a matter for the Civil Court to decide as to who should get the paddy. If the claim is decided here, it will not be final. Proceedings struck off." The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 54; that is to say, the price of 27 maunds of paddy calculated at the rate of Rs. 2 per maund.

The substantial contention that has been urged in support of the Rule is to the effect that inasmuch as the paddy was not in the custody or possession of the defendant, but that the Police had made it over to a third person named Ranjit Ram Keot it should be taken that such attachment was made under some sort of order legally passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction, as a presumption should always be made in favour of the validity of an act done by a public servant and if that view be taken, the petitioner cannot be held responsible for any damages that may have been caused to the paddy. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the decision in the case of Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus (1) and a passage in Mayne on Damages, 10th Edition, page 394, where the principles laid down in that case have been discussed. Broadly stated, the principle laid down by the House of Lords in that case was that where the possession of some property becomes the possession of the Court, a person at whose instance the rightful owner may have been deprived of his possession in respect of property no longer remains liable for any damages that may be caused to it. To apply that principle to the present case it will be necessary to find such as was found in that case, that the paddy passed into the custody of the Court—a fact with regard to which there is absolutely no evidence and no attempt even appears to have been made on behalf of the petitioner to establish that it was really under the order of the Court that the paddy was taken possession of or that the possession of Ranjit Keot could in any sense be construed as being the possession of the Court. If the attachment that was made by the Police was made in the exercise of those powers which the Police have for the prevention of a breach of the peace either with or without reference to a Magistrate the latter not acting in his judicial capacity it stands to reason that the attachment cannot be said to have been made under an order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction and the person in whose custody the property is kept can hardly be said to be in possession on behalf of the Court. If the attachment was made under an order of the Magistrate under s. 146, Criminal Procedure Code of which, however, there is no evidence it may be said that the property was custodia legis and for certain purposes the possession of the Court will have to be treated as being the possession of the rightful owner; for instance, as regards the question of limitation such as was held in the case of Abinash Chandra Chowdhury v. Tarini Charan Chowdhuri (2). So long, (1) (1892) A. C. 166; 61 L. J. Ch. 749; 66 L. T. 536; 7 Asp. M. C. 225. (2) 95 Ind. Cas. 117; 30 C. W. N. 541; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 782.

however, as the defendant is unable to establish that the Court was in possession it is obvious that he remains liable for all the damages that may have been caused to the property in respect of which he has wrongfully put the plaintiff out of possession. The principle was very well stated in the case of Smith v. L. & S. W. Ry. (3) where it was stated that in a case originating even in negligence "the person guilty of it is equally liable for its consequences, whether he could have foreseen them or not." The principle applies with greater force to a case where it is not merely negligence but a wilful wrong that is committed. Such a person remains liable much more for the consequences, at least for the natural consequences of his wilful wrong. The facts that false allegations were made to the effect that the defendant himself was the owner of the paddy, having grown the same and that upon the basis of such false allegations proceedings under s. 107 were sought to be instituted and that the plaintiff was kept out of possession of the paddy which really belonged to him, the paddy being taken by the Police and made over to a third person for safe custody—these facts taken together establish a case of wilful wrong as against the defendant; and unless he is able to show that there are circumstances which would justify the Court in passing the order which would have the effect of enabling him to escape from the responsibility for the natural consequences of his act, I think the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages from him. That an action of this description based on grounds such as appear in the present case is maintainable is apparent from the cases of Mudvirapa Kulkarni v. Fakirapa Kenardi (3) and Goma Mahad Patil v. Gokaldas Khimji (4) and other cases which need not be specifically mentioned. I am accordingly of opinion that there is no reason to interfere with the decree that has been passed in this case and that, therefore, the Rule should be discharged.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2016 OF 1926.

November 17, 1927.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tek Chand.

It is settled law that one co-owner of a party wall is not entitled to raise its height without the consent or acquiescence of the others and if he does so he makes himself liable to an action for injunction or damages: [p. 482, col. 1.]

Cubitt v. Porter (1), Watson v. Gray (2), Ikrām Ullah Khan v. Muhammad Yunis Ali Khan (3) and Shivputrappa Parappa v. Shivrudrappa Kalappa Huli (4), followed.

If a co-owner of a party wall stands by and suffers the building to proceed to a considerable extent, his acquiescence in the erection will be implied therefrom. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 23rd May, 1926, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Ambala, dated the 12th February, 1926.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The parties to this case are neighbours who own houses in the Ambala Cantonment which adjoin each other. The defendant raised the height of the intervening wall by 7 feet and in the portion so built he kept a niche and an almirah. The plaintiff instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen for demolition of this portion of the wall and for closing the niche and the almirah. In the plaint the plaintiff based his title on the sole ground that the wall was his exclusive property with which the defendant had no right to interfere. The defendant denied the plaintiff's exclusive ownership of the wall and alleged that it belonged to both the parties jointly. He further pleaded that he had raised the wall with the permission of the plaintiff. In para. 7 of the jawab dawa he also urged that the plaintiff had stood by when the construction was going on and having acquiesced in the act of the defendant, he was not entitled to the injunction asked for.

The first Court raised two issues as follows:—

1. Is the wall in suit owned exclusively by the plaintiff.

2. If issue No. 1 be found in plaintiff's favour was the wall raised with the plaintiff's permission?

It will be seen that these issues did not cover the determination of the respective rights of the parties on the basis that the wall was a jointly owned party wall. The Subordinate Judge found the first issue against the plaintiff, holding that he had failed to prove that the wall was his exclusive property. On this finding he held that the second issue did not arise and accordingly he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge again basing his claim solely on his exclusive ownership. The learned District Judge did not, however, think it necessary to record any finding on the plaintiff's exclusive title, as he was of opinion that even if the wall was jointly owned by the parties it was necessary for the defendant to obtain the permission of his co-owner, the plaintiff, before he could raise the wall. The learned District Judge also found that the defendant had failed to prove that any express permission had been taken by him from the plaintiff before constructing the wall. He did not go into the question of acquiescence but in his finding on the legal point, he accepted the appeal and decreed the plaintiff's suit in full.

The defendant has, however, preferred a second appeal to this Court and the first point raised on his behalf by Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney is that the plaintiff claimed the injunction on the sole ground that he was the exclusive owner of the wall, that he produced no evidence in support of his contention and, therefore, his suit should have been dismissed. He contends that the learned District Judge should not have set up a new case for the plaintiff and decreed the suit on the basis of the wall being a jointly owned party wall. Mr. Shamair Chand for the respondent urged in reply that no new case had been set up as the defendant himself had admitted in his jawab dawa that the wall was owned by both parties and that if the case is to be decided on the allegations in the plaint, it should be sent back to the District Judge for a finding on issue No. 1. He, however, concedes that the plaintiff led no evidence to prove his exclusive ownership of the wall except that he produced the defendant as a witness who deposed that the wall was joint. There is no other evidence on the record, even the plaintiff himself did not go into the witness-box and states on oath that the wall belonged to him alone. In these circumstances, I do not think it necessary to remand the case for this purpose and hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove issue No. 1.

I agree, however, with Mr. Shamair Chand that this finding is not sufficient toarrant this dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. As already stated, the defendant, in his jawab dawa, did not allege that he was the exclusive owner of the wall. On the other hand, he stated that the wall was jointly owned by both the parties. It was, therefore, necessary to determine the rights of the parties on the basis that the wall was a party wall owned by both. The issues framed by the Subordinate Judge did not cover this point and the learned District Judge was not, in my opinion, justified in decreeing the plaintiff's suit without examining the case in all its aspects. It is settled law that one co-owner of a party wall is not entitled to raise its height without the consent or acquiescence of the others and, if he does so, he makes himself liable to an action for injunction or damages. This was clearly laid down so far back as 1828 in Cubitt v. Porter (1) and again in the well-known case of Watson v. Gray (2), which is considered to be the leading authority on the subject. In India the same view has been taken in Ikram Ullah Khan v. Muhammad Yunis Ali Khan (3), and recently by the Bombay High Court in Shivputrappa Parappa v. Shivrud-rappa Kalappa Huli (4).

The defendant alleged that he had taken the permission of the plaintiff before building the wall and led oral evidence in support of this contention. This evidence, was however, disbelieved by the learned District Judge who held that no express consent was proved to have been given. This is a finding of fact which I cannot disturb in second appeal. It must, therefore, be taken that the defendant built the wall without the express permission of the plaintiff.

But the question of acquiescence still remains and as I have pointed out in an earlier part of the judgment this point was raised by the defendant in para. 7 of the jawab dawa. But no issue was framed on it nor were the minds of the parties or of the Judges of either of the Courts below applied towards it and there are no materials on the record from which I could come to a definite finding upon it. In fact, the learned Counsel for both the parties are not agreed even as to the period that elapsed between the construction of the wall and the institution of the suit. The allegation in the plaint that the wall was built on the 20th of May, 1925, about a fortnight before the suit was brought, was denied in the jawab dawa and no evidence was led on this point. Mr. Shamair Chand has not controverted the position that if a co-owner of a party wall stands by and suffers the building to proceed to a considerable extent, his acquiescence in the erection will be implied therefrom, and, if this be so, it is in each case a matter for consideration whether a mandatory injunction for the demolition of the structure should be granted. It is, therefore, necessary to have these matters enquired into.

Accordingly under O. XLI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, I remand the following issues to the trial Court:

(a) "Did the plaintiff acquiesce in the construction of the wall of the defendant?"

(b) "Has he by his act or conduct otherwise disentitled himself from claiming the mandatory injunction asked for?"

Parties will be allowed to lead fresh evidence on this issue and the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge will record their findings on it. The report must be submitted to this Court within three months.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—One Ghulam Rasul, an Araïn of Onak No. 376 G. B. died five or six years ago leaving a widow Musammât Fatima and half a dozen children by her of whom the eldest was Fazal. She is said to have contracted an intimacy with one Ghulam Muhammad, another Araïn of the same Chak, who, some time in September, 1926, went through the ceremony of marriage with her and took her to live with him in his own house. This Ghulam Muhammad was already possessed of a wife named Musammât Jano who had borne him six children, the eldest son being one Farzand Ali, aged about 25 years and married to his cousin, the daughter of Nizam Din, a brother of Ghulam Muhammad. When the marriage ceremony was performed in September, 1926, both sides made report to the Police. On the 9th of December, 1926, Ghulam Muhammad made a report at Toba Tek Singh Police Station saying that his wife had left him with somebody else. Two days later Fazal, the son of Musammât Fatima, petitioned the Superintendent of Police, Lyallpur, saying that his mother had disappeared and that he suspected foul play. The Sub-Inspector went to the spot but was unable to obtain any information, either of any crime having been committed or of the whereabouts of the woman. He left the village on the 18th of December, 1926, leaving Aman Ullah Head Constable, to carry on the investigation. On the 20th of December, 1926, Farzand Ali and two uncles of his, namely, Nabi Bakhsh and Nizam Din, are said to have made statements which resulted in the recovery of the corpse of the woman and later of certain jewellery. The statement, as set out by P. W. No. 16 Aman Ullah Head Constable, showed that it was Farzand Ali who first disclosed the whereabouts of the corpse to him and that his two uncles merely repeated what he had said. Later Farzand Ali is stated to have told Aman Ullah that Nabi Bakhsh was aware of the whereabouts of the jewellery and Nabi Bakhsh, when questioned, took the Police and others to his sugarcane field and from it dug out certain ornaments. Two other persons appeared, Shera (P. W. No. 3) and Ghulam Din (P. W. No. 4) who said to the Police that they had witnessed certain events. The result of the enquiry was that Nizam Din, Nabi Bakhsh and their nephew Farzand Ali were tried for the murder of Musammât Fatima. Farzand Ali was found guilty by the assessors and the learned Sessions Judge of an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to death. Nabi Bakhsh was found guilty of an offence under s. 201 and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment, while Nizam Din was acquitted.

Against their convictions Farzand Ali and Nabi Bakhsh have preferred this appeal, while the case is also before us under s. 374 of the Criminal Procedure Code for orders as to the confirmation or otherwise of the death sentence.

So far as the case against Nabi Bakhsh is concerned, it seems to me that there can be no doubt as to his having been rightly convicted. There is evidence on the record showing that he in the presence of reliable witnesses, as for instance P. W. No. 5 Faiz Muhammad and P. W. No. 8 Nabi Bakhsh, took Aman Ullah and others to a sugarcane field and from it dug out certain ornaments which, in my opinion, have been sufficiently identified as having belonged to the deceased Musammât Fatima. His appeal I would, therefore, dismiss.

The case against Farzand Ali is on a somewhat different footing. There is evidence, which has been relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge as well as the assessors, to the effect that there was ample motive for his having taken part in the killing of Musammât Fatima. He was, it is said, incensed at her, having married his father as it was feared that she would bear Ghulam Muhammad children and thus reduce the inheritance that Farzand Ali had at that time a right to expect. It is unnecessary to elaborate this question of motive or discuss the evidence relating to it, as it has been sufficiently dealt with in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge. Suffice it to say that, in my opinion, motive undoubtedly existed and the suggestion that possibly or even probably the deceased's own son Fazal killed his mother is, in my opinion, too fanciful to bear further consideration.

The next piece of evidence against the appellant Farzand Ali is the production by him of the corpse. In regard to this point Sir Muhammad Shafi strenuously urged that there was evidence to show that the jhal from which the corpse was ultimately discovered had been searched without avail two or three days before. That is true, but the explanation of that is to be found in the fact that when this jhal was first examined the canal was flowing and the water in the jhal was very deep. I see no reason whatever to doubt the testimony of Aman Ullah Head Constable when he says that a careful search of this jhal was made on the 20th of December, after Farzand Ali had told him that he had thrown the corpse of Musammât Fatima into it. The corpse was found in a trangar, the hands tied with hemp, a rope passed under its legs and tied behind its neck and the whole bundle was weighted by bricks which Farzand Ali had said had been obtained from a certain culvert, an examination of which showed that bricks had been removed therefrom. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I see no reason to differ from the conclusions arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors that the body was discovered as a result of information given to the Police by the appellant Farzand Ali.

There is, however, no other evidence connecting him with the actual murder of the woman and his conviction, therefore, rests entirely on circumstantial evidence. Now, however, suspicious the circumstances may be, suspicion alone cannot be regarded as sufficient for a conviction. It has been urged by the learned Counsel for the Crown that, inasmuch as there was motive for the commission of murder and inasmuch as there can be no doubt that the appellant produced the corpse, the facts as related, by him, showed such an intimate knowledge of the occurrence as rendered it practically certain that he took part in the actual murder. Emphasis was laid on the fact that the deceased was living in the same house as the appellant and further that a panchayat had been held at which the appellant had confessed to the murder itself. Now, the confession has been ruled out by the learned Sessions Judge and the evidence in regard to it has only to be read when it will be seen that the learned Sessions Judge was quite right in the view taken by him of it. The exact words in all confessions of this nature are always very difficult to establish, and in the present case when one of the lambardars Ilahi Bakhsh states that after the panchayat had been held and after the confessions had been made by Farzand Ali and his companions he and his brother lambardar sent in a report to the Police in which no reference whatever is made to the confession, and in fact in which it is not even stated that any murder had been committed, renders it impossible to place any reliance on the so-called confessions. The other facts mentioned above by the learned Counsel for the Crown merely increase the suspicion that rests on the appellant but do not to my mind establish his guilt beyond doubt. Reference has been made to Rannu v. Emperor (1), in which it was laid down that, where the only evidence against a person accused of murder consisted of evidence of motive and his production of the corpse from his field, that evidence would not ordinarily warrant a conviction under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code. To the same effect is an unreported case to be found in Basant Singh v. Emperor (2), although the circumstances in the latter case were slightly different. In my judgment, having regard to the fact that the only evidence against Farzand Ali is that he had a motive and that he produced the corpse, it would be unsafe to uphold the conviction in this case. He has, however, undoubtedly committed an offence under s. 201 of the Indian Penal Code, and I would, therefore, accept this appeal and setting aside his conviction and sentence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code, convict him of an offence under s. 201 of the said Code and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for a period of seven years including three months' solitary confinement.

RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 139-A—Bona fide dispute as to public right—Jurisdiction of Criminal Court—Duty of Court—'Reliable evidence,' meaning of.

The existence of a bona fide dispute about the right of the public to pass over a certain path does not oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to proceed under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 486, col. 1.]

Abdul Wahid Khan v. Abdullah Khan (3) and Ram Sagar Mondal v. Alek Naskar (6), referred to.

Under s. 139-A, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate, in an enquiry under s. 133 of the same Code, has to find if there is any reliable evidence in support of the denial of the party alleged to cause obstruction. By reliable evidence is not meant that the Magistrate should weigh the evidence produced by both sides and then come to the conclusion which he believes or which he prefers, but the Magistrate should take the evidence as it stands and see whether, on the face of it, if there was no evidence to the contrary, he should come to the conclusion that the evidence was false and was, therefore, unreliable. [p. 486, col. 2.]

Thakur Sao v. Abdul Aziz (5), followed.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha.

Facts appear from the following report of the Sessions Judge.

REPORT.—"Malik Kanshi Ram on the 13th February, 1925, complained under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, that he and the accused (six persons) were the joint owner of the vacant sites as shown at Nos. 6 and 13 on the plan filed by him, that the accused have put walls on the boundaries of the plot No. 6 which have obstructed the public ways marked Nos. 2 and 7 going from Pipliwala well and Baghwala well to the abadi, that this obstruction should be removed under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, and the walls should be demolished.

The accused denied the existence of any public right in respect of the way through plot No. 6.

The complainant produced 11 witnesses, and the accused produced 4 witnesses in support of their respective positions. The accused further pleaded that the so-called way was never recorded in any Revenue Record.

The Magistrate came to the conclusion that the evidence produced by the accused, was not reliable.

The accused, on conviction by Chaudhri Pir Mohammed exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the Shahpur District were directed by order, dated the 15th of April, 1926 under s. 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code to demolish the walls erected by them.

The principles laid down as applicable to such cases in a number of rulings, e.g., Phalla v. Niaz Ahmad (1), Bhagwan Das v. Emperor (2), Abdul Wahid Khan v. Abdullah Khan (3) and Debendra Nath Chowdhury v. Chairman Local Board, Asansol (4), are that the provisions of s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, are not intended to be applicable to a case where there is a bona fide dispute as to the existence of a public way; that such a dispute should be left to be determined by a Civil Court; that these summary powers were primarily intended to be exercised in cases where there was no question that the way was one vested in the public, and when that question is seriously disputed and its decision becomes a difficult matter of mixed fact and law, the Magistrate clearly had jurisdiction to exercise his discretion by declining to decide it and sending the parties to the Civil Court; that private property cannot be converted into public merely because it looks as though it ought to be, and because to do so would be convenient to a section of the public who have enjoyed permissible user over it.

All these principles have been overlooked by the learned Magistrate. He has inspected the spot, but it is admitted that the alleged public way passes through the admittedly private property of the parties. It is also clear from the Revenue Records that the Revenue Authorities never recognised this pag-dandi (a foot path) to be a regular thoroughfare and never recorded it as such during any Settlement. The fact that people pass through the property of the accused, which was lying as a waste land, as a short-cut, does not necessarily establish the right of the public to its user. A difficult matter of mixed facts and law was involved in this case which ought to have been referred to a Civil Court.

In a recent case Thakur Sao v. Abdul Aziz (5), it was held that all that the Magistrate has to find out, is whether the denial by the respondent, is bona fide or a mere pretence. He can proceed to make his order absolute only when he is satisfied that the denial is a mere pretence. If he finds that the denial is bona fide, his jurisdiction is ousted and he has no authority to enquire further. The Magistrate is not entitled to demand that the evidence shall be sufficient to satisfy him that no public right exists. The only condition is that upon the material before him, the Magistrate must have no reason to think the evidence false. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to weigh the evidence and to determine on which side the balance leans. In the case under reference the Magistrate has clearly discussed the evidence of both sides and tried to weigh it. There is clear room for difference of opinion. It cannot possibly be said that the denial by the respondents was a mere pretence and if the denial is held to be bona fide, that was enough to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate.

In view of the authorities quoted, it is recommended, therefore, that the order of the Magistrate making the conditional order given to remove the obstruction from the way absolute may be set aside and the complainant referred to the Civil Court."

Mr. Ram Lal Anand, for the Petitioners.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This case has been referred by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that the learned Magistrate in proceedings under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not entitled to proceed under that section and the following sections where there is a bona fide dispute about the right of the public to pass over a certain path. This I do not consider is the law, see Abdul Wahid Khan v. Abdullah Khan (3) and Ram Sagar Mondal v. Alek Naskar (6), in which the matter has been discussed at great length. These rulings are under the old law and even under that law the latest pronouncements of the Courts are in favour of the view that the Magistrate has jurisdiction. Section 139-A, which has been recently enacted now lays down that the Magistrate in such an enquiry has to find if there is any reliable evidence in support of the denial of the party alleged to cause the obstruction. As to what the learned Magistrate has to do to determine that question, the only authority which I have been able to find is Thakur Sao v. Abdul Aziz (5). It is there pointed out that reliable evidence is evidence of reliable persons. I take it that what is really meant is not that the Magistrate should weigh the evidence produced by both sides and then come to the conclusion which he believes or which he prefers, but the Magistrate should take the evidence as it stands and see whether on the face of it, if there was no evidence to the contrary, he could come to the conclusion that the evidence was false and was, therefore, unreliable. I have read the evidence given in this case and I do not see that on the face of it this evidence is unreliable or of unreliable persons. The order of the Magistrate shows clearly that he proceeded to weigh the evidence and to inspect the spot and then came to the conclusion that the evidence given by the petitioners was unreliable. This, in my opinion, was a wrong exercise of the powers given under s. 139-A. Although a Magistrate has jurisdiction to decide whether the evidence is reliable or not, in this particular case the Magistrate has failed to notice how he had to arrive at that finding. I, therefore, accept the reference and set aside the order of the learned Magistrate making the conditional order to remove the obstruction absolute.

ORDER.—In this case a preliminary decree was passed on a mortgage which is under appeal in this Court. The appellant-mortgagor has applied for stay of further proceedings, that is, for stay of a final decree until his appeal is disposed of. The position as to what would be the result of the passing of a final decree is not clear in this Court; see Ramditta v. Maru (1) and Ganda Ram v. Sundar Lal (2). Personally I am inclined to hold that once a preliminary decree has been appealed against especially when the appeal has been launched before a final decree is passed then the presence of a final decree does not make the appeal from the preliminary decree unmaintainable even if the final decree is not appealed from. The position, however, is not absolutely clear, Chandulal Maganlal v. Motilal Harilal (3). However, whatever the position may be on the point discussed above, in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishan Jiwan Lal (4) a Full Bench ruling, it was held that the Legislature did not contemplate more than one final decree, and where a preliminary decree had been appealed against the right to have the final decree ceased or remained in suspense until the preliminary appeal was decided. —PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Custom—Ancestral land—Ancestor not owning but simply possessing land—Land, whether ancestral—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 41—Second appeal—Finding of fact when not binding.

To establish the ancestral nature of land it is necessary to prove that the ancestor owned it; mere proof of possession by such ancestor in any capacity is not enough.

Sewa Singh v. Bholi (1), Lal v. Gauhr (2) and Harji v. Chanan Mal (3), referred to.

A finding of fact based on no evidence is not binding in second appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th May, 1923, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Rohtak, dated the 27th February, 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Amar Nath Chona, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by one Tek Chand, a minor, suing through a next friend for possession of 84 bighas 1 biswa and 5 biswasis kham of land alleged to have been sold by the plaintiff's father Mukh Ram about two years before the suit. Hira, the defendant-vendee, pleaded that the property sold to him was the self-acquired property of the vendor Mukh Ram, in any event, the sale had been for full consideration and necessity. The trial Court held that no consideration had passed and that the land sold was ancestral, having been owned by one Rusan, the common ancestor of the vendor and his son.

Hira, appealed to the District Judge who while agreeing with the trial Court that no consideration had been proved, was not apparently prepared to endorse the finding that Rusan, the original ancestor, had ever owned the land in suit. What he does find is that the ancestors of the plaintiff amongst other persons were originally tenants of certain land in this village and inasmuch as Mukh Ram vendor had succeeded to some of the land sold by him as the collateral of its original owner Khubi, it should be regarded as ancestral because the original ancestor Rusan occupied the whole of the land in dispute not as owner but in some other capacity.

Now, there is no evidence whatever on the record to show that Rusan ever occupied any part of the land in suit. This, Mr. Amar Nath Chona, for the respondent-plaintiff, has been constrained to admit. He endeavoured to drag in an intermediate ancestor named Suggan but had to admit that there was no evidence to show that even Suggan was in possession in any capacity, of the land in suit. The finding, therefore, that Rusan occupied the land in dispute is one that is based on no evidence and by which we are, therefore, not bound. Next, it was held by the District Judge that it was not necessary to prove that the ancestor owned the land, mere possession in any capacity being sufficient. To this contention, I am not prepared to accede. It is diametrically opposed to a series of cases such as Sewa Singh v. Bholi (1), Lal v. Gauhr (2) and Harji v. Chanan Mal (3). Admittedly land held by Bhoru, father of Mukh Ram, is ancestral.

I would, therefore, accept this appeal and grant the plaintiff respondent a decree for possession free of all encumbrances of such land as his father Mukh Ram had inherited from his father Bhoru which according to the grounds of appeal, comes to 17 bighas 4 biswas. The suit qua the remainder of the land must be dismissed. The plaint shows a total area of 84 bighas kham whereas the land inherited by Mukh Ram from Bhoru is 17 bighas 4 biswas pacca. This should be made clear in the decree. As the decree granted to the plaintiff comes to about half of the land sold I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Jai Lal, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 101, O. XXI, r. 90, O. XLIII, r. 1 (j)—Order dismissing application to set aside sale on ground of irregularity—Appeal—Second appeal.

An order under O. XXI, r. 90 refusing to set aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting it is appealable under O. XLIII, r. 1 (j) and not under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, and is, therefore, not open to second appeal.

of July, 1924. More than a year after, i. e., on the 28th of November, 1925, one of the judgment-debtors, Sube Shah, applied under O. XXI, r. 90; Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale set aside pointing out several irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale. About a year later, i. e., on the 16th of November, 1926, Bhagela Shah also joined in the application pointing out further irregularities in conducting the sale. The application was dismissed by the Executing Court and a miscellaneous appeal was preferred to the Senior Subordinate Judge who dismissed it affirming the order of the lower Court. The judgment-debtors have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

I am of opinion that this second appeal is incompetent. The memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court against the order dismissing the judgment-debtor's application under O. XXI, r. 90, was described as having been filed under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, but in reality the appeal was under O. XLIII, r. 1 (j) as that is the only section under which an appeal could lie. Section 104 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that orders passed on appeal under O. XLIII, are final and no second appeal lies therefrom. Reference may also be made to Sheo Prasad Singh v. Premma Kuar (1) and Mahadeo Singh v. Dhobi Singh (2).

Even if it be assumed that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was correctly filed under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, no second appeal lies to this Court as the execution proceedings in which the application was filed related to a decree which had been passed on a suit of small cause nature valued at Rs. 317. Under the Punjab Courts Act no second appeal lies to this Court against a decree passed on appeal in such a suit. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mr. Shah Nawaz has asked me to interfere in revision urging that the lower Courts had erred in holding that the application under O. XXI, r. 90 was barred by time and that the rule was vitiated by many irregularities. Even if these contentions are correct I am not prepared to interfere on the revision side as the lower Courts have not acted without jurisdiction or with any material irregularity resulting in injustice to the judgment-debtor.

Custom—Alienation—Female heir—Right of alienation—Succession—Daughters exclude collaterals—Special custom excluding daughters—Burden of proof.

Under the general Customary Law of the Punjab collaterals in the sixth degree of the deceased male holder are not entitled to inherit his estate in preference to his daughters especially when the estate has not been proved to be ancestral. The onus of proving a special custom in favour of their right of succession to the exclusion of daughters rests on the collaterals. [p. 490, col. 1.]

The rule of Customary Law is firmly established that a female inheriting landed estate from a male holds the property on life-tenure and it is immaterial whether the female is a widow, a daughter or a mother. [ibid.]

Abul Hassan v. Habib Ullah (1), followed.

A female is not competent to alienate property inherited by her except for necessity and the reversionary heirs of the last male holder are entitled to contest an alienation made by her even if the property is not proved to be ancestral. [p. 490, cols. 1 & 2.]

Messrs. Des Raj Sawhney and Din Dayal Kapur, for the Appellants.

Chandhri Zafrulla Khan, Messrs. Bashir Ahmad and Khurshid Zaman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 19th March, 1918, one Musammat Umar Bibi, acting on behalf of her two minor daughters, mortgaged the land in dispute to the defendants Umar Din and Muhammad Din for Rs. 755. The estate originally belonged to Musammat Umar Bibi's deceased husband Sadar Din, a Jat of Kotli Maharan in the Gujranwala District, and on the latter's death it was inherited by his widow. The widow subsequently contracted a marriage with one Jalal, and consequently forfeited her life-estate; with the result that the property was mutated in favour of the two daughters of Sadar Din.

The plaintiffs, who claim to be the collaterals of Sadar Din, have brought the present action for the declaration that they are entitled to inherit the land as soon as the daughters get married or attain majority, and that the alienation shall not prejudicially affect their right of succession to the estate. Now, the trial Judge holds, after examining the evidence on the record, and we have no hesitation in endorsing his conclusion that the plaintiffs are collaterals of Sadar Din, in the sixth degree and not in the fifth degree as claimed by them. We do not, however, agree with the learned Judge that the property in question has been proved to be ancestral qua the plaintiffs. It is beyond dispute that it was their duty to satisfy the Court that the property descended from the common ancestor Ghariba, and the mere fact that the Revenue Records are silent on the question of the acquisition of the land by any of the descendants of Ghariba does not justify the conclusion that it belonged to him. A mere conjecture, however, plausible, cannot be a substitute for proof, and the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs is unable to invite our attention to any evidence which would show that the property descended from the common ancestor.

Nor do we think that the plaintiffs, who are related to the last male holder in the sixth degree, are entitled to inherit the estate in preference to his daughters, more especially when it is not proved to be ancestral. The onus rested upon them to establish a custom in favour of their right of succession to the exclusion of the daughters, and this onus they have wholly failed to discharge.

The trial Judge is, however, wrong in dismissing the suit merely on the ground that the daughters have got a preferential right of succession. The rule of the Customary Law is firmly established that a female inheriting landed estate from a male holds the property on life-tenure, and it is immaterial whether the female is a widow, a daughter or a mother, vide, inter alia, Abul Hassan v. Habib Ullah (1). A female is not competent to alienate the property except for necessity, and the rever-sionary heirs of the last male holder are entitled to contest the alienation, even if the property is not proved to be ancestral.

It is, therefore, clear that the alienation cannot adversely affect the plaintiffs when the succession opens out to them, unless the mortgagees prove not only consideration but also necessity for the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, wrong in dismissing the suit without determining the question of the consideration and necessity for the alienation.

We accordingly accept the appeal and remit the case to the trial Judge for re-decision with reference to the foregoing remarks. The costs in this Court shall abide the event.

Mr. Mool Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—On the 8th of August, 1921, one Nathu Mal made a payment of Rs. 624 1-6 to his brother Hira Nand who was his creditor. On the 12th of August, 1921, Nathu Mal became an insolvent. According to the learned District Judge he closed his business on the very day the payment was made to his brother. A year later the Official Receiver moved the Insolvency Court under s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to annul the payment on the ground that it had been fraudulently made to show preference to a relative creditor. After due enquiry the Insolvency Court came to the conclusion that Nathu Mal had been guilty of fraudulent preference in this connection and annulled the payment.

Thereupon Hira Nand preferred an appeal to the District Court. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the payment to Hira Nand, on the very day when the business came to an end, was obviously made with the intention to show preference to Hira Nand at the eleventh hour only a few days before the creditors applied for adjudication and Hira Nand's appeal was dismissed. He has now come up to this Court in second appeal, and at the hearing Mr. Mool Chand for the Official Receiver raised two preliminary objections. First, he urged that no appeal was competent, and secondly, that the question decided by the Courts below was one of fact.

I do not think it is necessary to go into the question as to whether the appeal was competent or not, as, in my opinion, the appeal must be dismissed on the second objection.

The decision as to whether fraudulent preference had been shown or not rested on what the intention of Nathu Mal was. It has been repeatedly held that in such cases intention is purely a question of fact, see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume II, page 287, where it is pointed out that "the question whether a transaction is a fraudulent preference—whether the debtor had the intention to defeat the law and to prevent the due distribution of his assets—is one of fact for the Court or Jury, if there is one, who must judge not from one fact, however important, but from all the circumstances of the case." Again in Har Parshad v. Bhagat Singh (1), a Division Bench of this Court held "that the question as to whether a person made a transfer of his property with intent to defeat or delay his creditors is not one of law but merely of fact." Whether the appeal is competent or not, therefore, it must fail, and I would therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The first point to be decided is whether this appeal has been correctly stamped with Rs. 4 as a miscellaneous appeal. Counsel for the respondent contends that the application being one under s. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure for restitution in consequence of the judgment of this Court having varied the judgment of the District Judge, which had actually been executed at the time, the stamp should be ad valorem and he relies upon *Jiwa Ram v. The learned District Judge has followed that view and after considering all the authorities I find that I cannot agree with him. Applications under ss. 47 and 144 are classed together when referred to in s. 2 of the Code and are obviously kindred and similar applications though there is the real distinction that when a decree has actually been executed and the property has passed, the application is of the nature of an application to recover possession. It is in consequence of the decree passed by the High Court that the application is made under s. 144 and it is in a sense a mere accident that because the decree has been fully executed, the petitioner is prevented from coming to the Court under s. 47 and is compelled to take action under s. 144, Civil Procedure Code. It would be most inequitable that he should be penalised by being forced to stamp his application ad valorem and adopting the reasoning contained in Hamidalli Kadamalli v. Ahmedalli Mhibuballi (6), I find that the application has been duly stamped and I direct that the amount paid in excess in the District Court be refunded.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 28th of February, 1927.

Mr. Durga Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under the Indian Companies Act of 1913 against an order accepting an objection and relieving the objector of all liability as a share-holder of a Bank. The objector was L. Anup Chand, Advocate of Montgomery, who had made an application for 100 shares of the Indian Merchants Bank, Ltd., but the Bank went into liquidation before any shares had been allotted to him. He asserted that he was given, by the Managing Agent of the Bank, an assurance that a branch of the Bank would be opened at Montgomery or Pak Pattan and that he would be appointed a Director thereof if he would buy 100 shares and that he made his application for 100 shares on that assurance. He claimed that he did not become a share-holder because the condition subject to which the application for shares was made was not fulfilled. He was corroborated on this point by the Managing Agent and two witnesses before whom the agreement had been made. No attempt was made to rebut that evidence. The law is clear that if an application for shares is subject to a condition precedent the applicant incurs no liability if the conditions remains unfulfilled. In this connection the following may be cited from Piara Singh v. Peshawar Bank, Ltd. (1):—

admit the correctness of the proposition of law, and there is ample authority in English Law in support of it, that if the condition is precedent and has not been performed and its performance has not been waived the applicant for shares will not be a contributory." The finding in this case that there was a condition precedent is based on good evidence and cannot be interfered with.

The argument that no oral evidence was admissible in proof of the alleged condition because it was stated that it had been reduced to writing and the writing was not called for nor produced, is also untenable. The writing was in the possession of the adverse party and from the nature of the case that party must have known that it will be required to produce it. As the said party denied the very existence of the condition it could not be expected that it would have produced the writing if called upon to do so.

The appeal fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Mr. J. L. Kapur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law involved in this second appeal is one of limitation.

The parties having jointly acquired a site from Government for the purpose of building a shop, entered into a contract between themselves by which the plaintiff undertook to build a shop on the site and the defendant agreed to pay him one-third of the cost of construction thereof. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant had paid him Rs. 400 but refused to pay the balance of the one-third of the cost. On this alleged unpaid balance he claimed interest at 1 per cent. per mensem. The defendant pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by time and that no interest was payable. The Courts below overruled both these pleas.

As regards the plea of limitation they have held that the rule of limitation applicable to the suit was the one embodied in Art. 61 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. Under that Article the period of limitation is three years but it is enhanced to six years by the Punjab Limitation Act. It is clear that the plaintiff made no attempt to establish that his suit was within time even if the period of limitation were three years. It is further clear that if the suit should not fall within the purview of Art. 61 the only other Article that applied was Art. 115. Now Art. 61 applies where "money is payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant". In the present case it cannot be said that the plaintiff had paid any money to any person on behalf of or for the defendant. As it was the plaintiff who constructed the building he and nobody else was primarily liable to pay for the labour and materials used. The masons, etc., and the persons who supplied the materials could hold the plaintiff responsible for payment and there being no contract between them and the defendant the latter incurred no liability to them. So he was not liable to pay any money to them which the plaintiff might have paid them for him. Article 61 was, therefore, not applicable at all. As held in Mahomed Ghasita v. Siraj-uddin (1) the Article that applied was Art. 115. As decided in that case: "Article 115 is a general provision applying to all actions ex contractu not specially provided for otherwise. The word 'compensation' in that Article as well as in Art. 116 has the same meaning as it has in s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act, and denotes a sum of money payable to a person on account of loss or damage caused to him by the breach of a contract."

The defendant was guilty of the breach of the alleged contract, inasmuch as he refused to pay what he had agreed to do and thus caused loss to the plaintiff who had laid out money on the strength of the defendant's promise to re-imburse him. The suit was barred by limitation as it was not instituted within three years from the date of breach. I, therefore, accept the appeal and reversing the judgment of the Courts below dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

The auction-purchaser is not a necessary party to an application for setting aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, although under O. XXI, r. 92 of the Code no final order affecting the auction-purchaser can be passed unless notice of the application to set aside the sale is given to him. The proviso to the said rule does not fix any period for giving such notice to the auction-purchaser and there is no period of limitation for issuing such notice.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor under O. XLIII, r. 1 (j) of the Civil Procedure Code against an order refusing to set aside a sale. The refusal was based on two grounds, viz., (1) that the judgment-debtor's application was not entertainable as he had failed to implead the auction-purchaser as a respondent, and (2) that he had failed to produce any evidence in proof of his objections. Both these grounds are untenable.

With regard to (1), the executing Court has relied on Ajuddin Ahamed v. Khoda Bux Khondkar (1) which was followed by a Judge of the Patna High Court in Sumirta Kuer v. Damri Lal (2). In the former case a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that "under the present Code of Civil Procedure, the auction-purchaser is a necessary party to a proceeding for setting aside an auction-sale and that, therefore, a Court has no jurisdiction to hear an application for setting aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, to which one of the auction-purchasers is not added as a party until after the expiry of the period fixed by law for making him a party." This view was expressly dissented from in Bibi Zainab v. Paras Nath (3), and a contrary view was taken in Ganesh Bab Naik v. Vithal Vaman Mahalya (4), Raj Chandra Das v. Kali Kanta Das (5), Abdur Rahman v. Har Narayan Das (6), Ghazanfar Husain v. Ram Ratan (7) and Iswardas Marwari v. Biseswar Lal Marwari (8).

Now, the law which requires that the auction-purchaser should be heard before passing an order affecting him is contained in the proviso to cl. (2), r. 92 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code. That proviso runs thus:

"Provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby."

It is clear that the requirements of the above proviso are fulfilled if no final order affecting the auction-purchaser is passed unless notice of the application to set aside the sale is given to him. This proviso does not fix any period for giving that notice to the auction-purchaser, and there is no provision in the Indian Limitation Act for such notice. As no order affecting the auction-purchaser had yet been made the application could not have been thrown out on the ground No (1).

As regards the second ground, the date fixed for evidence was the 22nd November, 1926. On that date eight out of the fifteen witnesses summoned by the judgment-debtor were in attendance but they were not examined and the case was adjourned to the following day for hearing arguments on the petition filed by the auction-purchaser. No witnesses, however, appeared the next day, but even if the judgment-debtor was responsible for their non-appearance on that date, he was entitled to have his remaining witnesses summoned and examined. It cannot be said that he failed to produce any evidence.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the executing Court confirming the sale and direct that the judgment-debtor's application be enquired into and disposed of according to law. The respondents to pay the judgment-debtor's costs in this Court.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 19 (f), 20—Concealment of arms—Question of fact—Sentence—Mere suspicion of Police that accused was about to commit dacoity, whether can be taken into consideration.

In every case it is a question of fact whether the person found in possession of a concealed weapon is carrying the weapon in such a way as to indicate an intention to hide the article from the classes of persons referred to in s. 20 of the Arms Act. [p. 496, col. 1.]

The fact that a person is concealing a weapon in his loin cloth while he is on a Railway platform indicates an intention to conceal that weapon from, inter alia, Railway officials within the meaning of s. 20, Arms Act. [ibid.]

Section 20 of the Arms Act is not confined to cases where the import or export of arms is attempted. [ibid.]

Chet Singh v. Emperor (1), referred to.

In the absence of any aggravating circumstance a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment for an offence under s. 20, Arms Act, is too severe. [p. 496, col. 2.]

The mere fact that there was a suspicion in the mind of the Police that the accused was about to take part in a dacoity is not a circumstance which a Court can take into consideration in arriving at an appropriate punishment for the actual offence which has been proved. [ibid.]

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate First Class, Kasur, exercising enhanced powers under s. 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 26th June, 1927.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted under the provisions of s. 20 of the Indian Arms Act of having in his possession a chhavi in such a manner as to indicate an intention that its possession may not be known to any public servant as defined in the Indian Penal Code or to any person employed upon a Railway or to the servant of a public carrier. I have not the slightest doubt that so far as the possession of the chhavi is concerned the Crown has abundantly established its case. The appellant was caught on the platform of the Railway Station with a chhavi blade concealed in his loin cloth. The only question is whether the circumstances of the case constitute an offence under s. 19 or under s. 20 of the Indian Arms Act.

Section 19 (f) makes it an offence to possess such a weapon and s. 20 makes it an offence to possess such a weapon in such a manner as to indicate an intention to conceal the possession of the weapon from, inter alia, Railway Officials. There is no doubt that carrying a chhavi concealed in a loin cloth indicates an intention to prevent the fact that the chhavi is in the possession of the accused being known to any one. The question is does the mere fact that a person has been found carrying a chhavi (in a way which is not unusual in this Province) when amongst Railway officials lead to the necessary inference that the concealment is for the purpose of preventing those officials knowing that he is carrying such a weapon. Dr. Nand Lal argues that to take this view would lead to certain anomalies, for instance, if a man were carrying a chhavi in the open country concealed in a loin cloth, that would not be an offence under s. 20 but if he continued his journey and arrived ultimately amongst Railway servants the offence would immediately come under s. 20. This raises questions which do not arise here. In every case it is a question of fact whether the person found in possession of a concealed weapon is carrying the weapon in such a way as to indicate an intention to hide the article from the classes of persons referred to in s. 20. I am only concerned with the facts disclosed by the evidence in the case before me and it seems to me that the fact that a person is concealing a weapon while he is on a Railway platform must indicate an intention to conceal that weapon from, inter alia, Railway officials who are about that platform. I am in complete agreement with the view adopted by Addison, J., in Chet Singh v. Emperor (1) that s. 20 is not confined, as has been held by Scott Smith, J., and Kensington, J., to cases where the import or export of arms is attempted. It seems reasonably clear from ss. 19 and 20 of the Indian Arms Act that the matter is not confined as held by those two learned Judges. In my judgment upon the circumstances of this case as proved the appellant has been rightly convicted under s. 20 of possessing a chhavi in such a manner as to indicate an intention that his possession may not be known to any person employed on a Railway.

The next question which remains to be considered is whether the penalty of five years rigorous imprisonment is not too severe a punishment for the present offence. As Dr. Nand Lal has pointed out the appellant is a youngman of 24. There is no proof that he is a man of bad character, there is no evidence that he was engaged on any criminal undertaking at the time that he was arrested, and the learned trial Judge in imposing a penalty of five years rigorous imprisonment was probably influenced by the fact that there was a suspicion in the mind of the Police that the appellant was about to take part in a dacoity. Suspicion of this nature, however, is not a circumstance which a Court can take into consideration in arriving at an appropriate punishment for the actual offence which has been proved. The punishment for this offence, as far as the reported cases cited to me show, have varied from three months imprisonment to three years for a first offence. I think that in the absence of any aggravating circumstance having been proved the sentence imposed in the present case is far too severe, and I think that an appropriate sentence would be one of two years rigorous imprisonment.

I would accordingly accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the sentence to two years rigorous imprisonment, otherwise the appeal must stand dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—The decision in this appeal depends entirely on the construction of the Will executed by one Pochiraju Ramachandrudu, father of the plaintiff and the 1st defendant. By this Will he devised certain properties to his two daughters, each to get one-half, and certain other properties to his sister's two sons. There is then a clause in the Will as follows:

"My daughters,.....and my sister's sons shall each enjoy.....his or her respective portions of the property divided to them hereditarily and at their pleasure, with right of alienation by gift, sale or otherwise."

This clearly gives an absolute estate to each of the legatees but with respect to the daughters it is followed by a defeasance clause, namely,

"If out of the said two daughters, Machamma and Kannamma, to either there is no issue, her property shall after her death pass to the other to whom there is issue. If to neither of them there is issue, then the property remaining at the time of the death of the said two shall pass to the nephews of the testator."

The first question that arises for decision is whether the phrase "There is issue" means issue living at the time of the daughter's death or merely whether it means that the daughter should have had a child born to her. The contention for the respondent is that it has the latter meaning, and he relies upon a case decided by the Privy Council in Gurusami Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal (1). In that case it was held that the Tamil words which were translated as "have issue" and "have no issue", respectively could not be construed to mean "leave issue" but must be construed in their literal sense. In coming to this conclusion their Lordships observed:

"There is absolutely nothing on the face of the Will to suggest any secondary meaning."

In the present case the Telugu word used is kaligina which I have translated as "there is", a meaning which has been adopted also by the learned Subordinate Judge. The Telugu word used for issue is santanam. The words are capable of meaning both "having issue" and also "leaving issue" and would appear to be represented very well by the English words "is issue." There is, however, an indication in the Will that the words mean "leave issue" for the testator after providing for his two daughters provides definitely for the devolution of the property at their death and it would appear from the whole Will

(1) 18 M. 347; 22 I. A. 119; 5 M. L. J. 106; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 610; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 591 (P. C.).

that it was his intention that his daughters should first enjoy the property and that their children, or else his own nephews should succeed to the property on their death and it should not pass from them to their husbands' families. The word "Santanam" besides meaning child has a certain implication of succession or heirship. For these two reasons I must agree with the interpretation put upon these words by the Subordinate Judge and hold that they mean that the issue must be living at the time of the death of each daughter, respectively. The 1st defendant is the widow who had a child which died; whereas the plaintiff has a son and two daughters living. On the 1st defendant's death, therefore, her property would pass to the plaintiff and it is contended that in the consequence of this the plaintiff is entitled to restrain any alienation by the 1st defendant. In fact the contention for the plaintiff (appellant) is that the defeasance clause cuts down the absolute estate given to the daughters to a mere life-estate. To put this construction upon the Will would be to render the words giving absolute estate of no effect at all; but, if consistently with the intention of the testator, some effect can be given to those words, that interpretation must be adopted. We find that it is provided that if both of the daughters die leaving no issue, then the property remaining at the time of their death shall pass to the nephews. This pre-supposes that the daughters may alienate portions of the property during their lifetime, presumably under the absolute powers given by the earlier provisions in the Will. It is suggested that we must read this clause as a provision for alienation for justifiable necessity alone. As there is no mention of any such restriction, the words "remaining property" must be deemed to be the property after deducting the portions disposed by the daughters during their lifetime. This construction does not dispose of the whole difficulty for in the clause relating to the death of one of the two daughters the word "remaining" does not occur. But it is provided that her i. e., the deceased daughter's property shall pass to the other. Construing the word "her" in the light of the succeeding clause which talks of the "remaining property" "her" property must be deemed to be the property in her hands at the time of her death. This is the only construction which will give effect to the provision for an absolute estate, which was clearly intended by the testator. The Will must be construed as giving an absolute estate to the daughters and providing for the devolution of whatever property may be left at their death. Such an estate is not unknown to Hindu Law as appears from the cases reported as Saroda Sundari Dassi v. Kristo Jiban Pal (2) and Hara Kumari Dassi v. Mohim Chandra Sarkar (3). The 1st defendant has, therefore, the power of alienating the property during her lifetime and the plaintiff cannot obtain the decree sought for.

The further question as to whether the word "issue" includes an adopted son has been raised; but a decision is not strictly necessary for this appeal. The word used in the Will is Santanam and although a similar word Santhathi has been held to include an adopted son Vide, Balasubramania Pillai v. Pitcha Pillai (4) and Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (5). In both these cases the issue was to a male heir. Where the issue is of a female it would be straining the meaning of the word to make it applicable to an adopted son, for an adoption is always made to the husband. I would hold that the word Santanam in this context does not refer to an adopted son. The cases cited by the appellant in support of the view that the daughters had merely a life-estate are Comiskey v. Bowring Hanbury (6), Mulchand Jekisondas v. Bai Rukshmani (7) and Gulbaji Ajisigi & Co. v. Rustomji Kharsedji Banatvalla (8), but in all those cases the estate was held to be so limited because there was a gift over which was inconsistent with the absolute estate previously provided for.

This appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Reilly, J.—I agree.

Malabar Law—Karnavan, removal of, by decree of Court—Next senior male member, right of, to become karnavan without appointment—Karnavanship, how lost—Decree restricting powers of karnavan, whether binds successor—Construction of decree—Ambiguity—Reference to pleadings, permissibility of—Construction in accordance with law.

The right to the management of the tarwad affairs in the case of a marumakkathayam tarwad devolves on the senior most male member according to Marumakkathayam Law. When a karnavan is removed, there is no necessity for the Court to appoint the next in point of age as manager. The next senior in age becomes the de jure manager and karnavan and steps into the position ipso facto, without any sort of appointment by the Court. [p. 500, col. 2.]

Nemunnakudre v. Achmi Hengasu (1) and Pazhavathil Mavilaputhia Veetil Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (2), followed.

The only means by which rights of karnavanship could be lost to the senior most member are (1) by removal by decree of Court, (2) renunciation by act of party, and (3) by death. [p. 502, col. 1.]

Restrictions imposed by a decree of Court on a person who is the then de jure karnavan would prima facie cease to have operation on the death of the particular karnavan concerned, unless there be something specific in, or necessarily implied by, the decree to the contrary. [p. 502, col. 1.]

It is legitimate to refer to the pleadings in a case in order to construe the decree that has been passed in the suit more especially when the wordings of the decree are not very clear. [p. 500, col. 2.]

If the wordings of a decree be ambiguous, such construction should be put on the same as would make the decree in accordance with law rather than in conflict with it and when a decree is silent on a point, it could be supplemented by the law applicable to the case. [p. 502, col. 1.]

A, B, C and D were the senior most members of a tarwad in the order of seniority. In a suit for removal of A from karnavanship the plaintiffs prayed that B may be appointed as karnavan and if necessary D may be associated with him in the management. A decree was passed removing A from karnavanship, and appointing B as karnavan and associating D with him in the management. B died and D sued for a declaration that he was entitled to act as the karnavan in preference to C.

Held, that C, who was the senior most member on the death of B, was entitled to the karnavanship as he had neither renounced his right nor had been deprived by the Court of his right to karnavanship. [p. 501, col. 2.]

Mr. Sivarama Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question that arises for decision in these cases is which of the two—plaintiff or the defendant—is entitled to the management of the tarwad known as Kothukotte in Kannadi Amsom and Desom, and as Patthathil in Mathoor Amsom and Desom, of the Palghat Taluq. The Court of first instance decided the question in favour of the defendant whereas the lower Appellate Court has decided the point in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant accordingly has preferred these second appeals. To appreciate properly the point in dispute, it is necessary to mention that in 1904 the karnavan of the tarwad was Perakunni Mannadiar and the next senior Anandravan was Gopala Mannadiar. Original Suit No. 11 of 1904 was instituted by 18 junior members of the tarwad against Perakunni Mannadiar as the 1st defendant and Gopala Mannadiar as the 2nd defendant for the removal of the karnavan Perakunni Mannadiar, and also for the removal of the senior Anandravan Gopala Mannadiar on the ground that both of them were unfit to manage the tarwad affairs. The plaint proceeded to state that the 1st plaintiff therein (Ravunni Mannadiar) would be the person who would be entitled to management if defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were removed by Court, and there was a prayer that the 1st plaintiff, Ravunni Mannadiar, should be appointed as manager. The plaint proceeded further to state that if for any reason the Court should feel inclined to associate any other member of the tarwad with the 1st plaintiff in management, then the 1st plaintiff, Ravunni Mannadiar should be appointed manager in conjunction with the 3rd plaintiff. It must be mentioned that there was a 2nd plaintiff in that case—Sankunni Mannadiar who was senior to the 3rd plaintiff Krishna Mannadiar, but nothing was alleged in the proceedings in Suit No. 11 of 1904 about the 2nd plaintiff Sankunni Mannadiar. Issues were then framed about the removal of the 1st defendant and also about the removal of the 2nd defendant in that suit. The seventh issue then framed ran as follows:—

"Whether the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3 are unfit to be appointed manager?"

The result of that litigation was that the 1st defendant Perakunni Mannadiar was removed from management, and the 2nd defendant Gopala Mannadiar having died during the pendency of the suit, no question arose about his removal. Having found that there was no reason for not granting the prayer in the plaint regarding the management of the tarwad affairs by the 1st plaintiff in conjunction with the 3rd plaintiff, the Court passed a decree to the following effect: "(1) that the 1st defendant be removed from management of the tarwad of the plaintiffs and defendants, (2) that the 1st and 3rd plaintiffs be appointed to the management." Now the 1st and 3rd plaintiffs in that suit continued to manage the properties of the tarwad till the 30th October, 1923, when the 1st plaintiff in the prior suit Ravunni Mannadiar died. The 3rd plaintiff in that suit Krishna Mannadiar has instituted O. S. Nos. 283 and 284 of 1923, out of which the present second appeals have arisen for a declaration that he is, in the circumstances that now exist, entitled to manage the affairs of the tarwad and for collection of rent due by the defendant to the tarwad. The defendant to the present suit Sankunni Mannadiar (who was the 2nd plaintiff in Suit No. 11 of 1904) contends that as the admitted senior most male member of the tarwad at present (excluding, of course, Perakunni Mannadiar the karnavan who was removed by virtue of the decree in the prior suit), he is in law entitled as the present de jure karnavan to manage the tarwad affairs. The main contention of the plaintiff in the present suit, Krishna Mannadiar, is that under the terms of the decree in Suit No. 11 of 1904 he and Ravunni Mannadiar were appointed co-managers and that on the death of Ravunni Mannadiar he is entitled to the sole management. He further contends that Sankunni Mannadiar should be taken to have been removed from management since his claims were not recognised and since his junior, the present plaintiff—was appointed as manager. As already remarked the Court of first instance upheld the defendant's contention, while the learned Subordinate Judge has upheld the contention of the plaintiff.

Now before considering the effect of the decree in Suit No. 11 of 1904, it is better to state that the right to the management of the tarwad affairs in the case of a Marumakkathayam tarwad devolves on the senior most male member according to Marumakkathayam Law. When a karnavan is removed, it is now admitted, and there are decisions, expressly supporting the position, that there is no necessity for the Court to appoint the next in point of age as manager. When a karnavan is removed the next senior in age becomes the de jure manager and karnavan, and steps into the position ipso facto, without any sort of appointment by the Court, Nemmanakudre v. Achmu Hengasu (1) per Krishnan, J.; Pazhavathil Mavilaputhia Veetil Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (2). No doubt, in some decrees passed by Courts one finds occasionally statements to the effect that the previous karnavan is removed and the next senior is appointed as karnavan and manager. But as already remarked it is unnecessary to appoint the next senior to enable him to exercise the rights of the karnavan which he is under Marumakkathayam Law entitled to exercise the moment the previous karnavan is removed. Attention has been drawn to this point because a major portion of the arguments of the learned Counsel who appeared for the plaintiff-respondent in these cases was directed towards laying emphasis on the fact that the decree in Suit No. 11 of 1904 states that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3 in that suit were appointed to the management. If no appointment really be necessary in law to enable the next in seniority, to become a manager, the question arises as to what exactly is the construction to be placed on the terms of the decree that was passed in Suit No. 11 of 1904. It has been held that it is legitimate to refer to the pleadings in a case in order to construe the decree that has been passed in the suit more especially when the wordings of the decree are not very clear. Now referring to the plaint in Suit No. 11 of 1904, it is stated there "after the removal of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, plaintiffs are willing to have the 1st plaintiff alone appointed as manager of the tarwad or the 1st plaintiff in conjunction with the 3rd plaintiff therein." Absolutely nothing was stated against the 2nd plaintiff in that suit who is the defendant in the present suits. When we examine the proceedings in the prior suit, we think that it is clear that the questions before the Court then were: (1) consideration of the removal of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in that suit and (2) consideration of the question whether the 1st plaintiff Ravunni Mannadiar should be allowed to manage the affairs solely as he would be entitled to it under the Malabar Law, unless the Court thought it proper to impose any restrictions on his power of management, or whether any other person should be associated with the 1st plaintiff in the tarwad management. The defendants having been removed (the 1st defendant by Court, the 2nd defendant by his death during the course of the suit) the question that was subsequently decided by the Court was that the interests of the tarwad required that the de jure karnavan, the 1st plaintiff Ravunni Mannadiar, should be restricted in his powers of management by having the 3rd plaintiff associated in his powers with him in the management. Absolutely no question of removing the 1st plaintiff having arisen in that suit, there could not be any question of removing the 2nd plaintiff therein. The question of associating another member with 1st plaintiff in his management was only with a view to restrict 1st plaintiff's rights, not to prejudice the next member's rights, much less to deprive once for all the next junior of his rights as karnavan when his turn should come. It is, therefore, impossible to uphold the contention of the learned Counsel for the respondent that the question of the 2nd plaintiff's right to be the karnavan was decided against him in that suit by necessary implication. Karnavanship is a very valued right among members of a Marumakkathayam Tarwad, and as already remarked the senior most male member is entitled to be the de jure karnavan with rights of management. The only means by which such rights of karnavanship could be lost to the senior most members are (1) by removal by decree of Court, (2) renunciation by act of party, and, (3) by death. The learned Counsel for the respondent at one stage of his argument contended that in this case it must be taken that the 2nd defendant renounced his rights of karnavanship since he allowed his junior to be co-manager with the 1st plaintiff; at another stage he urged that on a proper construction of the decree in Suit No. 11 of 1904, it must be taken that the Court has adjudicated by necessary implication against his rights of karnavanship. We are unable to accept either of these contentions. In the absence of specific allegations against the 2nd plaintiff, and in the absence of any issue relating to him, it is rather difficult to hold that the Court adjudicated upon his rights in any way. On the other hand, the natural thing that is likely to have happened and which we find to be what really happened in Suit No. 11 of 1904 was that the 1st plaintiff, who was to be the de jure karnavan after the 1st and 2nd defendants were removed, instead of insisting on his rights to be the sole manager agreed to have his rights of management curtailed to some extent by associating the 3rd plaintiff with him in the management. The effect of this was that the 1st plaintiff's rights as karnavan were restricted, not that the next karnavan rights were in any way affected much less adjudicated against. On the death of the 1st plaintiff, these restrictions ipso facto ceased to have any operation, and the next karnavan is in no way affected by them. This is the view that has been taken by the District Munsif in these cases, and we are of opinion, that he is right. The learned Subordinate Judge at one portion of his judgment states that the decree should be construed according to its literal terms. If he means to lay down that one is not entitled to look into the pleadings to find out what was really meant by the decree, we should point out that he was wrong. It was not disputed before us that a decree—especially if it is ambiguous—should be construed in the light of the judgment that led to it. It is a matter of frequent occurrence in Malabar that members of a tarwad agree by means of karars to have the rights of the existing karnavan restricted in certain particulars either by compelling him to associate some other junior members with him in the management of the tarwad properties or by putting other restrictions on his power. It has been uniformly held in this Court that the effect of such karars is only to limit the powers of the particular karnavan concerned, and that persons who were only junior members at the time would not be bound by such restrictions when they become, in their turn, karnavans of the tarwad unless by themselves being parties to the karar they have expressed themselves to be bound by such provisions even when they become karnavans. We need refer only to the two cases that were referred to in argument, namely, Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (3) and Achipre v. Achipre (4). As remarked by Sadasiva Ayyar, J.: "The whole of a family karar in my opinion falls to the ground on the death of the de jure karnavan who consented to be bound by it (or his removal by decree of Court) as the next de jure karnavan is not bound by the restrictions imposed by the karar on his predecessor, except perhaps where he himself has agreed in that karar to be bound by those restrictions whenever he succeeded to the stanom." See also Pazhavathil Mavilaputhia Veetil Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (2). The same principles would, we think, apply to cases where restrictions were imposed by decree of Court on a person who was the de jure karnavan on the date of the decree. Such restrictions would prima facie cease to have operation on the death of the particular karnavan concerned, unless there be something specific in, or necessarily implied by, the decree to the contrary. Further it is well-recognised principle of law that if the wordings of a decree be ambiguous, such construction should be put on the same as would make the decree in accordance with law and that when a decree is silent on a point, it could be supplemented by the law applicable to the case: Uttamram v. Kishordas (5), Amolak Ram v. Lachmi Narain (6) and Maharaja of Bharatpur v. Rani Kanno Dei (7). As Sir John Edge, O. J., and Blair, J. say in Amolak Ram v. Lachmi Narain (6): "In construing a decree, the terms of which are ambiguous such construction must, if possible, be adopted as will make the decree a decree in accordance with law." Their Lordships of the Privy Council while overruling that decision of the Allahabad High Court on some other point, expressed their approval of the above principle and specifically say as follows. "Their Lordships agree that all ambiguous documents should be construed rather to make them accord with law than to make them conflict with it." Maharaja of Bharatpur v. Rani Kanno Dei (7). Parsons, J., at p. 153 of 24 Bom. [Uttamram v. Kishordas (5)] states that "the decree may be supplemented by the law on the point upon which it is silent, but we cannot introduce into it a provision which would be contrary to law and ultra vires on the part of the Court pronouncing it." Further as observed by the Privy Council in Hari Bakhsh v. Babu Lal (8) "to understand and apply a decision of the Board or of any Court, it is necessary to see what were the facts of the case in which the decision was given, and what was the point which had to be decided." On a proper construction of the terms of the decree in Suit No. 11 of 1904 we are inclined to hold that the 3rd plaintiff in that suit (the present plaintiff before us) was only appointed to associate himself with the then de jure karnavan Ravunni Mannadiar the then 1st plaintiff, and that the 3rd plaintiff's appointment ipso facto ceased the moment Ravunni Mannadiar died. We are strengthened in our conclusion by reference to the judgment in Suit No. 11 of 1904; and having regard to the principles applicable to the case and the rights of members of a Marumakkathayam tarwad we have no hesitation in holding that the person at present entitled to the management of the tarwad in question is Sankunni Mannadiar (the appellant in these second appeals and defendant in these suits), and not Krishna Mannadiar the plaintiff-respondent. It, therefore, follows that the second appeals should be allowed and the District Munsif's decision restored. In the circumstances we direct that all the costs of the parties in both these cases, both here and in the Courts below, be paid from the tarwad funds.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL SUIT No. 398 OF 1925.

KANCHUMARTI VENKATA KRISHNAYYA GARU—CLAIMANT No. 1—

APPELLANT

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL REPRESENTED

BY THE SUB-COLLECTOR OF GODAVARI—REFERRING OFFICER—

RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 18, 21—“Person interested”, meaning of—Application for reference by party in pending suit with respect to title to property—Right of party held entitled in appeal, to continue land acquisition proceedings—Agricultural land fit for building purposes, valuation of—Valuation of land—General principles—Prospective user and potentialities, whether to be considered.

Where during the pendency of a suit or appeal a person who has a decree in his favour and who is prima facie entitled to the property institutes or defends proceedings in respect of the property, the proceedings can be continued by the person who ultimately succeeds in the litigation. Any order passed in respect of the property would enure for the benefit of the successful litigant and he is the person who on the reversal of the judgment of the lower Court would be entitled to continue the proceedings. [p. 504, col. 1.]

In a litigation between two persons as to title to a property one of them was held entitled to it, and during the pendency of an appeal therefrom, the successful party applied in land acquisition proceedings with regard to the property, for reference to the Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. In appeal the property was held to belong to the other party.

Held, that such other party was entitled to avail himself of the reference made at the instance of his opponent who was the person interested at the time in making the application for reference within the meaning of s. 18 (1), Land Acquisition Act. [p. 503, col. 2.]

The proper way to value lands is to ascertain what would be their market value if put to the most lucrative use having regard to their condition. In assessing compensation not only is the present purpose to which the land is applied to be taken into consideration, but any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events the land might within a reasonable period be applied should also be considered. The special adaptability of lands for building purposes is an element to be considered in fixing the compensation even though the lands are used for agricultural purposes at the time of acquisition. [p. 507, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Court, Godavari at Rajahmundry, in O. P. No. 158 of 1921.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanan and K. Kameswara Rao, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—This appeal arises out of the proceedings instituted for determining the amount of compensation to be awarded in respect of the acquisition by the Government of 50 acres 75 cents. of land situate in the town of Rajahmundry. The land was acquired for the construction of the Government Arts and Training Colleges at Rajahmundry. There were disputes as regards ownership of the land. Claimant No. 1 is the adopted son of K. V. Krishnayya who admittedly was the owner of the property and who was in possession. Claimant No. 2 is a reversioner who disputed the adoption. He succeeded in the Subordinate Judge's Court but in appeal the High Court upheld the adoption and claimant No. 1 was declared to be entitled to the estate. This judgment of the High Court was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council* so that the person now entitled to the property is claimant No. 1.

The Government notified its intention to acquire the property on the 19th of July, 1921. On that day the 2nd claimant had obtained a decree in his favour in the Sub-Court and the appeal in the High Court was pending. The decree of the Subordinate Judge in favour of the 2nd claimant was on the 29th of April, 1921. It was reversed by the High Court on the 18th of October, 1922, and the judgment of the High Court was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council on the 23rd of June, 1925. The order of the Land Acquisition Officer fixing the compensation was on the 6th of November, 1921, and the application for reference was made on the 8th of November, 1921.

A preliminary objection is taken by the learned Government Pleader that an appeal by the 1st claimant would not lie as he did not apply for a reference to the District Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, the application having been made by the 2nd claimant. I do not think this objection is tenable. At the date of the award by the Land Acquisition Officer, the 2nd claimant was the person who was declared by the Subordinate Judge to be entitled to the property and who prima facie was the person entitled to apply. He was the person interested within the meaning of s. 18 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act

I of 1894. I am of opinion that where during the pendency of a suit or appeal a person who had a decree in his favour and who was prima facie entitled to the property institutes or defends proceedings in respect of property sought to be acquired, the proceedings can be continued by the person who ultimately succeeds in the litigation. Any order passed in respect of the property would enure for the benefit of the successful litigant and he is the person who on the reversal of the judgment of the lower Court would be entitled to continue the proceedings.

As regards Survey No. 119/B-2 the suit by the 2nd claimant was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and claimant No. 1 who ultimately succeeded was the person who was entitled to that item and it is clear from the record that there is no valid reference as regards that item. As regards the remaining items, I think the 1st claimant is entitled to appeal against the award.

Turning to the merits, the only question is whether the District Judge was right in treating the land sought to be acquired as agricultural land and fixing the compensation on that basis. The land sought to be acquired is situate within the Municipal limits of the town of Rajahmundry and it appears from the evidence and the plan produced that it is abutted on one side by the Gokavaram Road and on the other by another road. The District Judge in para. 5 of his judgment deals with the various sale-deeds produced. He is of opinion that one rupee a square yard may be taken as the value of building sites on the side of the Gokavaram Road in 1921 at the time of the proposed acquisition of the land in dispute. This finding is amply borne out by the evidence and the sale-deed produced by the witnesses. I do not think the District Judge was right in treating the land in question as agricultural land as the evidence, in my opinion, shows that the land should be treated as land fit and capable of being sold and used for building purposes. The land in dispute is within the Municipal limits of Rajahmundry town. The town is a growing one and according to the evidence there is demand for building sites.

The 1st witness for the Referring Officer is one Veerabhadrayya who in 1907 purchased about 9 acres of land under Exs. 1 and 2 near the land now sought to be acquired and adjoining the Gokavaram Road. It is outside the toll gate. He reserved a portion of the land for himself and sold the other portion in small lots. He says that first he sold some sites at 4 annas a square yard, that prices were rising year after year, that those who bought from him were re-selling at a higher rate and that in 1915 he sold a site at one rupee a square yard. He says that five or six years ago he asked the 1st claimant to sell the land adjoining the Gokavaram Road and said that he would get good price if he instead of treating the land as garden lands sold it for building purposes. The evidence of this witness shows that the land now sought to be acquired is fit for building purposes and that so far as the plot purchased by him which adjoins the plot now in question is concerned, he was able to dispose of it for building purposes. The 2nd witness for the Referring Officer is the Municipal Secretary, Rajahmundry. He says that the Municipality in 1910 acquired about 70 acres which were sub-divided into 437 sites for building purposes and that all the sites were sold between 1913 and 1915 at prices ranging from 2 annas to 5 annas a yard. This land is situate within a furlong from the land now sought to be acquired. He says that 50 houses were built and that the remaining sites remain unbuilt upon. It is not clear from his evidence as to why the remaining sites have not been built upon. He says it is not for want of water that only 50 sites were built upon and that the remaining sites remain vacant. According to him the Municipality has laid out roads and dug out wells, and that no one would have to go more than 100 yards to obtain water, from one of the wells. All that appears from this witness's evidence is that though the Municipality managed to sell all the lands as building sites several sites have not been built upon. This is all the evidence on the side of the Referring Officer, and there is nothing in that evidence to show that the land in question can only be used as agricultural land and that there is no probability of its being disposed of as building site.

The witnesses for the claimants support the claimants' case that the land should be valued on the footing not purely of agricultural land but of land which is fit and which could be disposed of for building purposes. Both Veerabhadra Ayya who was examined on behalf of the Government and the claimants state that there is demand for the land sought to be acquired for building purposes. Appa Rao claimants' second witness who is a lecturer in the Government College, Rajahmundry, and who has got a site in Veerabhadrapuram which is near the site sought to be acquired says that he purchased the site under Ex. B, dated the 13th of September, 1920, that the price was nearly one rupee per square yard, that the land sought to be acquired is near the Principal's bungalow and that only the Gokavaram Road divides the bungalow from Veerabhadrapuram. Claimants' 9th witness Darbha Venkataramayya says that he has purchased a site in Veerabhadrapuram under Ex. H, dated the 1st of May, 1918, after paying Rs. 300 for 200 square yards. He says that he knows the garden of the 1st claimant and that about two years ago he, the witness, offered on behalf of one Fazullah Sahib who is now dead Rs. 2 per square yard in respect of the site attached to the bungalow which belongs to the 1st claimant. Claimants' 10th witness Venkataramana Rao who is an Overseer in the Public Works Department states that the claimants' land which is sought to be acquired by the Government is fit for building if there is a scheme for the extension of the town, that the soil is gravely hard soil, that he requested the 1st claimant to sell a site on that land before he purchased the site under Ex. J in Veerabhadrapuram and that the claimant wanted Rs. 3 or Rs. 4, but that he, the witness, offered Rs. 2 per square yard. In cross-examination he states that the site which he wanted was a site adjoining the Gokavaram Road. The 2nd claimant who was examined as claimants' 15th witness states that the land sought to be acquired is fit for building purposes and that portion of the town on which the land is, is the only portion available for expansion by building houses.

The law as regards the compensation payable for lands acquired which have what is called special adaptability has been considered in several cases. In the matter of an arbitration between the Countess Mary Ossalinsky and the Mayor Aldermen, and citizens of the city of Manchester which is reported in extenso in the Appendix to "The Law of Compensation by Browne and Allan" page 659, Grove, J., puts the matter very clearly. The learned Judge observes :

"If the land has what I may call an adventitious value; that is something beyond its more agricultural or normal value--and that is a marketable value in this sense, that persons wishing, for a purpose for which the land is peculiarly applicable, to purchase that land, would give a higher price for that land--then the arbitrator has a fair right to take that into consideration, it is a matter, no doubt, contingent, but still it is a matter which is not to be ignored or put out of consideration by an arbitrator. Land may be agricultural land, but it may be so near a town that it is tolerably certain that in a few years it will be converted into building land, quite certain in a larger number of years, as far as we can speak of anything in the future being certain it will be converted into building ground. It is quite true that land might be rightly valued at more than its value as agricultural land if the land had any other capabilities for Railway, canal, or irrigating purposes, or for water works, or for anything else, and they are reasonable and fair capabilities, not far-fetched hypothetical capabilities but reasonably fair contingencies. Those are fair things to be considered by an arbitrator; not to give its full value as if the thing in prospect were actually accomplished but to give the enhanced value, what it would swell to a willing purchaser for in consequence of its having these additional advantages."

In Queen v. Brown (1) the land sought to be acquired was agricultural land which was fit for building purposes and Cockburn, C. J., observed that a Jury where the dispute is as to the value of the land sought to be acquired must in assessing the amount "have to consider the real value of the land, and may take into account not only the present purpose to which the land is applied, but also any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events at no remote period it may be applied, just as an owner might do if he were bargaining with a purchaser in the market." In In re Bullfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries (1891) Limited and the Pontypridd Waterworks Co. (2), Vaughan Williams, L. J., observed :—

"It seems to me, therefore, that the true rule is that, in assessing the compensation, the Umpire may and ought to take into consideration every circumstance which is in existence as a fact at the moment when the notice to treat is given, and not only those circumstances, but also the probable user which might be made of the property. If, for instance, he has to assess the value of land which is used as agricultural land, he is entitled to take into consideration its adaptability for building land, because, that is a fact which is in existence at the time the notice to treat is given." The learned Judge, however, was of opinion that matters which are so remote or uncertain that they are incapable of being measured are not to be taken into consideration in assessing compensation. In In re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board (3) the question as to compensation for special adaptability was considered by the Court of Appeal and Vaughan Williams, L. J., referred with approval to the observations of Grove, J., in In re Countess Osselinsky and Manchester Corporation. Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in dealing with the question of special adaptability in cases where lands are required by public bodies for uses which are different from the uses to which the lands are put while in private hands and which, therefore, do not necessarily influence the price which such lands command in the market observed: "The decided cases seem to me to have hit upon the correct solution of this problem. To my mind they lay down the principle that where the special value exists only for the particular purchaser, who has obtained powers of compulsory purchase it cannot be taken into consideration in fixing the price, because, to do otherwise would be to allow the existence of the scheme to enhance the value of the lands to be purchased under it. But when the special value exists also for other possible purchasers so that there is, so to speak, a market, real though limited, in which that special value goes towards fixing the market price, the owner is entitled to have this element of value taken into consideration, just as he would be entitled to have the fertility or the aspect of a piece of land capable of being used for agricultural purposes." This case was approved and followed by the House of Lords in Cedar Rapids Manufacturing Co.

v. Lacoste (4). Lord Dunedin after referring to In re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board (3) observed:—

"For the present purpose it may be sufficient to state two brief propositions:—

(1) The value to be paid for is the value to the owner as it existed at the date of the taking, not the value to the taker.

(2) The value to the owner consists in all advantages which the land possesses, present or future, but it is the present value alone of such advantages that falls to be determined."

Turning to the Indian cases, in Premchand Burrall v. Collector of Calcutta (5) Sir Richard Garth, C. J., observed that where property is acquired under statutory powers, the compensation should be measured not, by estimating the value of the property according to its present uses and its present rental, but by ascertaining what it would be worth if laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owner could dispose of it, e. g., for building purposes. In the matter of the Land Acquisition Act, X of 1870, Munji Khetsey (6) it was held by Farran, J., that in the case of land in the vicinity of a town where building is going on, the value of the land should be determined, not necessarily according to its present disposition, but laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way which the owner can dispose of it. In Daya Khushal v. Assistant Collector Surat (7), Batchelor, J., after reviewing the authorities on the subject was of opinion that the special adaptability of the land should be taken into consideration in fixing the value. In Fink v. Secretary of State for India (8) the learned Judges observed: "The profit which might arise from the most advantageous disposition of land is, undoubtedly, one test for determining its market price." This principle of valuation was recognised in Premchand Burrall v. Collector of Calcutta (5) and in a recent unreported case*, Hugh Mills Co. v. Secretary of State, decided by Harrington and Brett, J.J., on the 18th June, 1903. In the case of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs v. Charlesworth Pilling & Co. (9) the Privy Council laid down the rule that a claimant is entitled to the market value of his land, including such speculative advance therein as had already taken place in consequence of improvements in the locality, but excluding any future speculative advance for a like cause. The probable use of land in the most advantageous way, in accordance with, or following the use already made of neighbouring lands, leads to speculative advance in prices, and regard should be had to such advance. The utility of land is certainly an element for consideration in estimating its value, that is the utility which may be calculated by a prudent businessman. This principle of valuation was accepted as sound in Rajendra Nath Banerjee v. Secretary of State (10). I may in this connection refer to Hugli Mills Co. v. Secretary of State for India (11), Manmatha Nath Mullik v. Secretary of State for India (12) and Bhujabalappa v. Collector of Dharwar (13). In Rajah of Pittapuram v. Revenue Divisional Officer, Cocanada (14), Sir John Wallis, C.J., was of opinion that the proper way to value lands which at the time of the acquisition were used for agricultural purposes is to ascertain what would be their market value if put to the most lucrative use having regard to their condition etc. In Raja of Pittapur v. Revenue Divisional Officer, Cocanada (15), Ramesam and Jackson, JJ., were of opinion that in ascertaining the market value of land the fact that it may be used for building purposes has to be remembered and that where the land is situate in great towns and cities, such an element makes a substantial difference. In Thareesarkma v. Deputy Collector, Cochin (16) Phillips and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., deal with the question of compensation to be awarded in cases where agricultural land which is adaptable for building purposes is acquired. Venkatasubba Rao, J., refers to the authorities on the subject and is of opinion that in assessing compensation not only the present purpose to which the land is applied to be taken into consideration but also any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events the land might within a reasonable period be applied and that the special adaptability of agricultural lands for building purposes is an element to be considered in fixing the compensation. In estimating, however, the value with reference to the special adaptability of the property and to its future user, the Court should, as pointed out in Rajendra Nath Banerjee v. Secretary of State (10), estimate the future utility of the land by prudent business calculations and not by mere speculation and impractical imagination.

The facts proved in the present case are that the land sought to be acquired is land situate within the Municipality of Rajahmundry which is a large and growing town. There are several public offices and there it is growing in commercial importance. These facts are not disputed by the learned Government Pleader. As the town is on the Godavari river expansion on that side is not possible. The report of the latest census in 1921 shows that the population has increased 172 per cent. from 1871 to 1921, there being an increase over decade and Rajahmundry is said to be the principal trade centre for the Godavari delta and also for part of the agency. The land according to the evidence is fit for being built upon and the surrounding lands have been acquired by the Municipality, plotted out and sold as building sites for houses and have also been purchased by private individuals who have also sold plots for building purposes. The land is bounded on two sides by road and there is the future advantage of a road being opened up owing to the owner having lands abutting the Gokavaram Road to which he can be given a right of way. On the other hand there is the fact that there are building sites on the 70 acres of land acquired by the Municipality in 1912 which were divided into 437 sites and which were disposed of to various persons. It appears from the evidence of the Secretary to the Municipality (R. W. No. 2) that only 50 houses have been built. He thinks that the distance from the public buildings is the cause for the remaining sites not being built upon. It is argued that the site in question is on a higher level and better adapted for building purposes and that as the Secretary says that the Municipality while promising to introduce a water supply scheme gave it up and dug only five wells may well account for more houses not having been built especially as the evidence of the witnesses called by the claimants shows that there is demand for building sites in Veerabhadrapuram which is adjacent. This may be so; but the fact that there are building sites available near the land is an element to be taken into consideration in fixing the value of the land sought to be acquired. There is also the fact that although one rupee a square yard was given for small plots of land, the same price could not be realised if the 50 acres were thrown open for sale at one time. It is suggested that it is open to the claimants to divide the land into convenient plots and offer the same for sale; but this would involve expenditure for the laying out of roads. It is also clear that it would take a few years before all the various plots could be sold.

On these facts the question is what is the compensation to be awarded. It is not possible in these cases to fix the price with any degree of accuracy especially where we are not dealing with the present use to which the land is put but with the prospective use and valuing it on the basis of special adaptability. In Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs v. Charlesworth Pilling & Co., (9), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed:—

"It is quite true that in all valuations, judicial or other, there must be room for inferences and inclinations of opinion which, being more or less conjectural, are difficult to reduce to exact reasoning or to explain to others.....In such an enquiry as the present, relating to subjects abounding with uncertainties, and on which there is little experience, there is more than ordinary room for such guess-work; and it would be very unfair to require an exact exposition of reasons for the conclusions arrived at." I have gone through the evidence and followed it with reference to the plan produced in this case and having regard to the position of the land I think that so far as 15 acres are concerned, there is a fair and reasonable prospect of the land being taken up for building purposes within a period not so remote as to be negligible. So far as the land in the interior is concerned, I doubt very much whether having regard to the slow rate of progress of buildings on the site I would be justified in fixing the same compensation for the land in the interior as for the land abutting the road.

I think that as regards 15 acres of the land sought to be acquired compensation should be awarded at 6 (six) annas a square yard and that as regards the remaining land Rs. 600 an acre would be a fair compensation. As I have not taken into consideration the existence of the buildings and trees in awarding 6 annas a square yard of 15 acres of the lands, I add Rs. 13,374-2-0 allowed by the District Judge. I see no reason to differ from him as to the value given on this head. In the result the award will be modified by allowing Rs. 69,624-10-0 instead of Rs. 38,030-10-0 allowed by the District Judge. Interest will be awarded at 6 per cent. from the date of possession on the excess decreed by us. I would, therefore, modify the award of the District Judge accordingly. The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Curgenvven, J.—This appeal is against the order of the District Judge of Godavari in O. P. No. 158 of 1921 which originated in a reference made by the Sub-Collector of Rajahmundry in a case under the Land Acquisition Act. The land acquired consists of Survey Nos. 119-B2 123 and 124 of Rajahmundry totalling 50.75 acres, and the purpose for which the acquisition was made to obtain a site for the Government Arts and Training Colleges.

Of the two claimants the appeal is preferred by the first and the learned Government Pleader raises the preliminary objection that an appeal by this claimant is incompetent. There was litigation regarding the property, the 1st claimant claiming as an adopted son and the second as a reversioner disputing the adoption. In the first Court the reversioner succeeded except as regards Survey No. 119-B2, and while that judgment was in force, on 8th November 1921, the reversioner applied for a reference to the District Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. Subsequently the adopted son (1st claimant) won an appeal to the High Court and successfully resisted a further appeal to the Privy Council, so that the result was that he became entitled to all three survey numbers. Now under s. 18 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act an application for a reference to the Court may be made by 'any person interested,' and under s. 21 the scope of the inquiry before the Court is to be restricted to a consideration of the interests of the persons affected by the objection. The 2nd claimant, who alone made the reference, was interested in Survey Nos. 123 and 124, because at that time he held a decree embracing them; but he was no longer interested in Survey No. 119-B2, because the decree had assigned it to the 1st claimant and thereafter he took no steps to challenge this decision. Thus the reference to the Court was good as regards Survey Nos. 123 and 124, but bad as regards Survey No. 119-B2. The 1st claimant, having under the appellate decrees since established his title to the two former numbers, may, I think, avail himself of the circumstance that a valid application for a reference was made by his predecessor-in-interest, the 2nd claimant, so that his appeal regarding these two numbers is sustainable. But it is unsustainable as regards Survey No. 119-B2, because there was no valid reference to the Court below.

Confining myself to Survey Nos. 123 and 124, therefore, I proceed to deal with the sole contention raised, that the compensation awarded is unduly low. The area involved is 49.24 acres, and a reference to the plan will show that the block acquired lies to the North-east, and upon the outskirts of Rajahmundry town, forming, with some numbers to the west, a wedge between two diverging roads, one leading to Gokavaram and the other to Rajangaram. The whole block, including Survey No. 119 has a frontage upon the latter road. The first question which arose for the District Judge, and which arises for us now, is whether the land is to be valued as agricultural land or as affording sites for buildings or partly as one and partly as the other. The learned District Judge has decided, after reviewing the evidence placed before him, that the only or the highest value which the property possesses is as agricultural land and as such he has confirmed the award of Rs. 400 per acre, except for three acres of garden, for which a lump sum of Rs. 4,000 has been given. The basis of the award will be correct unless the appellant is able to show that there exists a demand for building sites in that quarter, or that such a demand is likely to arise at some period not too remote to affect the present value of the property. That, I think, is in substance the principle to be derived from the English and Indian decisions and applicable to the present circumstances. A summary of the more important of those decisions is to be found in the judgment of Venkatasubba Rao, J., in Thareesarkma v. Deputy Collector, Cochin (16) as well as in the judgment which my learned brother has just delivered. The principle which underlies them is now well-understood and the real difficulty lies in applying it.

The general considerations which suggest that the land may have a value as building site are that it lies adjacent to the town of Rajahmundry, the population of which, it is said, has been increasing, that certain portions of land not less remote have been acquired for building, and that it has a good road frontage. The evidence contains particulars of two building enterprises, one Mr. Virabhadrayya having sought to create a peta or suburb adjoining the Gokavaram Road, and the Municipality having taken measures to extend the town upon an area known as Denavaigunte; The history of Mr. Virabhadrayya's attempt is briefly this. In 1907 he bought 9 acres of land, comprising Survey Nos. 93, 94, 95-A and 117-A, for a sum of Rs. 2,637 or rather under Rs. 300 per acre. After making provision for internal communications, and reserving a portion for himself, divided the remaining area into 50 or 60 small house-sites, which he proceeded to sell at the rate of annas 4 per square yard, which is equivalent to Rs. 1,210 per acre. In this way he disposed of about 7 acres, but since the process occupied him some five or six years, it is apparent that the demand for sites was not very urgent. Meanwhile, however, and owing, no doubt, in part to the creation of a nucleus, the value of the site sold, in some of them, rose, so that by the sixth year some of his vendees were re-selling at one rupee per square yard. On 17th January, 1915, he himself sold a site of 400 square yards which he had originally reserved for himself, at this rate. In the same year he sold another site at annas 12 per square yard. A number of sale-deeds have been proved, particulars of which the District Judge has given in para. 5 of his order, and these show that sites in Virabhadrapuram have changed hands at prices the more recent of which approximate to one rupee per square yard. The other project consisted in the acquisition by the Municipality in 1910 of an area of 70 acres, with a view to town extension. This area (Survey Nos. 401, 404 to 407) lies to the south of the land now under reference, and is rather more centrally situated. The District Court awarded a rate of Rs. 175 per acre, and this was raised by the High Court to Rs. 200. The Municipality laid out roads and constructed wells, and divided the block into 437 house-sites, and succeeded in selling them all at rates from 2 to 5 annas per square yard between the years 1913 and 1915. About 50 houses were built but the remaining 387 sites still lie vacant, and the Municipal Secretary (R. W. No. 2) does not think that any have been re-sold. It is clear, accordingly, that only a limited demand for sites on which to build houses existed in that locality, less than one-eighth of the provision made by the Municipality having been appropriated to that purpose; and it may be doubted whether those who acquired the sites have not, in general, lost money. The reason for this comparative failure is given by the Secretary as the distance from the colleges, schools, market and other institutions. There can be little doubt that the availability of these sites must exercise a depressing influence upon the value of the other land suitable for building but not more central.

Outside the two areas of Virabhadrapuram and Danavaigunta there is evidence of only one offer. The claimants' 10th witness, a P. W. D. Overseer says that he offered the 1st claimant Rs. 2 per square yard for a site not in the acquired land but in other neighbouring land fronting on the Gokavaram Road, and that the offer was refused. But this site was across the road from Virabhadrapuram peta, and, apart from that fact, a single offer for a small area does not furnish an index to the value of 50 acres.

Although owing to the presence of the Godavary river and of some other features the directions in which the town can expand are somewhat limited, the village plan shows that there are extensive areas of open land which, so far as can be seen, would afford sites for building. The experience furnished by the two projects discussed above shows that the occupation of this suburban area is likely to be slow. The sites in Virabhadrapuram which have changed hands for about one rupee per square yard cannot aggregate more than, say, three or four acres, whereas the area we are now dealing with extends to 50 acres, capable of accommodating something like 500 families. I think that if the owner had at the date of the notification (19th July, 1921) followed the example of Mr. Veerabhadrayya and laid out his property for sale in building plots, the most that can be inferred in his favour is that purchasers would have been found immediately or within a limited time for not more than a certain acreage. With regard to the remainder of the land I am in some doubt whether, at the time of the acquisition, its market value as agricultural land can be supposed upon the evidence available, to have been affected by the local demand for having accommodation. In view, however, of its proximity to the town, and of the other advantages as building sites which it possesses, I do not feel justified in differing from my learned brother's opinion that a moderate enhancement upon its value as agricultural land should be allowed in order to give effect to this consideration. I agree to the rates which he proposes, and that the award should be enhanced into conformity with them.

In a suit on a promissory note executed by a subscriber to a chit fund to the stake-holder, it is open to the defendant under proviso (3) to s. 92 of the Evidence Act and s. 46 of the Negotiable Instruments Act to prove that the promissory note was executed and delivered only as security for the payment of future instalments to the chit fund.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion it was open to the defendants under proviso (3) to s. 92 of the Evidence Act and s. 46 of the Negotiable Instruments Act to prove that the promissory note was executed and delivered only as security for the payment of future instalments to the chit fund. Compare Sundram Chetty v. Damodaram Chetty (1). There is evidence that the note was executed and delivered only as such security. The endorsement regarding the payment of Rs. 130 is not necessarily inconsistent with the defendant's case. I see no sufficient reason to interfere. This petition is dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 67, 98—Mortgage—Covenant to pay—Provision for mortgagee remaining in possession if debt is not re-paid—No provision for sale on non-payment—Anomalous mortgage—Remedies of mortgagee.

A deed of mortgage under which possession was delivered to the mortgagee provided that the mortgagee was to pay out of the net income the interest and then the principal and that the mortgagor was to pay the amount in five years and in default the mortgagee was to remain in possession. The mortgagor, however, took possession in 1906, but defaulted to pay the mortgage amount. In a suit by the mortgagee for sale;

Held, (1) that the mortgage was an anomalous one in which the parties were bound by the terms of the document;

(2) that the plaintiff's remedy was to sue on the covenant to pay and for possession within the time prescribed by law;

(3) that the suit for sale was not maintainable.

Appeal against a decree of the District Court, Ganjam, in O. S. No. 33 of 1921.

FACTS.—A mortgage-deed of the year 1904 under which the mortgagee took possession of the land provided that the mortgagee shall cultivate the land or get it cultivated, credit the net income first towards interest and then pay towards principal and continued, "At the end of five years paying you all the balance under the deed, we shall take possession of our land. If we do not pay balance in full at that time, the mortgaged property shall remain in your possession in the aforesaid terms." The mortgagor, however, took possession in August, 1906, and did not pay the amount due on the mortgage. In November, 1921, the plaintiff-mortgagee brought a suit for recovery of the mortgage amount by sale of the properties.

The District Judge upheld the contention of the defendants that although there was a covenant to pay, there was no provision for sale of properties in case of default in payment and that the mortgage was not a combination of a simple and usufructuary mortgage but only an anomalous mortgage, in which the parties were bound by the terms of the contract of mortgage. The learned Judge held further that s. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act was inapplicable and that the plaintiff's remedy was to sue on the covenant within six years from the due date for possession. The suit was accordingly dismissed as being time-barred and the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. B. Jagannatha Doss, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The mortgages are anomalous mortgages. The document provides for the contingency to happen if payment is not made at the expiry of the period. It states that in default of payment the mortgagee is to be in possession till the mortgage is discharged.

We think the decree of the learned Judge is right and that plaintiff has no right to bring the property to sale, Ram.

mayya v. Guruva (1) has no application as under the terms of the document the mortgagee was to be in possession for interest only after the period fixed for sale. As regards the principal sum the document gave a right of suit.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Summons case—Death of complainant pending inquiry —Accused, right of, to acquittal.

Where the complainant in a summons case dies pending the inquiry before the Magistrate, the Magistrate should acquit the accused and should not proceed further with the inquiry.

The clause beginning with the words "unless for some reason he thinks" in s. 247, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply to the case of a complainant who is dead.

Purna Chandra Moulik v. Dengar Chandra Pal (1), referred to.

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Parvatipur Division, in C. A. No. 2 of 1927, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Taluk Magistrates, Bobbili, in, C. C. No. 40 of 1926.

Mr. K. Kameswara Rao, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor (Mr. J. C. Adam), for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this revision petition a very interesting question is raised. The complainant died pending the enquiry into the case. The case before the Magistrate was a summons case, and the contention of

Mr. Kameswara Rao is when the Magistrate was told that the complainant was dead he should have dismissed the complaint under s. 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the non-appearance of the complainant. The Magistrate adjourned the case in order to enable the complainant's son to come on the record and the learned Public Prosecutor contends the Magistrate's action is not ultra vires as the section deals with complainants who are alive and not with complainants who are dead. The relevant portion of s. 247, is "If the complainant is absent, the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day."

The Magistrate adjourned the case in order to enable the complainant to appear and not for any other reason. If the complainant is dead he could not appear before the Magistrate and, therefore, the clause beginning with the words "unless for some reason he thinks" cannot apply to the case of the complainant who is dead. In this case the complainant being dead during the course of the enquiry, the Magistrate should have acquitted the accused and should not have proceeded with the enquiry. I may in this connection refer to Purna Chandra Moulik v. Dengar Chandra Pal (1). I, therefore, set aside the conviction and direct the fine if paid to be refunded to the accused.

Mr. T. J. Kedar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. T. Mangalmurti and G. S. Lule, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The mortgage which the plaintiffs claimed to redeem was executed on the 8th of January, 1872, by Narayan Patel, who died in December, 1880. The mortgage was with possession and comprised a 2-anna share in the village of Saoda and a field of 32.30 acres bearing the number 54 and then described as malik wahit. In 1882 there was an agreement between the mortgagee and some, if not all, of the surviving members of the joint Hindu family of which the mortgagor had been the head, whereby the mortgagee was to retain the 2-anna share in the village and return the field to the other party and the mortgage was to be regarded as extinguished. This agreement was duly carried out.

The members of the family at that time were Ramji, aged 24 or 25, Govinda aged 16, Rodba aged 14, Ananda Bai, the mother of Ramji and Govinda, and Jhipri Bai the mother of Rodba, and they continued to live together as a joint Hindu family till 1890. The main evidence of the agreement extinguishing the mortgage is contained in a copy of an application for mutation of names in respect of the share in the village made by Ramji on the 9th of February, 1882, (Ex. D-3) and a copy of the statements made by him and his mother Ananda Bai before the Tahsildar in the enquiry started by that application (Ex. D-1). In both Ramji's application and deposition the full details of the agreement are stated. In the course of the former he stated that he was his father's heir (waris), and in the latter that his father's heirs were himself and his mother Ananda Bai, who was present with him and affirmed this statement.

This has been accepted in the lower Appellate Court as an assertion that Ramji and Ananda Bai were the only heirs of Narayan, to the exclusion of his other two sons. That is, even at first sight, very improbable, and the inclusion of the widow Ananda Bai along with Ramji would alone be sufficient to show that it is impossible, and that they were both speaking as the representative of the joint family, though Ramji alone had the legal right to do so. The suggestion that Ramji's statement was even meant to be a denial of his brothers' rights in the inheritance, or rather in the joint family property, is preposterous, but even if it were possible, it would be disproved by his allowing them to enjoy their shares in the property with him for the next eighty years.

But even if Ramji's words can be taken as bearing the meaning put upon them, they are far from being the only evidence on the one question to be decided, which is whether his two younger brothers were or were not parties to the agreement of which he spoke. On this point the learned District Judge says that it was never the first defendant's case that Ramji was representing the joint family when he deposed before the Tahsildar, and that though he might have raised that plea he never did, and it was then too late to do so.

The Court must find and examine all pleas of law that may possibly apply to the facts for itself. It must not wait for the parties even to suggest them, still less for the parties to plead them, which they are expressly forbidden to do by the Civil Procedure Code. Refusal by a Judge to examine a question of law applicable to the facts because it was not "pleaded" earlier is his own condemnation; he ought to have seen it for himself earlier, but anyhow he should hasten to repair the results of his own inadvertence when a party reminds him of it.

But the matter in issue is not whether Ramji meant to deny his brothers' rights in the joint family property (and admit a right in his mother which she had not got) when he deposed before the Tahsildar. The question is whether the agreement of which he then spoke, which had already been made, was an agreement made on his account only or on behalf of the whole joint family by him as the manager. The words of the application for mutation and of the deposition seem to me quite sufficient proof that the agreement mentioned was made by Ramji on behalf of the whole family.

But there is still more proof of this, Ramji and his two minor brothers remained joint for eight years after the agreement and all of them acted on it from the beginning. They took possession of the malik wahit field and became occupancy tenants of it and neither of the two brothers even thought of questioning the arrangement till Rodba was induced to execute the champertous sale on which the other plaintiffs sued in 1919. They both attained majority within six years after 1882, and Govinda lived till 1918 while Rodba is still alive and one of the plaintiffs.

On the question which has not been decided in the lower Appellate Court I find that when Ramji entered into the agreement of which he spoke in his deposition to the Tahsildar in 1882, he did so as the manager of the joint Hindu family of which he was a member and on behalf of the other two members of it. In accordance then with the judgment of the Privy Council in Khierajmal v. Daim (1) cited in the judgment of the lower Court, it must be held that the right of redemption is dead, having been extinguished at the latest in 1894, nearly thirty years before this suit was filed.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will accordingly be set aside and in its place a decree will issue dismissing the suit and ordering the plaintiffs to pay the whole of the costs of the opposite party throughout the litigation. The Pleadings fee in this appeal will be two hundred rupees.

Practice—Findings to be confined to pleadings and issues—Wajib-ul-arz—Interpretation—Manure on gowthan—Right of proprietary body.

Where there are definite pleadings and a definite issue on those pleadings is framed, the finding must be confined to matters raised in the issue, even though the parties produce evidence on matters which do not form part of the issues. [p. 515, col. 1.]

The clause in the wajib-ul-arz that any one may collect manure from waste land does not apply to a gowthan, a place where cattle are collected in the morning before they are taken to graze on the waste land or elsewhere. The manure (on the gowthan) belongs to the entire proprietary body and a managing co-sharer who collects it cannot refuse to account for the profits received therefrom. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 17th March, 1926, in Civil Appeal No. 106 of 1925.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. J. Kedar, for the Respondent.

The following draft judgment was delivered on 4th August 1927.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for mesne profits. The plaintiff-appellant in this Court urges that three items of consent money and the value of certain manure should have been included in the profits. The learned Judge of first appeal states that he does not discuss the arguments relating to consent money as the plaintiff should have been aware of transfers and should have made a plea about the consent money from the outset. Now, this is a suit for accounts. The plaintiff in his plaint had merely to ask the defendant to render an account, and this is what he did. The defendant put in an account. Then the plaintiff on 2nd March, 1925, made objections. He stated: "The amount of sewai income given by the defendant is denied. Plaintiff files a schedule for the years in suit." The issue framed on this point was: "What was the sewai income during the years in suit?" Although I should prefer Judges to mention the items to which an issue referred, there could have been no doubt regarding the scope of this issue. Both parties have put in an account: presumably the plaintiff included all items admitted by the defendant; the issue referred to those sums which the plaintiff claimed and the defendant denied. In the course of evidence witnesses deposed to receipt of the entirely new items which form the subject of this appeal, and certain of these items were held to be proved by the first Court.

I agree with the lower Appellate Court that suits cannot be tried in this way. Where there are definite pleadings and a definite issue on those pleadings is framed, the finding must be confined to matters raised in the issue. It is of course open to the parties to ask that fresh pleadings should be allowed and additional issues struck. But if they, although represented by Counsel, produce evidence on matters which do not form part of the issues, this evidence should be disregarded. There was not even, in the lower Appellate Court, a prayer to allow to amend the pleadings. Such a prayer is made to me but I refuse to allow these items to be put in issue at this stage. The appeal, so far as regards the consent money, therefore, fails.

The other issue refers to the value of manure collected from the gowthan. I do not think the clause in the wajib-ul-arz, that any one may collect manure from waste land, can be applied to a gowthan. Gowthan is the place where cattle are collected in the morning before they are taken to graze on the waste land or elsewhere. Naturally much cow-dung is deposited on the limited space, and for the purpose of making rules regarding the right to the manure the gowthan is very different from the waste lands on which the cattle pasture. It would clearly be absurd to direct that the manure in the gowthan could be taken by any one who pleased; for it is admitted that this manure, which can be removed with ease, has considerable value.

But, apart from the question whether the plaintiff had a legal right to collect the manure, it is clear that he was allowed to collect it because of his position as managing share-holder. He cannot refuse to account for the profits he received on the ground that, though he took the manure in his capacity of managing co-sharer, he had no legal right to do so.

The trial Judge held that the income from this source was Rs. 400 a year. This finding was challenged in appeal, but there is no finding by the lower Appellate Court. It appears proper that I should determine the issue of fact under s. 103, Civil Procedure Code. I do not lay great stress on the fact that the defendant has not given a complete account of the value of the manure received and the expenses incurred in collecting it. Such an account would be extremely troublesome to keep, and no inference can be drawn from the fact that it has not been kept. Similarly, it is difficult to place much reliance on the estimates given by the plaintiff's witnesses of the amount of manure which the defendant removes from the gowthan in a year. There is evidence which has been believed that the defendant keeps a servant or servants to collect manure. Tukaram (D. W. No. 3) admits that there are 10 or 15 dalis of manure which the defendant has taken from the gowthan. Later he says that there are two gowthans in the village. It appears to me that about 400 cattle should leave in the place where they stand in the morning much more than 15 or 20 carts per year. It is necessary to estimate the amount taken to the best of the Judge's ability. I think it may be held that the plaintiff has proved facts which lead to the inference that the defendant received at least 50 loads per year. The rate, Rs. 3 per load, is not disputed and as defendant has claimed no expenses, I do not allow the wages of a servant. I, therefore, consider that an addition of Rs. 150 should be made to the income of the village for each year. The calculations necessary will be shown to the parties before judgment is finally delivered.

FINAL JUDGMENT.—The calculations to which the draft judgment refers have now been made and are admitted by Mr. Mangalmurti to be correct. I have checked them and they appear correct; the sum by which the decretal amount had to be increased is 3-10th of Rs. 450 with some interest. The amount due from the defendant is Rs. 246 1. The decree will be amended accordingly. It does not seem desirable to make elaborate calculations regarding costs,

It appears fair to direct that costs in this Court should be borne as incurred; and that the order of the lower Appellate Court regarding costs should stand. I so direct.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Joint Hindu family—Alienation not as guardian but as manager—Art. 144, whether applicable—Sale without legal necessity—Pre-emption, whether can be avoided by minor—Sale for antecedent debts of manager, not father, for no legal necessity, whether valid.

Article 144 of the Limitation Act applies to a suit for setting aside an alienation of joint family property by the eldest managing member of the family though it does not apply to a suit to set aside an alienation of the property belonging to a minor by his guardian. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Asaram v. Ratansingh (1), followed.

A pre-emptor of property sold by the managing member of joint Hindu family takes the property pre-empted by him, subject to the right of the minor co-parceners to avoid the transaction on the ground of want of legal necessity. [ibid.]

The Hindu Law doctrine of antecedent debts applies only to father's antecedent debts. It does not apply to those incurred by a managing member other than the father. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 12th September, 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 75 of 1924.

Messrs. W. R. Puranik and A. D. Mande, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. N. Bapat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-appellant raises four points in this second appeal—

- (1) Limitation under Art. 144.
- (2) Bar of res judicata by reason of decision in C. S. No. 195/1918 (Ex. D 2).
- (3) Legal necessity need not be proved by a successful pre-emptor.
- (4) No question of legal necessity arises where the sale is for antecedent debts.

I will dispose of these grounds seriatim.

(a) As to limitation the alienation here complained of is by the eldest managing member of a co-parcenary of the joint family property and not of the property belonging to the minor by his guardian. To such a case Art. 144 of the Limitation Act ought to apply. See Asaram v. Ratan Singh (1).

(b) The plea of bar of res judicata is a belated plea. No proper pleadings or facts constituting the bar of res judicata having been made or established in the trial Court, the lower Appellate Court was justified in refusing to entertain that plea at the stage of appeal.

(c) The plea that a pre-emptor need not prove legal necessity for the sale in favour of the vendee is novel and on the face of it unsound. The right of pre-emption is a right of substitution, so that the name of the original vendee has to be considered as deleted from the sale-deed and that of the pre-emptor substituted in his place with effect from the date of his fulfilling the obligation as to payment of the pre-emption price according to the terms of the decree. He must take the property subject to the right of the minor co-parcener to avoid the transaction on the ground of want of legal necessity.

(d) The fourth question raised is concluded by authority. The proof of antecedent debts which dispenses with the necessity of proving legal necessity for a sale must be father's antecedent debts and not those incurred by a managing member other than the father [Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (2), Anantoo Kalwar v. Ram Prasad Tivari (3), Bhim Singh v. Ram Singh (4) and Gajadhar v. Jagannath (5).]

A point not specifically covered by any of the grounds but which could be plausibly argued under ground No. 4 that the legal necessity need not be proved at least to the extent of Rs. 210 because that sum was paid towards the satisfaction of the father's antecedent debt is argued before me on the strength of the evidence of D. W. No. 1 and Ex. D-1. The question as to the existence of this debt of the father and its satisfaction out of the consideration of the mortgage for Rs. 700 was specifically raised by the defendant in his written statement. The first Court found that the debt was borrowed by the father, but that the same was paid off in Samat 1967 (see para. 7 of the first Court's judgment). The lower Appellate Court accepts the entries in the account books of the Harankhed Shop as evidence of Ganoo's liability but draws the inference thereupon that the debt was long paid off by the plaintiffs' brother and the money that was paid off on Kartik Badi 11 of 1970 was due by the brothers on the bonds executed by them. (Vide para. 6 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment).

This finding is based on a misreading of the documentary evidence and must be set aside. A careful examination of the entries of Ganoo's khataoni from 1965-1967 Samat and kird page 2 and also of Tukaram's new khata at page 7 of the khataoni for the Samat year 1967 and the entries in the rojnamas clearly show that on Poush Sudhi 6 of 1967 Rs. 200 were paid towards the satisfaction of the old debt of Rs. 295 and for the balance of Rs. 149-4-0 which consisted of Rs. 125, the balance left due under the old bond and Rs. 24-4-0 on account of a fresh pro-note of Rs. 22-8-0 (executed in several of father's previous pro-note for Rs. 17-8-0) plus Re. 1-12-0 interest thereon, a fresh bond for Rs. 100 and a pro-note for Rs. 49-4-0 were executed on Poush Sudhi 8 and, therefore, credit was given towards the khata. This would show that the sum of Rs. 210 paid on Kartik Badi 11 of 1970 Samat was towards the satisfaction of the bond debt of Rs. 125 and pro-note of Rs. 17-8-0 in lieu of what the pro-note of Rs. 49-4-0 came to be executed in due course.

Thus the whole of the payment of Rs. 210 was on account of father's antecedent debts. This together with Rs. 90 on account of interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem comes to Rs. 300 on the date of the sale-deed, dated 26th April, 1917. The defendant had thus a charge on the plaintiff's share for this amount on the date of the sale. If the plaintiff seeks to recover back possession of the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share belonging to himself he must bear this burden and pay it before he can recover his alienated share from the vendee or his pre-emptor the defendant. As the defendant has enjoyed the profits of the land I do not think I should ask the plaintiff to pay any interest to him on this sum.

I, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by directing that the defendant shall be entitled to recover Rs. 300 from the plaintiff as a charge on the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share for the joint possession of which he has been granted a decree.

The appeal stands otherwise dismissed with costs. As the revision appeal is divided one I order each party to bear his own costs.

ANNASA LAD—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Mortgage-deed—Land not intended to be mortgaged fraudulently included for getting deed registered in wrong district—Registration, whether valid as to personal covenants.

Where a mortgage-deed has been registered in a wrong district by fraudulently including land not intended to be mortgaged, the registration is wholly invalid and even personal covenants contained in the deed cannot be considered to be duly registered. [p. 522, col. 1.]

Dronamraju Rama Rao v. Kissapragada Vedayya (1), dissented from.

First appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Buldana, in Civil Suit No. 50 of 1924.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A BENCH.

Prideaux, A. J. C.—(November 24, 1926).—It seems to me that this case should be heard by a Bench as a difficult question of law is involved and I am not quite in agreement with the decision in Dronamraju Rama Rao v. Kissapragada Vedayya (1).

(1) 73 Ind. Cas. 188; 46 M. 435; (1923) M. W. N. 166; 44 M. L. J. 373; 32 M. L. T. 222; 17 L. W. 695; A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 447.

The question is whether a mortgage-deed invalid because registration was procured by fraud is not also invalid for all purposes as far as registration is concerned, i. e., would the registration extend limitation from 3 to 6 years. Forwarded to the Judicial Commissioner.

Findlay, J. C.—(24th November 1926).—The question will be decided by a Bench consisting of Judicial Commissioner and third Additional Judicial Commissioner.

OPINION.

Findlay, J. C. and Macnair, A. J. C.—(August 1, 1927).—The question which has been referred for the decision of this Bench is this:—

"Where a mortgage-deed has been fraudulently registered in a wrong district by including land not intended to be mortgaged, is the registration good so far as a personal covenant contained in the deed is concerned?"

The decision of this question affects the period of limitation for a suit for compensation for the breach of the personal covenant.

The question has been considered at length in Dronamraju Rama Rao v. Kissapragada Vedayya (1). The learned Judges who decided that case have answered it in the affirmative. The respondent's Counsel adopts the arguments on which they relied, and we have, therefore, to consider whether, in our opinion, those arguments are convincing.

In Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Hari Dasi Debi (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council state:—

"An entry, intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact exists, is a fraud on the Registration Law, and no registration obtained by means thereof is valid."

In Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (3) this opinion was quoted with approval. Phillips, J., in Dronamraju Rama Rao v. Kissapragada Vedayya (1) cites and remarks:—

"The principle which I take to underlie this decision is that no person shall be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud. If that principle be applied to the present case, the object attained by the fraud was the registration of the mortgage-deed as such, for had the document been merely a covenant to re-pay, the Peddapur Sub-Registrar would have had jurisdiction under s. 29 of the Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908); for under that section parties are at liberty to choose their own place of registration. In so far then as the document evidenced a mere covenant to re-pay there was no fraud upon the Registration Law, and to hold that such registration was invalid would be to extend the principle above mentioned so as to deprive a party of a right which he had not obtained by fraud as well as of the advantage gained by his fraud."

Devadoss, J., states:—

"The Registration Act does not prohibit the use of a document as a registered one if the provisions of s. 28 of the Act are contravened. If a document is otherwise properly registered there can be no objection to the use of it as a registered one."

We respectfully state our opinion that the learned Judges of the Madras High Court have not kept in mind the fact that a document can only be registered as a whole. The document presented for registration was of the nature described in s. 17 (1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act. The inclusion of a covenant to re-pay does not alter this fact. Even if the document recorded two entirely distinct contracts, only one of which created a title of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards in immoveable property, the document as a whole would still be one of those mentioned in s. 17 (1) (b). Section 28 of the Registration Act, therefore, refers to such a document. Section 29 of that Act begins: "Every document other than a document referred to in s. 28..." and has no application to documents to which s. 28 refers.

It follows that the Sub-Registrar to whom the document was presented has no power to register the document. It must be presumed that, but for the false representation that the document related to some property within his jurisdiction, he would have refused to register it. If the parties had been able and willing to cancel the part of the document which affected immoveable property the amended document might then have been registered; but this would not have been registration of the document which was before the learned Judges. Registration was, then, obtained by means of fraud and is invalid.

The learned Judges of the Madras High Court draw an inference in favour of their view from the action of the Privy Council in the case reported as Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (3). Their Lordships in that case remitted the case to the Calcutta High Court for a decision whether the plaintiff had a valid alternative claim for a personal judgment for the mortgage debt. It is inferred that, in their opinion, the personal debt was secured by a registered instrument: for the argument before their Lordships was that the payment of interest in 1903 would save limitation for the suit brought in 1908. In our opinion, if any inference can be drawn from their Lordships' action, it can at most be that their Lordships did not think fit at that stage of the case to decide the question we are now considering.

We are then of opinion that no registration of the deed including a personal covenant could have been effected but for the fraud of the parties, and that no contract contained in the deed can be considered to be validly registered.

Mr. Y. G. Deshpande, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, Messrs. W. A. Forbes and M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Prideaux, A. J. C.—(October 21, 1927).—One Madho Vyankatesh executed a mortgage-deed dated 28th September, 1873, for Rs. 1,200 and another mortgage-deed dated 16th July 1881, for Rs. 400 in favour of the firm of Gopalsa Krishnasa, the plaintiff's predecessors-in-interest. On these documents the present plaintiff brought Civil Suit No. 293 of 1910 and Civil Suit No. 166 of 1910 against Tulsabai, the widow of the deceased Madho. He obtained two decrees which were afterwards made absolute. It is contended that as Tulsabai could not discharge the decrees and was in need of money for pilgrimage she executed the mortgage-deed, dated 8th October, 1907, now sued on. She re-mortgaged the property covered by the first two deeds and mortgaged the rest of her husband's immoveable property. She has failed to discharge her last debt. She has adopted defendant No. 1 as a son, and it is contended that as the mortgage was on account of the father's debts and for legal necessity, it is binding on the minor defendant No. 1, who at the time of the adoption was made liable to pay the father's debts to the extent of the assets of his father. Defendant No. 2 Ambadas Laxmon is in possession of a site at Chikhli mortgaged by the document sued on, while defendant No. 3 is joined for being in possession of certain fields mortgaged.

The case proceeded ex parte against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. For the first defendant the two mortgages of 1873 and 1881 were admitted. He pleaded ignorance of the two mortgage decrees and denied the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit and contended that, even if its execution is proved, the document is not binding on him owing to the plaintiff having practised fraud on the registration department in getting the document executed at Chikhli. The rest of the property is not in the Chikhli registration circle and the only portion of the property in that circle was the site which did not belong to the mortgagor. It was further contended that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage and that it was not a prudent act on the part of Tulsabai to mortgage the whole property when the former decrees were only against a part of the property. It was stated that the suit for personal claim or against the assets of the deceased Madhorao is barred by time.

The plaintiff denied all adverse allegations, and the case was tried on the following issues:—

1. (a) Did Madhorao execute the two mortgage-deeds, dated 28th September, 1873, and 16th July, 1881, and did the present plaintiff obtain two mortgage decrees on those mortgage deeds alleged by the plaintiff?
- (b) Did the present plaintiff get those two mortgage deeds to his share by partition with his brother as alleged by the plaintiff?
2. (a) Did Tulsabai execute the mortgage-deed in suit in favour of the plaintiff?
- (b) If so, was the document taken from her by the plaintiff under fraud and deceit as alleged by defendant No. 1 in para. 4 of his written statement?
- (c) Whether it was a prudent act on the part of the lady to execute the present mortgage-deed, instead of paying off the two decrees?

- (d) Did Tulsabai require Rs. 300 for pilgrimage and cultivation of the field and was it a legal necessity and so the other debt?
- (e) Did the plaintiff make enquiry about the legal necessity at the time of mortgage-deed in suit?
3. (a) Did the mortgage site at Ohikhli belong to defendant No. 1's adoptive mother Tulsabai at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit?
- (b) If not, is it a fraud on registration and whether the mortgage-deed is invalid?
4. (a) In case the mortgage deed is held invalid, is the present suit within time by virtue of acknowledgment as alleged by the plaintiff, or it requires to be written on stamp paper?
- (b) Whether it is binding on the minor defendant No. 1?
5. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled and against whom?"

The lower Court finds that the two deeds of the last century are proved and also that the plaintiff sued on them and obtained decrees. It is also found that Tulsabai executed the mortgage-deed in suit in favour of the plaintiff, and that the deed was properly attested, but the Court finds that the site at Ohikhli did not belong to Tulsabai at the time of the mortgage, and belonged to the writer of that document Ambadas Laxman and still belongs to him, it being simply inserted in the mortgage-deed to enable that document to be registered at Ohikhli. It is also found that it was a fraud on the registration department, and the document is invalid as far as it affects immoveable property. It was not a prudent act on the part of Tulsabai to mortgage additional 7 fields of the value of Rs. 6,500 for the debt due on the two mortgage-deeds, nor was the condition of foreclosure a prudent one. As regards the Rs. 300, it was found that the plaintiff did not make enquiry about the loan and is not binding on defendant No. 1. Dealing with the question whether the registration is valid, so far as the personal decree was concerned, the Judge finds that it is, and enables the mortgagee to sue for his money within 6 years as provided by Art. 16 of the Limitation Act. There was a personal covenant for re-payment of the money, and there was a mention in the deed of adoption as regards the plaintiff's two decrees, and Tulsabai made the 1st defendant liable for the money. Tulsabai was found to be the de jure guardian of the person and property of the minor at the time, and as such she could have acknowledged the plaintiff's debt on the two decrees on 22nd March, 1920, i.e., within 6 years from the date of the suit. Acknowledgment of the debt was held to be for the benefit of the minor. The suit for personal claim was found to be within time. Deducting the sum of Rs. 300 and its damdupat, Rs. 5,800 was found due on the mortgage in suit and that sum was decreed against defendant No. 1 to the extent of the ancestral assets of his deceased father Madho.

Against that decree the present appeal has been filed by the 1st defendant. The plaintiff has filed cross-objections, but these have not been argued and, therefore, need not be discussed.

I found it necessary to ask for a decision by a Bench of this Court on the following question:—

"Where a mortgage deed has been fraudulently registered in a wrong district by including land not intended to be mortgaged, is the registration good so far as a personal covenant contained in the deed is concerned?"

The finding of the Bench is that no contract contained in the deed can be considered to be validly registered.

The appellant here follows the reasoning given by the lower Court for its findings that the site at Ohikhli did not belong to Tulsabai but to Ambadas, and that the insertion of the site in the mortgage-deed was not meant to affect that property but was merely made to allow the document to be registered at Ohikhli; and it is contended that under the circumstances no personal decree can be passed and the whole suit must be dismissed.

For the respondent it is contended that unless it can be shown that deliberate fraud has been committed on the Registrar, the document registered must be presumed to be correct [Gangamoyi Debi v. Troiluckhya Nath Chowdhry (4)]: to start with, there is a presumption that the registration is correct and that it is necessary to prove that the mortgagee was a party to the fraud before the registration can be held to be ineffective, months before the execution of the mortgage-deed. This is a most improbable story. Tulsabai had a house at Amdapur. She was living at Chikhli with her brother Dajiba. There was absolutely no necessity for her to invest in this site. She did not buy a house with it; and it is not denied that from the date of the mortgage to the date Ambadas was examined in Court that site remained in his possession. He says Tulsabai let him have it, but why should she then pay Rs. 75 for it? It is admitted that Ambadas' latrine has been on the site for some 5 years. This person is a distant connection of Tulsabai and is indebted to the family to which the plaintiff belongs. I have no doubt that the lower Court's finding as to the ownership of the Chikhli site at the time of the mortgage in suit is correct. It is obvious that the plaintiff was vitally interested in obtaining the mortgage-deed as the sale of the field comprised in his two decrees would not have satisfied his debt. Dajiba, the brother of Tulsabai, seems to have been on the side of the plaintiff, and as Tulsabai was ill at the time and was an old lady of about 80, it is obvious that she could be induced to accept anything that Dajiba proposed. It was clearly not to her interest to execute this fresh mortgage: she lost greatly by doing so. She mortgaged far more than there was any need to. Her age made the journey to Amdapur, within whose registration circle the rest of the property was situated, difficult and dangerous. At that place resided the next reversioner of the property by name Pandurang, and it would be difficult to conceal from him the object of the old lady's visit, and there is little doubt that he would have strenuously opposed the execution of the mortgage. To register at Chikhli would mean that some property in that registration circle must be inserted in the document. Hence the inclusion of the Chikhli site. This site was bought by Ambadas Laxman, the writer of the mortgage-deed, for Rs. 75 on 13th March, 1912. Ambadas' story is that he sold it to Tulsabai some 8 months before the execution of the mortgage-deed. This is a most improbable story. Tulsabai had a house at Amdapur. She was living at Chikhli with her brother Dajiba. There was absolutely no necessity for her to invest in this site. She did not buy a house with it; and it is not denied that from the date of the mortgage to the date Ambadas was examined in Court that site remained in his possession. He says Tulsabai let him have it, but why should she then pay Rs. 75 for it? It is admitted that Ambadas' latrine has been on the site for some 5 years. This person is a distant connection of Tulsabai and is indebted to the family to which the plaintiff belongs. He was the very person necessary to join in a conspiracy of this nature to enable the document to be executed at Chikhli. The oral sale in favour of Tulsabai has not been established. The fact that, though he had the correct area of the site in his own sale-deed, it was not correctly given in the mortgage-deed also points to there being no intention of letting that document operate on the site. The boundaries in the deed of sale by which Ambadas purchased and in the mortgage-deed also do not agree. It would be unlikely that a man who is said to have purchased a site to put his second son on it should an year afterwards dispose of it, except under pressing circumstances. Dajiba, who is said to have been present at the time of the oral sale, denies that that took place; and Krishnarao (D. W. No. 3), Secretary of the Sanitation Committee at Chikhli, states that the site belongs to Ambadas. Further, possession not being transferred under the oral sale, that sale would be invalid. The plaintiff's own statement shows that there was some discussion about the ownership of the site before it was included in the document and it is significant that in the present case the plaintiff should have instructed his Pleader that, in case it be proved that the Chikhli site did not belong to Tulsabai, a personal decree against defendant No. 1 was to be asked for. The plaintiff says that Tulsabai told him on enquiry that the site belonged to her and was purchased from Ambadas and that Ambadas having confirmed that statement he was satisfied as to Tulsabai's ownership. It is perfectly clear that the inclusion of the Chikhli site, which did not belong to the mortgagor but to Ambadas, in the mortgage-deed was to allow registration to take place at Chikhli.

It is contended that even if this is so, there is nothing to show that the plaintiff was aware of this fact or that he knew that the site was Ambadas', or to show that as far as he was concerned there was any fraud. Now, fraud is difficult to prove by means of direct evidence. It can usually only be established by the circumstances surrounding the case. The site is about 100 yards from the plaintiff's house. Any real enquiry would have shown him that the site did not belong to Tulsabai. The site was of little value and more than sufficient immoveable property had been mortgaged to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. In these circumstances it is likely that a site said to be worth Rs. 75 would have been included in the document, except for the purpose of giving the Chikhli Registrar Jurisdiction? It seems to me inconceivable that the plaintiff was not a party to the insertion of this site in the mortgage-deed. Everything points to his being a party in the fraud on the Registrar. This being so, that registration is invalid.

Now, the mortgage was executed on 8th October, 1914, and the covenant was that re-payment was to be made in November, 1915. There is no proof of any acknowledgment between 1915 and 1918 to extend limitation. The suit was filed on 2nd May, 1924, i. e., more than 6 years after the agreed date of re-payment. No personal decree can, therefore, be passed in the suit. The result is that the whole suit must stand dismissed. I set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs. The plaintiff will pay the appellant's costs.

The cross-objections also stand dismissed. The plaintiff will bear the costs of the cross-objections.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. J. Sen has been heard for the appellants. Their contention is that s. 28, Limitation Act, does not apply to the right in a tenancy, although s. 104 (4), Tenancy Act, 1920, says in so many words that it does. That is at first sight preposterous, but in support of it I have been referred to the reasons stated by one of the Judges of this Court in Banau v. Ranjitsingh (1). The basis of the whole of the reasoning which is given at considerable length appears to be in the statement that "the Legislature have deliberately abstained from extending the provisions of s. 28, Limitation Act, to the tenancy lands in the Central Provinces."

The statement seems to have been made without reference to s. 104 (4), Tenancy Act, 1920, of which there appears to be no mention in the judgment. The appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondent.

There is a distinction between a customary right and a customary easement; for the acquisition of the former no particular period of enjoyment need be proved. [p. 523, col. 1]

In order to establish a customary right to do on the land of another acts, which, in the absence of any custom, would be acts of trespass, the enjoyment must have been so acquiesced in, by the owner, as to give rise to the inference, that originally by agreement or otherwise, the usage had become a Customary Law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Whether from the proved or continued user over 20 years, such an acquiescence on the part of the owner, as would give rise to a presumed grant, could be inferred is a question of law on which a second appeal would lie. [ibid.]

A user for a period of 20 years is sufficiently long to enable the Court, in the absence of a protest from the person concerned, to draw the legal inference that the exercise of the right must have had a lawful origin in a grant. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—A portion measuring 75 acres of the plaintiff's absolute occupancy holding has been recorded, at the recent Settlement of the village in which it is situated, as gair mumkin land, because the defendants, who form the community of Kumbhars of the village, make use of the earth of that portion for making pots. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the customary right to appropriate the earth of the said portion is not proved to be reasonable even though the length of the period of the enjoyment as found by that Court is 20 years. The learned District Judge is right in holding that the right claimed by the defendants is not in the nature of an easement acquired by custom. The defendants-appellants accept this finding as correct, but contend that on the very findings arrived at by the Court, it should have been held that from the length of continued user for 20 years a lawful grant of the right could be presumed in the circumstances of the case.

There is a distinction between a customary right and a customary easement. For the acquisition of a customary right no particular period of enjoyment need be proved. What the defendants pleaded was a local custom which entitled them to commit on plaintiff's land acts which, if there had been no such custom, would be acts of trespass. In order to establish a customary right to do such acts on the property of another, the enjoyment must have been so acquiesced in by the owner as would give rise to the inference that originally by agreement or otherwise, the usage (of which the repeated and open enjoyment is only a proof) had become a Customary Law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned. Whether, from the proved or continued user for 20 years, such an acquiescence on the part of the owner, as would give rise to a presumed grant, could be inferred would be a question of law on which it is open to this Court to entertain a second appeal. I think that the period of 20 years is sufficiently long to enable this Court to draw the legal inference that the exercise of the right to appropriate and carry away the earth for making pots must have had a lawful origin in a grant; otherwise, the owner would not have kept quiet over it; surely he would have protested against such user. In a case decided by the Patna High Court in Bikoo Mahton v. Narayan Sahu (1) the right of the inhabitants of a village to take earth from a piece of waste land to repair their houses after inundations was affirmed as being not unreasonable. In Mohidin v. Shivlingappa (2) where the plaintiff sued for an injunction to restrain the defendants from exercising the customary right, which they, as members of a certain section of the Muhammadan community, had been for many years in the habit of exercising, by burying their dead near the Darga in plaintiff's land, it was held that such a right was recognized as a local custom, especially as it was confined to a limited class of persons and a limited area of land. The following observations occurring at page 671* of that report sufficiently meet the learned District Judge's objection against the custom pleaded in the present case being regarded as reasonable:—

"Next we have to consider the second objection and say whether this custom of burial can be disallowed as unreasonable. We hesitate to arrive at such a conclusion. Amongst all races that bury their dead, this right of burial in a particular locality is one that is most dearly prized, and although the plaintiff's land may be rendered practically useless, if these tombs are multiplied exceedingly, the contingency seems too distant to justify the Courts in summarily putting an end to the right. In Hall v. Nottingham (3) the possibility that the custom there set up might have the effect of taking away from the owner of the freehold the whole use and enjoyment of his property, was not thought a sufficient ground for disallowing it. If a custom which allows all lawful games to be played on another person's land at all times of the year is not an unreasonable custom, it seems impossible to hold that the limited custom established by the defendants is bad. The criterion of 'reasonableness' by which the case of Lutchmeput Singh v. Sadaulla Nashyo (4) was decided, may have been a good one as regards the alleged right of an indefinite number of persons to fish in the Bhils of a private owner; but it cannot be extended as a matter of law to all customs; for, as shown in Hall v. Nottingham (3), a custom may be good though its exercise may have the effect of depriving the owner of the soil of the whole use and enjoyment of his property. Here the defendants are entitled to claim for a limited class the right of burial in one corner of a field near a Darga. The mere possibility that after many years the number of tombs may have increased so much as to deprive the owner of the use of his field, or of a large portion of it, seems too remote to enable us to describe as unreasonable the custom in dispute."

I entirely concur in these observations and say that the custom pleaded is not unreasonable for the reasons given above by the Bombay High Court and that it is a valid custom which must be upheld in the interest of the whole village community.

It is also argued, and I think rightly, that the user which is proved in this case is not in the nature of a mere license but is a license coupled with a grant. The right to excavate the earth and to carry it away for the purpose of making pots would, in my opinion, be in the nature of a benefit to arise out of land or amount to an interest in land, and as such it would make the license irrevocable at the option of the owner of the land.

For these reasons I reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court and dismiss the suit with costs to be paid by the plaintiff in all three Courts.

Where a reference to arbitration is made during the pendency of a suit without the intervention of the Court the award made by the arbitrators can be given effect to as if it was an adjustment, by common consent, of the matter in dispute in the pending suit. Paragraph 20 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code cannot override the general power given to parties under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, to adjust their dispute by a lawful compromise at any time after the institution of the suit. [p. 526, col. 1]

In a suit for a mere declaration it is open to the parties by adjustment or compromise to go beyond the scope of the suit and the Court is competent to pass a decree in terms of the award even though it requires one of the parties to pay a sum of money to the other and to embody such a direction in the operative portion of the decree. [p. 526, col. 2.]

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present appellant instituted Suit No. 12 of 1927 in the Court of the Second Additional District Judge, Akola, against the present respondent for a declaration that the accounts between them were settled, and that his liability thereunder did not extend beyond a certain amount. During the pendency of the suit, the parties thought fit to refer the matters in dispute between them to the arbitration of a private arbitrator. This they did without the knowledge and consent or intervention of the Court. The reference and the arbitration proceedings and even the award were made, completed and declared and even partly given effect to before the date fixed for the hearing of the suit which was 16th August, 1927. The result was that when the plaintiff-appellant's suit came on for hearing, on that date, the defendant-respondent produced the award and, by a formal application made to the Court, prayed that the same be filed and a decree in terms thereof be passed in his favour. The Court took down statements and heard the parties and recording the terms of the award passed a decree in terms thereof.

This appeal is against the decree so passed in terms of the award on the basis of the defendant's application. The reference to the arbitrator not having been made through the intervention of the Court, it is contended that the Court was not competent to pass any decree on the basis of the award. The only provision under which it could have been filed and made the rule of the Court was, we think, para. 20 of Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code. The application made by the defendant-respondent on 16th August, 1927, could have been treated as one so made, but the Court failed to notice the particular provisions under which it could be entertained and to register it as a suit. However, this omission does not invalidate the decree as we will presently show.

As pointed out by this Court in Namdar-khan v. Nanhoo (1), if in a pending suit the parties go to a private arbitrator without the consent of the Court, the award cannot be enforced as an award, but there is nothing to prevent the Court from giving effect to the award, as if it was an adjustment by common consent. We are of opinion that the power given by para. 20 of Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, cannot override the general power given to parties under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, to adjust their disputes by a lawful compromise at any time after the institution of the suit.

It is, however, contended before us that the terms of the adjustment or compromise go beyond the scope of the suit which merely seeks a declaration and, therefore, it could not have been proper for the Court below to pass a decree incorporating the direction of the award to the plaintiff to pay a definite sum of Rs. 9,000 to defendant, in the absence of a suit by the defendant to enforce the award. We do not think this contention can prevail in view of the principle held applicable to such cases by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mehdi Ali Khan v. Ghansham Singh (2). There, as also here, the suit was one for a declaration, and, the defendant, who was the appellant before their Lordships of the Privy Council, was anxious, like the plaintiff-appellant in this appeal, to get out of the adjustment which was brought about during the pendency of the suit by the good offices of some third person who presumably filled the character of private arbitrators, like Shoji Jewandas of this case, to whom the parties to the litigation referred their differences for arbitration.

We may also note here that, the terms of the award of the arbitrator, or of the adjustment arrived at, by agreement between the parties acting for themselves, or, settled for them by a third party chosen by them, "are such as to be susceptible in every detail to an effective order in the nature of specific performance against any party to the compromise who seeks to escape from his obligations thereunder" as remarked by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It was, therefore, fully competent to the lower Court not only to record the entire compromise but also to pass a decree in accordance therewith. It is pertinent to note that the appellant has actually given effect to the award by making the immediate part payment of Rs. 3,700 and odd to the respondent which the award directed him to make and thus, so accepted its binding character, as to be precluded from seeking "to escape from his obligations thereunder."

It is, however, argued before us that the adjustment of the subject-matter of the present suit would not necessarily embrace an operative direction to pay a sum of Rs. 9,000 to the defendant, as, to pass a decree incorporating such an operative direction would be to travel beyond the scope of the suit; because, if the strict letter of O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, were followed, the operative part of the decree must be properly confined to the actual subject-matter of the existing litigation. The argument practically comes to this that, the direction to pay to defendant the amount in which the plaintiff is found indebted to him, though embodied in the decree, must be excluded only from the operative part of the decree, as the subject-matter of the suit as laid can admit of only a declaration as to the extent of such indebtedness being given. No doubt there is the authority of Hemanta Kumari Deb v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. (3) to support this contention, but we think that the latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mehdi Ali Khan v. Ghansham Singh (2) is a more direct authority, applicable even to declaratory suits, which justifies the inclusion of such direction even in the operative part of the decree, than the former one.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent's suit was dismissed in the first Court as the result of a perfunctory and careless judgment, in which neither the oral nor the documentary evidence was considered in a careful or accurate manner. The plaintiff, Musammatt Girjabai, appealed to the Court of the District Judge who decreed the plaintiff's claim in a reversing judgment in which the facts of the case are very fully stated.

There are, in reality, only two questions involved in the present second appeal and, on neither of these, has the appeal any chance of success. The first point urged is that the plaintiff, although technically appointed lambardar of patti No. 1 is not, in reality, such, inasmuch as the two widows of Piraji are, in reality, the owners of their deceased husband's share, and the present plaintiff is not, in reality, an owner but is, at the best, a mere reversioner. It is perfectly true that, under s. 187, sub s. (2) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act, 1917, a proprietor must be appointed lambardar and it may be that the appointment of the present plaintiff-respondent as lambardar will be found to be invalid when questioned in due course of law in the Civil or the Revenue Court, as the case may be, by the real proprietor of the share, but it does not seem to me that, as between the present appellant and the plaintiff-respondent, this question arises at all, in view of the admitted fact that, rightly or wrongly, Musammatt Girjabai has been appointed lambardar as well as of the proved and admitted fact that the plaintiff is at present in possession of Piraji's share. Until the plaintiff's appointment as lambardar is upset, she must be presumed to have all the ordinary powers of the lambardar under s. 188 of the Land Revenue Act and it follows ipso facto therefrom that she was entitled to sue in the present suit. I am in full agreement with the finding of the learned District Judge on this point and there is clearly no substance in the position taken up on behalf of the appellant in this connection.

The second allegation offered on behalf of the defendant-appellant is that the lower Appellate Court's finding that the alleged partition has not been proved is a wrong one. This is a mere attempt to induce this Court to interfere on second appeal with a perfectly legitimate finding of fact which has been arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. The proof of whether there has been a partition or not as between co-owners in a village is a very different matter from the question of whether there has or has not been a disruption of a joint Hindu family: cf. Red Prasad v. Nakchhed Prasad (1), but, even if it were open to this Court to interfere with the finding of fact in question, I can see no sufficient reason for doing so. I have been asked to lay special weight on the entries in the khasras (Exs. D-8 and D-9) which are, in reality, the only piece of evidence which would go to show that the fields in suit were expressly held by Ganpati. The khasras are, no doubt, prepared on the spot by the Patwari and, from one point of view, they might, therefore, be looked on as a most valuable piece of evidence, but, from another point of view, it would be equally possible to premise that they in this connection form a species of record which interested parties might induce Patwaris to make erroneous or incorrect entries in. The fact remains, however, that the jamabandis for the same year contained divergent entries which are not reconcilable with the entries in D-8 and D-9. What the village papers' evidence as a whole does suggest is that Raoji began to cultivate certain areas of banjar land and from time to time obtained leases therefor from Ganpati and paid him rent, but these facts are an wholly insufficient basis on which to hold that the partition has been established. Even if we assume that Dhondba is now manager on behalf of Ganpati, the omission to examine the latter on behalf of the present appellant is a significant one and still further it is almost absurd to suppose that the appellant can have known or had reason to believe that lists of partition were available which he could have arranged to produce in evidence. I further concur with the remarks of the lower Appellate Court in para. 3 of its judgment as regards the oral evidence on the question of partition. Very obviously there was insufficient material on record on which the District Judge could, with any certainty of fairness, have held that the partition had been proved.

There is no reason to interfere and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondent's costs. Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

Hindu Law—Partition between step-brothers—Mother, whether entitled to share—Effect of partition on prior debts.

In a partition between two step-brothers, the mother of one of them is entitled to a share equal to that of her son, i. e., to one-third of the property liable to be partitioned.

Padman Singh v. Subransi (1), followed.

Payments made towards debts reduce the divisible assets by so much and debts due before partition remain jointly due after it.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Betul, in Civil Appeal No. 22 of 1926, dated the 29th September, 1926.

Mr. P. C. Dutta, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. M. Dharmadhikari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is a clear finding in the judgments of both the Courts below that in or about the year 1902 the plaintiff Honia was given some part of the family property as his share of it and he left the family home. This finding is attacked only on the ground that in his plaint, filed on the 6th April, 1925, his age is stated to be thirty so that in 1902 he could not have been more than seven, which would make the finding impossible.

But the same plaint states Ohindhia's age to be thirty-five and Ohindhia is admittedly younger than Honia, and is the son of a woman whom her father did not marry till after the death of Honia's mother. The contention is worse than idle, being based on nothing but an admittedly incorrect statement made by the plaintiff himself. The finding is also inevitable on the evidence and it does not appear even that Honia was treated unfairly as what was left with his father and step-brother was burdened with debt, from which he was relieved.

The claim is still for a half of the estate, in the face of the obviously correct decision that Ohindhia's mother is entitled to an equal share with each of her sons, which is also stated to be the correct view of the law in the judgment of this Court in Padman Singh v. Subransi (1). If he were entitled to any share at all Honia could get only one-third. There has been considerable discussion and argument on the question of Honia's liability to contribute to debts already paid or still due. Neither question arose in the case. Payments made reduce the divisible assets by so much and debts due before partition remain jointly due after it.

The appeal will be dismissed and the appellant Honia will be ordered to pay the whole of the costs of both parties in all three Courts. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be thirty rupees.

Criminal trial—Prosecution coming to Court with incomplete case—Re-trial, legality of.

The prosecution is not entitled to ask for a re-trial where it comes to Court with an incomplete case which so far as it goes confirms the defence of the accused.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 5th August, 1927.

Messrs. P. K. Sen and D. N. Das, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The petitioner was convicted by the Magistrate of Patna City on a charge under s. 406 of the Indian Penal Code. He appealed to the learned Sessions Judge who set aside the conviction, but ordered a re-trial, and the present application is directed against that order of re-trial.

The charge was in respect of a cheque for Rs. 200 issued by one Masud Ahmad in favour of a firm Bhanamal-Gulzarimal in January, 1927. It appears that the petitioner had entered into a contract with Masud Ahmad to build an overbridge for a consideration of Rs. 600, and in connection with that contract this cheque was issued to him. The case for the prosecution is that he was to supply iron girders for the overbridge from Bhanamal-Gulzarimal and did not supply them.

According to the evidence of the Munshi of Masud Ahmad the amount of the cheque given to the accused was part of the sum of Rs. 600. That was the sum for which he entered into the contract. If that is so, then the money was at the disposal of the petitioner to be used by him, at his discretion, in the work that he had to do, within a reasonable time. The other view is that as the cheque, although it was a bearer cheque, was drawn in favour of Bhanamal-Gulzarimal, Masud Ahmad had to look to that firm for the supply of his materials. He says in his evidence that it was agreed between the accused and himself that he should pay the price of the iron girders and the tee irons to Bhanamal-Gulzarimal who would supply the materials. The supply of the materials, therefore, lay with Bhanamal-Gulzarimal as soon as they were paid the money. Now, it was admitted by their manager in his examination that the accused paid Rs. 200 to them. It appears that they would not take the cheque itself, because there had been difficulty over an earlier cheque and consequently the petitioner had to cash the cheque and then pay them the money. The same witness says that the petitioner took delivery of certain goods from the firm either iron or cement. He could not say positively which without referring to his books.

Masud Ahmad in his evidence admitted that in January some sheet iron was delivered at his Kadam Kuan house but he did not know where the Munshi purchased it from.

These two points of uncertainty are the ground of the order of re-trial. The prosecution had notice from the fact that the cheque had been issued in favour of this firm, that the firm's manager would be an important witness and they ought to have made a thorough investigation of the firm's books before the trial began and Masud Ahmad's books ought also to have been investigated. If they came into Court with an incomplete case which, so far as it went, confirmed the defence of the petitioner, then it can hardly be said that they are entitled to a re-trial.

In the evidence as it stood there were good grounds for an acquittal, and this does not seem to me a proper case in which an opportunity should be given to the prosecution to fill up gaps in the evidence by a re-trial.

I would, therefore, allow this application, set aside the order of re-trial and direct that the petitioner be released from bail.

Jwala Prasad, J.—I agree.

Criminal trial—Burden of proof—Duty of prosecution—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898).

s. 439—Acquittal of persons not before High Court, legality of.

An area of 1100 bighas of land was attached and the petitioners along with certain boys were charged with having cut ghalasi within that area. It was established in evidence that prior to the date of the occurrence the petitioners had obtained delivery of possession, of a portion of the attached area extending to 345 bighas. The Courts below assumed that unless the accused proved that they cut from within the area of the 345 bighas they must be held to have committed theft and convicted the accused. The boys were released after admonition under s. 562A of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that the conviction was wrong inasmuch as the burden of proving that the area from which the ghalasi was cut was not within the area of 345 bighas in the possession of the petitioners was on the prosecution and the prosecution had failed to discharge that burden;

(2) that the High Court had jurisdiction, in the circumstances, to set aside the conviction of the boys also even though they were not before the High Court.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Muzaffarpur, dated the 23rd July, 1927, affirming that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Hajipur, dated the 31st May, 1927.

Mr. Rai T. N. Sahay, for the Petitioners.

The Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule has been issued to consider the propriety of the conviction and sentence on these eight petitioners who with nine others were convicted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Hajipur of offences under ss. 379 and 143 of the Indian Penal Code. The petitioners were sentenced to fine under s. 379, no separate sentence was passed under s. 143. The other nine accused being boys were released after admonition under s. 562A of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The finding of the trial Court was that the prosecution witnesses had established that "the seventeen accused cut khatha (ghalasi) from within 1100 bighas of attached land in Raghupur Diara near pillars Nos. 16 and 17 on the pretence that it was their decreed land." The District Magistrate dismissed the appeal of the petitioners.

There can be no doubt that an area of 1100 bighas was attached and that the petitioners and the boys with them cut ghalasi within that area. But it has also been established in the evidence that prior to the date of occurrence the petitioners obtained delivery of possession of a portion of the attached area extending to about 345 bighas. The Courts below have assumed that unless the petitioners proved that they cut from within the area of 345 bighas they must be considered to have committed theft. But it is for the prosecution to establish all the ingredients of the offence punishable under s. 379. Neither party has shown where the 345 bighas lay. The Crown has not shown that the petitioners were not cutting within that area of which they had obtained delivery of possession. In the circumstances the prosecution has, prima facie, failed to establish that the petitioners were removing the moveable property of other persons dishonestly out of the possession of the latter—it is quite possible that they were taking their own property without any dishonesty. The learned Government Advocate contends that it was for the petitioners to prove that they had cut from within the area released to them. For the reasons I have already given I am unable to accede to the contention. As the assembly of which they were members is not shown to have been unlawful, the conviction under s. 143 also is unsound. Accordingly no offence has been established against these petitioners and the Rule must be made absolute. Their conviction and sentences are set aside and the fines, if paid, will be refunded. The nine boys who were convicted along with the petitioners are not before this Court but this Court has jurisdiction in the circumstances to set aside their convictions and as on the foregoing findings no offence has been established against them, their conviction and the order in respect of them under s. 562A are set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 353, 537—Failure to examine witnesses in accused's presence—Illegality—Waiver, effect of.

Failure to examine the witnesses in the presence of the accused vitiates a trial except in cases mentioned in s. 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is not a mere irregularity which can be cured under s. 537 of the Code or by waiver on the part of the accused's Pleader. [p. 531, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 8th January, 1927, modifying that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sitamarhi, dated the 4th December, 1926.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar (with him Mr. D. L. Nandkeolyar), for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. M. Agarwala, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Scroope, J.—The petitioner has been convicted under s. 211/109 of the Indian Penal Code for abetting one Ramawtar Singh in bringing a false case against Matna Kabari of Madhkaul and was sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sitamarhi. His sentence was reduced on appeal to nine months by the Sessions Judge of Muzaffarpur. He has now filed a revisional petition in this Court and the first contention taken on his behalf by the learned Counsel arises in the following way.

Two separate complaints were lodged in this case against the petitioner and Ramawtar Singh who has been tried and convicted under the substantive section. It appears that the latter's case was taken up first and on the 13th September, 1913, witnesses were examined in that case. The next date was the 23rd September and on that date we find the following order—

"The case against Ramawtar should have proceeded jointly with the case against Bigan. The evidence against the accused is exactly the same as that against Ramawtar. Bigan is present. The evidence against Ramawtar is read out in Hindi to the prosecution witnesses who admit that it is correct. Bigan has heard all the evidence. His Mukhtear who appears also for Ramawtar raises no objection and files a petition for one cross-examination. Charge under s. 211/109 framed against Bigan."

Thus there was no compliance with the provisions of s. 353 of the Criminal Procedure Code which requires that with certain exceptions which are not in question, the evidence should be taken in the presence of the accused or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his Pleader. Admittedly there was no order of the Court dispensing with his personal attendance for the purpose of this trial and in fact it appears that on the 13th September when the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses in Ramawtar's case was taken he was not present at all in Court but was giving evidence in the Sessions Court. Then on the subsequent day the evidence in Ramawtar's case was read over to him as described above. The contention then that the trial is bad on this account must succeed.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate urges that the irregularity is one that is cured by s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code as it does not fall within the irregularities described in s. 530. In my opinion the irregularity is of the class referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Subrahmanya Ayyar v. King-Emperor (1) where the view expressed is that the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial is more than an irregularity. When the Code enacts positively that evidence should be taken in a certain way it cannot be said that a contravention of this express provision comes within the description of error, omission or irregularity and I do not think that the waiver of any objection by his Mukhtear on this score improves the case for the prosecution. To accept the view that such waiver can get over disregard of an express provision of the Code would open the door to all kinds of irregularity and defects in procedure. The trial must be held to be bad on this account and the application must succeed and the conviction and sentence of the petitioner must be set aside.

As regards the question of re-trial there is an absence of direct evidence connecting the petitioner with the filing of the criminal case. The petitioner's case throughout has been that he sent Aklu and not Nathuni to realise money from Ramawtar whereas Ramawtar's case is that Nathuni was sent. Had there been a conspiracy between them as found by the lower Courts, I think this evidence would have been identical on this question. The circumstances, of course, are gravely suspicious against the petitioner, but taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration and that the petitioner has already served a certain amount of imprisonment, I do not think that it is a fit case in which to direct a re-trial.

Civil revision from an order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Patna, dated the 26th of April, 1927.

Messrs. Janak Kishore and Kedar Nath Varma, for the Petitioners.

Mr. B. C. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners instituted the suit out of which the present application arises for a declaration of their title in respect of one-third share of certain joint family properties which they alleged to have purchased under a deed of sale, dated the 9th of May, 1925, executed by the defendant No. 8 Bandhu Lohar and for partition. The defence was that Bandhu Lohar was not a member of the family and had no right to execute the conveyance and that the plaintiffs acquired no title under the deed of sale.

The matter in dispute between the parties was referred to the arbitration of five arbitrators, viz., Tapesar Singh, Wazir Alum, Bhiku Mian, Harprasad Singh and Alamat Ali. On the 14th of February, 1927, an award was filed in Court which was dated the 10th of February, and was signed by three of the arbitrators, but was not signed by Alamat Ali, and it purported to be signed by Harprasad Singh by the pen of Tapesar Singh. Objections were taken to the award by the petitioners. One of the objections was that the award was invalid inasmuch as it had not been signed by all the arbitrators. The other objections were that the reference was bad inasmuch as the guardian ad litem of one of the minor defendants had not signed the application for reference and that the award was invalid on account of the misconduct of the arbitrators who had antedated the award and it was not made on the date on which it purported to have been made.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the guardian ad litem did join in the reference although he did not sign the application for reference. He has also found that there was no misconduct on the part of the arbitrators and that the award filed was the award unanimously made by all the arbitrators. As regards the question relating to the validity of the award on account of the absence of the signatures of two of the arbitrators, the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that all the arbitrators agreed in making the award and had come to the decision which was ultimately embodied in the written document, but that Alamat Ali had to go away before the award was written as he had to attend his office, and as regards Harprasad Singh, it was found that his signature was made by Tapesar Singh at his request. Now para. 10 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code provides that where an award in a suit has been made, the persons who made it shall sign it and cause it to be filed in Court. There is a distinct statutory provision that the award must be signed by the persons who made it. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the writing out of the award was a ministerial act and, if all the arbitrators agreed in the decision of the points referred to them and the formal award was written out in the absence of one or other of the arbitrators and it was not signed by some of them that did not invalidate the award. In my opinion the writing out of the award cannot be treated to be a ministerial act. The award embodies the decision to which the arbitrators came and the writing of the decision in a case cannot be treated to be a ministerial act. Even if the writing out of the award be a ministerial act, it does not become an award until it is signed by the arbitrators. It was open to them to change their mind upon further consideration when the written award was placed before them for signature. The provisions of para. 10 of the Second Schedule are based on sound judicial principles. Instances are not wanting where Judges have changed their minds when judgments dictated by them are placed before them for signature.

In Ramesh Chandra Dhar v. Karunamoyi

Dutt (1) one of the dissenting arbitrators who did not agree to the award had not signed the award and the award was filed in Court without the signature of the dissenting arbitrator, even then it was held that the award was invalid because it did not bear the signature of that arbitrator. This decision was referred to in this Court in Khudiram Mahto v. Chandi Charan Mahto (2) and apparently accepted as correct. Reference is made on behalf of the opposite party to the decision in Ram Narain Ram v. Pati Ram Tewary (3) where it was held that when the parties have agreed to abide by the decision of the majority of the arbitrators, an award cannot be set aside on the ground that it has not been signed by the minority. In that case no reference was made to the provisions of para. 10 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. But even assuming that the point of law was correctly decided in that case, it can be clearly distinguished from the facts of the present case, inasmuch as in that case there was a provision in the application for reference to arbitration that the award should be the award of the majority of the arbitrators and the want of signatures of the arbitrators who did not agree with the decision of the majority could not be held to invalidate the award which was made by majority and which by agreement of the parties, was to be considered to be the award of the arbitrators. In Dandekar v. Dandekars (4) three out of the seven arbitrators did not sign the award and their Lordships observed that the omission to take the signatures of the minority of the arbitrators to the document which formed the record of their award would not be fatal to the award. No reference appears to have been made in this judgment to the provisions of s. 516 of Act X of 1877 which was the Civil Procedure Code then in force which provided as para. 10 of the Second Schedule to the present Civil Procedure Code provides, that the award must be signed by all the persons, and with very great respect to the learned Judges, I am unable to agree to the proposition that the want of signatures of some of the arbitrators from the award does not invalidate the award. I am of opinion that this defect is

Mr. A. K. Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and S. C. Mazumdar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decision of the District Judge of Manbhum Sambalpur whereby he reversed the decision of the Munsif of Purulia and made a decree for a sum of money in favour of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff is a firm carrying on the business of commission agents at Balrampur in the District of Manbhum; and the defendant is a firm carrying on business at Sambalpur. The plaintiff claims a sum of money on account of brokerage, interest and other expenses in relation to certain transactions entered into under an agreement between him and the defendant firm by which the plaintiff was to buy and sell shellac at Balrampur for the defendant according to the latter's instructions.

The subject-matter of the suit relates to four transactions, the particulars whereof are set out in the judgment of the learned District Judge.

The plaintiff firm purchased shellac at Balrampur under instructions from the defendant and sold them on different dates. In the first transaction there was a profit; but in the remaining three transactions there was a loss, and according to the plaintiff he is entitled to a sum of Rs. 2,136-8 from the defendant on account of these transactions.

The only point taken in this appeal which requires our consideration is the question of limitation, the defence being that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff contended that the suit was governed by Art. 85 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act; whereas the defendant's contention was that it was governed by Art. 115. The plaintiff further contended that, even if the suit was governed by Art. 115, the bar of limitation was saved on account of certain acknowledgments made by the defendant contained in certain letters produced in the suit. The learned District Judge held that the letters produced by the plaintiff did amount to acknowledgment within the provisions of s. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, and the bar of limitation, therefore, did not apply. In this view of the case he did not think it necessary to decide the question whether the suit was governed by Art. 85 or by Art. 115 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that there was an acknowledgment within the meaning of s. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act in the present suit. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the respondent that the learned Judge was right in holding that there was an acknowledgment which saved limitation, and it is further contended that Art. 85 applied to the present suit, and that the question of acknowledgment did not, therefore, arise. In my opinion the contention of the learned Advocate for the respondent is correct. In the first place I am of opinion that Art. 85 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to the present suit. This Article provides for a suit for a balance due on a mutual, open and current account where there have been reciprocal demands between parties and the period of limitation is three years from the close of the year in which the last item admitted or proved is entered in the account, such year to be computed as in the account. The question is whether there was a mutual, open and current account between parties where there have been reciprocal demands between them.

The first transaction forming the subject-matter of the suit consisted of the purchase of 75 maunds of shellac on the 29th December, 1919, which was sold by the plaintiff on account of the defendant on the 25th January, 1920. The second item consisted of the purchase by the plaintiff of 100 maunds of shellac on the 19th January, 1920, and the third a purchase of 125 maunds of shellac on the 21st January, 1920. Both these quantities of shellac were sold by the plaintiff on account of the defendant on the 25th of February, 1920. The last item consisted of the purchase of 75 maunds of shellac on the 16th March, 1920, which was sold on the 25th April, 1920. If, therefore, the transaction between the parties amounted to a mutual, open and current account, then the period of limitation began to run from the close of the year 1920. The suit was instituted on the 3rd April, 1923, and was, therefore, within three years.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that the transactions between the parties did not amount to a mutual, open and current account. The question as to what constitutes a mutual, open and current account was considered by me in Fyzabad Bank, Ltd. v. Ramdyal Marwari (1) and there I held that a mutual, open and current account between the parties is such as consists in reciprocity of dealings between them and not merely of items on one side though made up of debits and credits. In such an account each party should be able to say to the other: "I have an account against you." Although a shifting balance is a test of mutuality its absence is not a conclusive proof against mutuality. These observations apply to the facts of the present case.

In the first transaction there was a profit amounting to Rs. 3,187-8 and there was, therefore, a balance in favour of the defendant against the plaintiff on account of that transaction. The subsequent transactions resulted in a loss and the balance on account of those transactions was in favour of the plaintiff. There was thus a reciprocity of demands between the parties and the account was not made up of items on one side. The defendant was in a position to say to the plaintiff at one time that he had an account against him. The parties were dealing under an agreement under which the plaintiff was acting under instructions from the defendant and was purchasing and selling shellac on account of the defendant, sometimes the transactions resulting in profits and at other times in loss. At one time the accounts stood in favour of the defendant, at another time in favour of the plaintiff, and the last item in this account which was a mutual, open and current account was entered on the 25th April, 1920, and was, therefore, within three years of the date of the suit.

Article 115 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act deals with cases relating to compensation for breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing registered and not specially provided for in the Act. This Article, to my mind, has no application to the facts of the present case. It is clear, therefore, that the suit was not barred by limitation. In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider as to whether there was an acknowledgment within the meaning of s. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. I am, however, of opinion that the view taken by the learned District Judge was correct and the letters relied upon by the plaintiff do amount to an acknowledgment.

The first letter, Ex. 4 (u), dated the 25th May, 1920, runs thus:

"Best compliments to brother Hiralalji Seochand Rai of Balrampur from Joharmalji Mathuradas of Sambalpur. You have written to me that you have drawn a hundi for Rs. 1,675 on me so my man will go to you within five or six days and on looking into your account he will settle your account.

Please take note of it. Please write to me in reply and let me know the market rates."

The second letter, Ex. 4 (k), dated the 4th June, 1920, runs thus:

"Best compliment of Joharmalji Mathuradas of Sambalpur to beloved brother Hiralalji Seochand of Balrampur. Why have you written in this way? I write to you that within five or seven days my man will come to you. By looking into your account he will settle your account. You should also see your account carefully if there be any mistake in the same. On seeing if there be any mistake or not the account will then be settled. You should take everything into consideration. Kindly write letters informing me of the market rate."

The word "settle" in these two letters is a translation of the vernacular word "chookti" which means "clear" or "satisfy."

The learned District Judge has interpreted these letters as an expression of willingness to pay what might be found to be really due on an examination of the accounts. He was of opinion that the defendant's readiness to settle the account after verification was an unequivocal acknowledgment of his indebtedness to the plaintiff. I am of opinion that the learned Judge was correct in his interpretation of those letters.

Various cases have been cited before us; but the true interpretation to be placed upon a document cannot be determined on a reference to the interpretations placed upon other documents, unless the words used are the same. There are numerous authorities in the books relating to acknowledgments having the effect of saving limitation; and what will have to be considered is, whether the letters under consideration contained either an express promise to pay or a clear acknowledgment of the debt which would imply a promise to pay, because, if a debt is acknowledged, it carries with it the legal liability to pay that debt. In Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (2) it was held by the Privy Council that an acknowledgment of liability, should the balance turn out to be against the person making it, is a sufficient acknowledgment under s. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, and an unconditional acknowledgment implies a promise to pay it. In Arumuga Chettiar v. Ramanadan (3) it was held that a statement contained in a letter that if upon a comparison of accounts any amount is found due by the writer of the letter he is prepared to pay it is a sufficient acknowledgment of liability under s. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. I am of opinion that the letters do contain an admission of liability and do amount to an acknowledgment.

(2) 33 C. 1047; 4 C. L. J. 94; 8 Bom. J. R. 501; 10 C. W. N. 874; 1 M. L. T. 199; 3 A. L. J. 525; 16 M. L. J. 300; 2 N. L. R. 130; 33 I. A. 165 (P. C.).

It is, however, contended on behalf of the appellant on the authority of Andiappa Chetty v. Devarajulu Naidoo (4) that where there is an acknowledgment of liability in respect of a right and it is sought to use such acknowledgment for starting a fresh period of limitation, the right acknowledged must be of the same description as the right which is the subject of the suit, and that in the present case the right acknowledged was only the right to the taking of an account and not to the existence of a debt. I am of opinion that this contention has no substance. The right acknowledged was the existence of a debt which might be found on the taking of an account and not the right to the taking of an account. Indeed there was no liability upon the defendant to render any account: the account was to be rendered by the plaintiff and there was no acknowledgment of any liability by the defendant to render an account.

The other cases cited on behalf of the appellant are not of any help in the decision of the present case inasmuch as they turn on the terms of the acknowledgment made in those cases which are not similar to the terms in this case. I am of opinion, therefore, that, even if the case was governed by Art. 115 and not by Art. 85 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, the suit was not barred by limitation.

PRABHU UPADHAYA—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Application for enhancement of sentence, when to be made—Expiry of sentence, whether ground for refusing interference.

In all cases where the sentence is considered by the prosecution to be inadequate, the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge, as the case may be, should be moved by the Police at the earliest possible moment after the trial and where possible, before the accused has served his sentence, although the fact that the sentence has expired before such action is taken is, in itself, no reason for refusing to interfere. [p. 537, col. 1.]

Reference made by the District Magistrate, Shahabad, dated the 7th November, 1927, recommending that a sentence passed on the 15th August, 1927, by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bhabhua, should be enhanced.

The Government Advocate and Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—Prabhu Upadhaya was tried on the 15th August last before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bhabhua for the offence of receiving stolen cattle knowing or having reason to believe that they were stolen and was convicted and sentenced under s. 411 of the Indian Penal Code to 45 days' rigorous imprisonment. The evidence shows that at about mid-night on the 2nd February last two chaukidars whilst going round the village on duty saw four bullocks being taken into Prabhu's house. Suspecting that they had been stolen one of the chaukidars kept watch on the house whilst the other went to fetch the Police from the Thana. When the Police arrived later they found the bullocks in Prabhu's house and these were subsequently identified by Alam Shah as those stolen from him on the previous night. The accused's case was that one Khedan Ahir brought them to his house and tethered them there and that he did not know they were stolen. The Magistrate found that although the accused may not have been a thief himself nevertheless in the absence of any satisfactory explanation of how the four bullocks came into his house which he must have had reason to believe were stolen he must suffer the criminal liability but having regard to his age and infirmity—he was suffering from cataract—he took a lenient view and sentenced him to 45 days' rigorous imprisonment as stated.

The case has been referred to this Court by the District Magistrate with a recommendation that the sentence should be increased under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It appears that the Police brought the matter to the notice of the District Magistrate on the 17th October with a view to enhancement of the sentence and on the 7th November the District Magistrate referred the case to this Court as stated. It will be noticed that the accused had served his sentence and had been released from prison some five or six weeks before the case was referred to this Court by the District Magistrate in November. From enquiries it appears that the result of the trial was made known to the Superintendent of Police before the end of August but no steps were taken to move the District Magistrate in the matter before the middle of October after the accused had been released from prison. In all cases where the sentence is considered by the prosecution to be inadequate the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge, as the case may be, should be moved by the Police at the earliest possible moment after the trial and certainly, where possible, before the accused has served his sentence. I am fully aware that there are many cases where a very short sentence is imposed in which it is impossible to move the higher Court before the sentence has expired, and the fact that the sentence has expired before such action is taken is, in itself, no reason for refusing to interfere. At the same time where the accused has been released after being imprisoned for six weeks or more and no action is taken during that time to move for an enhancement of sentence he may reasonably expect that no further action will be taken and that he has expiated his crime, and it is an additional hardship upon him if he should find afterwards that he has to go back to prison again for a further term. It would appear that there was regrettable delay in this case in the office of the Superintendent of Police in failing to bring the matter to the notice of the District Magistrate between the end of August and the middle of October which delay has not been accounted for. It may, however, be capable of explanation and I do not consider it necessary to add any further comment.

I do not think that in the present case we should allow this delay to influence our judgment if we thought that the sentence inflicted was altogether inadequate to the particular circumstances of the case and it must be admitted that the offence was a serious one. At the same time the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took into account the age and infirmity of the accused and in passing sentence has exercised his discretion in the matter. Had he not been influenced by these considerations, we should have felt bound to increase the sentence; but having regard to all the circumstances of the case we consider that the sentence should not be enhanced.

Mullick, J.—Having regard to the fact that the explanation of the trying Magistrate has not been taken and having regard to the other circumstances of this case, I agree that the Reference should not be accepted.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The plaintiff in this case sued the defendant as his tenant to recover rent in respect of a holding measuring 16 bighas 18 khatas 15 dhurs at the rate of Rs. 15 per bigha. The defence set up amongst others was that the rent was payable under contract entered into by the tenant in the year 1902 and expiring in the year 1910, that the original rent under that agreement was Rs. 15 for the whole holding for the term with a stipulation that on the expiry of the term in 1910 if the tenant should remain in possession the rent should be increased to Rs. 15 per bigha, and that this clause in the contract was by way of penalty and ought not to be enforced. It is further contended amongst other things that the bargain was unconscionable and that the defendant had been compelled to submit to these terms owing to undue influence on the part of the plaintiff.

It is unnecessary to deal with all the points that were raised in the lower Courts and which were decided against the defendant but the Munsif and the Officiating Subordinate Judge on appeal found that the stipulation of payment of higher rent was penal and, therefore, could not be enforced and agreed with the Munsif in decreeing the suit for Rs. 15 a year plus cesses as provided during the term under the original agreement.

The question which arises before us in this appeal is whether such a stipulation was penal or not. In my opinion the clause was not introduced into the lease by way of penalty. The material clause in the lease which we have had translated somewhat literally reads as follows: "After the expiry of the term I shall give up the land and I shall remove from possession and it will be open to the landlord without notice to settle the land with any one he likes." That clause is the usual one introduced into such leases but it is quite unnecessary. At the end of the term the tenant, unless he has acquired an occupancy right, which is not the case here, will be bound to give up the land and if he remains in possession he will be a trespasser and may be ejected by the landlord. It then proceeds: "Should under any circumstances the land remain in my possession without taking a fresh patta either a portion or of the whole, then I shall pay at the rate of Rs. 15 per bigha per annum for the entire land aforesaid whatever it may be." The words translated 'whatever it may be' are 'jo hoga'. It seems to me that a clause of that sort cannot be construed as a penal clause. The term came to an end by efflux of time in the year 1910 and the tenant was bound then to give up the land to the landlord. If he did not do so, he would be a trespasser. But under the terms of the lease he is given an opportunity to remain on the land as a tenant on payment of a rental of Rs. 15 per bigha. Such a clause is certainly not a penalty. It is not introduced into the lease to compel the performance of an act stipulated in the contract. It is merely an option given to the lessee which he may accept or reject as he chooses. The same question has arisen in this Court on more than one occasion and has been determined in the sense in which I have just indicated. Those cases do not seem to have been reported, but they are: Second Appeal No. 1135 of 1917, decided by Jwala Prasad, J., Second Appeal No. 992 of 1917, decided by the same Judge; Second Appeals Nos. 397 and 398 of 1919, decided by Adami, J., and whose decision on appeal was affirmed under the Letters Patent; Second Appeal No. 737 of 1919, decided by Adami and Bucknill, JJ.; and a recent case decided this year in Second Appeal No. 1602 of 1924 [Kuman Das v. Kachali Mandal (1)] by Mr. Justice Wort. In those cases the Court took the view in somewhat similar circumstances that a clause of this sort was not a penalty and could be strictly enforced.

It was further contended that the bargain itself was oppressive and unconscionable and obtained by undue influence on the part of the landlord. It may be that the stipulation is a hard one looked at from one point of view; but it is merely an option given to that tenant to retain the land in his possession if he likes at an increased rental which after all is a much better bargain to him than if no such stipulation were contained in the contract. The landlord could in that case legally eject him if he refused to go. It cannot, therefore, to my mind be said that there was anything unconscionable or oppressive about such a bargain. Moreover, it is found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court as follows: "There is absolutely no evidence worthy of credit to prove that the defendant was compelled to submit to the terms appearing in the kabuliyat or that any undue influence was exercised or could be exercised by the plaintiff in connection with it. The defendant himself does not even speak of any compulsion or undue influence." In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge of the lower Appellate Court is wrong in arriving at the conclusion that this stipulation in the contract was a penal one and that he ought to have passed a decree for rent at the rate claimed, namely, Rs. 15 a bigha.

The appeal will be allowed and in lieu of the decree passed there will be a decree for the amount claimed, namely, Rs. 1,084-6-0 which is the rent at Rs. 15 per bigha for the years in suit together with cesses. The decretal amount will carry interest from the date of the suit at six per cent. per annum until realisation. The appellant is entitled to his costs here and in both the Courts below.

Mullick, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10, cl. (2)—Addition of party—Rent suit against recorded tenants—Purchasers of holding, whether can be added as parties against plaintiff's will.

In a suit for rent against the recorded tenants, purchasers of the holding should not be added as parties against the will of the plaintiff inasmuch as the addition of such parties would involve the determination of a complicated question of recognition which is not appropriate for decision in a rent suit. A Court has no power to add such parties in a rent suit under O. I, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 540, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Munsif, First Court, Patna, dated the 15th June, 1927.

Mr. Izhar Hossain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Rajeswari Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The opposite parties Nos. 3 and 4 applied before the Munsif to be added as defendants in a rent suit brought by the petitioner against the recorded tenants on the ground that they had purchased the holding. The petitioner objected to having these defendants forced upon him, but the learned Munsif was of opinion that as the opposite parties Nos. 3 and 4 were entered in the khatian as being in possession they should be made defendants and an issue on the point of their recognition should be tried. The learned Vakil for the petitioner relies upon two decisions of this Court, namely, Satyadeva Sahay v. Jhamel Kuer (1) and Gananath Satpathy v. Harihar Pandhi (2). It is argued on the other side that there is no question of jurisdiction involved, and reliance is placed on the decision in a similar case in Sarju Mahton v. Bibi Bersatan (3). Order I, r. 10, cl. (2) gives the Court power to add as plaintiff or defendant any person who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, and that there is no jurisdiction to add a party in any other case. Now the question at issue was a simple question of rent and the recorded tenants were sued. The addition of the opposite parties Nos. 3 and 4 involves the determination of a complicated question of recognition which is not appropriate for decision in a rent suit. In my opinion, the addition of the opposite parties Nos. 3 and 4 was not the addition of any such party as the Munsif was empowered to add under O. I, r. 10 and his order was without jurisdiction.

The application must be allowed, and the order of the Munsif set aside. The petitioner is entitled to costs; hearing-fee one gold mohur.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 77—Non-delivery, whether constitutes 'loss'—Notice, whether necessary.

Non-delivery does not constitute loss within the meaning of s. 77 of the Railways Act and when non-delivery without more is pleaded no notice under s. 77 is required though it may turn out that the suit will fail for want of notice if it be established by the Railway Company that it is in fact a case of loss. If the Railway Company plead want of notice they must show that this case of non-delivery was a case of loss. [p. 542, col. 1.]

Messrs. N. C. Sinha, N. C. Ghosh and B. B. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Siveshwar Dayal and B. K. Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The respondents brought this suit for compensation for non-delivery of one out of four bales of cloth consigned to the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company at Bombay for delivery to them at Gaya on the East Indian Railway. The defence was that the goods were lost in transit and that the defendant Companies were protected by Risk Note B; and, further, that the suit was bad for want of notice under s. 77 of the Indian Railways Act within six months from the date of delivery of the goods to the defendants.

The Courts below dismissed the suit as against the East Indian Railway and gave the plaintiffs a decree for part of their claim as against the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, holding, inter alia, that, as this was a case of non-delivery where no loss was proved, s. 77 had no application. The case was remanded for a finding on the question of the service of notice under s. 77 and it has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that there is no proof of service of notice beyond the allegation in the plaint which not having been traversed in the written statement, must be accepted, namely, that notice was given to the agents of the defendant Companies on the 8th of December, 1921. The goods were consigned on the 11th of April, 1921, and three bales were delivered on the 19th of May, 1921. The suit was brought on the 11th of March, 1922. Consequently if notice was required under s. 77, the notice was out of time; but if no notice was required then the suit was properly instituted within the period limited by law.

The question for decision, therefore, is whether in a suit for non-delivery notice has to be given under s. 77 of the Act. In East Indian Ry. Co. v. Kali Charan Ram Prasad (1) it was held by my brother Jwala Prasad that s. 77 requires notice only in a case of a claim for compensation for loss, destruction or deterioration of goods and does not apply to a suit based upon compensation on account of non-delivery of goods, as apart from loss, destruction or deterioration of the same. But in Agent of the B. N. Ry. Co. v. Hamir Mull-Chagan-Mull (2) it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that non-delivery constitutes loss within the meaning of s. 77 and, therefore, service of notice under that section is essential in a suit for compensation for non-delivery. This decision has been followed in other cases.

The learned Advocate for the respondents contends, however, that this decision rests ultimately upon the view taken in Great Indian Peninsular Ry. Co. v. Jitan Ram (3) to the effect that 'loss' means loss to the owner and that as that view is no longer tenable since the decision of the Full Bench in Puran Das v. East Indian Ry. Co. (4) the ground of the decision that notice is necessary in cases of non-delivery has gone. In an elaborate judgment in East Indian Ry. Co. v. Jagpat Singh (5) Page, J., held that the term "loss" as used in the Risk Note and in the Chap. VII, of the Railways Act does not mean pecuniary loss to the owner of the goods, but means loss of goods by the Railway Company while in transit. And it has recently been decided by the Calcutta High Court in Great Indian Peninsular Ry. Co. v.

Jesraj Patwari (6) by Ranken, C. J., and Mitter, J. that in suits for damages for non-delivery of a part of a consignment delivered under Risk Note B, there is a necessity of proving that there has been in fact a "loss" of the part concerned and the initial burden of proving that is on the Railway Company. In Puran Das v. East Indian Ry. Co. (4) Das and Adami, JJ., agreed with the view of Mr. Justice Page and as this view differed from the decision in Great Indian Peninsular Ry. Co. v. Jitan Ram (3), they referred the case to a Full Bench. It was found by the Full Bench that on the pleadings the reference did not arise; but reliance is placed upon the judgment of my brother Jwala Prasad and on certain observations in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. This decision of the Full Bench has since been considered along with other decisions of the Court in two cases by two Division Benches of this Court; and in Nagendra Nath Sen v. B. & N. W. Ry. Co. (7) it was held that in a suit based on non-delivery the Railway Company must prove loss before they can claim the benefit of the Risk Note; and in Tarachand Marwari v. Bengal Nagpur Ry. Co. (8) that decision was followed; and it must be taken that since the decision of the Full Bench, the view in this Court has been that non-delivery does not constitute loss and, therefore, the decision in Great Indian Peninsular Ry. Co. v. Jitan Ram (3), is not conclusive of the present question. Now on the language of s. 77 a notice is only required in cases of claims for refund of an overcharge or for compensation for loss, destruction or deterioration. If non-delivery is not co-extensive with loss, it would seem to follow that notice is not required in a suit based on non-delivery; and obviously non-delivery includes much more than loss which is only one of several possible cases. Non-delivery may be due to misdelivery or to wilful detention by the Railway Company as well as to loss. As was pointed out by Page, J. in the case cited above, the true view would seem to be that the goods may or may not be lost and that proof of non-delivery is by no means a conclusive evidence as to whether or not loss has occurred. "Indeed I go further and beg leave to state that on such evidence alone an inference could not reasonably be drawn that the goods had been lost". It would seem to follow from this decision as well as from the language of the section itself that when non-delivery without more is pleaded no notice under s. 77 is required though it may turn out that the suit will fail for want of notice if it be established by the Railway Company that it is in fact a case of loss. A different view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Assam Bengal Ry. Co., v. Radhika Mohan Nath (9) where it was held that in a suit based on non-delivery notice under s. 77 is required, though there the question whether notice would be necessary where the goods were wrongfully detained was left open. That decision seems to have proceeded on an interpretation of "loss" which is inconsistent with the later decisions. In effect the question of notice seems to come back to the prior question of loss. If the Railway Company plead want of notice they must show that this case of non-delivery was a case of loss. The position, therefore, on the merits and on the technical question of notice is precisely the same, viz., the defendant company must plead and prove loss before it can rely either on the Risk Note or on want of notice.

The appeal is dismissed with costs including the costs of the first hearing and of the remand.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya confirming the decree of the Munsif and decreeing the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs and the defendant are the co-owners of Mauza Bagahi in Mahal Deokali, Touzi No. 4100, in the District of Gaya. Mauza Bagahi was partitioned several years ago. According to the defendant the partition took place about fourteen years ago. By this partition the village was formed into three takhtas: one of 9 annas forming the istamrari mukarrari interest of the plaintiffs Nos. 1—10 and of the defendant, another of 1 anna belonging to the plaintiffs Nos. 11—13, and the third of 6 annas belonging to the defendant exclusively. There are several ahars in this village. The southern most ahars is the Parao ahars. To the north of it is Genda ahar which the plaintiffs allege is not an ahar but is known as Kita Genda, whereas the defendant alleges that it is an ahar. To the north of it is the Ganghar ahar. To the north-east of Ganghar is Jharhi ahar to the north-west of Ganghar is Dangra ahar. The Parao, Genda, Ganghar and Dangra ahars are in the 6 annas takhta of the defendant, and the Jharhi ahar is in the 9 annas takhta belonging to the plaintiffs Nos. 1—10 and the defendant. To the south of the village Bagahi is Mauza Khutha.

The plaintiffs' case is that the system of irrigation in the village since time immemorial has been that water from the southern village, Mauza Khutha, came by means of a defined channel into the Parao ahar; that after irrigating the lands to the north of Parao ahar the excess water used to flow into the Ganghar ahar and from Ganghar ahar the water used to come to the Jharhi ahar from which the lands in the 9 annas takhta used to be irrigated. The plaintiffs complain that the defendant has raised the embankment of the Genda ahar and has placed Dhongas on the western pind of Genda ahar, with the result that the flow of water into the Jharhi ahar has been stopped and the defendant has been irrigating his lands to the west of Genda and Parao ahars which used never to be irrigated by the water from these ahars. The plaintiffs, therefore, ask for a declaration that on adjudication of the plaintiffs' title it be held that the defendant had no right to raise the height of the pind bearing No. 754 in Genda ahar and had no right to put a dhonga on the western pind, that the original height of the northern pind of Genda ahar was only $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet and that the defendant had wrongfully raised it to 5 feet; that it might be determined and declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to cut the pind No. 754 and to take water into the Ganghar ahar and thence into the Jharhi ahar and the Dangra ahar; that it might be declared that the defendants had no right to take water towards the west of the pind, in khasra No. 788 and they had no right to place the dhonga in the said pind No. 788; and they prayed that an order may be made to demolish the pind of the Genda ahar No. 754 and to reduce it to its original height of $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet and to remove the dhonga from the pind No. 788, and that a permanent injunction might be issued restraining the defendant from ever raising the height of the pind 754 to more than $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet or placing a dhonga in pind No. 788.

The defence of the defendant was that the surface water of Mauza Khutha used to come into the Parao ahar and the lands of the defendant (used to be irrigated thereby, thereafter the Genda ahar used to be filled with water from the Parao ahar and the water from the Genda ahar used to irrigate some lands of the defendant, thereafter the water of the Genda ahar used to go into the Ganghar ahar and thence into the Jharhi ahar and from it the lands of defendant as well as the plaintiffs in the 9-annas takhta used to be irrigated, after that the water of the Ganghar ahar used to go into the Dangra ahar and from it the lands of the defendant and some lands of the 9-annas takhta used to be irrigated, that the flow of water from Khutha into Parao ahar had been stopped on account of obstructions raised by the proprietors of Khutha, and that as the flow of water from Khutha into Parao ahar had been stopped, the Parao ahar is now filled by rain water and there is no sufficient quantity of water in the Parao ahar to flow into the Ganghar and the Jharehi ahars. The defendant stated that the height of the pind No. 754 has always been 5 or 6 feet, and that he has the right to take water from the Genda ahar to irrigate his lands towards the west of the pind No. 788. He also raised certain objections as regards limitation and as regards the suit being bad for non-joinder of the proprietors of Mauza Khutha, and he asserted that he had the right to discharge the excess water from his ahars into the Jharhi ahar, but that the plaintiffs had no right to compel him to do so and they were not entitled to take water from the Parao or the Ganghar ahars into the Jharhi ahar as a matter of right.

Various issues were raised, and the learned Munsif decided them all in favour of the plaintiffs. He found that there was never any dhonga from before in the western pind of the Genda ahar, and, that water from Parao ahar or Genda ahar never irrigated the lands lying to the west thereof, that the dhonga and the passages for taking the water were new and recently made by the defendant, that Genda was only a kita and not an ahar, that the height of the Genda pind was only 3 feet and that the defendant had wrongfully raised it to 5 feet, that the flow of the surface water of village Khutha had not been stopped and that it was still flowing into the Parao ahar, that the plaintiffs had established their right to take the water from the Parao ahar into the Jharhi and the Dangra ahars and that the defendant had no right to stop the same. He accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs directing that the height of the northern pind of kita Genda be reduced to its original height of 3 feet, that the dhonga or Karha or any other water passage in the western pind of Genda or Parao ahars will be closed, and that the defendant be perpetually restrained from irrigating his lands to the west of Genda and Parao from the water of the Parao or Genda ahars and from increasing the height of the pinds of kita Genda above 3 feet.

Against this decree the defendant went in appeal before the Subordinate Judge. The points urged by him before the Subordinate Judge are set out in detail in his judgment. One of the points taken before him by the defendant was that the plaintiffs had acquired no right to compel the defendant to let the excess or surplus water of his upper land flow over his land into the plaintiffs' ahar and that the plaintiffs had no right to reduce the northern pind of Genda or to prevent him from taking the water to the west of the Genda and Parao ahars. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that water from Khutha flows through a defined channel into the Parao ahar. He has also found that the defendant has no right to take water from kita Genda westward through the Dhonga and that the original height of the northern pind in kita Genda was 3 feet and that the defendant had no right to raise it to 5 feet. As regards the right of the plaintiffs to take the water into the Jharhi and the Dangra ahars, the learned Subordinate Judge has come to no finding. He observes as follows:—

"I think that when the plaintiff is entitled to the surplus water of kita Genda overflowing the pind of kita Genda to the north, the plaintiffs have a right to insist that the defendant should not increase the height of that pind."

He takes it for granted that the plaintiffs are entitled to take the surplus water of kita Genda. It is true that the learned Munsif came to the finding that the plaintiffs had acquired such right. Although the Munsif found that the plaintiffs had failed to prove any contract or prescriptive right by evidence, yet he was of opinion that it was to be presumed from the acts of the parties that the father of the defendant contracted or agreed to allow the excess surplus water to pass to Ganghar ahar through the newly constructed Parao ahar which he found had been constructed by the defendant's father, and that the system of irrigation has always been as alleged by the plaintiffs in the plaint. The Munsif, therefore, proceeded upon the assumption that the plaintiffs had acquired the right under a contract. This finding of the Munsif was challenged by the defendant in appeal before the Subordinate Judge but the learned Judge has come to absolutely no finding upon the point. As was observed by Dawson Miller, C. J., in Sarban v. Phudo Sahu (1), every land owner has a natural right to collect and retain upon his own land the surface water not flowing in a defined channel and to put it to such use as he may desire. He may also allow it to flow away in the usual course of nature upon the lower lands of his neighbour and cannot be bound to prevent it from so doing. There is no defined channel from the Parao ahar to the Ganghar ahar or from the Ganghar to the Jharhi or the Dangra ahars, and it is for the plaintiffs to prove how they have acquired the right to compel the defendant to discharge the water from the Parao ahar into the Ganghar ahar and from there into the Parao and the Dangra ahars. So long as the water remains on the defendant's land, he has every right to make whatever use of it he thinks proper, and even if he had never taken the water from these ahars to irrigate his land lying to the west of the Genda ahars or Genda kita and the Parao ahar, there is nothing in law to prevent him from doing so, unless and until the plaintiffs establish that they have acquired a right to compel the defendant not to do so. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that he has every right to convert his waste lands and bheeth lands into paddy lands, and there is no reason why he should not improve his estate if by so doing he does not infringe the right of any other person. I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge has failed to consider the very material issue as to whether the plaintiffs have acquired either by contract or by prescription any right to compel the defendant to discharge his water into the Jharhi and the Dangra ahars as although the defendant may have a right to discharge his excess water on to the plaintiffs' land, the plaintiffs cannot compel him to do so unless they prove that they have acquired such right.

The decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, must be set aside and the appeal must be remanded to him for rehearing and disposal according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Award—Direction by arbitrators that plaintiff should execute mortgage in favour of defendant for a certain sum and declaring cancellation of gift—Award, whether vague or indefinite—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 16 (2)—Trial Court, setting aside award and deciding case on merits—Appellate Court passing decree in accordance with award—Second appeal, maintainability of.

A suit for cancellation of a deed of gift and for recovery of possession of the property conveyed was referred to arbitration and the arbitrators gave an award as follows: "We decide the case in this way that by declaring the deed of gift cancelled and non-existent we award Rs. 680 due to the defendant from plaintiff for which the plaintiff shall execute within one month a deed of possessory mortgage in favour of the defendant. In the event of default the defendant shall be entitled to obtain execution of the possessory mortgage from the plaintiff through Court".

Held, by the Full Bench, that the portion of the award by which the arbitrators directed that the defendant should remain in possession of the property transferred until the plaintiff paid Rs. 680, was not objectionable either under the provisions of para. 12 or para. 14 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, and that it could not be set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in para. 15. [p. 551, col. 2.]

Per Hasan and Misra, JJ.—The provision in cl. (2) of para. 16 of Sch. II of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only where a decree has been passed by the trial Court in accordance with the terms of the award. Where, however, the Court of first instance sets aside the award and passes a decree on the merits and the lower Appellate Court sets aside that decree and passes a decree in accordance with the award, a second appeal is maintainable. An award cannot be set aside merely upon the ground that the decree passed by the arbitrators is not one which would have ordinarily been passed by the Court in which that suit was instituted. [p. 548, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 22nd November, 1926, reversing that of the Munsif, Hardoi, dated the 15th July, 1926.

The case came on for hearing before Misra and Hasan, JJ., who delivered the following dissenting judgments.

JUDGMENT.

Misra, J.—(October 14, 1927).—This is an appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents to recover possession over a share amounting to 10 biswansis of Thok Purab, Mahal Puri, situate in village Mahui Puri, District Hardoi.

The plaintiffs alleged that a deed of gift in respect of this share had been executed by plaintiff No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 1 on the 8th January, 1925. The plaintiffs are own brothers; and defendant No. 2 is the father of defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs wished to avoid this deed of gift on two grounds: firstly, that as plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 constituted a joint Hindu family, plaintiff No. 1 alone had no power to make a gift thereof; secondly, that the deed of gift had been obtained by undue influence, misrepresentation and fraud practised by defendant No. 2 in the name of his son, defendant No. 1. As stated above, the plaintiffs in their suit claimed possession by avoidance of the deed of gift.

The suit was contested by defendants on the ground that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 did not constitute a joint Hindu family but were separate from each other and plaintiff No. 1 was, therefore, competent to execute the deed of gift in respect of the property in suit. It was also urged in defence that the deed of gift had been executed by plaintiff No. 1 out of his free-will and consent and that no misrepresentation, undue influence or fraud had been practised upon him. It was further alleged that the defendants had helped plaintiff No. 1 with a sum of about Rs. 700 in order that he might be able to defend himself when he had been prosecuted in a criminal case in the Sessions Court, Hardoi, in which he was ultimately convicted and fined Rs. 200. It was also alleged that over and above this sum of Rs. 700 they had paid to plaintiff No. 1 Rs. 200 for payment of the fine which had been inflicted upon him. It was further alleged that they had also paid Rs. 400 to the different creditors of plaintiff No. 1.

The following issues were framed in the case:

1. Was the property in suit the joint family property of the plaintiffs at the time when Ex. I (the deed of gift) was executed?

2. Were the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 separate from each other and was the property in suit the separate property of the plaintiff No. 1, as alleged?

3. Was Ex. I (the deed of gift) executed under fraud and misrepresentation as alleged?

4. Did the defendants pay off any sum of money on behalf of plaintiff No. 1 and also to the plaintiff No. 1 himself? If so, how much and to what effect?

5. To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?

On the date fixed for evidence the parties applied to the Court that the entire case be referred to arbitration of five persons named in the application. They clearly stated in that application that they would willingly accept whatever decision the said arbitrators unanimously arrived at. The case was thereupon referred to arbitration, and the arbitrators filed their award on the 16th of April, 1926, under which they declared the deed of gift to be inoperative and to be treated as having been cancelled, but directed plaintiff No. 1 to pay Rs. 680. Plaintiff No. 1 was also directed to execute a mortgage-deed with possession and if he failed to do so, defendant No. 1 would be entitled to get it executed through Court. Parties were ordered to bear their own costs. It was also declared that plaintiff No. 1 was quite separate from plaintiff No. 2 and that the latter had, therefore, nothing to do with the property in suit.

On the 24th of April, 1926, the two defendants filed a joint application urging their objections against the validity of the award. Their chief objection was that the provision in the award directing plaintiff No. 1 to execute a mortgage-deed in favour of defendant No. 1 was legally invalid and incapable of being enforced, such a provision being beyond the power of the arbitrators to impose. They, however, clearly stated in the application that they had no objection if the Court passed a decree on the basis of the rest of the award.

The learned Munsif passed a very brief order on the 19th May, 1926, in the following terms:—

"The award is obviously illegal. I, therefore, supersede the order of arbitration and proceed with the suit myself." Having passed this order he tried the case himself and as a result of the trial he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Plaintiff No. 1 appealed and the appeal was heard by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hardoi. The chief contention urged in appeal was that the trial Court was wrong in having set aside the award and tried the case itself. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted that contention and disagreeing with the view of the trial Court held the award to be good and passed a decree in terms thereof.

The defendants have now come up to this Court in second appeal, and the chief contention urged by their learned Counsel is that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in passing a decree in accordance with the terms of the award since the award was invalid and no decree should have been passed on the basis thereof.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal could lie from the decree of the lower Appellate Court since it had been passed in terms of the award. Paragraph 16 of Sch. II of the Code of Civil Procedure was referred to in this connection. We are of opinion that a second appeal is maintainable where the Court of first instance sets aside the award and passes a decree on the merits and the lower Appellate Court sets aside that decree and passes a decree in accordance with the award. The mere fact that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is in accordance with the award is no ground for refusing the appeal. In our opinion the provision in cl. (2) of para. 16 of the Second Schedule applies only where a decree has been pronounced by the trial Court in accordance with the terms of the award. This appears to be clear from the entire scheme of the Second Schedule. We are supported in this view by two decisions of the Calcutta High Court, one reported in Shyama Charan Pramanik v. Prohad Durwan (1) and the other in Chintamani Aditya v. Haladhar Maiti (2). Both these decisions were under the previous Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) in which s. 522 was equivalent to para. 16 of the Second Schedule of the present Code. Mookerjee, J., held in the second case that the bar of appeal provided by s. 522 was applicable only when a decree had been made in accordance with the award by the Court of first instance and not when a similar decree had been made by a Court of Appeal in reversal of the order of the first Court setting aside the award. We, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 390.

I now proceed to discuss the appeal on the merits, and to examine the contention urged by the learned Counsel for defendants-appellants, viz., that the award is invalid in law and that, therefore, no decree should be passed on the basis thereof. We have heard the learned Counsel at great length and have taken time to consider our judgment. The conclusion at which I have arrived is that the award, dated the 16th April, 1926, is a good award and must be maintained.

The chief contention put forward by the learned Counsel for the appellants was that the arbitrators had in the body of the award declared that the deed of gift had been executed by plaintiff No. 1 (Bhikham Singh) for consideration (ba-muawiza) and that Rs. 630 had been spent by defendant No. 1 (Ganesh Singh) on behalf of the plaintiff No. 1 in paying off two decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi and a debt due to one Piare Lal bazaz (cloth seller) from him. It was urged that this portion of the award was inconsistent with the operative portion thereof where the arbitrators had declared the deed to be inoperative and directed it to be cancelled, asking plaintiff No. 1 to pay a sum of Rs. 680 and to execute a possessory deed of mortgage in favour of defendant No. 1. In respect of the property in suit. It was argued that if the deed of gift was executed for consideration it necessarily implied that the deed had not been executed under fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence and consequently the award of the arbitrators could not stand. I have given my best consideration to this argument and have come to the conclusion that it cannot be accepted. I am unable to interpret the word 'ba-muawiza' (with consideration) as used by the arbitrators to mean that the deed was a good one and its validity the arbitrators were going to uphold. Indeed, the operative portion of the award which just follows the passage containing this expression directly militates against this view. The award of the arbitrators should, according to the ordinary rule of law, be read as a whole and portions out of it cannot be picked up to show that the finding of the arbitrators was inconsistent with those portions. We are not concerned with the reasoning of the arbitrators; the only thing with which we are concerned is the operative portion of their award. In the Appendix attached to the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, Form No. 5 provides how an award is to be stated; and it appears to us from the said form that the only thing which arbitrators are required to state in their award is their conclusion and nothing else. It, therefore, appears to me that in order to find out what the award in this case was we have only to refer to the operative portion of the award; and the legality or illegality of the award must depend upon that portion and not upon anything else. It is possible that the arbitrators might have meant by the expression 'ba-muawiza' to mean that some money had been spent by defendants on behalf of plaintiffs. Issue No. 4 was expressly directed towards this matter. I do not, however, wish to pursue the matter further. It appears that plaintiff No. 1 is a young man of 20 years and defendant No. 2, the father of defendant No. 1 helped him with money and in other ways while a criminal case was going on against him in the Sessions Court of Hardoi. It is, under the circumstances, possible that defendant No. 2 might have acquired influence over plaintiff No. 1, and the deed of gift might have been the result of the said influence. I do not wish to arrive at any definite finding on the point since it is not necessary for us to do so. We are not entitled to sit in judgment on the award of the arbitrators. I only point out to these circumstances as they appear to us to exist on the record as reasons which might have very well induced the arbitrators to set aside the deed of gift and to declare it inoperative and to direct at the same time plaintiff No. 1 to pay defendants a sum of Rs. 680 which in the opinion of the arbitrators was proved to have been spent by them on his behalf.

Another contention which was urged before us by the learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants was that the direction in the award calling upon plaintiff No. 1 to execute a deed of mortgage in favour of the defendants was an invalid and unenforceable condition and that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to incorporate such a condition in their award. I have not been able to understand the attitude of the defendants regarding this matter. The condition is obviously to their own benefit, and unless their object in raising the contention be to get thereby the whole of the award set aside, I do not see any point in the objection. In my opinion plaintiff No. 1's claim for possession of 10-biswansis share by avoidance of the deed of gift executed in favour of defendant No. 1 had been referred to arbitration and the arbitrators were quite within their authority when they declared the said deed of gift to be inoperative, and while cancelling it they also directed plaintiff No. 1 to pay defendant No. 1 a sum of Rs. 680 which in their opinion was proved to have been spent by him on his (plaintiff No. 1's) behalf. I do not see any illegality in such an award, and am of opinion that it cannot be considered to be in any way invalid or unenforceable. It was merely a direction to make the position of defendants secure in regard to the money spent by them on behalf of plaintiff No. 1.

While dealing with this point I might also state that the position of arbitrators is different from that of a Court. I may be that it would not be open to the Court to pass a decree like the one passed by the arbitrators in this case. If the Court had found the deed to have been executed under undue influence, misrepresentation or fraud, it would have passed a decree declaring the deed to be inoperative and ordering it to be cancelled. If the Court found that the deed was executed with full and free consent the suit of the plaintiffs would have been dismissed. The arbitrators are, however, Judges of law as well as of facts; and they may have erred in law but their error in law does not vitiate the award [Vide Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (3)]. In Knox v. Symmonds (4) Lord Chancellor Thurlow observed as follows:—

"Upon a general reference to arbitration of all matters in dispute between the parties the arbitrator has a greater latitude than the Court, in order to do complete justice between the parties; for instance, he may relieve against a right, which bears hard upon one party; but which, having been acquired legally and without fraud could not be resisted in a Court of Justice."

It, therefore, appears to me that we will not be justified in setting aside the award merely upon the ground that the decree passed by the arbitrators is not one which would have ordinarily been passed by the Court in which that suit was instituted.

I might also refer to another objection, which was urged in connection with the validity of the award, it being that the condition, as laid down by the arbitrators, requiring the plaintiff No. 1 to execute a deed of possessory mortgage in favour of defendant No. 1, was a vague and indefinite condition and was not capable of being enforced. On this point I am in entire agreement with the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge that there is no vagueness or indefiniteness in the proposed terms of the mortgage. A possessory mortgage, laying down that the mortgagee is to obtain possession of the property in lieu of a fixed sum with a condition that the redemption is to take place whenever the mortgage money is paid, is quite a good and valid transaction. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage it is not necessary that the period for redemption should be fixed in the mortgage. As to the property to be mortgaged it is clear that the property which was the subject-matter of the gift was intended to be mortgaged. If therefore, the property to be mortgaged is capable of being ascertained and further the amount of money, for which the property is to be mortgaged, can also be ascertained, I am of opinion, that everything, which is necessary for a deed of usufructuary mortgage, is ascertainable and on that score no objection can be taken to the validity of the award. The well known rule of law is "certum est quod certum reddi potest" (that is sufficient certain, which is capable of being made certain) and that should be applied to this case (vide Broom's Legal Maxims, Ninth Edition, page 399).

I am, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and must be maintained. I would therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hasan, J.—(October 14, 1927).—I material portion of the award in question is as follows:—

"The facts of the case are that a deed of gift was executed by Bhikham Sir (plaintiff) in favour of Ganesh Singh (defendant) as against which deed Bhikham Singh has brought a suit in Court for cancellation on the allegation that it is fictitious, without consideration and obtained by deception and fraud. But Ganesh Singh, etc., the defendants, deny this. On a consideration of the evidence and documents produced by the parties we have reached this conclusion that the deed of gift executed by Bhikham Singh aforesaid was executed for consideration which comprises Rs. 680 which Ganesh Singh has paid to Bhikham Singh in the following manner...

.....Accordingly we decide this case in this way that by declaring the deed of gift as cancelled and non-existent we award Rs. 680 due to the defendants from the plaintiff for which the plaintiff shall execute within one month a deed of possessory mortgage in favour of the defendant. In the event of the plaintiff not executing the deed of mortgage within one month the defendant shall be entitled to obtain execution of the possessory mortgage from the plaintiff through Court. The parties will bear their own costs."

In my opinion this award is not only illegal in part, but is also vague and indefinite on the whole, and contradictory in its own terms. To my mind the direction in the award that the plaintiff shall give a possessory mortgage to the defendant, and that the defendant shall accept such a mortgage is a condition precedent on which the decision as to the cancellation of the deed of gift rests. The intention of the whole award is that relief as to the cancellation shall enure only in the event of the execution of the contemplated deed of mortgage. Now that is a contingency the happening of which is made to rest, first, on the option of the plaintiff, and secondly, on the option of the defendant. Either of them may well choose not to exercise the option. Thus there is an inherent lacuna in the award. This makes the award unenforceable and, therefore, illegal.

Further I do not see how it is possible any more for the arbitrators than for a Court of Justice to compel parties to specifically perform such acts as would make one of such parties the debtor of the other and the latter a creditor of the former: South African Territories v. Wallington (5),

Fry on Specific Performance, page 24; and Meenakshisundara Mudaliar v. Rathnasami Pillai (6). In this view of the case also this part of the award is illegal, and as I am of opinion that this part lays down a condition precedent on the fulfilment of which the cancellation of the deed of gift entirely depends, the whole award must be held as illegal. It is impossible to conceive that the decision as to the cancellation of the deed of gift is not subservient or merely a sequel to the happening of the contingency contemplated by the condition under consideration. It appears to me that the principle of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ram Protap Chamria v. Durga Prosad Chamria (7) is applicable to this case.

I am of opinion that the direction that a mortgage-deed shall be executed, when carefully analysed, makes the award wholly unenforceable. We cannot treat this direction as merely indicating a method of payment of Rs. 680. To me it seems to be the essence of the whole award. If by virtue of the direction we cannot give to the plaintiff liberty to pay and cannot impose an obligation on the defendant to receive Rs. 680 in cash, as obviously we cannot, the direction cannot be treated as merely an indication of the manner of payment of Rs. 680. It appears to me that according to the intention of the arbitrators the possessory mortgage when it came into existence is to take the place of the gift in question. In so doing the arbitrators created a new relation between the parties: of debtor and creditor; of mortgagor and mortgagee. This they had no authority to do. This reasoning brings the case within the rule laid down by Lord Denman, Chief Justice, in the case of Ross v. Boards (8). I will quote here the observations of Lord Denman which to my mind are very apposite to the case before us:

"The objection insisted upon must prevail. The agreement between these parties was, that the defendant should sell the land to the plaintiff, the title to be made out to the satisfaction of Mr. Blunt. It was referred to the arbitrator to settle all questions between the parties, on the agreement. He does not decide the questions arising on the agreement, but awards, of and concerning the matters referred, that the defendant shall convey to the plaintiff the title, contained in the abstracts, to the parcel of ground specified in the agreement, such parcel to extend, and be bounded, as the award points out. He leaves it in doubt whether the title is good or bad, and, in effect orders that it shall be taken with all faults. The doubt is rendered stronger by the direction that an indemnity bond shall be executed, which is more than the arbitrator had a right to order. The award is not final, because, instead of deciding the questions referred, it sets on foot new ones; and, instead of ascertaining a right for the plaintiff, gives him a new action for the recovery of damages."

I have said before that the award is vague and indefinite. It is so in relation to the intended mortgage. Except the consideration every other necessary ingredient is wanting. The subject-matter of the mortgage, the period as to the continuance of the mortgage, the time at which the right to redeem shall accrue to the mortgagor are all unprovided for. The best test it seems to me will be to treat this direction as a contract between the parties and then to see whether a specific performance could be claimed, by one or the other, of such a contract. No elaborate argument is needed to show that specific performance of such a contract is wholly out of question.

I have also said before that the award is contradictory in its own terms. The first conclusion at which the arbitrators reach is that the deed of gift has been executed for consideration. This clearly means that it is not open to the objections raised by the plaintiff. This being so it is a contradiction in terms then to say, as the arbitrators have said, that it is liable to be cancelled and to be replaced by a mortgage.

Finally, it is enough to say that I am clearly of opinion that the arbitrators on the terms of the award do not declare the cancellation of the deed of gift unless the condition relating to the execution of the deed of mortgage was fulfilled and that if it was not fulfilled or was incapable of being fulfilled, or was otherwise illegal or was beyond the authority of the arbitrators to make it, the deed of gift shall not stand cancelled.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in favour of the appellants in all Courts.

On the preliminary objection as to the maintainability of the appeal I agree with the opinion of my learned brother.

[In view of the fact that there was a difference of opinion as to what ought to be the decision in the case, the whole case was referred for decision to a Full Bench in accordance with s. 13 (ii) (b) of the Oudh Courts Act, 1925.]

OPINION.

Stuart, C. J.—The reference before us is as follows: A certain Bhikham Singh executed on the 8th January, 1925, a deed of gift of a share in a village in favour of Ganesh Singh. The property transferred by the deed of gift is stated in the plaint to have been worth Rs. 1,500 but it is on the record that Bhikham Singh had executed a simple mortgage in reference to this property. Bhikham Singh with his brother Ratan Singh instituted, on the 4th of January, 1926, a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Hardoi in which they claimed as against Ganesh Singh the donee and his father Dulam Singh possession of the property transferred by the deed of gift on the allegations that the property in question was the property of a joint Hindu family consisting of Bhikham Singh and Ratan Singh, that Bhikham Singh alone had no power to transfer the property by gift, and that the execution of the deed of gift had been obtained by the exercise of misrepresentation, fraud and undue influence. Ganesh Singh and Dulam Singh replied that Bhikham Singh and Ratan Singh, although brothers, were not members of a joint Hindu family, that they had separated some years previously and that Ratan Singh had become a convert to the Sikh religion. They added that the property in question was the sole undivided property of Bhikham Singh, that he had executed the deed of gift of his own free-will and accord without undue influence, misrepresentation or fraud and that the deed of gift was executed in recompense for past services rendered by the defendants who had advanced money on several occasions to Bhikham Singh. The defendants in one portion of their written statement put forward that if the plaintiffs were awarded possession they should only be awarded possession on payment of the amount paid by the defendants. The dispute between the parties may then be summarised as follows: The plaintiffs wished to repudiate the deed of gift and to obtain the property back without payment of anything. The defendants supported the deed of gift and asked that they should be allowed to retain the property, but added that if they were obliged to give it up they should be recompensed for what they had paid already. The matter was referred to the arbitration of arbitrators. The terms of the reference were very wide. The arbitrators were directed to settle all the disputes between the parties. The arbitrators decided that the property transferred by the deed of gift was the sole property of Bhikham Singh and that he had full power to make the transfer. They did not decide explicitly, but decided implicitly, that there was no fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence and they further decided that the defendants had paid money to Bhikham Singh and that deed of gift had been executed as a consequence of the receipt of benefit by Bhikham Singh from the defendants. In these circumstances it was undoubtedly open to them to dismiss the suit. But, in my opinion, they were not precluded under the terms of the reference from setting aside the deed of gift upon payment of compensation by Bhikham Singh to the defendants. The whole of the dispute had been placed before them. It was perfectly reasonable for the arbitrators to take the view that the property transferred by the deed of gift was of value considerably greater than the value of the benefits previously received and in these circumstances I consider that they were well within their rights in arriving at the decision at which they did arrive. This decision was that, although the property was the sole property of Bhikham Singh and though the execution of the deed of gift was an act of his independent volition, nevertheless he should be permitted to retain the property transferred by the deed of gift provided that he paid Rs. 680 to the defendants. They fixed

Rs. 680 as the value of the benefits which he received from the defendants and they ended with a direction that Bhikham Singh was to execute a deed of usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendants for a consideration of Rs. 680. I do not consider that that portion of the award by which they directed that the defendants should remain in possession of the property transferred until the plaintiffs paid them Rs. 680 is objectionable either under the provisions of para. 12 or para. 14 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, and I, undoubtedly, am unable to consider that that portion of the award could be set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in para. 15. I should have had more difficulty in deciding whether this Court should or should not direct that the order, that a usufructuary mortgage be executed, should be expunged from the award on the ground that it was upon a matter not referred to arbitration which could be separated from the other part and did not affect decision on the matter referred. But I have been relieved from any difficulty on that score as the parties before us have now requested that that portion of the award should be expunged. They have accepted the conclusion that it is quite sufficient if the decree states that the defendants remain in possession of the property in question until Bhikham Singh pays to them the sum of Rs. 680. The decree will be sufficient title-deed without the execution of a deed of mortgage. I should accordingly suggest that the decision on the appeal should be this: that in place of the present decree the following decree be passed: that the deed of gift of the 8th January, 1925, should be set aside and that Ganesh Singh and Dulam Singh retain possession of a share of 10 biswansis out of 20 biswansis in village Mahui Puri, Mahal Puri, Thok Purab, Pargana Gopamau until Bhikham Singh pays them Rs. 680. Bhikham Singh will recover possession of the said share on payment of Rs. 680. I should suggest that the parties pay their own costs throughout these proceedings.

Raza, J.—I agree and have nothing to add to the judgment that has just been delivered by the Hon'ble Chief Judge.

Pullan, J.—I also agree with the judgment delivered.

By the Court.—The appeal is decided accordingly.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, in Civil Appeal No. 73 of 1926, dated the 14th March, 1927, reversing that of the Munsif, Haveli, Fyzabad, dated the 2nd December, 1926.

Mr. Ali Zaheer, for the Appellant.

Mr. Naimullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, dated the 14th of March, 1927, modifying the decree of the Munsif of Haveli, Fyzabad, dated the 2nd of December, 1926.

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by a childless widow claiming arrears of maintenance from the defendant, who is the brother of the plaintiff's deceased husband. The plaintiff's case is that her deceased husband and the defendant formed a joint family and that on the death of the former about 6½ years ago the defendant came into possession of the ancestral joint family property by right of survivorship, the income of which was Rs. 40 a month approximately. The relief is for the recovery of Rs. 20 arrears of maintenance for the months of February and March, 1926, at the rate of Rs. 10 a month. The ground of the claim is two-fold: (1). An amicable settlement under which the defendant had agreed to give Rs. 10 a month and (2) legal right to maintenance. The defence was the denial of the settlement and also of the plaintiff's legal right to maintenance on the ground that the plaintiff's husband had separated in the lifetime of his father.

The first ground of claim has failed in both the Courts below and, therefore, need not be considered further. The second ground has succeeded. The trial Court on the consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the defendant and the plaintiff's husband formed a joint Hindu family, that the defendant was possessed of ancestral property and that the income was not less than Rs. 25 a month. Accordingly a decree for a sum of Rs. 10 as arrears of maintenance at the rate of Rs. 5 a month was made in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant filed an appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance and the plaintiff filed cross-objections. The cross-objections were dismissed and the appeal was allowed by reducing the maintenance to Rs. 2 a month. The ground of rejection is that during the continuance of certain negotiations for a compromise in the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff had expressed her willingness to go to and reside with the defendant. The defendant's family only consists of himself and his wife.

In second appeal it is urged that the ground on which the maintenance has been reduced is invalid in law. I am of opinion that the appeal succeeds. So far back as the year 1873 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee decided in the case of Rajah Parthee Singh v. Ramee Raj Kower (1) that "a Hindu widow is not bound to reside with the relatives of her husband; that the relatives of her husband have no right to compel her to live with them; and that she does not forfeit her right to property or maintenance merely on account of her going and residing with her family, or leaving her husband's residence from any other cause than unchaste or improper purposes." In the same case their Lordships decided that the amount of maintenance should be fixed with reference to the proprietor's estate. In the present case this was done by the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court has not questioned the propriety of the amount fixed on any ground other than the refusal of the plaintiff to reside with the defendant. The principle of this decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee was applied in a case similar to the present case by the High Court of Bombay in Parvatibai Bhagirath v. Chatru Limbaji (2).

In the Bombay case the Courts below had refused to grant a decree to the plaintiff for arrears of maintenance on the ground that she had refused to live with the defendant, her husband's brother, though a decree for future maintenance was granted. In this connection the decision of the High Court at Calcutta in Siddesury Dassee v. Janardan Sarkar (2) may also be referred to. It is not suggested in the present case that the plaintiff is guilty of any misconduct.

It seems to me that if non-residence at her husband's house is no ground for refusing maintenance to a Hindu widow it is equally no ground for reducing it. A person cannot be compelled to do an act which he is not legally bound to do. It follows that if he does not do it he cannot be penalized for the omission. If any authority were needed for this principle it is to be found in an analogous case decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee—Sreemutty Nittokisoree Dossee v. Jagendro Nauth Mullick (4).

There is one more matter urged at the hearing of the appeal on behalf of the appellant. In the lower Appellate Court question seems to have been raised by the defendant that the plaintiff was liable to pay Court-fee not only on the amount claimed but also according to ten times the amount claimed to be payable for one year under cl. (2) of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act, 1870. The lower Appellate Court decided this question according to the defendant's contention and the plaintiff accordingly paid the additional Court-fee of Rs. 83-8-0 in respect of her plaint in the trial Court. It is now argued that the order of the Court below in the matter of the Court-fee was wrong.

I am of opinion that the argument is correct. The plaintiff's case as laid in the plaint led to no other relief other than what was prayed for, that is the arrears of maintenance, and according to cl. (2) of s. 7 the Court fee payable would be according to the amount claimed, which was originally paid by the plaintiff. Obviously in a case of this nature it would be unfair to fix the liability at the rate of Rs. 5 a month for all time to come. It may vary with the circumstances. There was, therefore, no declaration as to future right at the rate of Rs. 5 a month involved in the decree of the trial Court.

I accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and also the order as to the additional Court-fee and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts. The plaintiff will further be entitled to a refund of Rs. 83-8-0 which she paid as an additional Court-fee in the lower Appellate Court.

As regards the cross-objections, they mostly cover questions of facts which have been dealt with in the judgment. They are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 40 (b), 57—Mortgage-bond executed by surety for due performance of undertaking by decree-holder to restore property—Proper stamp—'To secure the due performance of a contract,' meaning of.

A deed of mortgage executed by a surety for the due performance of an undertaking given by a decree-holder to the Court for restoring certain properties to the judgment-debtor in event of the failure of the decree-holder in appeal is a deed executed 'to secure the due performance of a contract' within the meaning of Art. 57 of Sch. I of the Stamp Act and is liable to a stamp duty of Rs. 5 only. [p. 555, cols. 1 & 2.]

Case referred by the Chief Revenue Authority, U. P., under s. 57 of the Stamp Act.

No. 19 of 1927, First Civil Appeal Register, dated September 8, 1927, communicating the Court's opinion to the Deputy Commissioner, Bahraich, in respect of the security bond executed under O. XLI, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, by Thakur Jagat Ambika Prasad Singh and his son in favour of the Registrar, Chief Court. I am to add in this connection that the Board, when reviewing cases of Stamp Law submitted monthly by the Deputy Commissioner have, in consultation with the Legal Remembrancer, taken a different view of the stamp duty chargeable on the document concerned for the reasons given below:—

It would appear from the language of the Art. 57, Sch. I of the Indian Stamp Act, that this Article applies only to those bonds which are executed by a surety "to secure the due performance of a contract." Section 126 of the Contract Act shows that a contract of guarantee for which a security bond is executed is a contract to perform the promise or to discharge the liability of a third person in case of his default. Article 57 Sch. I of the Stamp Act covers cases of those security bonds only, which are executed by a surety to secure the due performance of a contract and does not cover security bonds, which evidence a contract to discharge a liability of a third person. In the case concerned there was no contract made by the plaintiff-decree-holder for which the executants of the security bonds stood surety, but they did so with a view to discharge legal obligation by hypothecating landed properties. The bond executed by them is, therefore, a security bond within the meaning of the Contract Act, but because it has not been executed in order to secure the due performance of any contract between the Court and the plaintiff-decree-holder it is not covered by Art. 57.

Since the bond creates a legal liability but not a contract, Art. 40 (b), Sch. I of the Stamp Act applies and in the circumstances this bond should be stamped with ad valorem duty under this Article.

This same view was, held on page 376 of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, by Messrs. Mulla and Pratt (two Judges of the Bombay High Court).

I am to request that the matter be again laid before the Court for re-consideration in the light of the arguments advanced in this letter.

The Government Advocate, for the Secretary to Board of Revenue.

JUDGMENT.

Stuart, C. J.—This is a reference made to this Court by the Chief Revenue Authority under s. 57, Act II of 1899 (Indian Stamp Act), with a statement of a case under s. 56 and with its opinion thereon. According to the provisions of s. 57 the case has been laid before a Bench of three Judges of the Chief Court and is now being decided under s. 59. A copy of this judgment will be sent under the provisions of s. 59 to the Chief Revenue Authority. The case is as follows.

A certain Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh instituted a suit in the Chief Court of Oudh for possession of certain property. He succeeded. In execution of his decree he applied for possession of certain property. The other side preferred an appeal against the decree. A Bench of this Court by an order of the 1st March, 1927, directed that Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh should be placed in possession of the property in question, provided he guaranteed to restore that property in event of his failure in appeal, and provided he filed security for its restoration in such circumstances. In accordance with this order certain persons executed on the 23rd March, 1927, an undertaking, whereby they agreed that if Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh did not restore the property in event of his failure in appeal, the executants of the deed would pay compensation to the Court to the extent of a lakh and a half of rupees, and in security for the payment of this amount they hypothecated certain immoveable property. This document was stamped with a stamp of Rs. 5, and this stamp was considered sufficient by the Taxing Authorities of this Court, as in their opinion it was a mortgage-deed executed by a surety to secure the due performance of a contract. Subsequently the Inspector General of Registration questioned the correctness of this view, and requested a Bench of this Court to assess the deed to a higher stamp duty. The Bench in question, agreeing with the Taxing Authorities, did not assess the document at a higher stamp duty. The present reference has then been made. In my opinion, the transaction between Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh and the Court amounted to a contract. Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh contracted that, if he were allowed to take possession of the property in question he would restore that property in event of his failure in appeal. This deed was a mortgage-deed executed by the executants to secure the due performance of the contract by Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. As such, the executants incurred the liability to pay the stamp duty of Rs. 5 under the provisions of Art. 57. It is true that the deed in question is a mortgage-deed and unless it came under the special provisions of Art. 57 it would be liable to pay a much higher duty based ad valorem upon the value of the property secured. I read, however, Art. 57 as making a special concession in favour, inter alia, of mortgage-deeds executed by sureties to secure the due performance of a contract. Where a mortgage-deed is a mortgage-deed executed by a surety to secure the due performance of a contract, the executant gains the privileges conferred by Art. 57. The learned Government Advocate has not been able to show us any authority upon the point. It is true that in a commentary of which two learned Judges of the Bombay High Court were the authors, there is a note in which it is made a subject of question as to whether such mortgage deeds are liable to stamp duty under Art. 40. This note, to which the Board of Revenue have referred as authoritative, is, of course, in no sense authoritative. It is merely an opinion of a commentator. The practice in this Court and in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner has been uniform upon this point. Both Courts have always treated such mortgage-deeds as liable to pay stamp duty under Art. 57. It appears to me that this practice is clearly right and that it follows from the words of the Article.

Hasan, J.—It is agreed that the deed of the 23rd of March, 1927, is a mortgage-deed. The contention raised in the reference before us is that it was not executed to secure the due performance of a contract and that being so it is liable to be taxed with a stamp duty under Art. 40 of the First Schedule of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, and not under Art. 57 of the same Schedule. It is true that there is no contract to secure the due performance of which the deed in question was executed floating on the surface, but there is always an implied contract in cases of this nature. The substance of the matter is that the plaintiff asked for delivery of possession of certain property which was decreed to him under a decree passed on the Original Side of this Court. The prayer for delivery of possession was made to this Court. That was clearly a request. In answer to that the Court agreed to deliver possession as prayed for provided the decree-holder agreed to do certain things in certain events and provided further that he furnished security for the due performance of the same. On these conditions being offered to the decree-holder by the Court they were accepted by him and the result was the execution of the deed of mortgage in question and the delivery of possession to the decree-holder. It is a significant fact to bear in mind that the deed in question is executed in favour of the Registrar of this Court. This clearly means that the Court is a party to the original contract for the due performance of which this mortgage-deed has been executed. I accordingly agree with the Hon'ble the Chief Judge that the document has been properly stamped with the stamp duty of Rs. 5.

Misra, J.—I am also of the same opinion as my two learned brothers who have just now delivered their opinion. I think that the mortgage-deed executed in the present case was one executed by a surety to secure the due performance of the contract entered into between the decree-holder and this Court in accordance with its order dated the 1st March, 1927. Under those circumstances the stamp of Rs. 5 paid in the present case is quite sufficient.

By the Court.—Judgment accordingly. A copy will be sent to the Chief Revenue-Authority.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by manager

—Alienation supported by necessity—Necessity for portion of consideration not specified—Validity of sale—Purchaser, whether bound to refund such surplus. Where a purchaser of joint family property from the manager of the family has acted in good faith and after due enquiry and the sale itself is justified by legal necessity, it cannot be set aside merely because a certain portion of the consideration was taken in cash by the vendors without specification of the nature of the necessity; nor is the purchaser bound to make re-payment of such surplus to the members of the family challenging the sale.

Sri Krishn Das v. Nathu Ram (1), followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 30th March, 1927, confirming that of the Munsif, Haveli, Fyzabad, dated the 28th January, 1927.

Messrs. Satya Nand Roy and Radha Krishna, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and B. P. Chatterji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is only concerned with the amount of Rs. 500 which was taken in cash by the vendors without specification of the nature of the necessity. It is accepted by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the remaining consideration of the sale-deed Rs. 1,000 was legitimately taken in satisfaction of antecedent debts. The contesting respondent would admittedly only be liable to suffer to the extent of Rs. 250 out of this amount. There is a finding of fact, which is final in second appeal, that the purchaser acted in good faith and after due inquiry and that the sale itself was justified by legal necessity. The lower Courts have rightly applied; therefore, the principle laid down in Sri Krishn Das v. Nathu Ram (1) by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. The purchaser was under no obligation to inquire into the application of the surplus and is not bound to make re-payment of such surplus to the members of the family challenging the sale. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

First appeal from the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 8th December, 1926.

Mr. Anand Narain Bahadur, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal against a decree passed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad on the 8th December, 1926. The facts of the suit out of which this appeal arises are as follows. The plaintiff, Badri Prasad Singh, came into Court on the following allegations. He alleged that the village of Arusa Azampur in the Fyzabad District had devolved upon his father, Sarju Narain Singh, and his father's brother, Bhola Singh, in equal shares, and that on the death of one brother his share devolved upon the survivor. His case was that on Bhola Singh's death in 1918 his widow Dhiraj Kuar had taken possession of Bhola Singh's share, that subsequently a 2-annas share in the village was brought to sale in execution of a decree obtained on a mortgage executed by Bhola Singh and that that share had been purchased by the plaintiff's son. He continued that in August, 1924, Sarju Narain Singh had sued Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar for possession of this 6-annas, and that he obtained an ex parte decree against her on the 25th September, 1924. In execution of this decree, Sarju Narain Singh obtained possession on the 24th January, 1925. Admittedly on the 26th January, 1925, Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar, although she then had lost the suit and was out of possession, executed a theka of the 6-annas share in favour of the defendant-appellant Sat Narain Singh. This theka was for a period of twenty years. Under it the thekadar was to pay the land revenue as it then stood and pay Rs. 60 a year to Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar. The land revenue was then Rs. 241-5-0. In event of its enhancement Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar was to pay the difference. This ex parte decree in favour of Sarju Narain Singh was considered on appeal by a Bench of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court on the 27th March, 1925, and the case then went back for re-hearing to the Fyzabad Court. On the 1st December, 1925, Sarju Narain Singh died and was succeeded by the present plaintiff Badri Prasad Singh. On the 2nd February, 1926, Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar, who had previously been contesting the suit withdrew from contest, and admitted the claim of the plaintiff-respondent. The suit was accordingly decreed in his favour. But in the meantime she had recovered possession over the 6-annas share and had transferred that possession to Sat Narain Singh under the terms of the theka already mentioned. In consequence, Badri Prasad Singh instituted the suit, out of which this appeal arises, on the 20th of April, 1926, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad for the ejectment of Sat Narain Singh from the 6-annas share, for possession over the 6 annas share and for mesne profits.

When the suit came on for hearing Sat Narain Singh took a very large number of pleas. The Additional Subordinate Judge decided the suit on one point only. The position which he took was this. There was no contest as to the fact that Badri Prasad Singh, after Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar had admitted judgment in his favour, became the owner and possessor of the 6-annas share as against Dhiraj Kuar. Thus if he could show, that Sat Narain Singh had no right to remain in occupation of that share by virtue of his title from Dhiraj Kuar, Badri Prasad Singh had a right to eject Sat Narain Singh, and to obtain mesne profits from him. Sat Narain Singh's claim to resist the suit rested upon the validity of the theka of the 26th January, 1925. If that theka was a good theka he could not be ejected. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge, holding that the theka was bad under the provisions of s. 52, Act IV of 1882, as having been executed pendente lite, drew as the necessary conclusion from that finding that Sat Narain Singh had no title and directed his ejectment. Sat Narain Singh appeals against that decision. The first point taken by the learned Counsel who has argued the appeal, was that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to decide the case. That plea was taken in the Court below, but it has not been decided by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. We are inclined to think from our examination of the proceedings that the reason why the learned Additional Sub-Judge did not decide that plea was because that plea had been in effect withdrawn by the defendant-appellant's Counsel. However, we do not wish to stand in the defendant-appellant's way upon the point, and we now decide ourselves whether the Court had or had not jurisdiction. It clearly had jurisdiction. Babu Badri Prasad Singh is now the landlord of his share. In order to show that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction, it was necessary for the defendant-appellant to show that this suit was one of the suits excepted from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts under the provisions of s. 108, Local Act XXII of 1886 as amended. It would have to be included in group A covered by sub-ss. (1) to (5 a). The learned Counsel suggested that this was a suit brought by a landlord for the ejectment of a tenant. He was unable to suggest any other sub-section on which he could base his plea. Clearly this was not a suit for the ejectment of a tenant. Badri Prasad Singh's main position was that Sat Narain Singh was not a tenant but a trespasser. He took the position that Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar had had no right to execute the theka. If it had been found on the facts that the theka was a good theka the suit would have been dismissed on the ground that Sat Narain Singh was not a trespasser but a tenant. We, therefore, decide this point against the appellant. In respect of the finding on which the suit was decreed we have gone through the record of the previous proceedings in the suit between Sarju Narain Singh and Dhiraj Kuar. What happened was this. When the suit was originally filed it came on for hearing on the 25th September, 1924. On that date Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar was absent, though duly served. She had not filed a written statement on the date fixed. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge considering that he was justified in taking this course under the provisions of O. VIII, r. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure at once decreed Sarju Narain Singh's claim against her on the 25th September, 1924. On the 27th September, 1924, two days afterwards, Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar applied to have the decree set aside under O. IX, r. 13. The successor of the learned Subordinate Judge who had passed the ex parte decree decided on the 8th January, 1925, that she had no case under O. IX, r. 13 and dismissed her application. On the 2nd February, 1925, Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar appealed against the order of dismissal of the 8th January, 1925, to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Her appeal was admitted and on the 27th March, 1925*, a Bench of the Judicial Commissioners decided in her favour. The matter was sent back to the Subordinate Court. The ex parte proceedings were then set aside. There cannot be the slightest doubt as to the fact that as far as until a date considerably later than the 26th January, 1925, there was a lis between Sarju Prasad Singh and Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar affecting this 6-annas share. The circumstance that the contest was subsequently abandoned in no way affects the fact that the suit was contentious on the 26th January, 1925. In support of the view that the doctrine of lis pendens as employed in s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to transfers effected during the pendency of a contentious suit or proceeding, even when such a suit or proceeding is subsequently compromised and a decree passed in pursuance of such a compromise, we need only refer to a decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (1). It is true that it is open to the transferee in such circumstances to avoid the consequences of the transfer having been made at that time by establishing that the compromise is tainted by fraud or collusion; and in this particular suit the appellant has endeavoured to show that the withdrawal of contest by Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar was the result of fraud and collusion. The learned trial Judge has found against him upon this point. We have come to the same conclusion. It is noticeable that, although Badri Prasad Singh was in the witness-box, the appellant's Counsel did not attempt to cross-examine him to show that the withdrawal of contest by Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar had been obtained dishonestly or fraudulently, or that there was a trace of collusion in the former proceedings. The appellant called two witnesses to establish fraud and collusion. The first witness Sripat Singh has been stigmatized by the learned trial Judge as a shameless liar. This strong condemnation is, in our opinion, thoroughly deserved. The second witness Ramanand stated distinctly that he knew of nothing dishonest in the litigation, and that he did not know why Dhiraj Kuar had withdrawn her contest. He said that he personally had tried to persuade her that she had a good case but that she refused to continue the contest. The learned Counsel for the appellant has endeavoured to show to us that Musammatt Dhiraj Kuar must have succeeded if she had continued the contest. We do not agree with him. It appears to us that on the merits Sarju Narain Singh may well have succeeded. But in any circumstances we find that on the facts the compromise was not tainted by fraud or collusion. The learned Counsel for the appellant has further taken the ground that the learned trial Judge should have decided all the issues framed in the suit. We consider that the learned trial Judge adopted a very proper course in not deciding the issue to which we have not referred. Badri Prasad Singh being clearly as against Dhiraj Kuar the owner of this 6-annas and Sat Narain Singh who derived his title from Dhiraj Kuar having thus no title to occupy this 6-annas, it would have involved an unnecessary waste of time to have determined the other points. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6—Mortgage suit—Application for personal decree.

Art. 66.

The amount due on a mortgage was payable in 1910. The mortgagee instituted a suit for sale in 1922. A compromise decree was passed which directed that the mortgagor should pay the amount by the end of June, 1923, and that, on default the half of the properties should be sold. A final decree was passed on 2nd February, 1924, and the mortgagee applied for a personal decree on the 31st May, 1926:

Held, that the application was barred by limitation.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, in Appeal No. 202 of 1926, dated the 24th January, 1927, setting aside that of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 30th October, 1926.

Mr. Naimullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radha Krishna Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Gurpatri brought a suit against Ram Prasad on the 11th September, 1922, on the basis of a registered mortgage, dated 18th September, 1908. It was a simple mortgage. The mortgagor had covenanted to pay off the mortgage within two years from the date of the deed. The mortgagee was authorized to sell the mortgaged property in case the mortgagor failed to pay off the mortgage within that period. That period expired on the 18th September, 1910. Nothing was paid on account of the mortgage. Hence the mortgagee sued for sale of the mortgaged property.

The suit was compromised on the 17th February, 1923. Ram Prasad agreed to pay Rs. 833-10-3 to Gurpatri at the end of June, 1923, and it was further agreed that if the money was not paid, half of the property mortgaged should be sold.

On the 17th November, 1923, the mortgagee Gurpatri applied for a final decree for sale. The final decree was passed on the 2nd February, 1924.

The property in respect of which the decree was passed in terms of the compromise mentioned above was sold on the 23rd June, 1925. The property was purchased by the decree-holder Gurpatri himself. Rs. 700 were thus realised by the decree-holder.

On the 31st May, 1926, Gurpatri made the present application for the balance (Rs. 280-10-9) under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Sch. I, Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the application on the ground of limitation and also on the ground of res judicata.

Gurpatri appealed and his appeal was allowed by the learned District Judge of Fyzabad. He held that the personal liability was subsisting on the date when the parties entered into the compromise of 1923 and limitation, therefore, runs from the date of the compromise or rather from the date of the failure of the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-money entered in the deed of compromise, i. e., from June or July, 1923, and from that date the present application under O. XXXIV, r. 6, is clearly within time under Art. 66 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Ram Prasad has come to this Court in second appeal.

I think this appeal should be allowed. I am not prepared to agree with the learned District Judge that the personal liability was subsisting on the date when the parties entered into the compromise of 1923.

Before the case of Ganesh Lal Pandit v. Khetra Mohan Mahapatra (1) was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council it was held by almost all the High Courts in India that no decree can be passed for the balance under O. XXXIV, r. 6, unless the balance is legally recoverable and the balance would not be legally recoverable if where the plaintiff was relying on his personal remedy against the defendant, his suit for the personal remedy were barred by limitation, i. e., if the suit were brought after the expiration of six years from the due date of the payment. Where the right to enforce that liability has been extinguished by operation of the Statute of Limitation, regard being had to the time of the institution of the suit and not to that of making an application under O. XXXIV, r. 6, a decree cannot be made under it. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case mentioned [above Ganesh Lal Pandit v. Khetra Mohan Mahapatra (1)] that where a mortgagee sues on a personal covenant to make the mortgagor responsible for any deficiency in the realization of the mortgage-debt out of the mortgaged properties, the claim is barred in three years, it being governed by Art. 65 of the Limitation Act. It is not necessary to decide in this case whether the suit of the mortgagee, who relies on personal remedy, should be brought within six years or within three years, as the present suit was filed more than six years after the accrual of the cause of action. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly right in holding that the present application for a money-decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Sch. I, Civil Procedure Code, is barred by limitation. I have examined the compromise carefully. So far as I see no reservation was made in the compromise in respect of the plaintiff's right to obtain a money-decree subsequently against the mortgagor. The terms of the compromise do not impose any personal liability on Ram Prasad to pay the balance in question to Gulpatri.

Under these circumstances Gulpatri's application was rightly dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Hence I allow this appeal and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge restore the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. Ram Prasad will get his costs from Gulpatri in all the Courts.

Messrs. R. D. Sinha and G. C. Sinha, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—We have been at length through the judgment of the learned District Judge and are satisfied that his decision to the effect that no family or tribal custom to the effect that the property left by a female of the family devolves upon all the existing collaterals of the husband of the lady per stirpes without any regard to nearness or remoteness and in the manner that the descendants of the first born in every line get 19 shares as against the 16 shares to be got by the rest of the line has been established by reliable evidence is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal. He has considered the whole of the evidence before him. No point of law arises on the question of construction of documents. As was laid down by Lindley, L. J., in Chatenay v. Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co. (1) the expression "construction" as applied to a document; at all events as used by English Lawyers, includes two things: first, the meaning of the words; and secondly, their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. The meaning of the words is a question of fact in all cases, whether the subject under discussion is a poem or a legal document. The effect of the words is a question of law. Applying these principles it is clear that the decision of the learned District Judge is a decision of fact. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342 (2)—Examination of accused—Defamatory statement—Prosecution for defamation, legality of—Privilege.

An accused person cannot be prosecuted for defamation in respect of a statement made by him in his examination under s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Champa Devi v. Pirbhu Lal (1), distinguished.
Bai Shanta v. Umrao Amir Malek (2), commented upon*Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor* (3) and Satish Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ram Dayal De (4), referred to.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mirzapur.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Applicant.

Mr. Gadadhar Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The only ground worth considering in this application for revision is ground No. 3 that the alleged defamatory statement having been made by the applicant as an accused person in his defence cannot form the subject-matter of a prosecution for defamation. The applicant Murli Pathak was prosecuted by Bhukkal on a charge under s. 426 of the Indian Penal Code. In the ordinary course, during the trial, the applicant Murli Pathak was examined by the Court under s. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Questions were put to him by the Court, and he answered them. At the end, one question was : "Why the charge was brought against him by Bhukkal?" and he replied that this was owing to enmity. The next question was whether he had anything more to say, and in answer he gave reason for the enmity. His answer was that he and Bhukkal were not on dining terms because Bhukkal's daughter-in-law was in the keeping of a Lohar. Bhukkal thereupon prosecuted Murli Pathak under s. 499, Indian Penal Code, for defamation, and Murli was punished by a Magistrate with fine under s. 500, Indian Penal Code. An appeal by Murli was dismissed, and he has brought this revision application to this Court.

In my opinion the provisions of s. 342 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, will apply. It is laid down there that the accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, that is, those put to him by the Court, under cl. (1) or by giving false answers to them. Murli, who was an accused person in the case under s. 426 is now punished for giving a false answer to a question by the Court. In my opinion the order was prohibited by Statute. On behalf of Bhukkal, complainant, my attention was drawn to the judgment of Mr. Justice Daniels in Champa Devi v. Pirbhu Lal (1). In that case the accused person who was prosecuted for defamation had filed a written statement, and the learned Judge has specifically mentioned that the immunity conferred by s. 342 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, did not extend to a written statement. The learned Counsel next referred me to a Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court Bai Shanta v. Umrao Amir Malek (2). The question referred to the Full Bench was whether relevant statements made by an accused person under s. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, or contained in a written statement filed by him with the Court's permission, are absolutely protected from being the subject of a prosecution for defamation under s. 500, Indian Penal Code. The answer to this was in the negative. With all respect it may be pointed out that the question includes two different matters: one privileged under s. 342 (2) and the other (a written statement) not so privileged. The learned Chief Justice while delivering the judgment of the Full Bench observed : "There is nothing in s. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which gives an accused person an absolute privilege as regards defamatory statements made by him in his examination." However the matter may be put, there is no explanation of the provisions of cl. (2) of s. 342, and even if the accused did not have any absolute privilege, it will be sufficient for his purpose if he cannot be punished for making a false statement in answer to question put to him by Court. When he cannot be punished, it must be presumed that he had an absolute privilege under s. 342 (2), Criminal Procedure Code. There is no consideration given to this matter by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court. The Madras High Court is in favour of absolute privilege [See Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (3)], while the Calcutta High Court has disagreed with this opinion Satish Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ram Dayal De (4). The question which arises here is not of absolute privilege, but of the bar to the accused being punished for anything he may state in answer to question by Court.

It was argued that the answer containing the defamatory statement was wholly irrelevant and added by Murli Pathak not in answer to any question, but of his own motion, to defame Bhukkal. I cannot agree to that view of the circumstances of the examination. Murli was asked the reason for a false charge, and when he gave that to be enmity, and when the Court proceeded to direct him to make any further statement, the natural implication was that the Court desired to know the reason for the enmity, and the defamatory statement did give that reason. The answer which is the subject of the defamation was relevant to the matter in issue and arose out of a question put by the Court. I hold that Murli was saved from punishment by the protection given to him under s. 342 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when he made the defamatory statement.

I set aside the conviction and sentence and order the fine, if any recovered, to be refunded.

A. N. A. Conviction and sentence set aside.

Co-sharers—Acquisition by tenant of share in proprietary interest—Tenancy, whether extinguished—Merger—Liability of tenant to pay rent to other co-sharers.

There is nothing in law to prevent a co-sharer in a co-parcenary mahal from having tenant rights of any kind and being liable to the payment of rent to another co-sharer or the general body of the co-sharers. The acquisition by a tenant, of a share in the proprietary rights in a mahal does not, therefore, automatically put an end to the tenancy in its entirety and exempt the tenant from his liability to pay rent to the other co-sharers. [p. 563, col 1.]

There cannot be complete merger of two rights unless the two are co-extensive. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 25th November, 1925.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Benod Behari, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kamlakant, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for arrears of rent brought by Kallu Ram against Musammat Kesar Kuar. The suit was dismissed by the Assistant Collector but on appeal it was decreed by the District Judge. His findings on some of the points were not clear. Accordingly a former Bench of this Court framed three issues and remanded the case with direction that the learned Judge should dispose of the case on the lines indicated by the issues.

The learned District Judge has upheld his former decree.

The plots in dispute were recorded as the tenancy of one Sri Ram and on his death were recorded in the name of his widow Musammat Kesar Kuar. Kallu Ram was recorded as the lambardar and the proprietor of the mahal in which these plots are situated. In 1917 there was a dispute between the parties in the Civil Court and the matter was referred to the arbitration of three arbitrators and an award was pronounced on the 31st of May, 1918, followed by a decree of the Civil Court. Under this decree Musammat Kesar Kuar was given a half share in the proprietary interest in the mahal.

The learned District Judge has found, and his finding is one of fact, that the defendant has failed to prove that she had any proprietary interest in the mahal prior to the award of 1918. She must, therefore, be treated as a tenant of the plots prior to that date. Since then, however, she has become a co-sharer entitled to an equal share with Kallu Ram in the proprietary interest in the mahal.

The learned District Judge in referring to the judgment of this Court delivered on the former occasion has remarked that there was a mistake inasmuch as it was stated that the award was delivered in 1325 Fasli. The learned District Judge has, without checking the record, made this remark, for we find that the 31st of May, 1918, the date of the award, fell in 1325 Fasli, and, therefore, the High Court's statement was quite correct and has been wrongly objected to.

The learned District Judge has given the plaintiff a decree for half the amount of rent due on account of these plots, holding that the tenancy to the extent of one half has become merged in the proprietary interest acquired by Musammāt Kesar Kuār since the award.

The point which has been urged before us on behalf of the appellant is that having become a proprietor in the mahal she has ceased to be a tenant and the only remedy now open to the plaintiff is a suit for profits in which the rent could be taken into account and adjusted. It is further urged that a person cannot both be a zemindar and a tenant in one and the same mahal. But there cannot be complete merger of two rights unless the two are co-extensive. We are of opinion that this point is concluded by a series of authorities, which it is not now possible to disturb. We may refer to the case of Mahabir Singh v. Ahsanullah (1) followed subsequently in S. A. No. 303 of 1918 decided on the 28th of February, 1918, and Abul Hasan Khan v. Bhura (2). We may also mention that the Board of Revenue has accepted the same principle as shown by the case of Jamna Prasad Rai v. Damri (3). All these cases are authorities for the proposition that there is nothing in law to prevent a co-sharer in a co-parcenary mahal from having tenant rights of any kind and being liable to the payment of rent either to another co-sharer or to the general body of co-sharers, and that if a tenant subsequently acquires proprietary rights in the land his tenancy does not automatically come to an end in its entirety.

In view of these authorities we are of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 173—"Preventing personal service", meaning of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 69 (1)—"Tender," meaning of:

A man who gets away from the serving officer with the obvious intention of not allowing him to hold any communication with him at all and shuts himself in his house, is intentionally preventing service either by tender or by delivery, and is guilty of an offence under s. 173, Penal Code. [p. 564, cols. 1 & 2.]

Sahadeo Rai v. Emperor (1) and Queen v. Punamalai Nandan (2), commented upon.

Personal service under s. 69 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, may be made either by delivering or tendering, but the tender must be a real tender of a document which is understood by the person to be served, and he must have voluntarily waived actual delivery and indicated in some way that a tender was sufficient. The offence of preventing personal service is in each case, a question of fact. [p. 564, col. 1.]

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Jalaun.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred to the High Court on a question of what may or may not constitute "intentionally preventing service on himself" of a summons within the meaning of s. 173, Indian Penal Code, and it has been referred in consequence of a decision by the late Mr. Justice Knox in the case of Sahadeo Rai v. Emperor (1), that inasmuch as a tender of summons is sufficient, a refusal to receive it does not amount to preventing service.

If the decision of my late brother goes as far as that was contended before the District Magistrate I find myself unable to agree, greatly as I respect every decision, especially on a question of Criminal Procedure, by that distinguished and experienced member of this Court. There is a similar decision reported as Queen v. Punamalai Nandan (2). I think that these decisions are liable to be misunderstood. The reasoning is based upon the method of service prescribed by s. 69, Criminal Procedure Code. Sub-s. 1 deals with personal service where it is practicable. Personal service may be made either by delivering or tendering, but it seems to me that the tender must be a real tender of a document which is understood by the person to be served, and he must have voluntarily waived actual delivery and indicated in some way that a tender was sufficient. I think, therefore, the offence of preventing personal service must be in each case a question of fact. A man might be so busily engaged or his hands, for example, might be so dirty that he might say to the server: "all right put it down on that spot." On the other hand, he might say: "it is no good delivering it, I cannot read, tell me what it says and that will satisfy me." No doubt if the man to be served gives the server an adequate opportunity of tendering the summons, the serving officer need not deliver it.

In these particular cases it has been found that the person to be served, not only refused to receive it, but actually shut the door of his house in the face of the officer, showing clearly an intention to refuse to accept service, and an intention inconsistent with a tender. By sub-s. 2 of s. 69, the person to whom the summons has been tendered may be required to sign a receipt on the back of one of the duplicates, and if he runs away and shuts himself in his house, he clearly cannot be asked to sign a receipt, and he shows his intention to prevent service. These arguments have been submitted to the High Court in the Magistrate's referring order, and I agree with them. My brother Knox in the case referred to pointed out that a mere refusal to receive a summons is not an offence. He did not deal with a case where the conduct is clearly intentional and prevents either form of service.

In the Madras case the report says as so often happens in India, "that the facts will appear from the judgment," whereas in truth they do not. It merely appears that the accused refused to receive the summons, but it does not say what the tender was nor whether they signed the receipt. The Court on that occasion followed a previous case but the facts in that case were different because the summons was actually served upon the accused and he threw it down afterwards, and, therefore, could not be said to have prevented service. I think a man who gets away from the serving officer with the obvious intention of not allowing him to hold any communication with him at all and shuts himself in his house, is intentionally preventing service either by tender or by delivery, and that the accused in this case was rightly convicted and fined. Let the record be returned.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 3, 67—Proof of documents—Proof of handwriting of executant, necessity of—"Proved", meaning of.

A document cannot be held to be proved, as required by the Evidence Act where there is no evidence that the signature purporting to be that of the executant is in the handwriting of the executant, even if the Court considers the execution so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the case, act upon the supposition that there had been execution. [p. 566, col. 1.]

The definition of the word "proved" in s. 3 of the Evidence Act must, when applied to documents, be read along with s. 67 of the Act. [ibid.]

First appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 28th of August, 1924.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Mr. S. B. Shastri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for sale on the basis of a mortgage deed alleged to have been executed by Abdul Qayum, the predecessor of the defendants, on the 24th September, 1913, and registered. The particulars of the mortgage were given in full in the plaint. The written statement of Musammat Tamiz Bano, one of the defendants, first of all merely stated that the allegations in the various paragraphs of the plaint with certain exceptions "were not admitted." It then went on to say in para. 9 that the execution, completion and the consideration of the document sued upon was not admitted by the contesting defendant. I may note here that the translation of this paragraph as printed is not accurate. The defendant meant not to admit either the execution, completion or the consideration. The Court below framed the first issue as follows: Is the hypothecation bond genuine and for consideration? The parties led evidence on the question of execution as well as consideration, and the plaintiff produced an attesting witness Sheo Prasad and himself went into the witness-box in trying to prove due execution. The Court below found this issue against the plaintiffs and held that the requirements of the law as laid down in s. 67 of the Evidence Act, were not complied with and "execution for consideration" was not proved. Hence this appeal. In my opinion, the contention urged before us, which does not find place in the memorandum of appeal, that the execution of the bond had not been specifically denied, cannot be accepted particularly in view of the fact that the parties understood in the Court below that the execution of the bond was in dispute and issue was framed and evidence was led on it. The defendant Tamiz Bano did specifically say that she did not admit it. Even if there was some ambiguity, it was open to the Court under the Proviso to O. VIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, to call upon the plaintiffs to prove it.

The main point for consideration is whether the Court below was right in finding that the execution of the document in dispute had not been fully proved.

As regards the evidence of the plaintiff, Salaiik Chand, the Court below was pointed out that on his own showing he was a boy of fourteen years of age when the document was executed and that in his evidence he purported to recognise the thumb-impression of the witness, Sheo Prasad, which showed that he was not a reliable witness. The Court below was not impressed by his evidence and did not think that his statement that he could identify the signature of Abdul Qayum could be accepted.

We must accept the estimate of the evidence of this witness as made by the Court below. The second witness was Sheo Prasad, who admittedly is an illiterate person and is unable to read the document or identify the signature of Abdul Qayum. His statement, however, was that Abdul Qayum had executed a bond for Rs. 3,000 in favour of Ram Chandra Sahai 11 years ago and that the bond was attested by him and he had made his thumb-impression on it. The contents of the bond were read over to him and he stated that they were similar to the contents of the bond which had been executed by Abdul Qayum, though he had to admit that he did not remember the wording of it. He purported to identify his own thumb-impression on the document. The Court below was not satisfied that Sheo Prasad who was an illiterate person, could identify the thumb impression appearing on this document as that of his own. Being illiterate he cannot specifically prove the signature purporting to be that of Abdul Qayum. No doubt the document was registered and there may be ground for supposing that it was not a forged document, but it had to be proved under s. 67 of the Indian Evidence Act that the document alleged to have been signed by Abdul Qayum was in his handwriting. It is the fault of the plaintiffs themselves that they brought this suit long after the other attesting witnesses and the scribe were dead. This may be a misfortune for them, but we have to see whether they have complied with the requirements of the law. Under the circumstances, it must be held that there is not sufficient legal evidence on this record to establish that the signature which purports to be that of Abdul Qayum is that of Abdul Qayum himself. I would, therefore, uphold the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal.

Ashworth, J.—I concur in the dismissal of the appeal. There is, in my opinion, no force in the plea which Mr. Agarwala took up in argument, although not contained in the memorandum of appeal that the lower Court improperly framed an issue as to execution of the mortgage deed. That contention appears to me to be based on a mistranslation of para. 9 of the written statement as it appears in the record of proceedings. That paragraph denied three things, execution, completion and consideration for the deed. The translation suggests that it was merely consideration which was denied. Order VIII, r. 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, must be interpreted to mean that a defendant may either deny or not admit an allegation of the plaintiff, but if he wishes to do this, he must state that he denies or does not admit each separate allegation and must state the allegation.

He cannot make a general denial or refuse generally to admit several allegations. The rule cannot be interpreted to mean that a refusal to admit a specific allegation can be taken to be an admission of that allegation. It was argued by the appellants' Counsel in this case that it was open to the Court below and is open to this Court to come to a conclusion that the document in question was duly executed by holding that execution was proved in the sense that the word proved is defined in s. 3 of the Evidence Act. In other words, it was contended, that we might hold this document to have been executed because we considered that execution was so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that there had been execution. I concur with my learned brother that the execution of a document cannot be deemed proved as required by the Evidence Act merely because it is proved in the sense of the definition of proved. That definition of the word proved must be read along with s. 67 of the Act. That section requires that there must be specific evidence that the signature purporting to be that of the executant is in the handwriting of the executant. Until this is proved, the Court cannot proceed to consider whether execution is proved. In other words, s. 67 makes proof of execution of a document something more difficult than proof of matter other than the execution of a document. In this case it was unfortunate for the plaintiffs that both their witnesses who were produced to prove the signature of the executant, were under a disability. One of them was illiterate and could only make his thumb-impression. The lower Court was right in believing that this man could not recognise a signature alleged to have been made in his presence 11 years before. As to the plaintiff, he stated that he was only 12 years old when he saw Abdul Qayum sign the document. He had never seen his signature before. He does not say that he had ever seen it since. He pretended (obviously wrongly) that he could identify the thumb-impression. These facts being taken into consideration, the lower Court was quite justified in distrusting his evidence. It may be that proof of the signature of Abdul Qayum by the plaintiff was a matter of great difficulty but the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-interest, namely, his father cannot be said to be free from responsibility for that difficulty. They should have sued on the bond sooner. It is common sense for a person holding a bond not to wait for bringing a suit on the bond until the evidence of the signature of the person liable under it has become difficult. Every one must be presumed to know the law and consequently the plaintiff or his father should have been aware of the provision of s. 67 which requires strict proof of signature.

For the above reasons, I concur in the dismissal of this appeal.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (XI of 1825), cl. 4—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 99—Land added by alluvion from one permanently settled village to another—Assessment to revenue, legality of—'Alluvion,' meaning of.

Land belonging to a permanently settled village which is added to another permanently settled village by alluvion is not exempt from being assessed to revenue. [p. 569, col. 1.]

Alluvion means the accession to land by gradual or momentarily insensible addition of matter by the action of water, or by the insensible reliction of water from its bank. [p. 568, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiffs' appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur, who decided that certain land in the possession of the plaintiffs, situate on the east side of a stream, by name Jargo, was assessable to revenue. The plaint set out that the stream Jargo flowed between the villages Bagheri and Manikpur, and that each village was permanently settled. Paragraph 5, which was not admitted, ran as follows:—"That according to custom or usage prevailing in the locality, land cut away by fluvial action from one village and added or accreted to another becomes the property of the proprietors of the village to which such land has been so added and becomes part and parcel of such village." Paragraph 6 alleged that "according to the said custom or usage the proprietors of villages liable to be affected by fluvial action have to bear any detriment or loss or enjoy any benefit or gain that may be caused by such fluvial action."

It was then said that more than 25 years ago the river Jargo began to cut away land from Manikpur and added much land to Mauza Bagheri and that by about the year 1907 some 30 acres of land had been so added to Bagheri. It was alleged that in a suit between the proprietors of Manikpur and Bagheri it was judicially decided that the said area had become the property of the owners of Bagheri. The contention was then put forward that as the added land had become part of the village Bagheri which had been the subject of the Permanent Settlement, the proprietors of Bagheri were not liable to be assessed to revenue on account thereof.

After indicating certain points of law based upon Regulation II of 1819, Regulation XI of 1825 and the Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), the plaintiff alleged that in disregard of the Permanent Settlement and of the absolute undertaking then given, the Revenue Authorities had assessed the said 30 acres to revenue, and the plaintiff asked for a declaration that the zemindars of Bagheri were not liable to pay any additional revenue in respect of the land detailed below. Some importance is to be attached to the word "additional." The plaintiffs also asked that the Government might be restrained from realizing the annual revenue, and that a sum of Rs. 4,200 paid under protest might be refunded to them.

A reference to the map marked G. M. and C. H. B. K. (a plain copy of which will be found at the end of the record) shows the stream Jargo flowing in a north-easterly direction and falling into the Ganges. The relatively straight red ink line marks the boundary between the two villages at the time of the Settlement in 1882. The curved green pencil line superimposed on the red ink one marks the boundary line of the two villages at the time of the Settlement in 1921. The areas hatched in green pencil are agreed to be the 30 acres in question in this case. The contention of the Revenue Authorities, when they assessed the land was that they did so under the provisions of cl. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 read with s. 99 of the Land Revenue Act (III of 1901). Clause 4 provided that land gained by gradual accretion "shall not in any case be understood to exempt the holder of it from the payment to Government of any assessment for the public revenue to which it may be liable under the provisions of Regulation II of 1819, or of any other Regulation in force." The Revenue Authorities say that the Regulation in force when they imposed the assessment was the Land Revenue Act III of 1901 and that s. 99 entitled them in terms to assess this particular land. The section is as follows "Land added by alluvions to a mahal may be assessed and settled by the Collector in accordance with rules made under s. 234." In the circumstances of the case it was quite certain that land had been added. It was quite certain that it had been added to a mahal, and in the opinion of the Board of Revenue the land so added was in its nature alluvion. They, therefore, assessed the 30 acres to revenue.

The plaintiff contested the legality of that assessment but an appellate order of the Revenue Court of the 1st of November, 1922, decided the assessment to be valid; and thereupon the plaintiffs brought this suit.

Dr. Agarwala, on behalf of the plaintiffs, contends that as the land of both the villages was permanently settled no additional settlement could ever be imposed no matter in whose hands any particular area of land might happen to be at any moment. That is to say if the zemindar of Bagheri held at any particular moment land which had been included in the Permanent Settlement of Manikpur that the zemindars of Bagheri could claim that the added land should not be the subject of any taxation, because a portion of the revenue permanently settled was being in fact paid in respect of that land by persons living across the other side of the stream, namely, the zemindars of Manikpur. Dr. Agarwala contended that as the village of Bagheri was permanently settled, it must follow that everything which had become part of the village of Bagheri is by reason of the Permanent Settlement protected from further imposition. He also said that the added land could not fairly be called alluvion, and the Land Revenue Act III of 1901 and the Circular 8-1 were ultra vires in so far as they purported to affect permanently settled land.

Before considering the law on this matter, it is necessary to state a few facts.

The facts in relation to the movement of the river and the deposit of the added area are as follows. During each and every rainy season, or during some but not every rainy season and during the period of subsidence of the river, the river Jargo has gradually altered its course, principally to the westward, cutting into Manikpur; but on two small sections it has moved eastward cutting into Bagheri. There has been no occasion on which the river has markedly altered its course, so that any zemindar of Manikpur could point to land of his which originally lying on the left bank of the river has suddenly appeared on the right bank. The result of the movement has been to add in a course of years the area of 30 acres to Bagheri and a relatively small area to Manikpur. The area of 30 acres was built up in the rainy seasons and during the subsidence of the river, as we have already said, month by month, but it was in the nature of a gradual and not a sudden accretion. We are of opinion that, in the circumstances, the land so added to Bagheri satisfied the meaning attached to the word 'alluvion,' which according to Webster's Dictionary is "accretion to land by the gradual or momentarily insensible addition of matter by the action of water, or (as broadly used by some) by the insensible reliction of the water from its bank." A much shorter definition is given in the Circular 8-1 printed at page 183 of 8th edition of Dr. Agarwala's Commentary on the Land Revenue Act. There alluvion is said to mean "an actual increase in area caused by fluvial action." Dr. Agarwala objects to our acceptance of that definition, on the ground that the Board have no authority to define the meanings of words appearing in the Statute. But taking the definition given by Webster, we are of opinion that the added area of land fits in with that definition, and is in fact alluvion.

The first case to which we were referred was one of Nogender Chunder Ghose v.

Mahomed Esoff (1). This case does not establish any principle of law which helps Dr. Agarwala, but contains a convenient summary of Regulation No. XI of 1825 (at page 118* of the Report). The Judges point out the 4th section of the Regulation as divided into free clauses, and the first deals with land gained by gradual accession (i. e., alluvion in the proper sense of the word).

He brought to our notice the case of the Secretary of State for India v. Fahamid-annissa Begum (2), and it certainly is an authority in point and has helped us to arrive at a decision in this case. Their Lordships of the Privy Council after dealing with the opening clauses of Regulation II of 1819, discussed at page 600† of the Report the various clauses of s. 31. It seems perfectly clear that lands permanently settled are not to be the subject of any additional assessment, and the decision of the Revenue Authorities may be reversed by a Civil Court "in any case in which it shall appear that lands which actually formed at the period in question a component part of such an estate have been unjustly subjected to assessment." The important words are of course "lands which actually formed at the period in question a component part of such an estate."

Now this added land did not at the date of the Permanent Settlement form any part of the village of Bagheri, and the position has been that since the year 1907, according to the pleadings, the zemindars of Bagheri have been holding these 30 acres revenue free. The difficulty in Dr. Agarwala's way throughout has been the very short answer that this land was never included in the Permanent Settlement of 1793 with the zemindars of Bagheri. At that date Bagheri had an acreage of 735 bighas 4 biswas and at the time of the assessment complained of the acreage was 797 bighas 8 biswas, the increase being represented by the 30 acres in dispute.

Another case cited before us was that of the Secretary of State for India v. Maharaja of Burdwan (3). There is a marked difference in the facts of that case and the one we are at present considering but there is an important passage which we shall quote. "On an analysis of the term of these Regulations, so far as they are material to the question now under consideration, it appears that, while lands included in a Permanent Settlement were carefully excluded from further assessment, this protection was extended only to lands actually in existence at the time of the Settlement and specifically included in the estate as settled." Their Lordships further point out at page 116* of the report that "property is one thing and assessability is another." In the present case we accept the statement of the plaintiffs that a suit was brought with reference to the ownership of this particular 30 acres and it was decided that that new land must pass to the zemindars of Bagheri, but because the property in the land has been declared to be theirs, it by no reason follows that that land is not assessable.

The plaintiffs' contention, limited to the assertion that they are entitled to hold land permanently settled free from any additional settlement is good; but when the investigation discloses that the land was not included in the Permanent Settlement of Bagheri, it becomes apparent that cl. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 and s. 99 of the Land Revenue Act III of 1901 come into operation. It was contended in fact that revenue on the basis of a Permanent Settlement was paid by the zemindars of Manikpur. That may be so. The zemindars of Manikpur may, if they please, ask for relief against a payment in respect of land which has passed out of their possession. The zemindars of Bagheri wish to take credit for the payment made by the zemindars of Manikpur, but no case has been cited by Dr. Agarwala in support of that supposed right and in our opinion the test must be whether the lands in dispute ever formed the subject of a Permanent Settlement in the hands of the present zemindars of Bagheri, that is, formed part of that estate so permanently settled. It is contended that they did not.

As in our view the land is alluvion and as it cannot be said that the assessment in dispute is an additional one, we are of opinion that this case is governed by Art. 4 of Regulation 11 of 1825 and s. 99 of the Land Revenue Act. Agreeing, therefore, with the learned Subordinate Judge, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for damages on the ground that certain copyrights have been infringed. The success of the appeal depended entirely on the success of Suit No. 454 of 1922 brought to set aside the sale. That suit has now been dismissed by our order in First Appeal No. 427 of 1927 decided to-day. It is, therefore, conceded that this appeal must fail with costs on the higher scale.

The plaintiffs have filed certain cross-objections against Janki Das, defendant. A preliminary objection is taken that no such cross-objections lie. The plaintiffs had impleaded Janki Das alleging him to be a partner of the defendants' firm, and had claimed relief against him jointly with the others. The Court below has held that Janki Das is not proved to have been a partner. The suit against him has been dismissed. The plaintiffs filed no appeal against Janki Das at all within the time allowed by law. The other defendants, viz., Banki Lal and others filed an appeal against the plaintiffs, and in the memorandum of appeal impleaded Janki Das also. It is quite clear that no relief was claimed in the appeal against Janki Das who was merely a pro forma respondent and need not have been impleaded at all. He was in no way interested in the appeal and there was no point common to him and the other parties which was going to be raised. The plaintiffs have tried to take advantage of Janki Das having been impleaded by the other defendants, and have filed cross-objections against him praying that the suit should be decreed against him also. In our opinion such cross objections cannot be entertained.

Without saying that in cases of partnership or partition of property or other cases of like nature, where rights common to all the parties are in dispute there can be no cross-objections by one respondent against a co-respondent, I am of opinion that ordinarily in cases where the person against whom cross-objections are filed is not interested in the appeal and is a mere pro forma respondent, no cross-objections can be validly filed against him. This has undoubtedly been the practice of this Court for a considerably long time, and I may refer only to the case of Kallu v. Manni (1), and Abdul Ghani v. Muhammad Fasih (2). No doubt sub-cl. 3 of O. XLI, r. 22 has been slightly amended and the words "the party who may be affected have been substituted for the word "appellant". But that sub-clause deals with the service of notice. The object of the amendment might be to allow cross-objections against a co-respondent in cases of partnership, partition, etc. I am not prepared to hold that on account of this amendment, a respondent has an absolute right of filing cross-objections against a co-respondent, even where such co-respondent is not an interested party at all and no relief has been claimed against him in the appeal. In my opinion this is not a fit case for the exercise of the discretionary power given to us under O. XLI, r. 33.

Ashworth, J.—I concur. In my view a party to a case cannot be regarded as a respondent in an appeal, the success or failure of which wholly or in part, can in no way affect him. It is only a respondent who has a right of preferring a cross-objection under the said rule. A person who is a defendant in the original suit need not necessarily be a respondent in an appeal brought by the unsuccessful plaintiff.

By the Court.—Both the appeal and the cross objections are dismissed.

The appellants will pay the costs of the plaintiff-respondent and will bear their own costs of the appeal. The plaintiff will pay the costs of Janki Das in the cross-objections and will bear his own costs.

In view of the provisions of s. 3 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, there can be no right of pre-emption in areas where the Act applies except in accordance with the provisions of the Act or under the Muhammadan Law. [p. 572, col. 2.]

Section 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act expressly prevents the Act from conferring any benefit on persons who are, under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act not entitled to purchase the property in dispute. [p. 571, col. 2.]

A person who has merely obtained sanction, under s. 16-A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, to pre-empt a property does not thereby become a person 'entitled to purchase' the property under that Act within the meaning of s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, and s. 7 of the latter Act does not, therefore, confer on him a right of pre-emption. JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption of a property situated in the District of Bundelkhand, which was sold on the 22nd December, 1923. The vendor was a member of an agricultural tribe and so were the vendees, but the vendees were not co-sharers in the village at all. The pre-emptors, on the other hand, are not members of the same agricultural tribe as the vendor, but are co-sharers not only in the mahal but in the very khata in which the share sold is situated. Before bringing their suit for pre-emption the plaintiffs did obtain the sanction of the Collector under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, s. 16-A as amended by Act IV of 1915.

The plaintiffs based their claim mainly on the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of the village, the defendants contested the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had no right to maintain the suit and that they had no preferential right as against them.

The trial Court came to the conclusion that although "purchase", in view of the pronouncement of this Court in the case of Suraj Bhan v. Somwarपुरi (1) did not include "pre-emption", nevertheless "pre-emption" did include "purchaser". It, therefore, came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs, having obtained the sanction of the Collector to pre-empt this property, were persons who were entitled to purchase it under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act.

The learned District Judge has taken a contrary view, in his opinion, the right of pre-emption is entirely distinct from the right of purchase, and is a mere right of substitution. He is also of opinion that the reference in s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act to the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, does not necessarily imply a reference to that Act as amended in 1915. He is further of opinion that by implication s. 16-A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act must be deemed to have been repealed by s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, although the said provision is not mentioned in the schedule of repealed Acts.

In my opinion, there are two questions which have to be considered separately. The first is whether the Agra Pre-emption Act does confer a right on the present plaintiffs to maintain the suit and the second is whether, if it does not, it takes away any right which they might have had independently of it.

Section 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act provides that "Nothing in that Act shall confer a right of pre-emption on any person who is, under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, not entitled to purchase the property in dispute." In my opinion this section was merely intended not to confer a right of pre-emption on any person who was not entitled to purchase property in Bundelkhand. It does not mean that the section takes away the right of pre-emption of a person who had the right under the old Act.

I am inclined to the view that the learned Judge is in error in thinking that a reference to the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, does not imply a reference to the Act as amended in 1915. The Act was referred to by its short title, and one would imagine that the Act so referred to is the Act as amended up to date. It is, however, not necessary for the purposes of this appeal to express a final opinion on this point. Section 16-A dealt with the right to pre-empt whereas s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act speaks of "entitled to purchase". It is, therefore, not necessary to invoke the aid of the provisions of s. 16-A.

The learned Judge has erred in thinking that s. 16-A has by implication been repealed. That section conferred no substantive right on a pre-emptor where he had none before; it merely placed the obstacle of sanction in the way of his suing, when such right existed. Even if his right of pre-emption is destroyed, it does not necessarily amount to a repeal of s. 16-A. I would not say that the Collector has no jurisdiction to grant such a sanction, but I would say that such a sanction even if granted, is now futile.

I am, however, in agreement with the learned District Judge that in view of the long standing authorities of this Court it must now be taken as settled that a right of pre-emption is not the same thing as a right of purchase. This is now further made clear by the definition of the right of pre-emption as given in s. 4, sub-cl. 9 of the Agra Pre-emption Act. It, therefore, follows that the sanction obtained by the plaintiffs to pre-empt the property cannot strictly be taken to be a sanction to purchase it.

Now s. 3 of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act makes it clear that the plaintiffs are not of such a class as by right to be entitled to purchase the property, but they might, if they obtain the sanction of the Collector, become so entitled. The plaintiffs are not absolutely entitled to purchase; their right is conditional. Even assuming that after sanction they can be said to have become entitled to purchase, it seems clear that a person so long as he has not actually obtained the sanction to purchase, has not become a person entitled to purchase even under that provision.

In this particular case the present plaintiffs never obtained a sanction to purchase the property. They merely obtained sanction to pre-empt. I am, therefore, unable to hold that they are "entitled to purchase" the property under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, within the meaning of s. 7 of the Pre-emption Act. Section 7 of the latter Act accordingly does not confer on them the right to pre-empt this property.

The next question is whether it takes away any right which they had. I have already quoted the section in extenso, and remarked that the intention merely was not to confer a new right on persons who had not that right. The lower Appellate Court is, therefore, wrong in thinking that it was contemplated by this section to take away the right of pre-emption vested in persons who had the right independently of the Act.

There is, however, s. 3 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, which was neither noticed by the Courts below, nor referred to by Counsel before us. That section provides:—

"No right of pre-emption shall be enforced in respect of any transfer made after the commencement of this Act of an interest in land in any area to which this Act applies, except in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

This is followed by a proviso that where there is no right of pre-emption under s. 5, the Muhammadan Law remains in force when the vendor and the pre-emptor are both Muhammadans. This proviso clearly shows that the section does not deal with procedure only, but affects substantive rights. It was obviously intended that in areas where the Act applies there can be no right of pre-emption except in accordance with the Act. The Pre-emption Act undoubtedly applies to Bundelkhand, and whatever right the present plaintiffs might have had independently of the Act, cannot now be enforced. They can only succeed if they are entitled under the Pre-emption Act to pre-empt. Although the Act applies to them, and they would come within the classes of persons mentioned in s. 12, they are debarred from taking advantage of those provisions because s. 7 expressly prevents the Act from conferring any benefit on them. The result is that s. 3 takes away any right that they might have had independently of the Act, and s. 7 prevents the conferring on them of any right under the Act. Thus they have lost all right of pre-emption. If such a result was not contemplated by the Legislature, there may have to be a further amendment of the Pre-emption Act. But as the provisions stand, I can come to no conclusion other than that indicated above.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Ashworth, J.—I concur in the order dismissing these appeals. The plaintiffs-appellants claimed a right to pre-empt certain property sold in Bundelkhand by a co-sharer in the mahal to a non-co-sharer. The vendor was a member of an agricultural tribe. The plaintiffs were not; but they had obtained the Collector's sanction to bring suits to pre-empt under s. 16-A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. Mr. Herchenroder, District Judge of Cawnpore, dismissed it holding that the last named section was impliedly repealed by the Agra Pre-emption Act, 1922, being inconsistent with its general policy and that s. 7 of the Pre-emption Act barred a claim to pre-empt under the statutory provisions of s. 12 of that Act.

Section 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, 1922, runs as follows:—

"Nothing in this Act shall confer a right of pre-emption on any person who is, under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, not entitled to purchase the property in dispute".

The Subordinate Judge held that this was no bar to the plaintiffs' suit because the words in s. 7 of the Pre-emption Act "entitled to purchase" would include a person given such sanction by the Collector. The District Judge held that s. 16-A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act could not be invoked because it was not contained in the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, but was added by an amending Act in 1915. He, therefore, held that "entitled to purchase" under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, would not include a person who obtained the Collector's sanction under s. 16-A to bring a suit for pre-emption. Further he held that the Agra Pre-emption Act must be deemed to have repealed any right of pre-emption conferred by the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, even though there was no provision in the Pre-emption Act expressly repealing the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act as a whole or repealing in particular s. 16-A of that Act, as amended by the Act of 1915.

The reasons just stated do not commend themselves to me. A right to purchase is different from a right to pre-empt. The right of pre-emption is merely a right of substitution. Nor can a sanction to pre-empt be construed as a sanction to purchase. Separate provisions of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act apply to each kind of sanction and they cannot be confused. On the other hand, the reference in s. 7 of the Pre-emption Act to the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, must be construed to be a reference to that Act as amended by the amending Act of 1915. When a short title is given in an original Act, the Act, however, subsequently amended, can be called by that short title. To hold otherwise would be to hold that where the Legislature had prescribed a short title it was necessary to use a longer one. An amended Act is not two Acts but one Act. Again, the District Judge was wrong in inferring that an intention should be ascribed to a later Act to repeal the provisions of an earlier Act on general principles. The former enactment must be either specifically repealed or its continuance must be inconsistent with a provision of a later Act, in which case, repeal will be deemed by necessary implication.

The correct view of this matter appears to me to be as follows. Section 16-A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act only enables a Collector to sanction a suit for pre-emption where, but for the provisions contained in the earlier part of the section, the applicant for sanction has a tract. The sanction of the Collector does not create a substantive right, but is merely necessary for the otherwise existing substantive right to be exercised. The right of the plaintiff to pre-empt in this case was based on custom. That right which existed subject to the restrictions on its exercise imposed by the said s. 16-A] up to the passing of the Agra Pre-emption Act, ceased to exist when s. 3 of the Pre-emption Act was enacted. This is the important section which the District Judge has overlooked. The effect of that section is clearly, as described, in the marginal note, to abolish customary and other rights of pre-emption previously existing, excepting under the Muhammadan Law. The plaintiff must claim a statutory right under the Agra Pre-emption Act or cannot succeed. Such a right is barred by s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act because the plaintiff is admittedly not entitled to purchase the property in dispute under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, even when amended by the Act of 1915. To discover what persons are entitled to purchase under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, 1903, we must refer to s. 3 of that Act. That section provides that any person is entitled to purchase from an alienor who is not a member of an agricultural tribe or is a member of the same tribe as himself etc. These conditions are admittedly not satisfied in this case. Sub-s. (2) allows the Collector to sanction previously or retrospectively a purchase by any one, but sub-s. (2) may be ignored for the purpose of interpreting s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act. For it is obvious that the Collector could never give sanction to purchase to a person claiming to pre-empt and for these reasons no one would claim to pre-empt who could purchase directly. If there was no desire by the owner to sell, sanction would be clearly improper. Again, if the owner had already sold validly to another person, sanction would be improper. So there could never be a case of a person claiming to pre-empt getting sanction to purchase from the Collector, unless we are to suppose that the Collector might give a sanction to purchase merely in order to assist a would-be pre-emptor to overcome the bar imposed on him by s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act. On the principle that officials are presumed to do the right thing (omnia prae-sumuntur rite et sollemniter acta esse), we cannot suppose that the Collector would do anything of the kind. Apart from this it is clear that the phrase "entitled to purchase" as used in s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act only refers to the persons given an unqualified right (i. e., a right independent of the Collector's sanction) by s. 3 of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act. The operation of s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, cannot have been intended to depend upon the Collector's sanction. This s. 7 appears to have been hastily added at a very late date in the proceedings culminating in the passing of the Agra Pre-emption Act, and although this fact cannot be adduced as an argument to control the meaning of s. 7, it explains why reference in s. 7 was not confined to the persons entitled to purchase the property in dispute under sub-s. (1) of s. 3 of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act. Specification of sub-s. (1) would have made the matter clearer, but would not have affected the meaning to be attached to s. 7. A person claiming pre-emption could never have been given sanction by the Collector to purchase for the reasons stated.

I, therefore, hold that the decision of the District Judge was correct. The plaintiff's suit must fail not only because, after the passing of s. 3 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, 1922, he could not claim to pre-empt on the basis of custom, but also because the land being in Bundelkhand, he was barred from any right to pre-empt which he would otherwise have had under s. 12 of the Pre-emption Act by s. 7 of that Act. I would, therefore, dismiss these two appeals with costs.

By the Court.—Both the Second Appeals Nos. 99 and 100 of 1926 are dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Harendra Krishna Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs appeal arising out of a suit for sale on the basis of a mortgage-deed, dated the 31st of October, 1917, executed by Mohar Singh and Ajab Singh in favour of the plaintiffs Khazan Singh and others. It appears that on the 18th of September, 1917, an application for execution of a money decree was filed by Karan Singh against Mohar Singh and Ajab Singh, his judgment-debtors, with a prayer that their property should be attached. An attachment was duly effected on the 28th of September, 1917, and the mortgage deed in suit covered the property so attached. It is not disputed in this case that on the date when the mortgage-deed was executed by the judgment-debtors the attachment in execution of the decree of Karan Singh was actually in force. Karan Singh subsequently executed his application and got the property sold and purchased it himself. The present suit is against the mortgagors as well as the heirs of Karan Singh. The Court below has held that the mortgage-deed is ineffective as against the auction-purchaser because it was executed during the subsistence of the attachment. The learned Advocate for the appellants, however, contends that that attachment came to an end on account of certain subsequent proceedings.

It appears that while the execution proceedings initiated by Karan Singh were pending, the sons of the judgment-debtors brought a suit for a declaration that the money-decree obtained by Karan Singh was not binding on them and the family property could not be attached and sold in execution of it. The Court was informed of the institution of the suit and on the 13th of May, 1918, passed an unfortunate order that "such a suit having been filed the execution case is struck off". There is nothing to show that the decree-holder consented to his case being struck off in that way. As a matter of fact, subsequently the decree-holder applied on the 27th of May, 1918, requesting the Court to order that the attachment proceedings were still continuing. This application also was dismissed by the same Subordinate Judge by an order, dated the 28th of May, 1917. It was as follows:—

"The attachment remains in force for six months from the date of striking off execution case as it was not struck off for default of prosecution. Hence this application, being useless is rejected." No one has been able to explain what provision of law was in the contemplation of the learned Subordinate Judge when he thought that the attachment remained in force for six months, and six months only. The order which he passed for striking off the execution case was apparently a result of some misapprehension. But his second order undoubtedly says that the previous order was not passed under O. XXI, r. 57 because it expressly says that the case had not been struck off for "default of prosecution". The order further shows that the Subordinate Judge in his mind believed that he was not putting an end to the attachment inasmuch as he thought that it would continue for six months more. Within the expiry of this supposed period, the decree-holder again applied on the 2nd of November, 1918 for execution of his decree.

It is obvious that no default had been made by the decree-holder in the prosecution of the execution proceedings. "The striking off" of the case was, as the Court itself remarked, not due to any default of the decree-holder. Order XXI, r. 57 was, therefore, wholly inapplicable to the case. His application for execution also was not actually "dismissed" but the case was ordered to be struck off, which perhaps meant nothing more than that it should be removed from the register for the time being. The case, therefore, cannot be said to have been disposed of on the merits or dismissed for want of prosecution. The matter was only shelved for the time being pending the result of the suit brought by the sons of the judgment-debtors. The matter, therefore, was only temporarily postponed and not finally disposed of. Under these circumstances it is impossible to hold that the attachment came to an end. In several cases this Court has held that where the execution proceedings are not dismissed on account of the default of the decree-holder, but the matter is merely shelved for the time being, the proceedings must be deemed to be still pending. We may refer to the case of Bijai Saran Sahi v. Deo Kishen Prasad Bahadur Sahi (1) and cases referred to therein. This principle has been accepted by the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Chhattar Singh v. Kamal Singh (2).

It follows, therefore, that the mortgage having been executed during the pendency of the attachment is wholly ineffective and cannot affect the rights of the auction-purchaser Karan Singh or his heirs. The result, therefore, is that the suit must stand dismissed. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

First appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 30th of October, 1923.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, Messrs. N. P. Asthana, S. K. Dar and S. N. Gupta, for the Respondent.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment of Ashworth, J.

JUDGMENT.

Ashworth, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant against the defendant-respondents for setting aside a deed of sale executed by defendant No. 2, Shyam Lal, father of the plaintiff, in favour of Nattha Ram, defendant No. 1. The admitted facts are that Chiranji Lal, grandfather of the plaintiff and father of the defendant No. 2, carried on the business of publisher and bookseller in conjunction with Nattha Ram, defendant No. 1. On the death of Chiranji Lal the partnership was maintained by Nattha Ram along with Shyam Lal. At the end of that time Shyam Lal having no inclination to continue the partnership arranged with Nattha Ram to terminate the same and divide some of the assets and sell other of the assets to Nattha Ram. The plaintiff's contention is that the disposal of the assets by Shyam Lal was for a price and consideration which was prejudicial to his interest as minor son of Shyam Lal.

The lower Court dismissed the suit. It held that nothing in Hindu Law could compel Shyam Lal to continue the partnership merely because he had a minor son who, along with himself, was interested in his (Shyam Lal's) share of the assets of the business. This decision of the lower Court has been impugned by Counsel for the appellant but, in my opinion, on no valid ground. The manager of a joint Hindu family who is partner in a business cannot be required to continue the partnership when he no longer desires to do so and especially when, as in this case, he considers that he is incapable of giving assistance as partner. It may be remarked that in the plaint the allegation was made by the plaintiff that Shyam Lal was a man without capacity or ability. This admission in itself furnishes a solid ground for Shyam Lal deciding not to continue the partnership. There were two houses among the assets of the partnership. When the partnership was dissolved between defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 1 the more valuable of the houses went to Shyam Lal and the other to Nattha Ram. A value was put on each house and the difference was taken into account in the disposal of the other assets of defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1. It is said by the plaintiff-appellant's Counsel that the sale of the other assets to Nattha Ram was for an insufficient amount. I consider it open to doubt whether, when once it is shown that a sale by a Hindu father and manager is necessary any suit will lie against the vendee on the ground of insufficiency of price inasmuch as the father is empowered to make arrangements for the sale and the vendee can scarcely be expected to see that the price is inadequate. At any rate it is clear to me that no such suit would lie against the vendee in the absence of fraud or collusion being proved against the vendee. No such fraud or collusion has been proved in this case.

The main point made by Counsel for the appellant is that in the sale-deed which it is desired to set aside, various mortgage bonds were included as sold to defendant No. 1. The rate of interest borne by these bonds is not entered in the sale-deed. Appellant's Counsel suggests that the failure to enter this rate of interest amounted to fraudulent concealment. He says that if this rate of interest were shown it might be obvious that these bonds were handed over by defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1 for an insufficient consideration. It appears to me sufficiently that these mortgage bonds must have been registered and it was easy for any person who was interested in the matter to get copies of these bonds and find out the interest. The mere fact that the sale-deed did not go into the particulars of the interest accruing on these mortgage bonds did not amount to any fraudulent concealment. The consideration for these mortgage bonds was, it appears, the amount due as principal on them according to the bonds. Nattha Ram would have to spend money in suing on them. It is conceivable that although they were secured, the security might in some cases be inadequate. It was open to the appellant to produce in Court the mortgage bonds in order to show the interest due. He did not think it desirable to do so. In these circumstances I would hold that no insufficiency of price for these bonds is proved and that certainly no such insufficiency is proved as to justify the conclusion that the sale by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 was fraudulent or collusive. We have to look at the state of affairs at the time of the date of the sale. It seems obvious that no outsider would have been likely to give to Shyam Lal for his and his son's share in the assets of the partnership, dissolved or not dissolved, as good a price as was given by defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 was continuing the business and obviously the stock, the book debts and the goodwill would be more valuable to him than to an outsider. No attempt has been made to prove that these assets would have fetched a larger sum if offered to any one else and the contrary seems to me to be a certainty. This being so, it cannot be said that the sale was for an insufficient sum, and the suit of the plaintiff was rightly dismissed. I would note that the plaintiff asks for compensation from defendant No. 1 in respect of moveable property purchased by him from defendant No. 2 and disposed of to others. In my opinion Hindu Law would not afford any such relief. Whether an action in tort would lie is also doubtful, but it is certain that it would only lie on the ground of collusion or fraud by the vendee. None such has been proved.

For the above reasons I think that the lower Court was quite right in dismissing the suit and I would dismiss this appeal with costs on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J.—I concur in the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother.

The contention that there was no legal necessity for the transfer is, in my opinion, without any force. Relations of strangers with joint Hindu families, when they enter into transactions of partnership, are not governed strictly by the Hindu Law but by the Contract Act. If a manager of a joint Hindu family has power on behalf of the family to enter into partnership with strangers, he has equally powers to dissolve such partnership. It is, therefore, impossible to accept the contention that the father was not competent to put a stop to this business, particularly when it was admitted in the plaint that he was wholly incompetent to carry it on. When the father decided that the business was not profitable and that he could not carry it on with profit, there was full justification for his dissolving it. There was thus necessity for the transaction.

The next question is whether the son can challenge the sale on the ground that the consideration was grossly inadequate. I am not prepared to say that once necessity has arisen for the transfer of ancestral property the sale by the father is always binding on the minor members no matter whether the consideration is grossly inadequate or not. In cases of mortgages their Lordships of the Privy Council have frequently laid down that there may be necessity for the transfer at a certain rate of interest but there may not be necessity for the high rate charged. I am, therefore, not prepared to hold that the plaintiffs' suit would fail automatically as soon as it is found that there was necessity for putting a stop to the business.

If the transaction, as is contended on behalf of the respondents, amounted to nothing more than a mere winding up of the business, it would certainly be doubtful whether the minor son can have the whole thing re-opened. Assuming, however, that it was a sale, pure and simple I agree with my learned brother that it is not established that the consideration paid for the sale is inadequate.

The property transferred consisted of moveables and immoveables. In view of the cases referred to in Nand Ram v. Mangal Sen (1) I am bound to assume that the restrictions on the power of a Hindu father to alienate immoveable property are equally applicable to transfers of moveables.

It has, however, been suggested that inasmuch as the sale took place several years ago and there is no likelihood that the moveable properties now exist his suit ought to fail because in Hindu law no equitable relief for compensation can be granted. I choose to reserve my final opinion on this question as no authority either way has been cited before us. I am, however, inclined at first sight to hold that equitable relief of compensation can be granted even where the goods have been disposed of by the defendant-vendee. If this were not so, the position would be anomalous. The result of a suit brought by the minor member to avoid the alienation would depend not on the merits of the case but on the conduct of the defendant, whether he has or has not, by the time the suit is brought, disposed of the moveable properties. In many suits for setting aside alienations by limited owners equitable doctrines have been invoked, and compensations have been awarded by the Courts. I would, therefore, not be prepared to dismiss the suit on the mere ground that moveable properties which were transferred under the deed might have been disposed of by the defendants. As a matter of fact, this question has not been gone into and we cannot be sure that all the moveable properties that were transferred are not now in the possession of the defendant.

I, however, agree that the appeal must fail.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

THE COLLECTOR OF CAWNPORE
IN CHARGE OF THE ESTATE KNOWN AS GYAN SINGH'S ESTATE AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Babu JUGAL KISHORE—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), ss. 37 (a), 55—Suit on hundi—Plea that defendant was a ward—Burden of proof—Application for adjournment, granting of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 57, 78—Government Notifications, whether can be taken judicial notice of—Copy of Gazette, evidentiary value of.

In a suit instituted on the basis of a hundi the defendant pleaded that under s. 37 (a) of the U. P. Court of Wards Act of 1912 he was not competent to enter into the contract embodied in the hundi and that under s. 55 of the said Act he could not personally be sued. On the date fixed for hearing evidence, the defendant's Counsel asked for a short adjournment of a few hours in order that the Head Clerk of the Court of Wards could be produced with his record. This was refused by the Court, and the suit was decreed on the ground that the defendant had summoned no witnesses for the day and that there was nothing on the record to show that he was a ward on the date of the execution of the hundi or on the date of the institution of the suit.

Held, that the course adopted by the trial Court was too severe and had caused hardship to the defendant [p. 580, col. 2.]

[The Government Notification was admitted as evidence in the appeal, the case was remanded to the Court below for substituting the name of the Collector and proceeding with the case according to law.]

Per Sulaiman, J.—A Government Notification does not come under s. 57 of the Evidence Act, and the Court is not bound to take judicial notice of it. But the production of the Gazette published under the authority of the Government would be sufficient proof of the Notification under s. 78 of that Act. [p. 580, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 8th of July, 1924.

The Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

Dr. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Ashworth, J.—This first appeal arises out of a suit brought by Babu Jugal Kishore plaintiff against Thakur Raghuraj Singh defendant on the basis of a hundi for Rs. 8,000. The defendant received this money and covenanted to pay the amount after 90 days. The defence was that the contract embodied in the hundi was beyond the competence of the defendant because at the time he was a ward, see s. 37 (a) of the U. P. Court of Wards Act of 1912. Another defence was that the suit against the ward personally was barred by s. 55 of the said Act, which provides that no ward shall be sued nor shall any proceedings be taken in the Civil Court otherwise than in the name of the Collector in charge of his property or such other persons as the Court of Wards may appoint in this behalf.

The suit was instituted on the 5th of March, 1924, and apparently the 24th of April, 1924, was fixed for framing the issues. At any rate on that date the defendant was examined as a ward, and the general attorney of the plaintiff was also examined. The defendant said that he had been a ward of the Court of Wards for 13 or 14 years. The general attorney for the plaintiff said that he came to know that the defendant was a ward when the written statement was filed, but he did not know since when he had been a ward. Issues were then struck. The first issue was whether the defendant was incompetent to take the loan and, whether the plaintiff was aware of his incompetency, and the second issue was whether the Collector of Cawnpore was a necessary party to the suit. The 8th of July, 1924, was fixed for hearing the evidence. On that date the Pleader for the defendant stated that his client was not ready with his evidence owing to pre-occupation with his daughter's marriage and asked for a short adjournment of a few hours in order that the Head Clerk of the Court of Wards could be produced along with his record. He stated that the Head Clerk had not arrived at his office although it was 11-30 A. M. The Court refused this adjournment on the ground that the defendant had summoned no witnesses for the day and decreed the suit on the ground that there was nothing on the record to show that the defendant was a ward on the date of the execution of the hundi or that the plaintiff had notice of this fact. It also held that there was nothing on the record to show that the defendant was a ward of the Court at the date of the institution of the suit and so there was nothing to sustain the objection that the Collector of Cawnpore was a necessary party.

The following pleas are taken in this appeal. One was that the adjournment should have been allowed to enable the Government Notification declaring the defendant a ward to be produced. Another was that it was immaterial whether the plaintiff had notice of the assumption of the management by the Court of Wards of the defendant's estate. The second plea we need not consider as the suit was rightly dismissed if the Judge was right in holding that the defendant was bound to prove that he was a ward and had failed to do so.

As to the former plea there was no application by the defendant for production of the Government Notification declaring him a ward. It cannot, therefore, be said that the Court was bound to adjourn the hearing for the production of this paper.

It is not clear from the record that on the 8th of July, 1924, when the defendant's Vakil asked for an adjournment, the defendant was himself personally present in Court. If he had been, I should hold that the Court should have put him into the witness-box to prove that he was a ward. In the circumstance that the plaintiff's Vakil admitted that he was a ward at the date of the striking of issues this evidence might have been regarded as reliable to show the approximate date from which he was a ward, which was all that was necessary. In any case, however, I consider that there was sufficient material before the Subordinate Judge to justify his requiring evidence from the plaintiff that the suit as brought was not barred by s. 55 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act of 1912, which provides that no ward shall be sued otherwise than in the name of the Collector in charge of his property. To allow such a suit to result in a decree against the defendant's person is likely to cause much subsequent confusion and embarrassment. Authority in such a case, where there is a positive legal bar to a suit and where there are grounds for suspecting that that bar may exist, and where a decree (supposing such bar were to exist) would cause subsequent confusion and embarrassment, for holding that the Court should itself require to be satisfied on the point is to be found in Guru Pershad Singh v. Gossain Munraj Puri (1). In this case an objection was taken in appeal that the suit had been brought illegally by a married mother of a minor on behalf of the minor contrary to the express provision of s. 45, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The proceedings in the lower Court were in appeal declared to be null and void. In this case we are satisfied that the defendant was a ward at the time when the suit was instituted. I would, accordingly, remand the case to the lower Court to re-hear after substituting as defendant the name of the Collector in charge of the defendant's property. Costs of this appeal should abide the result.

Sulaiman, J.—I concur in the order proposed. It is impossible to hold that the Court could have taken judicial notice of the Government Notification under s. 57 of the Indian Evidence Act. Government Notifications do not come under that section. But it is quite clear that the production of the Gazette printed under the authority of the Government would have been sufficient proof of the Notification under s. 78 of that Act.

I am unable to hold that there was any material on the record which would have justified the learned Subordinate Judge in requiring evidence from the plaintiff that the defendant was not a ward of the Court, and I would, therefore, not be prepared to hold that the Court was bound to put the defendant into the witness-box as a Court witness, in case he was himself present in the Court room, which is not at all clear. The case of Guru Pershad Singh v. Gossain Munraj Puri (1) is distinguishable because there no question of fact was in doubt, and the Court ought itself to have taken notice of the defect, had there been any. As regards the supposed defect, the case was subsequently overruled by a Full Bench in Asirun Bibi v. Sharip Mondul (2).

I am however of opinion that the Subordinate Judge acted in a hasty manner in declining to give the defendant's Counsel a short opportunity to produce evidence. The 8th of July, 1924, was the very first date fixed for hearing, there having been no previous adjournments. The office of the Court of Wards was in the same compound. The defendant's application was not for an adjournment of the case for that date, but only for a postponement for a few hours so that the Court of Wards clerk, who was late in coming to his office on that date, not having arrived till 11-30 A. M. might be produced as a witness. The point involved was simply whether the defendant's estate had been taken over by the Court of Wards or not. This could be conclusively established by the production of the Government Notification, if one could only get the reference to the Government Gazette. The fact of the Notification could have been ascertained in the course of that very day. Once the copy of the Government Gazette was produced before the Court it would have to accept the fact without question. The valuation of the suit was over Rs. 12,000. If the defendant was really a ward of the Court, the consequences of not impleading the Collector would be to introduce considerable complications and difficulties in the Execution Department. The learned Subordinate Judge remained unmindful of these considerations and declined to give even a few hours time to the defendant. I am of opinion that this course was too severe and has caused hardship to the defendant.

If I were sitting singly I would have been inclined to remand the case for allowing a fresh opportunity to the defendant to produce evidence as to whether he was a ward of the Court, and for impleading the Collector, if the defendant satisfied the Court that he was a ward.

I have however no objection to the procedure adopted by my learned brother in admitting the Government Notification as evidence in the appeal, and holding that the defendant is in fact a ward of the Court and therefore, remanding the case to the Court below for substituting the name of the Collector and proceeding with the case according to law.

By the Court.—The appeal is accordingly allowed and the case is remanded to the lower Court to re-hear it after substituting as defendant the name of the Collector in charge of the defendant's property. Costs of this appeal should abide the result.

—Appeal from preliminary decree, after passing of

The mere fact that a party is contemplating an appeal from a preliminary decree is not a sufficient cause for his non-appearance in proceedings relating to the passing of the final decree.

The filing of an appeal from a preliminary decree subsequent to the passing of the final decree cannot have the effect of nullifying the final decree.

Lalman v. Shiam Singh (1), distinguished.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order refusing to set aside the final decree in a partition suit. A preliminary decree for partition was passed on the 26th of January, 1925, and the Court appointed an Amin to prepare lots in the light of the observation contained in the judgment within one month and directed that the plaintiff should deposit the necessary Court fees. The fees were deposited and the Amin prepared the necessary lots and then the final decree was passed on the 7th of April, 1925. The appellant, however, appears to have taken no part in the proceedings relating to the preparation of the lots nor does he appear to have raised any objection to the lots prepared by the Amin. The final decree was passed while he put in no appearance. Subsequently, on the 23rd of April, 1925, he filed an appeal from the preliminary decree which has now been dismissed by us by our order of this date. While the appeal was pending in the High Court the defendant filed an application on the 18th of August, 1925, for setting aside the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed this application on the ground that the applicant was fully aware of the order that the Amin was to prepare lots and that it was his duty to appear and take objections. He cannot plead his ignorance when his Vakil was duly informed of the date fixed.

It is contended before us that there was sufficient cause for non-appearance because the appellant was contemplating an appeal to the High Court. In our opinion such ground does not furnish any good cause for his non-appearance.

It is next contended that when an appeal was subsequently preferred, the only preliminary decree which could be passed would be the one passed by the High Court and that, therefore, all proceedings following upon the preliminary decree made by the first Court were ultra vires and not binding on the appellant. Reliance was placed on the case of Lalman v. Shiam Singh (1). In our opinion it is not necessary to consider the point raised in that case inasmuch as in the present case there can be no doubt that on the 7th of April, 1925, when the final decree was passed, there was no appeal pending in the High Court, and it is impossible to say that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the final decree. The subsequent filing of an appeal cannot possibly have the effect of nullifying a decree which was passed with jurisdiction. Had we modified the preliminary decree on appeal the present decree, would of course have to be altered.

It is further to be noted that the appellant has not chosen to prefer any appeal from the final decree in which he could have properly raised the question of its validity. The present appeal fails even on the simple ground that no sufficient cause was shown for non-appearance.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This appeal and the connected First Appeal No. 388 of 1924 arise out of two suits for recovery of possession brought by two sets of rival claimants against Musammat Zaib Jahan Begam the defendant in possession. It appears that Bakhsh Ali Beg was the last full owner of the property in dispute and on his death he left a widow Musammat Hazurunnissa, a son Yusuf Beg and a daughter Musammat Hayatunnissa. The son and the daughter survived the widow. Thus they got two-thirds and one-third share respectively in the estate of Bakhsh Ali Beg. Yusuf Beg died in 1920 leaving Musammat Zaib Jahan Begam as his widow and his sister as two of his heirs. The remaining share in his estate would go to the residuaries, if any, and failing them to the distant kindred. It is an admitted fact that on the death of Yusuf Beg no claim was put forward either by any residuary or by distant kindred, and the names of Musammat Zaib Jahan Begam and Musammat Hayatunnissa were recorded on specific shares.

In 1922 Musammat Hayatunnissa died and soon after her death the present plaintiff Muhammad Shoaib Khan obtained a sale-deed from Nur Beg and Yakub Beg who asserted themselves to be the residuaries of the deceased. Suit No. 39 of 1923 out of which this appeal arises was instituted by Muhammad Shoaib Khan. The other suit was filed by Afsar Beg and others who claimed to be the distant kindreds. It may be mentioned that in the Mutation Court Musammat Zaib Jahan Begam succeeded mainly on the ground of her possession.

The rival claimants of course did not admit the title of the opposite party and Musammat Zaib Jahan Begam denied the rights of both sides. The Court below has found in favour of Afsar Beg and others and held that they are the distant kindreds, and has found that the plaintiff Muhammad Shoaib Khan has failed to prove that his transferors were the residuaries of the deceased. It has further found that Musammat Zaib Jahan Begam is in possession of the estate left by Yusuf Beg, excluding of course her own share, in lieu of her dower debt. The amount of her dower debt has been found to be Rs. 5,000. Musammat Zaib Jahan Begam has submitted to the decree in favour of Afsar Beg and others but Muhammad Shoaib Khan has appealed in both the suits.

The main point which Muhammad Shoaib Khan had to establish was whether his vendors' grandfather Moghul Beg was the own brother of Haider Beg, the father of Bakhsh Ali Beg. There is admittedly no documentary evidence to prove or disprove this link in the pedigree. The case depends entirely on the oral evidence of the parties. The learned Subordinate Judge has heard all the witnesses himself except one lady who was examined on commission. It is, therefore, obvious that we should attach weight to his findings; but for certain remarks in his judgment which are based on an unsound reasoning we would not have taken the trouble to examine the evidence in such great detail as we have done. After criticising the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiff the learned Judge has remarked that none of them is an independent witness. This remark, in our opinion, was unfounded as a good many of them are not connected with the plaintiff. Similarly his remark that none of the witnesses had any relations or connection with the family of Haider Beg, was perhaps a little too wide as Muhammad Ahsan was connected by marriage. Then again his remark that Muhammad Ahsan who was related to Musammat Hayatunnissa, his sister-in-law, was not also an independent witness, was not justified when he found that the plaintiff was in way related to Musammat Hayatunnissa. Lastly he has mentioned the names of the witnesses produced by the defendants in one breath and then simply stated that they satisfactorily prove both the pedigrees and are more reliable and respectable than the witnesses for the plaintiff. He has also added that their statements are supported by documentary evidence. The documentary evidence has no bearing on the question before us and does not touch the plaintiff's case. We have been led through the evidence of the witnesses for the defendants and we find it difficult to say that they are more reliable or more respectable. Having regard to these circumstances we have felt it our duty to examine the evidence for the plaintiff on whom the burden undoubtedly lay and to see for ourselves whether that evidence is sufficient to establish his case.

No doubt there are some circumstances in the conduct of the defendants which might seem to strengthen the plaintiff's case, but his case must stand or fall by his own evidence. In a case of this kind when the deceased ancestors died a long number of years ago and when all the evidence that is forthcoming is of witnesses of small status it is not safe for us to differ from the view taken of that evidence by the learned Subordinate Judge who had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses and examining their demeanour. It may be that he has given some reasons which are not strictly sound, nevertheless his general impression of the evidence stands and that is against the plaintiff.

It is not necessary for us to consider the other point which was raised in this appeal, namely, whether Musammatt Zaib Jahan Begam has made out her case that she is in possession of the property left by Yusuf Beg in lieu of her dower debt. The first argument is that at the time when the mutation of names was effected in her favour she did not profess to enter into possession in lieu of her dower debt and that, therefore, she cannot be allowed to retain the property on that plea. No authority has been cited before us which would show that unless and until the widow actually enters into possession of the estate on the express assertion that she is taking possession in lieu of her dower debt, she cannot subsequently be allowed to raise such a plea. We are inclined to think that the observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Babee Bachun v. Sheikh Hamid Hossein (1), makes it clear that "the right of a widow is founded on her power as a creditor for her dower, to hold the property of her husband, of which she has lawfully, and without force or fraud, obtained possession, until her debt is satisfied." In many subsequent judgments the learned Judges have been careful to use the words 'retain possession.' We may also refer to the case of Ali Bakhsh v. Alah Dad Khan, (2), where Richards, J., remarked "In my opinion, where a Muhammadan widow entitled to dower gets quietly and peacefully into possession without fraud, she is entitled to retain possession until her dower debt is paid," as also the remark of Tudbal, J., in the case of Ramzan Ali Khan v. Asghari Begam (3) that "the balance of authority is in favour of the view that a widow, who from the nature of things on the death of her husband in many instances finds herself in possession of some, if not of the whole, of her husband's estate, is entitled to hold that estate against other heirs until her claim to dower is satisfied, without being asked to show either consent on their part or on that of the deceased husband."

It seems to me that if the power to retain possession of the estate so long as her dower debt is not satisfied is exercised as a power of a creditor, the defendant Musammatt Zaib Jahan Begam is entitled to say that her dower debt must be satisfied before she is dispossessed, provided of course she did not enter into possession unlawfully or with force or fraud. There is no evidence to show that there was any force exercised or any fraud practised. Musammatt Zaib Jahan Begam was undoubtedly a co-sharer and her entering into possession even of the undivided whole cannot be called unlawful.

The next point urged is that on the death of Yusuf Beg she allowed Musammatt Hayatunnissa's name to be recorded in the revenue papers and must, therefore, be taken to have given up possession of a part of the estate. The names of both were recorded jointly and the defendant has a finding of the Revenue Court in her favour that she was in possession of the whole even in the lifetime of Musammāt Hayatunnissa. In any case she has now entered into possession both as an heir and on the claim of her dower. The mere fact that there was a contest in the mutation Court is immaterial for there was a similar contest in the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to above. I am, therefore, of opinion that this circumstance does not debar the lady from pleading that so long as her dower debt due from Yusuf Beg has not been satisfied, his heirs cannot dispossess her.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Pilibhit, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to the suit are neighbours. There is a public road in Mohalla Panjabian of Pilibhit which runs from north to south. To the east of the said road is the house of the defendants and to the west the house of the plaintiff, which is occupied by the plaintiff and the ladies of his house. In June, 1924, the defendants started certain constructions on the upper flat of their house and opened three new doors facing the west. These doors have been marked in the site plan attached to the plaint by the letters A, B and C. The customary right of privacy applies in the neighbourhood where the plaintiff's house is situate, and it applies to the class of persons to which the plaintiff belongs. By opening the doors aforesaid the defendants invaded the plaintiff's rights of privacy. The plaintiff protested to the defendants, but the latter heeded him not. The plaintiff approached the Municipal Board of Pilibhit who had sanctioned the construction in the defendants' house, but found no redress. He next approached the Police, but the latter possessed no preventive or protective resources in a matter like this. He next lodged a regular complaint before a Magistrate but no effective relief could be had. The present suit was instituted on the 5th of July, 1924, and originally the plaintiff sought two reliefs:—(a) The closure of the three doors and (b) a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from making any construction calculated to invade the privacy of the plaintiff's house. On the 8th of July, 1924, the Subordinate Judge issued an injunction to the defendants directing them to keep the doors closed. In spite of service of notice the injunction was disobeyed, and on the 17th of July, a notice, was issued to the defendants to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt. On the 28th of July, the Subordinate Judge made a local inspection and found that the defendants had started putting up a balcony towards the west. The plaintiff thereupon added a third prayer to his plaint, namely, for the removal of the balcony.

Of the four defendants the defendant No. 1 alone contested the suit and put forward a number of flimsy and unsubstantial pleas. In para. 4 of his additional statement he admitted, however, that a portion of the present female apartment is visible from the doors in dispute.

The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit and ordered the closure of the doors and the demolition of the balcony within six weeks of the date of the decree and also a perpetual injunction. On appeal the learned District Judge affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendant now comes to this Court in second appeal. The matter is no longer open to any controversy and has indeed been settled by a long course of judicial pronouncements that a customary right of privacy within certain limitations exists in the North-Western Provinces, and a material interference with such a right is an actionable wrong and affords a good cause of action to the person or persons affected thereby. In this respect the rule enunciated above departs from the well recognised rule of English Law which renders invasion of privacy unactionable. In view of the social conditions of this country which prescribe seclusion for females belonging to certain respectable classes of the Hindu and Muhammadan communities in answer to communal sentiment and as the practical result of the custom which has descended from olden times, the right of privacy has taken too deep a root to be dislodged by any a priori reasoning. The learned Counsel for the appellant did not seriously attempt to press the grounds Nos. 1 and 2 of his memorandum of appeal.

His chief argument, however, was that the Courts below were not justified in directing the closure of the doors and the demolition of the balcony. He contended that adequate remedy could have been provided to the plaintiff without having the balcony removed or the doors closed which was too drastic. The learned Counsel for the respondent however took his stand on the decision of Sheonath Rai v. Ali Hussain (1). In this case the defendants had built a two-storied house, made two sky-lights in the second storey and an opening on the stair-case towards the plaintiff's house which infringed the privacy of the plaintiff's house. The District Judge had ordered the defendants to close the sky-lights and the opening and to erect on the roof a wall 4 feet high. Their appeal to the High Court was dismissed by an eminent Judge of this Court, who usually brought strong common sense to bear upon his judicial pronouncements. In an appeal under the Letters Patent it was held by Stanley, C.J., and Burkitt, J., that the direction given to the defendants to build a wall upon their roof was not consistent with the nature of the mandatory injunction, the essence of which was to restore things to statu quo ante and not to create a new state of things. They granted a decree restraining the defendants by injunction "from permitting any portion of the building raised by them on the site of the former building by which the privacy of the plaintiff's house is or may be invaded to remain, and from erecting any building or permitting any erection to remain on the site of the former building of the defendants, so as to interfere with the privacy of the plaintiff's house, as the same was enjoyed prior to the erection of the building complained of".

It ought not to be lost sight of that mandatory injunction is essentially an equitable relief, and the form in which the injunction is to be granted must necessarily vary with the posture of each particular case. This form of relief being discretionary must necessarily be flexible, and we do not think that there is any authority for the proposition that where the infringement complained of by the plaintiff can be adequately remedied by any means short of a total demolition of the constructions complained of, the Indian Courts, in the exercise of their powers as a Court of Equity, are under a legal compulsion to direct a complete demolition of the building and nothing short of it. Section 55 of the Specific Relief Act clearly negatives such a proposition. It provides that "when, to prevent the breach of an obligation, it is necessary to compel the performance of certain acts which the Court is capable of enforcing, the Court may in its discretion grant an injunction to prevent the breach complained of, and also to compel performance of the requisite acts".

The above section limits and restricts the injunction strictly to the extent of the invasion of the plaintiff's right. That this was the intention of the Legislature is rendered manifest by referring to illustration (a) of s. 55:

"4 by new buildings obstructs lights to the access and use of which B has acquired a right under the Indian Limitation Act, Part II. B may obtain an injunction not only to restrain A from going on to the buildings but also to pull down so much of them as obstructs B's lights."

The italics are ours. There are a number of cases, which though not relating to right of privacy, proceed on the principle enunciated above. For instance, (i) Beharee Saboo v. Ajnas Koonwar (2). In this case the Court refused to direct the pulling down of the offending wall but required the defendants to make apertures in his own wall for the egress of smoke and ingress of air affecting the plaintiff's room. (ii) Abdul Hakim v. Gonesh Dutt (3). In this case the defendants had erected a dam across a natural water course which was found to interfere with the natural drainage of the surplus rain water of the adjoining land belonging to the plaintiff. The lower Court had directed the complete removal of this dam. The High Court directed, however, that the proper course for the Court below was to enquire how far the erection of the dam was an invasion of the plaintiff's right and after inquiry to remove the dam either in whole or in part as might be justified by the evidence. (iii) Bala v. Maharu (4). The Court directed that the demolition of the buildings by the defendants was not necessary in this case at all so long as the defendants made the necessary arrangements for the carrying away of water which was the right claimed by the plaintiffs.

Both the Courts below were evidently exasperated by the attitude of the defendant No. 1. He flouted decency and appeared to take a malicious pleasure in causing embarrassment, discomfort and distress to the plaintiff and his unoffending womenfolk. He defied constituted authority. He adopted a line of defence which could not be supported either in fact or in law. As consequence of all this the learned Judges of the Courts below had some justification for decreeing the plaintiff's claim in its entirety as affording relief to the plaintiff.

We agree with Dr. Katju that the end and objective of law is not vindictiveness but justice. The gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint is the infringement of his privacy. If the invasion of his right of privacy is prevented and completely put an end to without the complete removal of the balcony, the plaintiff should have no further grievance. We think that we ought to respect the plaintiff's right of privacy and afford proper protection to him and the women-folk of his house. We ought not at the same time unnecessarily to trench upon the defendants' right to build upon their own land so long as the said building does not invade the privacy of the plaintiff's house. This can very well be effected by directing a blind masonry wall being built at the edge of the balcony on the west between the letters A and B on the map attached to the decree of the trial Court and also on the two sides between A and C and B and D which we have enclosed in red. Varying, therefore, the decrees of the Courts below, we allow the appeal in part and direct the above to be done. We direct that the height of the wall should be raised up to the top of the balcony. We allow the defendants to do this within two months from the date of our decree, failing which the decree of the Court below is to be affirmed, that is, the doors closed and the balcony completely removed. We also grant relief (b). We penalise the defendants with bearing their own costs throughout and paying the costs of the plaintiff in this Court and also in the Courts below.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23 sub-s. 1 (1) as amended by U. P. Town Improvement Act (VIII of 1919), Sch. I, para. 10 (3), interpretation of—Calculation of market value—Use to which land is put on date of notice, whether sole criterion—Land not used, value of.

The correct interpretation of s. 23, sub-s. (1) clause first of the Land Acquisition Act as amended by para 10, cl. (3) of the Schedule to the U. P. Town Improvement Act, 1919 (U. P. Act VIII of 1919) is that the market value of the land to be acquired is to be calculated exclusively in accordance with the use to which the land is being put on the date on which notice issues under s. 29 or s. 36 of the U. P. Town Improvement Act; and where on such date the land to be acquired is not being put to any use its market value may be nil. [p. 590, col. 1.]

Application for review of judgment in First Civil Appeal No. 109 of 1923, dated 26th October 1926 (Mr. Justice Lindsay and Mr. Justice Sulaiman) and reported as 100 Ind. Cas. 508 in first appeal from a decree of the Tribunal of Improvement Trust of Cawnpore.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Applicant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Opposite Party.

The application came on for hearing before Lindsay and Sulaiman, JJ., and their Lordships made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Lindsay and Sulaiman, JJ.—We have decided that it is expedient that this case should be referred for decision to a Full Bench.

The case first came before us as First Appeal No. 109 of 1923*, and was argued and decided on the assumption that the law to be applied was that laid down in the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894).

On an application for review of judgment being made on behalf of the respondent—the Secretary of State for India in Council—it became apparent that what was really under appeal was the award of a Tribunal constituted under the United Provinces Town Improvement Act, 1919, (U. P. Act VIII of 1919).

*See 100 Ind. Cas. 508—[Ed.]

In s. 58, cl. (d) of that Act as originally enacted it was provided that the award of such a Tribunal should be final. But under the U. P. Town Improvement (appeals) Act of 1920, (Act III of 1920,) it is now declared by s. 3 that a right of appeal exists analogous to the right of second appeal conferred by s. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The U. P. Town Improvements Act has for the purposes of compulsory acquisition modified certain provisions of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894). Some of these modifications are set out in the Schedule to the Act and the particular modification with which we are concerned here is contained in para. 10, cl. (3) of the Schedule which introduces an alteration into the first clause of s. 23, sub-s. (1) of the Land Acquisition Act, under which in acquisition proceedings the Court must take into consideration

"The market value of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under s. 6."

In para. 10, cl. (3) of the Schedule above mentioned it is provided that the expression "market-value of the land" shall (for purposes of the U. P. Town Improvement Act) be the market-value according to the use to which the land was put at the date with reference to which the market-value is to be determined under that clause? This enactment, therefore, indicates a departure from the ordinary principles applied in the determination of market-value under Act I of 1894. Those principles have been laid down in varying language. Thus it has been said in many cases that the fairest and most favourable principle of compensation to owners is to estimate the market-value of the property "not according to its present disposition but laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owners could dispose of it".

Again it has been laid down that in assessing compensation the probable use to which the land may be put is necessarily an element to be taken into consideration so that, for example, land which may probably be used for building purposes cannot be valued on the same basis as merely agricultural land. Potential value, e. g., suitability for any particular purpose, should be taken into accounts in determining market-value.

In deciding the appeal we followed the statement of the law as laid down by the House of Lords in Fraser v. City of Fraserville (1) thus :

"The seller is entitled to the value to him of the property in its actual condition at the time of expropriation with all its existing advantages and with all its possibilities, excluding any advantage due to the carrying out of the scheme for the purpose for which the property is compulsorily acquired".

This passage was cited with approval in the case of Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India (2).

Now, it would seem that under the special legislation we have referred to, it is not permissible to take into account any potential value of the land and a Court is precluded from making a valuation based upon the most advantageous disposition of the land. Such was the view of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in dealing with a cognate enactment, viz., the Calcutta Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1899), s. 557, sub-ss. (c) and (d) under which it is provided that the market-value is to be deemed "the market value according to the disposition of the land or building" at the material date.

In Manindra Chandra Nandy v. Secretary of State for India (3) the Court held that the meaning of this provision is that when land is compulsorily acquired any use to which the land may be put in future should not be taken into consideration in determining its value.

In the present case the law as amended by the special legislation has to be applied to the following facts

An area of land, 5 bighas, 11 biswas and 1 biswansi belonging to Makhan Das has been compulsorily acquired by the Cawnpore Improvement Trust. For purposes of compensation this area has been divided into three portions, one leased to a mill, a second let out in small building sites to labourers who have erected huts to live in, and a third portion, measuring 2 bighas, 10 biswas, 17 biswansis—vacant land on which there are a few scattered trees.

(3) 23 Ind. Cas. 412; 41 C. 967; 18 C. W. N. 884.

It is with reference to this third portion that the difficulty of applying the Act arises. At the material date it was being put to no use whatsoever. According to the owner this land has never been applied to agricultural purposes since he got possession of it some 30 years ago. The Land Acquisition Officer, however, treated this portion as agricultural land and has assessed compensation accordingly. This award has been sustained by the Tribunal.

Prima facie the award is wrong for the land was not being used for agriculture at the time of notification: It was not being used at all.

In these circumstances how is the law to be applied? "The market-value of the land shall be the market-value according to the use to which the land was put" but the land was being put to no use.

We may mention that in our judgment in the appeal we came to the conclusion that the land in dispute lay in what might properly be described as the industrial area of Cawnpore. The land has a frontage on the main road running from Cawnpore to Kalpi and the evidence shows that it is in a neighbourhood where the land has been used for the manufacture of bricks and pottery. In fact the sale deed under which Makhan Das acquired the land in 1896, speaks of it as a grove "known as Pazawawali (i. e., brick kiln grove), and the award of the Acquisition Officer shows that much of the land round about has been devoted to the making of bricks and pottery.

Speaking of the particular area in dispute, Abdul Majid, a surveyor in the employment of the Trust, says in his evidence, "Some portion of the land was level and in some portions there were pits. They were ordinary pits. It did not appear that the earth was dug out for a kiln".

It is difficult to see, therefore, how it is possible to treat the land as agricultural land. But if not treated as such for purposes of compensation, how is it to be treated when it is shown that at the time to be regarded, it was not being used for any purpose.

We direct that the record be laid before the Hon'ble Chief Justice for the constitution of a Full Bench to determine the questions raised above, namely, the interpretation of s. 23, sub-s. (1) clause first as amended by the special legislation referred to, and the application of the law to a case in which the land being acquired was being put to no use at the material date.

We think it proper to note that the Tribunal, whose decision is now under appeal was presided over by Mr. Ashworth (now Mr. Justice Ashworth).

The reference was heard by Lindsay, Sulaiman and Mukerji, JJ., and their Lordships delivered the following

OPINION.

Lindsay, J.—There are two questions referred to this Full Bench for decision, namely:

(1) What is the correct interpretation of s. 23, sub-s. (1) clause first of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894,) as amended by para. 10, cl. (3) of the Schedule to the United Provinces Town Improvement Act, 1919, (United Provinces Act VIII of 1919.)? and (2) How the law as so interpreted is to be applied to a case where at the material date the land to be acquired was being put to no actual use?

As regards the first question it is at once apparent that the amendment above referred to materially affects the scope of the first clause of s. 23, sub-s. (1) as originally enacted for the market-value of the land which has now to be taken into consideration is the "market-value according to the use to which the land was put at the date with reference to which the market-value is to be determined under that clause".

In the cases to which s. 23, sub-s. (1) clause first has been applied it has always been held that the potential value of the land should be taken into account. To quote from the judgment of the House of Lords, in Fraser v. City of Fraserville (1):

"The seller is entitled to the value to him of the property in its actual condition at the time of its expropriation with all its existing advantages and with all its possibilities, excluding any advantage due to the carrying out of the scheme for the purpose for which the property is compulsorily acquired".

These principles cannot be applied to cases arising under the U. P. Town Improvement Act for, as pointed out, the expression "market-value" has under this Act a narrower meaning. "Market-value" is to be assessed in accordance with the use to which the land is being put at the date when the notice issues under s. 36 of that Act.

It is, therefore, not possible for the purposes of this Act to take into account any potential value of the land, no valuation can be made with reference to what has been called "the most advantageous disposition of the land".

The consideration of potential value being excluded, the question is what factors can be considered when assessing the market-value according to the use to which the land was put at the material date.

The basis of compensation should be the value to the owner of the date of the notification, and prima facie this would depend upon the profit which on that date the owner is deriving from the land, and that profit could be estimated from the use to which, at that point of time, the land was being actually put. No great difficulty could arise in dealing with a case where, at the material date, the land is actually being used.

But what is to be said in a case where on this date the land is not being used for any apparent purpose which can bring in profit to the owner? Is it to be taken that in the absence of immediate profit the land is of no value to the owner, that its market-value is nil and that, in consequence, the Improvement Trust can expropriate the owner without paying him compensation?

That is a conclusion to be avoided, if possible, for it involves the inference that the Legislature has conferred upon the Trust authorities a power of confiscation. There is no express provision to the effect in the Act. It remains to be considered whether the existence of a power of confiscation must be inferred by necessary implication.

"The market-value of the land shall be the market-value according to the use to which the land was put at the date with reference to which the market-value is to be determined under that clause".

The language of the section is rigid. The governing words are "according to the use to which the land was put, etc". The determining factor is the actual use of the land at the date in question, and any use of the land prior to that date is to be disregarded.

In view of this phraseology it appears to be impossible, for the purpose of assessing the market-value, to resort to any other facts such, for example, as the history of the land, its physical features or its situation; for while data of this nature might otherwise be of weight as indicating the value of the land to the owner, they could only be of service in estimating a potential value based upon the use to which the land might most profitably be put. But the section expressly excludes all consideration of potential use by laying down that the determining factor in the assessment of the market-value is the actual use to which the land is being put on the date of the notification; and from this the conclusion appears to be that either intentionally or through inadvertence the Legislature has declared that in certain conditions the market-value of the land on the material date may be nil.

It need hardly be pointed out that such an enactment is fraught with much possible hardship to owners of property which has become subject to the operation of the Act. Lands of great value may from a variety of causes fall temporarily out of use. Agricultural land may have to be left fallow for a season or two in order that it may recover productivity. Or the owner of a valuable site acquired for a building scheme may have to suspend the execution of his project in order, for example, to contest in Court a claim to a right of way over the land. In either case the owner is liable to be expropriated without compensation if a notification issues under the Act while the land is not being put to actual use.

It is difficult to imagine that cases of this kind were in contemplation when the Act was passed but the language of the Act, as it stands, must, if followed, lead to these results. It must be left, therefore, to the Legislature to declare whether it was intended to invest the Improvement authorities with this power of confiscation or to amend the Act so as to avoid the results above-mentioned.

In my opinion we must answer the two questions referred to the Full Bench as follows:—

- (1) The correct interpretation of s. 23, sub-s. (1) clause first of the Land Acquisition Act as amended by para. 10, cl. (3) of the Schedule to the United Provinces Town Improvement Act, 1919 (U. P. Act VIII of 1919) is that the market-value of the land to be acquired is to be calculated exclusively in accordance with the use to which the land is being put on the date on which notice issues under s. 29 or s. 35 of the U. P. Town Improvement Act; and
- (2) where on such date the land to be acquired is not being put to any use its market value may be nil.

Sulaiman, J.—I agree.

Mukerji, J.—I agree.

On receipt of the opinion of the Full Bench their Lordships Lindsay and Sulaiman, JJ., delivered the following—

JUDGMENT.—This is a case in which a review of judgment had been allowed, but before the application could be disposed of it was found necessary to refer the case on a question of law to a Full Bench. The Full Bench delivered its judgment on the 28th of June last. The case has come back to us for decision in accordance with the principles laid down by the Full Bench decision.

The matter before us is now a matter of calculation and the figures have been worked out in the presence of the learned Counsel for both sides. It is agreed now that the proper amount which should be awarded to Makhan Das in respect of the land which has been acquired by the Improvement Trust of Cawnpore is Rs. 10,048-4.

The Tribunal awarded a sum of Rs. 8,609-9-6 and so the result is that in this Court Makhan Das has been given Rs. 1,438-10-6 more than what was given to him by the Commissioners.

We allow the appeal, therefore, to the extent indicated and we allow Makhan Das his costs in both Courts on Rs. 1,438-10-6. We also think that Makhan Das is entitled to interest on this sum at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the date of the acquisition of his land till the date of payment. A fresh decree, therefore, will be prepared on the lines above indicated.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Mortgage-bond—Suit for interest alone—Subsequent suit for principal, whether barred—Provision postponing right to sue for principal, effect of—Construction of deed.

A mortgage-deed provided that on the failure of the mortgagors to pay the interest the mortgagee 'should be competent at all times to recover the mortgage-money and the interest referred to above'. There was a postscript that the mortgagee cannot, however, bring a claim for refund of the mortgage-money till two years. Interest was not paid and the mortgagee brought a suit within two years for interest alone. In a subsequent suit for principal and the balance of interest it was contended that the suit was barred inasmuch as he had not sued for principal also in the prior suit:

Held, that, upon a proper construction of the deed, the mortgagee was not entitled to sue for principal within two years even though there was default in the payment of interest and that, consequently, the subsequent suit for principal was not barred. [p. 592, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut.

Mr. Kailas Chandra Mital, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This first appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of the principal and balance of interest due under a mortgage-bond, dated the 3rd January, 1922. This bond mortgaged certain property. Some of the property was given into the possession of the mortgagee and the profits from the property were set off against a certain portion of the interest due. As regards the balance of the interest the mortgagors bound themselves to pay that interest year by year. It was stipulated in the deed that if this interest was not paid on due date it should itself bear interest at 7 annas per cent. per mensem. On failure of the mortgagors to pay this interest it was provided that the mortgagee "should be competent at all times to recover the mortgage money..... and the interest referred to above (and again compound interest thereon) by enforcement of the hypothecation lien and sale of the property mortgaged". The words "at all times"—were qualified by a postscript. This postscript ran as follows:—"The mortgagee cannot bring a claim for refund of the mortgage money till two years. He can do so after two years."

The mortgagee brought a previous Suit No. 1072 of 1922 within two years for the interest referred to above, together with compound interest for the period from the 3rd February, 1922, to the 3rd July, 1922. The relief claimed in that suit was for recovery of a sum of Rs. 259 by sale of a portion of the mortgaged property. This relief was not granted. The Court, however, gave a simple money decree for recovery of the Rs. 259-1. We do not find in the mortgage-deed any provision which would have enabled the mortgagee to obtain a simple money-decree for this sum, but that decree stands good and it is immaterial whether the decree was a proper one or not.

It is urged, however, by the defendant-appellant who has appealed that in this previous suit the mortgagee should have claimed not only the interest referred to above but also the principal mortgage money. The contention is that the postscript should be construed to mean that the mortgagee could not bring a claim for the refund of the principal mortgage money in the event of the interest having been paid, but that he could bring a claim for refund of the mortgage money if the interest referred to had not been paid. It is suggested that the provision for the mortgagee being competent to recover by sale of the mortgaged property any of the interest that might not be paid was not subject in any way to the postscript. Reference has been made to a certain decision of the Privy Council, Muhammad Hafiz v. Muhammad Zakariya (1), in which it was held that, where there was a provision that in the event of certain interest not being paid, the mortgagee might bring a suit for recovery of the principal amount along with the interest and that there was also a provision that the mortgagee could not sue until three years for the recovery of principal and interest, the latter provision should not be held to control the former provision. This case is clearly distinguishable from the present case. In the present case the postscript provided that in no case should there be a suit for recovery of the mortgage money until the expiry of two years. In the decision referred to there was a provision that in a certain event the mortgage money could be recovered within the period otherwise fixed for realisation of the mortgage money and interest. The case is, therefore, to be distinguished from the present one.

The contention of the appellant's Counsel that the postscript should be given the construction assigned to it by him as stated above does not command our assent. We hold that the postscript prevented any suit for the mortgage money within two years. At the date, consequently, of the previous suit, the mortgagee could not sue for that mortgage money and his failure to do so cannot be held to be a bar to the present suit. For the above reasons we hold that the finding of the lower Court was correct and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 263, cls. (g) and (h)—Summary trial—Failure to give reasons for conviction—Accused's plea and examination not recorded—Conviction, legality of.

Omission by a Magistrate, in a summary trial, to record the plea of the accused and his examination as required by cl. (g) of s. 263, Criminal Procedure Code, and failure to give a brief statement of the reasons for the findings as required by cl. (h) of the said section, vitiate the trial.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Jhansi.

Facts appear from the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

This is an application in revision against the judgment of a Magistrate under which the applicants have been convicted in a summary trial under ss. 323 and 426 of the Penal Code.

The only pleas which can be entertained by me in revision are those embodied in paras. 4 and 5 of the application, which are to the effect that the provisions laid down under s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code were not followed in the Court below.

The learned Magistrate has not recorded the plea of the accused and his examination as required by cl. (g) of s. 263; he has not given a brief statement of the reasons upon which his finding is based, as required by cl. (h); and he has not even recorded a finding that mischief was committed under s. 426, Indian Penal Code. It is established that a Magistrate in trying a summary case in which no appeal lies must record his reasons for conviction in such a way that the Court of Revision will be in a position to judge whether there are sufficient materials to support that conviction vide Empress v. Mohan (1), Empress v. Lachman (2), Empress v. Muhammad Haniff (3) and Brijbasi Lal v. Emperor (4). It has apparently also been held by the Calcutta High Court in 9 C. W. N. P. 76 that where a Magistrate has omitted to record the plea of the accused, the conviction is bad. I have been unable to secure that ruling*, but it is quoted at page 651 of Sohani's Code of Criminal Procedure, 11th Edition. In my opinion the trial of the case under revision is vitiated by the Magistrate's failure to comply with the provisions of s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The record will be sent to the Hon'ble High Court with a recommendation that the conviction and sentences be set aside and that, if the High Court think fit, a fresh trial be ordered. Before the case is sent to the High Court, the learned Magistrate will be given an opportunity to submit any statement which he may wish to make in support of his procedure.

Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Petition, under ss. 22, 23, (3) and 24, Civil Procedure Code, praying for the transfer of the case pending in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Multan to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, at Karachi.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Petitioners.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

ORDER.—On the 23rd of June, 1927, Messrs. Edalji Dinshaw filed a suit against Messrs. Dhanpatmal-Bhagwandas in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, at Karachi, for a declaration that no valid or binding contract for the sale of a factory situate at Mian Channu in the Multan District had been made between the parties and for an injunction restraining the defendants from disposing of the said factory on account and at the risk of the plaintiffs. The first hearing of this suit was fixed for the 9th August, 1927. The next i. e., on the 24th of June, 1927, Messrs. Dhanpatmal-Bhagwandas filed a suit in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Multan, for specific performance of the contract of sale of the aforesaid factory. The defendants, Messrs. Edalji Dinshaw, were summoned for the 2nd of August, 1927, on which date they were to file their defence. On the 1st of August of 1927, Messrs. Edalji Dinshaw presented to this Court the petition under ss. 22, 23 (3) and 24, Civil Procedure Code, praying for the "transfer" of the case pending at Multan to Karachi on the ground that the two suits relate to the same transaction and it was in the interests of justice and to the convenience of the parties to have both of them tried at Karachi.

The petition is opposed by Messrs. Dhanpatmal-Bhagwandas, and Mr. Badri Das who appears for them raises a number of preliminary objections. I do not think it necessary to deal with all these objections as, in my opinion, the petition must fail on the short ground that no notice had been given by the petitioners to the respondents before moving this Court to take action under ss. 22 and 23. Section 22 provides that "where a suit may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts and is instituted in one of such Courts, any defendant, after notice to the other parties may..... apply to have the suit transferred to another Court....." Mr. Badri Das contends that the provision requiring that notice must be given to the opposite party prior to the filing of the application is mandatory, and as no such notice was given in this case the petition does not lie. In my opinion this contention has force and must prevail. It was held by Broadway, J., in Gulab Chand v. Sher Singh (1) that the words used in s. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure are mandatory and, therefore, notice must be given to the other party before the application for transfer is made and if this has not been done, the application is incompetent. Mr. Ralli for the petitioners has conceded that before filing the application no notice was given by his clients to the respondents and that the ruling cited is in point. He, however, contends that this provision of s. 22 is merely directory and that the decision in Gulab Chand v. Sher Singh (1) is unsound. I have given full consideration to his arguments, but see no force in them. In support of his contention, the learned Counsel has relied very strongly on Simmonds v. Elliott (2) but the facts of that case were wholly distinguishable. The point raised there had reference to s. 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act which laid down that the respondent should be served with the notice of appeal before the case had been lodged at the Central Office. In that case the required notice had been issued, but was actually served on the respondent half an hour after the lodging of the appeal. It was held that notwithstanding this irregularity in the service the Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. At the hearing the respondent did not appear and on the appellant's Counsel bringing this irregularity to the notice of the Court, Lord Darling held that as the respondent had not been prejudiced in any way by the delay of half an hour and had not appeared and taken the point, there was nothing to prevent the Court from hearing the appeal. It is obvious that there is no analogy between that case and the one before me. The other cases cited by Mr. Ralli merely lay down that a respondent may not take advantage of the non-observance of statutory provisions relating to procedure and may waive them. These rulings, are, however, based upon the maxim cuiuslibet licet renuntiari juri pro se introducto and are merely illustrations of the rule that every one has a right to waive the advantage of a law or rule made solely for his benefit and protection, which may be dispensed with without infringing on any public right or public policy. (Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, Sixth Edition, page 678). There has been no such waiver in the present case. I see no reason to hold that the provision as to notice laid down by the Legislature in s. 22 is merely directory and agree with Broadway, J., in holding that the failure to comply with it bars an application for transfer under that section.

Mr. Ralli admitted at the hearing that s. 24 is inapplicable to the case and that he is unable to support the prayer for transfer under that section as made in the petition.

For the foregoing reasons, I dismiss the petition with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The Official Liquidator of the "Indian Merchants Bank Limited, Amritsar," having placed on the list of contributories the names of Mangal Sen, Ghamandi Lal, Natha Singh and Jas Ram, everyone of them filed objections to the effect that he had ceased to be a member of the Company and was not liable to contribute as he had surrendered his shares and the Board of Directors had accepted the surrender which it was competent to do under r. 43 of the Articles of Association. The Court below overruled this objection on the general ground that the "Surrenders (Acceptance of the surrenders?) of the objectors' partly paid up share (shares?) and for (?) forfeiture of their allotment money (monies?) by the Head Board of Directors was (were?) unnecessary and ultra vires as it was in substance a reduction by the Company of the shares at the price (?) of discharging the shareholders from further liability to calls". The objectors have appealed against the above order, separately

The law on the subject is thus reviewed and discussed by Devadoss, J., in In re Mirza Ahmed Namazi (1).

"Granting for argument's sake that the resolution is according to the rules, I am unable to accept the contention that the surrender of shares is permitted by law so as to enable the Directors, or the Company, to reduce its capital. Rule 118 (5) gives power to the Directors to accept surrender of shares by shareholders; but this power which is an unusual power, granting that it is valid, is subject to restrictions: Table A of the Indian Companies Act does not contain any clause empowering any Company to accept surrender of shares. The Indian Companies Act permits forfeiture of shares on certain grounds; but to give an unlimited or wide power to a Company to accept surrender of shares is, I think, opposed to the principle that a Company cannot buy its own shares and to the principle that a Company can reduce its capital only with the permission of the Court and on such terms and conditions as it may impose. The power given by r. 118 (5) is very wide. It is in these terms:—'to accept from any member on such terms and conditions as shall be agreed a surrender of his shares or stock or part thereof'. Whatever might have been the view as regards the power of a Company to accept surrender of shares, I think it is well-settled now that a Company cannot exercise wide powers of accepting a surrender. It can only accept a surrender under conditions and limitations under which shares can be forfeited. Reliance is placed upon Snell's case, In re Natal Investment Co. (2). In that case Sir G. M. Giffard, Lord Justice, held that the surrender of shares by Snell was valid. The main reason for the learned Lord Justice holding that Snell's surrender was valid was that his name was not entered on the register of shareholders and that no specific shares were allotted to him though for purposes of the Act he was a shareholder. He found that the substance of the transaction was that both parties were offering to sever their connection with each other and that the Articles of Association contained a power to cancel shares and that there was nothing in the form preventing the parties from carrying out their intention. Snell's case, In re Natal Investment

Co., (2), cannot be considered to be good law in view of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ballerby v. Rowland and Marwood's Steamship Co., Ltd., (3). Cozens Hardy, L. J., lays down the law thus:—'Every surrender of shares, whether fully paid up or not, involves a reduction of capital, which is unlawful, except when sanctioned by the Court under the Companies Acts of 1867 and 1877. Forfeiture is a statutory exception, and is the only exception. For I regard a surrender, under circumstances which would justify a forfeiture, as merely equivalent to a forfeiture.' Collins, M. R., quotes with approval the following observation of the learned Master of the Rolls in In re Dronfield Silkstone Coal Co., (4). 'There is no reference in the Acts to surrenders of shares; but these have been admitted by the Courts, upon the principle, as I understand it that they have practically the same effect as forfeiture, the main difference being that the one is a proceeding in invitum, and the other a proceeding taken with the assent of the shareholder, who is unable to retain and pay future calls on the shares.' The principle, therefore, applicable to cases of surrender is that a surrender is good if it amounts to a forfeiture. It is not open to a shareholder to surrender at will his share, especially when he has to meet future calls and it is not open to a Company to accept surrender of shares unless the act of the Company can be brought within the rules relating to forfeiture of shares. To hold that a Company can by a resolution of its Directors accept surrender of shares would be to allow a Company to reduce its capital at its pleasure".

In the present case also there was a rule empowering the Directors to accept surrenders of shares but according to the general principles (1) that a surrender of shares involves a reduction of the capital and (2) that the capital of a Company cannot be reduced but by leave of the Court, no surrender can be lawfully accepted but under circumstances which would justify a forfeiture. There is nothing to indicate that the surrenders of shares by the objectors were accepted under such circumstances. According to the Indian Companies Act a shareholder ceases to be a member whose shares are forfeited. It is nowhere laid down that a shareholder who surrenders his shares ceases to be a member. It cannot, therefore, be said that the objectors ceased to be members as contemplated by s. 156 of the Indian Companies Act, I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where a decree is passed in favour of all the plaintiffs though one of them had died before the date of the decree and no legal representative of his had been brought on the record, and the defendants appeal the proper procedure for the Appellate Court to follow is either merely to dismiss the appeal without any remarks leaving the question as to the effect of the death of the deceased plaintiff on the decree as a whole for determination in appropriate proceedings or to accept the appeal and pass a decree dismissing the plaintiffs' suit and thereby leaving them the right to second appeal. It is not a proper procedure to dismiss the appeal and incorporate in the decree that the decree of the trial Court was a nullity. [p. 601, col. 1.]

Petition for revision of an order of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 23rd April, 1926, affirming that of the Judge, Fourth Class, Shakargarh, District Gurdaspur, dated the 2nd December, 1924.

MR. MEHR CHAND MAHAJAN, for the Petitioner.

MR. BISHAN NATH, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Baland Khan and others, who are defendants in this case, applied to the Collector, Gurdaspur, under the Redemption of Mortgages Act II of 1913, for redemption of the land in suit which was in possession of the present plaintiffs as mortgagees. This application was granted by the Collector on the 13th November, 1922. The defendants deposited in the Collectorate the amount that had been adjudged to be due on the mortgage by the Collector and obtained possession of the land. On the 1st October, 1923, the plaintiffs, five in number, instituted the present suit out of which this appeal has arisen alleging that the land in question originally belonged to one Malla Khan who had mortgaged it in favour of the plaintiffs' ancestor about 60 years ago and that the defendants were not the representative-in-interest of Malla Khan mortgagor, and were not entitled to redeem. They prayed for a declaration that the order of the Collector passed in summary proceedings under Act II of 1913 was erroneous and that they had been wrongly dispossessed and were entitled to get back possession of the land.

The defendants pleaded inter alia that they had lawfully succeeded to Malla Khan's rights in the land and being the owners of the equity of redemption were entitled to redeem, that the order of the Collector was correct and that the plaintiffs' suit was time-barred. The Sub-Judge overruled the defendants' contentions and finding for the plaintiffs decreed the suit on the 2nd December, 1924.

On 2nd January, 1925, Baland Khan, defendant, preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge. On the 17th February, 1926, he filed an application under O. XXII, r. 4, stating that Ghazi Khan, one of the plaintiffs-respondents, had died about a year before, i. e., during the pendency of the appeal and that his son, Azim Khan, be brought on the record as his heir and legal representative. This application was accompanied by an affidavit by Baland Khan who also made a statement on oath in Court the next day supporting the allegation in the application. On the appeal coming up for decision on the 9th March, Beli Khan, one of the plaintiffs-respondents, was examined and he also stated that his brother, Ghazi Khan, plaintiff, had died about a year before. Baland Khan's Pleader, however, asked for an adjournment in order to show, contrary to his client's original assertion, that Ghazi Khan had really died before the date of the decision of the suit in the trial Court. The learned District Judge, declined to adjourn the case and ruled that the appellant must be confined to the statement made by him in his application of the 17th February, 1926, to the effect that Ghazi Khan, plaintiff, had died during the pendency of the appeal.

On this assumption he held that the defendant's appeal had abated against the deceased plaintiff and as the appeal was against a joint decree in favour of all the plaintiffs-respondents, it could not proceed against the others and must be dismissed.

On the 19th March, 1926, the defendant Baland Khan filed an application under O. XXII, r. 9, and O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, alleging that Ghazi Khan, plaintiff had really died on the 3rd October, 1923, two days after the institution of the suit in the trial Court and that the plaintiffs themselves had taken no steps in that Court to bring the deceased's representatives on the record. He also stated that as Ghazi Khan had never appeared before the trial Court and as his name had been shown in the decree of that Court, his Pleader had been misled into showing Ghazi Khan as a respondent to the appeal. Along with this application he filed a certified copy of an extract from the death register showing that Ghazi Khan had died on the 3rd October, 1923, and also filed an affidavit to the same effect. This application was heard by the learned District Judge on the 23rd April, 1926, when he passed the following order:—"A review of my judgment dated the 9th March, 1926, is sought on the ground that Ghazi Khan actually died on the 3rd of October, 1923, only two days after the suit was instituted and upwards of a year before it was decided. A death certificate is attached and its accuracy is not questioned. My judgment declaring that the appeal abated is, therefore, based on erroneous grounds and should, I think, be reviewed. The decree of the lower Court being passed in favour of a dead person along with others is a nullity and therefore, no appeal lies. Gohar v. Muhammad (1). Lala Moti Ram now attempts to argue contrary to his previous argument, which is accepted in the judgment that the suit was not a joint one. The suit was one for possession of land on the ground that the Revenue Assistant had erroneously allowed the defendants to redeem that land. Ghazi Khan and four others brought the suit as joint owners of the land and it is hard to see how the suit could have proceeded without bringing Ghazi Khan's representatives on the record. The appeal is dismissed on the ground, to be embodied in the decree, that the decree of the lower Court is a nullity."

A decree was accordingly prepared in these terms. Against this decree the surviving plaintiffs have preferred a miscellaneous appeal to this Court purporting to be under O. XLIII, r. 1 (w) and (k) of the Civil Procedure Code, and the first question that has to be decided is whether an appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants is competent. Appellants' Counsel has not sought to support the appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (k) for the simple reason that the order of the lower Court was not passed under O. XXII, r. 9, but he has strenuously contended that an appeal does lie under O. XLIII, r. 1 (w). I am, however, unable to accept this contention. It is, no doubt, true that cl. (w) of r. 1 of the 43rd Order provides that an appeal shall lie from an order passed under r. 4 of O. XLVII granting an application for review, but this rule has to be read along with O. XLVII, r. 7, which specifically lays down that an order granting an application for review can be objected to on appeal only on one or the other of the three grounds specified therein. I am aware that the contrary view has been taken in a recent case decided by the Bombay High Court reported as Daso Keshav Penchbhavi v. Karbasappa Kariyappa Mudhol (2) where it was held that under O. XLIII, r. 1 (w) an appeal lies against an order granting an application for review, quite irrespective of the qualifications contained in O. XLVII, r. 7. Macleod, C. J., who delivered the main judgment in that case, after comparing the relevant provisions of the Codes of 1882 and 1908 remarked that the general right of appeal given by O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), could only be restricted by direct prohibition. Being pressed with the apparent inconsistency between the two rules, the learned Chief Justice came to the conclusion that the result of making an order granting a review appealable under O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), was to render O. XLVII, r. 7, superfluous. The other learned Judge, (Madgavkar, J.) thought, that O. XLIII, r. 1, being a new provision, added by the Code of 1908, "was perhaps not present in the minds of the authors when they reproduced the old s. 629 in the form of O. XLVII, r. 7."

I venture to think, that there is no real inconsistency between the two rules. The former rule merely gives a party aggrieved by an order granting a review a right of appeal, but it does not deal with the grounds on which the order appealed against can be objected to. That is a matter dealt with in O. XLVII, r. 7. The two provisions of the Code are not mutually inconsistent, but are really complementary of each other. The one gives the right to appeal and the other defines the extent to which that right can be exercised. It is a well-established rule of construction, that where two co-ordinate provisions in an enactment are apparently inconsistent, an effort must be made to reconcile them. As observed by Lord Justice James in Ebbs v. Boulnois (3).

"It is a cardinal principle in the interpretation of Statute that if there are two inconsistent enactments, it must be seen if one cannot be read as a qualification of the other". Applying this rule, it must be held that O. XLVII, r. 7, qualifies and controls O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), that the two must be read one along with the other and taken together they do not give an unlimited right of appeal.

If, however, it be supposed that the inconsistency between the two parts of the Code is so great and real, that it is impossible to reconcile them, the rule must be applied that "if two sections of a Statute are repugnant, the last must prevail and override the earlier" [per Keating, J., in Wood v. Riley (4)]. For this reason also O. XLVII, r. 7 should be held to control and restrict the earlier rule.

Nor does the suggestion appeal to me that while re-enacting s. 629 of the old Code in the form of O. XLVII, r. 7 the authors of the Code of 1908 had forgotten or overlooked the provisions of O. XLIII, r. 1 (w) which they themselves had newly introduced in the same Code, thus supplying an omission in the earlier Code. Another reason given in the Bombay judgment in support of its conclusion is that O. XLVII, r. 7, is not exhaustive of the grounds on which an order granting a review may be objected to in appeal, that it enumerates only three such grounds and cannot be taken as excluding all others. It is, no doubt, true that the phraseology used in r. 7 is that "an order granting an application (for review) may be objected to" on the three specified grounds, and other grounds are not specifically excluded, but it is obvious that the language used is permissive only in the sense that it is not obligatory on the person aggrieved by the order granting the application for review to appeal against it, but if he chooses to so appeal, the rule forbids him from objecting on any other ground. Craies in his standard work Treatise on Statute Law (3rd Edition page 253) points out that in such cases language prima facie permissive not only allows a person to do a thing, which it says he may do, "but it also prohibits that particular thing from being done in any other way". As pointed out by Sir George Jessel, M. R., in the well-known case of Taylor v. Tayler (5) when a statutory power is conferred and a mode of exercising it is provided for, "it means that no other mode is to be adopted."

In the Bombay case, the opinion is also expressed that on a strict construction of the two rules, Order XLVII, r. 7, should be considered to have become superfluous. Here again the settled canon of construction is that a Statute ought to be so construed that "if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence or word shall be superfluous, void or insignificant", and it is well to bear in mind the warning of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that "one who reads a legal document, whether public or private, should not be prompt to ascribe, should not, without necessity or some sound reason, impute to its language tautology or superfluity, and should be rather at the outset inclined to suppose each word intended to have some effect, or be of some use," Ditcher v. Denison (6).

For the foregoing reasons I venture to think that the law has not been correctly laid down in Daso Keshav Panchbhavi v. Karbasappa Kariyappa Mudhol (2) and must respectfully dissent from that decision. And I do so the more readily, as I find that the contrary view is supported by a uniform series of rulings of all the other Courts.

In Yusaf v. Naza (7) a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held that the right of appeal against an order granting a review is limited to the three cases mentioned in O. XLVII, r. 7. This decision was followed by Johnstone, J., in Atra v. Chajju (8), Chevis, J., in Fazal Ahmad v. Khan Bahadur (9); Shadi Lal, J., in Basheshar Nath v. Ramkishan Das (10) and Martineau, J., in Uttam Chand v. Ganesha Mal (11). The Calcutta High Court has also consistently taken the same view. In Jagana Nath Prasad Singh v. Ramautar Singh (12), Mookerji, J., (Carnduff, J., agreeing) expressed the opinion "that the two rules must be read together, otherwise the restrictive provisions contained in r. 7 would become absolutely nugatory. The object of the Legislature plainly was to provide explicitly that an order granting a review is appealable. This supplies the omission in the Code of 1882 under which the right of appeal was given only by implication and also makes it plain that a second appeal is barred under s. 104 (2)". Other Benches of that Court have followed this ruling in Tripura Charan Kul v. Shoroshi Bala (13), Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan (14) and Nundo Lal Mullik v. Panchanon Mukherjee (15). The same view has found favour with the High Courts of Madras in Meduri Brahmayya v. Vedulu Yellamma (16) and Venkata Seetharamayya v. Veena Tulasi Babu (17), Allahabad in Sundar v. Habib Chick (18), Narain Das v. Chiranji Lal (19), Madhuri Saran v. Parbati (20) and Patna in Sundar Lal v. Upendra Nath Seal (21). There is thus a consensus of authority in support of the view that the right of appeal must be restricted to the three grounds specified in O. XLVII, r. 7. In the present case it is conceded that the objections taken to the order of the learned District Judge do not fall within any of the clauses of that rule. I must, therefore, hold that no appeal lies to this Court.

The question however, remains whether under the circumstances of the case, the judgment of the learned District Judge should be allowed to stand or whether it is a fit case for the exercise of the revisional powers of this Court. Now it seems to me that a very anomalous position has been created by the decree as finally passed by the learned District Judge. He had on the 9th March, 1926, dismissed the defendants' appeal and affirmed the decree of the trial Court in favour of all the plaintiffs. By his subsequent order, he on review directed that the defendants' appeal to his Court, be dismissed "on the ground, to be embodied in the decree, that the decree of the lower Court is a nullity". If the learned Judge was of opinion that no appeal lay to his Court, he should have merely stayed his hands and dismissed the defendants' appeal on that ground alone and not proceeded to incorporate in his decree the remark that the decree of the lower Court was a nullity. By doing so, he has virtually accepted the appeal of the defendants and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. But while this is the real meaning and effect of the decree, its wording is such that it leaves the plaintiffs without any remedy whatever. They cannot come to this Court in second appeal because the decree of the District Judge on the face of it affirms the trial Court's decree and dismisses the defendants' appeal to his Court. Nor can they execute the decree of the Sub-Judge, which the learned District Judge purports to affirm, for as soon as they proceed to execute that decree, the judgment-debtors will be entitled to urge that the District Judge having held the decree to be a nullity, it is incapable of execution. On such an objection being taken the executing Court will be bound to give effect to it and refuse to execute the decree [see Narendra Bahadur Chand v. Gopal Sah (22), and Topanram v. Tekchand (23)]. The Appellate Court should have, therefore, either merely dismissed the appeal of the defendants without any remarks, leaving the question as to the effect of the death of Ghazi Khan on the decree as a whole for determination in appropriate proceedings, or the appeal should have been accepted and a decree passed dismissing the plaintiffs' suit thus enabling them to seek relief by way of second appeal to this Court, if so advised. The decree, therefore, cannot be allowed to stand in the form in which it has been passed.

In holding that no appeal lay to his Court the learned District Judge purports to follow Gohar v. Muhammad (1), but I think that that ruling is wholly inapplicable to the present case. There a decree had by inadvertence been passed by the Divisional Judge in favour of a dead person, who was the sole defendant in the case and the plaintiff had preferred a further appeal to the Chief Court making the representatives of the deceased (sole) defendant as respondents. It was held that the appeal was not maintainable against the representatives of the deceased defendant, who were not on the record, when the Divisional Judge had decided the case. The Chief Court, however, acting on the Revision side, set aside the decree of the Divisional Judge and remanded the case for disposal in accordance with law. The decision in that case proceeded on its peculiar facts and, in my opinion, the rule laid down therein is not applicable to cases in which a decree has been passed in favour of a number of persons, one of whom was dead at the time of the passing of the decree. An instance of such a case will be found in Narain Das v. Kalu Ram (24), where a decree had been passed by the District Judge in favour of four persons, one of whom was dead at the date of his decree, but the fact of whose death had not been brought to his notice at the time. The appeal of the opposite party was entertained by the High Court and was accepted, the decree of the District Judge being set aside and the case remanded to him for redécision after adjudicating on the effect of the death of one of the plaintiffs on the whole case. Similarly in American Baptist Foreign Mission Society v. Amalanadhuni Pattabhiramayya (25) the Madras High Court entertained an appeal against a decree passed by the lower Court in favour of a number of defendants, one of whom was dead, but set it aside and remitted the case to the lower Court for redécision. Other instances in which a similar course was adopted will be found in Balaram Pal v. Kanysha Majhi (26) and Amanat Khan v. Miyan Khan (27). I may also point out that a decree passed in favour of a number of plaintiffs, one of whom is dead at the time is not necessarily a nullity in its entirety in every case. A decision of this matter will depend on a variety of consideration which it is not necessary to detail here. Attention may, however, be drawn to Goda Copuramier v. Sundarammal (28) and Kesho Prasad Singh v. Shamandan Rai (29) and the authorities cited therein.

In arriving at the conclusion that the whole decree was a nullity in this case, the learned District Judge seems to have been pressed by the fact that the plaintiffs' Counsel had, at the earlier hearing, urged that the appeal being against a joint decree in favour of five plaintiffs, one of whom was (at the time) wrongly supposed to have died during the pendency of the appeal, the appeal had abated in its entirety and that he should not be allowed to argue that the whole decree was not a nullity. It is, however, to be noted that there is a great deal of difference between a suit instituted by a number of persons, one of whom dies and whose representatives are not brought on the record within limitation, and an appeal against a joint and indivisible decree in favour of a number of persons, the death of one of whom takes place during the pendency of the appeal against the decree and no steps having been taken under O. XXII. to implead his representatives. In the latter case it is only the decree appealed against that is to be looked at, whereas in the former case it is necessary to examine the nature of the claim, the terms of the plaint and the relief asked for. In suits by a number of co-mortgagees it would be necessary to examine the terms of the mortgage, the shares of the mortgagees, their rights inter se and the nature of the claim put forward by them. The learned District Judge has not discussed this aspect of the case in any detail and I am not sure if full arguments were addressed to him on it. I would not express any final opinion on that point on the scanty materials before me, especially when I am dealing with the matter on the Revision Side. This must be left for consideration by the District Judge or the trial Court as the case might be.

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that this petition, being treated as one for revision, should succeed and setting aside the decrees of the learned District Judge, dated the 9th March and 23rd April, 1926, I remand the case to him for disposal with reference to the foregoing remarks.

As the plaintiffs have not been free from blame, I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 225-B—Resistance to warrant—Illegality of tax—Absence of seal of Court—Offence Punjab District Boards Act (XX of 1883), s. 30—Halsiyat tax, legality of.

A halsiyat tax which is not fixed at a flat rate for each profession but which varies according to the income of the assessee is in substance a tax on the income and cannot be imposed by a local body without the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council. [p. 602, col. 2.]

District Board, Sialkot v. Sultan Muhammad Khan (1), followed.

Under s. 225-B of the Penal Code resistance or obstruction to the apprehension of a person is punishable only if the apprehension is lawful. Where the imposition of tax for the non-payment of which the warrants are issued is itself illegal and ultra vires, the resistance to their execution is not punishable under the section. [ibid.]

The omission of the seal of the Court issuing it renders a warrant void and a person offering resistance to apprehension under such a warrant does not commit an offence under s. 225-B Penal Code. [ibid.]

Petition for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with appellate powers, Jullundur, dated the 30th August, 1927, affirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, Second Class, Jullundur, dated the 25th July 1927.

Mr. Fagir Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Mulakh Raj, for Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners have been convicted under s. 225-B of the Indian Penal Code, for having offered illegal obstruction to their apprehension, by certain Tehsil peons in execution of warrants issued for their arrest and have been sentenced each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two weeks and pay a fine of Rs. 50.

The facts found by the lower Courts are as follows. In May, 1924, the District Board, Jullundur, with the permission of the Local Government imposed a haisiyat tax on the total annual income derived by all persons carrying on any trade or following any profession or calling within that district. Notification No. 3162 was issued on the 30th April, 1924, and will be found printed at pages 280 and 281 of Part I-A of the Government Gazette Punjab published on the 2nd of May, 1924. The assessment was not fixed at a flat rate for a particular profession, calling or trade but to vary according to the income of each individual assessee. Three of these assesseees, Dasondhi, Dheru and Basanta goldsmiths of village Uchha refused to pay the tax on demand and under s. 70 of the District Boards Act steps were taken to recover it as if it were arrears of land revenue. Accordingly, on the 14th August, 1926, the Tehsildar, Jullundur, issued warrants under s. 69 of the Punjab Revenue Act for the arrest of the defaulters. Five tehsil peons accompanied by a number of zaildars and safedposhes went to the village to effect the arrest. The execution of the warrants was, however, obstructed by the persons named in the warrants and their friends and relations all of whom offered resistance to the peons, with the result that the persons apprehended escaped. Accordingly they and their companions who had rescued them were prosecuted under s. 225 B of the Indian Penal Code and convicted as described above. Their appeal having been dismissed they have come up on revision to this Court.

The first point urged on their behalf is that the haisiyat tax, for the non-payment of which the warrants for the arrest of the assesseees had been issued, had been illegally imposed by the District Board, Jullundur. It was argued that the tax was in substance a tax on income and, as such, it could not, under s. 30 of the District Boards Act, be imposed by a local body without the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, which had not been obtained in this case. It is conceded for the Crown that the District Board had imposed the tax with the sanction of the Local Government only. There is, therefore, no doubt that the tax imposed under the Notification aforesaid was ultra vires. The question has been recently considered by a Division Bench of this Court (Addison and Goldstream, JJ.), in District Board Sialkot v. Sultan Muhammad Khan (1) decided on the 31st of October, 1927, where the legality of a similar tax imposed by the District Board, Sialkot, was involved. The learned Judges in an exhaustive judgment held that the haisiyat tax imposed in Sialkot District under a Notification the terms of which were identical with those of the Notification now before me, was in the nature of a tax on income and could only be imposed with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council and as this had not been done, the assesseees were not legally liable to pay it. Following that authority, I hold that the action of the District Board, Jullundur, in assessing haisiyat tax on Dasondhi Dhera and Basanta petitioners was illegal and ultra vires and they were not legally liable to pay it. It follows, therefore, that the warrants under which it was sought to apprehend these petitioners had not been legally issued and the act of the petitioners in offering resistance to the execution of such warrants did not constitute an offence under s. 225-B. Under that section resistance or obstruction to the apprehension of a person is made punishable only if the apprehension was 'lawful' but there (as here) the imposition of the tax for the non-payment of which the warrants were issued was itself illegal and ultra vires the resistance to their execution cannot be punishable.

Various other defects in the warrants were pointed out by the learned Counsel for the petitioners but I think it necessary to refer only to one of these, namely; that the warrants in this case did not bear the seal of the Court issuing them. Under s. 75 of the Criminal Procedure Code every warrant must bear the seal of the Court and there is authority for holding that the omission of the seal on a warrant renders it void and a person offering resistance to apprehension on such a warrant does not commit an offence under s. 225-B of the Indian Penal Code. Reference may in this connection be made to Mahajan Sheikh v. Emperor (2) and Alter Kaufman v. Government of Bombay (3) and to the decision In re Phipps (4).

on which the rulings were based. For this reason also I hold that the petitioners were not guilty under s. 225-B of the Indian Penal Code.

Accordingly I accept the petition for revision, set aside the conviction and direct that the petitioners be acquitted. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 202—Security proceedings—Preliminary enquiry by zaildar—Dismissal of case upon zaildar's report, legality of.

A Magistrate should not dismiss a case under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, upon the report of a zaildar, but must himself decide the case on the merits after hearing the evidence of both the parties.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, with his No. 273-J of 23rd June, 1927.

Facts appear from the following report of the Sessions Judge:—

REPORT.—Musammat Mam Kaur's application was under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate (Khan Sahib Choudhry Miran Bakhsh, Magistrate First Class) sent it for preliminary inquiry under s. 202 to a zaildar and on his report dismissed the application under s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, on 6th May, 1927. Musammat Mam Kaur has applied to this Court for revision of the above order.

The order of the Magistrate is clearly wrong. Section 202 applies only to complaints of offences. An application under s. 107 is not a complaint. The Magistrate had, therefore, no jurisdiction to refer the case to the zaildar under s. 202, Criminal Procedure Code. He should have recorded the evidence himself and acted upon it if it was satisfactory. For the same reason s. 436 is not applicable, and I cannot order further inquiry. The case is reported to the High Court for directing the Magistrate to make inquiry into the case according to law.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Hem Raj for the Respondent.

ORDER.—It is unnecessary to determine the question whether the provisions of s. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code apply to a case under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code, because I am of opinion that the Magistrate should not have dismissed the case upon the report of the zaildar. I accordingly accept the application for revision and direct the Magistrate to decide the case on the merits after hearing the evidence of both the parties.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 27th August, 1926.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a miscellaneous first appeal against an order refusing an application for execution by the alleged assignee of a part of a decree. Nobody has appeared in this Court on behalf of the respondents who opposed the application successfully in the Court below, and, the appeal had been heard ex parte. The facts are briefly as given below:—

A lady of the name of Lajwanti, joining with herself Jaswant Rai and others as co-plaintiffs, brought a suit for possession of certain lands left by her father. Jaswant Rai and the other plaintiffs were strangers to her but they had undertaken to finance the litigation and in consideration for that she assigned two-fifths of the property in suit to them. The suit was dismissed by the Chief Court but the plaintiffs appealed successfully to the Privy Council and obtained a decree on the 29th January, 1924*. That decree was, however, amended by the Judicial Committee on the 19th March, 1925† and according to that amendment the suit was decreed in favour of Musammāt Lajwanti alone to the exclusion of Jaswant Rai and other plaintiffs. Their Lordships pronounced judgment in favour of Musammāt Lajwanti but "with the addition that this judgment is to be without prejudice to the appellants other than Musammāt Lajwanti to recover in respect of any conveyance or assignment made or of any contract to convey or assign such share of the property recovered under the judgment as may appertain to them in respect of such conveyance, assignment or contract."

Jaswant Rai then brought a suit for a declaration that he and certain other persons who were impleaded as defendants Nos. 8 to 16 were entitled to two-fifths of the property according to the award of 1922 or in the alternative for a declaration and injunction that the other defendants including Musammāt Lajwanti should not realise the produce of the two-fifths of the property which belonged to the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 8 to 16. Defendants Nos. 8 to 16 were co-plaintiffs in the former suit but the real defendants in the former suit were not made defendants in this case. Jaswant Rai and the lady eventually came to terms which were reduced to writing and the compromise thus entered into, was filed in Court and a decree followed embodying the terms of the compromise. Jaswant Rai and the lady then jointly made an application for execution of the decree of His Majesty in Council, but soon after that lady and Jaswant Rai fell out again and she refused to proceed with her application for execution stating that she had been the victim of a fraud; and that there was no valid assignment of the decree to Jaswant Rai.

The Executing Court came to the following conclusions:—

(1) That the alleged fraud was not proved.

(2) That as the compromise went beyond the scope of the suit, so much of the consent decree as was not within the ambit of the suit must be ignored.

(3) That though according to the compromise, two-fifths of the decree were assigned, and Jaswant Rai was empowered to take possession of the two-fifths of the property by taking out execution jointly with Musammāt Lajwanti, this was beyond the scope of the suit and could not be given effect to. (Here it was observed by the Court below that the compromise was not registered but it did not say that it was inadmissible in evidence for want of a registration).

(4) That as the assignee of a part of the decree Jaswant Rai had no power to apply for execution.

Conclusions Nos. (2) and (3) do not appear to be sound. There was no denying the fact that the lady made the assignment and as it was reduced to writing and embodied in a decree it fulfilled the necessary conditions and fell within the purview of O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code. Further it is clear that it did not require registration because it had been incorporated in a decree and also because the assignment of a decree, though the decree should be for possession of immoveable property, is not equivalent to a transfer of property. In Gous Mahomed v. Khawas Ali Khan (1), a Division Bench of the Oudh High Court held that s. 17(b) of the Registration Act of 1877 does not apply to a kabala or deed of assignment of a decree and an unregistered kabala of a decree dealing with immoveable property of more than Rs. 100 in value is not inadmissible in evidence under s. 49 of that Act. The same view was taken by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Mumtaz Ahmad v. Sri Ram (2); see also Prabhu Dyal v. Gurmukh (3).

No. (4) was based on Mohkam Chand v. Gangā Ram (4). In that case Sir Donald Johnstone, Chief Judge of the Punjab Chief Court, held that the transferee of a part of a decree has no power at all to apply for execution and that O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code, applies when the whole of a decree has been transferred. This view was opposed to that of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts as expressed in Vencataramaniam v. Venkatachinulu (5) and Kishore Chand Bhakat v. Gisborne & Co. (6), which were brought to the notice of the learned Chief Judge, Sir Donald Johnstone, but were not followed. These Madras, Calcutta and Punjab cases were cited before a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court, in Ram Sahai v. Madan Lal Kanhaiya Lal (7), and Walsh, J., made the following observations in respect thereof:—

"I, therefore, take the view that it is wrong to say that this rule (r. 16) does not apply to an assignment by mortgage or to any transfer which has the effect of conferring upon the transferee or assignee a merely fractional interest in a decree and I am confirmed in this view by the fact, as I have already stated, that in Calcutta and Madras this question has been settled for nearly thirty years. I merely refer to Kishore Chand Bhakat v. Gisborne & Co. (6) and Vencataramaniam v. Venkatachinulu (5). These cases, I think, rightly draw attention to the fact that there is no prohibition in the Code to which reference can be made for making such an application as this, one which has no legal foundation, and in both cases the Judges were careful to point out that it was for the Execution Court below to consider with all the parties before it, the respective rights of each. These are the two cases to which the Chief Justice of the Punjab referred in Mohkam Chand v. Ganga Ram (4), without suggesting, although he was deciding against the applicant, that there was any doubt as to the soundness of the decisions".

On this very point a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held as follows in Muthiah Chettiar v. Lodd Govinda Doss Krishna Doss (8):—

"Section 146, Civil Procedure Code, recognises the validity of a transfer of a part of a decree and execution thereof by the transferee. Order XXI, r. 16 is no bar to the application of the section. Such transferee is like a joint decree-holder and can, under O. XXI, r. 15, protect his rights either by executing the decree himself or by joining or intervening in the execution by his transferor".

Thus there is an overwhelming weight of authority against the view taken in Mohkam Chand v. Ganga Ram (4), and after a careful consideration of all the rulings I come to the conclusion that the transferee of a part of a decree is competent to apply for execution thereof. I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case to be proceeded with in accordance with law.

Petition for revision of a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, dated the 22nd February, 1927.

Mr. Asghar Beg, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff instituted the suit, out of which this revision has arisen, for recovery of Rs. 500 alleged to be due on a bond under which re-payment was to be made in annual instalments of Rs. 50 each. The suit was decreed for Rs. 450 by the Judge Small Cause Court, Amritsar, and against this decree a petition for revision has been presented by the defendants to this Court.

The first point argued by Mr. Asghar Beg on behalf of the defendants is that the bond in question was unenforceable under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act as the consideration for it was to stifle a prosecution under s. 406, Indian Penal Code, which was then pending against the defendant-petitioners in the Court of a Magistrate, First Class, at Amritsar and the date of hearing in which was the 16th of March, 1922, i. e. one day after the date on which the bond was executed. The record of the criminal case is not before me but it appears from the statement of the plaintiff-respondent made in the present case that he had given Rs. 1,000 to the defendants for purchase of goats out of which the latter had failed to account for Rs. 600 and the plaintiff-respondent had instituted a criminal case under s. 406, Indian Penal Code against them. In the bond the defendants admitted that the sum of Rs. 600 was previously due by them to the plaintiff. The defendants did not go into the witness-box to prove that the debt was not due and that the recital in the bond was erroneous. In these circumstances the learned Judge of the Court below was right in holding that the consideration for the execution of the bond was the pre-existing liability and not merely the stifling of the prosecution that was then pending against the executants. It is now well-settled that an agreement the consideration for which is pre-existing liability on the part of the executant, is not void under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act even though the motive for the execution of the bond is to stifle a criminal prosecution, pending in respect of the same liability. The question has been recently discussed at considerable length by Jai Lal, J., in Shanti Sarup v. Lal Chand (1) and I entirely concur in the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge. I am, therefore, of opinion that there is no force in this contention and that the bond was executed for valid consideration.

Mr. Asghar Beg has further contended that the suit was barred by time as the whole of the amount due to the plaintiff has become payable on the first default and the suit had been instituted more than three years after that date. Having regard to the terms of the bond and the law applicable thereto I am, however, of opinion that the learned Judge came to a correct conclusion that the suit was within time. I do not think it necessary to repeat all that he has said on this point.

The petition for revision fails and is dismissed with costs.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)—Proceedings under the Act, nature of—Enquiry into right and fitness of applicants for guardianship, necessity of—Residence of applicant within Court's jurisdiction, necessity of.

Proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act are not summary and the Court should give an opportunity to the parties to produce evidence to show which of them is better entitled and qualified to act as guardian of the minor. It is also necessary for the Court to determine which of them is better entitled under the personal law of the minor.

Yusaf Ali Mamoonji v. Alibhoy (2) and Sheoshankar v. Khupchand (3), referred to.

The Guardians and Wards Act contemplates that an applicant for guardianship should reside within the jurisdiction of the Court to which he makes the application.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 12th May, 1927.

Mr. J. N. Bhandari, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiv Charan Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two minor boys in this case were orphans quite, and their step-mother Musammat Lachhmi made an application to be appointed guardian of their persons and property. The property is situated in the Ferozepore District where the application was made. The minors live with the husband of a sister at Kasur. He opposed the application of the step-mother and applied himself to be appointed guardian of the persons and property of the minors. The Senior Subordinate Judge of Ferozepore accepted his application and rejected that of the step-mother.

She appeals, and her Counsel contends that the proceedings of the Court below were irregular, inasmuch as the order was made without an enquiry and further because a person who did not live with

The Court should have given an opportunity to the parties to produce evidence and show which of them was better entitled and qualified to act as guardian of the minors. Further it should have been determined which of them was better entitled under the personal law of the parties. In *Asghar Ali v. Restitution of conjugal rights—Decree for restitution—Discretion of Courts—Husband neglecting to perform his obligation, effect of.

It is well-settled that the granting of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is discretionary with the Courts and, though, ordinarily, such a decree will be refused only if the husband has been guilty of legal cruelty towards his wife, yet he may disentitle himself to this relief by his gross failure to perform the obligations which the marriage contract has imposed on him for the benefit of the wife.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 15th March, 1927, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Bhakkar District Mianwali, dated the 30th December 1926.

Mr. Shambhu Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Laul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit, which has given rise to this second appeal, was instituted by Imam Bakhsh, plaintiff-appellant for restitution of conjugal rights against Musammat Amiran, defendant No. 1, whom he claimed as his wife. The parents of Musammat Amiran and some other relations were also impleaded and an injunction was asked for against them directing them not to prevent Musammat Amiran from going over to the plaintiff.

The suit was decreed ex parte by the trial Court but was dismissed by the learned District Judge on appeal by the defendants.

A second appeal has been preferred by Imam Bakhsh and it is argued on his behalf that the learned District Judge having found that defendant No. 1 was validly married to the plaintiff has dismissed the suit for restitution of conjugal rights on legally inadequate grounds. The facts found are, however, as follows:—

(a) That Musammat Amiran was married to the plaintiff about 10 years before the suit, the marriage having been arranged by her father with a view to procure a bride for his son in exchange for her.

(b) That since the marriage the girl has been living with her parents, no effort having been made by the plaintiff to bring her to his house.

(c) That though Musammat Amiran attained puberty three years ago, the marriage has not been yet consummated.

(d) That about the time Musammat Amiran attained puberty the plaintiff married another woman with whom he has since been living and from whom he has got a daughter.

(e) During all this period the plaintiff has absolutely neglected Musammat Amiran.

Mr. Shambhu Lal Puri has argued that these facts are insufficient to justify refusal to the plaintiff of relief by way of restitution of conjugal rights and that the learned District Judge should have decreed the suit. He has cited before me a number of rulings each of which was, however, decided on its peculiar facts. It is well-settled that the grant of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is discretionary with the Courts and though ordinarily such a decree will be refused only if the husband has been guilty of legal cruelty towards his wife, he may disentitle himself to this relief by his gross failure to perform the obligations which the marriage contract had imposed on him for the benefit of the wife. See Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonissa Begum (1), Ziada v. Jowai (2) and the recent decision of this Court in Nawab Bibi v. Allah Ditta (3).

Having regard to the facts as found above and all the circumstances of the case I am of opinion that the learned District Judge exercised a sound discretion in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Execution against insolvent—Leave of Court, necessity

A decree-holder is not competent to take out execution against the person of an insolvent judgment-debtor without obtaining leave of the Insolvency Court.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Sargodha, District Shahpur, dated the 10th May, 1927.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. C. Kumar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, when a debtor was adjudged an insolvent he ordinarily became immune from arrest. This immunity was taken away by the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 and according to that Act he could be arrested in execution of a decree unless he should obtain a protection order under s. 31 of that Act. But the question is whether a decree-holder is competent to take out execution against the person of an insolvent judgment-debtor without obtaining leave of the Insolvency Court. In the present case it is admitted that the Insolvency Court has refused the insolvent's petition for a protection order but the decree-holder has not yet obtained permission to execute his decree by arrest of the insolvent. According to cl. (2) of s. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 "no creditor shall during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings commence any suit or other legal proceedings (against the insolvent) except with the leave of the Insolvency Court". An execution proceeding is a legal proceeding and it was the first application for execution that the judgment-creditor made after having obtained the decree that he sought to execute. He thus commenced a legal proceeding but without the leave of the Insolvency Court. The language of cl. (2) of s. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 is almost the same as that of s. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act of 1909. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court held in Easwara Aiyar v. Govindarajulu Naidu (1) that in view of the provision of s. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act where a person is adjudicated insolvent, creditors seeking any remedy against him must apply to get leave for that purpose. Another case in point is Thakurdeen v. Dubay (2), where it was held that "the words 'other legal proceeding' in s. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act include an application for arrest in execution of a decree and that, therefore, no such application can be made against an insolvent after an order of adjudication has been made except with the leave of the Insolvency Court."

I, therefore, set aside the order of arrest passed against the insolvent judgment-debtor by the Court below and direct that no proceedings in execution be taken against him unless the judgment-creditor should obtain leave of the Insolvency Court to commence such proceedings. The parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

ORDER.

Broadway, J.—One Panna Lal, son of Shankar Das, died on the night of the 14th of July, 1924, leaving certain house property as well as shops. A man named Bura Mal claiming to be a relative instituted a suit on the 20th of January, 1925, for a declaration and for the issue of a perpetual injunction. He alleged that he was a cousin of the deceased and that on the death of Panna Lal he, the plaintiff, had gone to the house and shops and affixed his locks thereon, and that subsequently one Tulsi Ram had placed his locks on the same house and the same shops claiming to be entitled to the same under a Will alleged to have been executed by the deceased ed Panna Lal on the 14th of July, 1924. Tulsi Ram, defendant, contested the case and alleged that the Will was a genuine one that he had been living with the deceased Panna Lal for a considerable period and that it was as a reward for the services rendered to the deceased that the property had been bequeathed to him, Tulsi Ram. He further pleaded that he had locked the house and the shops when taking the body of the deceased to be cremated and that on his return he found that Bura Mal had put his locks on the same premises.

Various issues were settled with which it is not necessary to deal as the plaint was rejected on the 5th of October, 1925, on the ground that it was insufficiently stamped and the plaintiff had failed to make good the Court-fees within the period fixed by the Court. Against this order of rejection the plaintiff Bura Mal has come up to this Court in appeal and on his behalf Mr. Mul Chand addressed the Court at considerable length, while Mr. Shamair Chand replied on behalf of the respondent.

It was urged by Mr. Mul Chand that the plaint ought not to have been rejected inasmuch as the suit fell within the purview of Art. 17 of the Court Fees Act, while Mr. Shamair Chand urged that the view taken by the Court below was correct and that the law applicable was s. 7 (iv) (c). Now, a reference to the plaint shows that the plaintiff definitely alleged that a certain Will had been set up, and asked for a declaratory decree to the effect that it had not been executed by the deceased on the 14th of July, 1924, that the document produced by the defendant was a forgery and that the plaintiff was the legal heir of Panna Lal. He further asked for a perpetual injunction to issue directing the defendant to refrain from interfering with his property and to remove his locks from the house and the shops in question.

It has been held in many cases that a prayer for an injunction amounts to consequential relief. In this connection a reference may be made to Jageshra v. Durga Prashad Singh (1), Raj Krishna Dey v. Bepin Behary Dey (2) and Vachhani Keshabhai v. Vachhani Nanbha Bavaji (3). In these circumstances I am of opinion that the suit clearly falls within the ambit of s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act and that, therefore, it was necessary for the plaintiff to fix a value on the relief sought by him. He fixed the sum of Rs. 105 as the value so far as the injunction was concerned, and it is urged by Mr. Shamair Chand that inasmuch as he had fixed the value of the property in suit at Rs. 16,000 the Court below had correctly held that he should pay a stamp on the total, namely, Rs. 16,105.

(2) 17 Ind. Cas. 162; 40 O. 245; 16 C. L. J. 194; 17 C. W. N. 591.

It seems to me, however, that this contention is not quite correct. It is true that it was for the plaintiff to fix the value on the relief sought by him, and as was held in Baru v. Lachhman (4) the value fixed by the plaintiff must be treated as the value for purposes of jurisdiction. Here it was urged by Mr. Shamair Chand that although he had not valued the relief sought he had actually valued the suit for purposes of jurisdiction and that it should, therefore, be held that the value of the relief sought was Rs. 16,000. No authority has been cited for this proposition although there is ample authority for the converse proposition, namely, that when a plaintiff fixes the value of the relief he seeks, the jurisdictional value must always be regarded as being the same. It was urged that the plaintiff was not entitled to fix any arbitrary value but that the Court was entitled to see that the value fixed by him was proportionate to the value of the property. Doubtless there is authority for this proposition in a decision by the Calcutta High Court. That decision was, however, not approved of in Baru v. Lachhman (4) where it was held by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was entitled to fix whatever value he chose. By that decision I feel bound. In the present case a reference to the plaint shows clearly that the plaintiff and his legal adviser were under the impression, although an erroneous one, that the suit fell within the purview of Art. 17 of the Court Fees Act. That being so it was clear that they were bound to fix the value for purposes of jurisdiction which they were bound to fix at the correct figure, i.e., the value of the property. It was never present in their minds that in placing the value of Rs. 16,000 on the property in suit they were fixing the value of the relief that was being sought. In these circumstances it seems to me that the plaintiff should be given an opportunity of fixing the value of the relief sought by him, and I would, therefore, return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant directing him within ten days to fix the value of the relief at such figure as he may choose and to pay the proper stamp thereon. When he has done so it will be necessary for us to consider the next step in the case.

Jai Lal, J.—I agree.

[In compliance with their Lordships' order of the 10th of November, 1927, the Advocate for the appellant fixed the value of the suit at Rs. 605 and paid the Court-fees on that amount so far as this appeal was concerned and their Lordships accepted the appeal and returned the case to the Court below for disposal in accordance with law. The parties were left to bear their own costs in the High Court. Their Lordships expressed no opinion whatever as to whether the suit in form in which it was brought was competent.]

JUDGMENT.

Fforde, J.—This was a mortgagee's suit to realize the capital and interest secured by certain mortgages by sale of the mortgaged property. Judgment was given for the plaintiff on the 15th of October, 1925, and a preliminary decree made on the same date. On the 21st of November, 1925, the final decree was made and on the 5th of December, 1925, the present appeal was brought against the judgment and decree of 15th of October, 1925, but no appeal was brought against the final decree of the 21st of November, 1925.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi for the plaintiff respondent has raised the preliminary objection that the appeal is not competent, as there is no appeal against the final decree and the period of limitation has long passed for the presentation of such an appeal. Mr. Sethi has referred to Ganda Ram v. Sundar Lal (1) in which Broadway, J., following Mackenzie v. Narsing Sahai (2), Kuria Mal v. Bishambhar Das (3) and Khirdamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4), held that, where a final decree had been passed, an appeal against the preliminary decree only was incompetent.

Mr. Sethi cited another decision of the Calcutta High Court in Kulada Prosad Chowdhury v. Ramanand Patnaik (5) which, as is the case here, was an appeal by the defendant in a mortgage suit. In that case a preliminary decree was made on the 15th of January, 1920, and the appeal lodged in the High Court on the 21st of April, 1920. In the interval, namely, on the 16th of March, 1920, the final decree had been made. The appeal to the High Court, however, was directed only against the preliminary decree and not against the final decree. On an objection being taken that the appeal in these circumstances was incompetent, the Court held that the objection was "manifestly well-founded on principle" for the reason that if the preliminary decree were to be reversed against the appellant, the final decree would still remain unaffected, as no attempt had been made to challenge its propriety. The Court distinguished the case of Abdul Jalil v. Amar Chand Paul (6) [erroneously referred to in the report as Khirdamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4)] where the final decree was made after the appeal had been preferred against the preliminary decree. In those circumstances it was held that the final decree must be deemed to have been made on the assumption that if the preliminary decree should be modified or set aside in the appeal, the final decree also would be similarly modified or set aside.

In Mackenzie v. Narsing Sahai (2), a decision by a Division Bench, it was held that, where in a partition suit a final decree had been made and an appeal preferred against the preliminary decree only it was not open to the appellant to challenge the correctness of the preliminary decree without preferring an appeal against the final decree.

Mr. Sundar Das for the appellants has relied upon Ramien v. Veerappudian (7) in which it was held that it was competent to a party to prefer an appeal against the preliminary decree in a redemption suit, though before the appeal was presented the final decree had been passed. The Court followed the decision in Lakshmi v. Marudevi (8) where it was held that the right of a party to appeal against a preliminary decree was not affected by the subsequent passing of the final decree.

Kanhaiya Lal v. Tirbeni Sahai (9) is to the same effect. It was held that when an appeal had once been filed and was pending against the preliminary decree in a suit for partition, the passing of a final decree did not render the appeal nugatory, the Court holding that the final decree depended upon the preliminary decree, and if, as the result of an appeal, the latter was set aside, the former must fall with it.

To the same effect is the decision of LeRossignol, J., in Ramditta v. Maru (10), namely, that it is not necessary to appeal against a final decree when the preliminary decree on which it is based has been set aside on appeal. In that case the final decree was made during the pendency of the appeal from the preliminary decree.

In Chandulal Maganlal v. Motilal Harilal (11) a Division Bench held that "when an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree, but no stay of proceedings is asked for, and a final decree is passed in the lower Court, without any appeal being filed therefrom, the proper course for the appellant in such a case is to put an appeal against the decree absolute, or in any event to inform the Court, when the appeal against the preliminary decree comes on for hearing, that a decree absolute has been made." Macleod, C. J., dealt with the question as follows:—

"The actual legal position, when an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree, but no stay of proceedings is asked for, and a final decree is passed in the lower Court without any appeal being filed therefrom, is somewhat obscure. It seems to me that the proper course for the appellant in such a case is to put an appeal on the file against the decree absolute, or in any event to inform the Court, when the appeal against the preliminary decree comes on for hearing, that a decree absolute has been made. It may not be that the Appeal Court is debarred from hearing the appeal from the preliminary decree merely on account of the Court below having passed a final decree. But to avoid the difficulties which may arise when no application has been made for stay of proceedings, it would certainly be desirable that, in any case where a preliminary decree is passed and a party appeals against that decree, when the Court below passes a final decree, he should file an appeal against that decree."

A Full Bench of the Patna High Court in Wahidunnissa v. Dip Narain Pershad (12) held that, where an appeal had been filed against the preliminary decree and a final decree was made thereafter, despite the objection of the appellant that the final decree should not have been made until the appeal had been disposed of, the appeal against the preliminary decree was competent. Chamier, C. J., distinguished the decisions in Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4) and Sadhu Charan Datta v. Hara Nath Datta (13) on the ground that in these latter cases the final decree had been passed before an appeal against the preliminary decree was filed.

I have been referred to no authority in which the Court has permitted an appeal against the preliminary decree filed after the final decree has been passed. Following what appears to me to be the trend of judicial opinion, I am of opinion that the present appeal, having been presented after both the preliminary and final decrees were made, against the preliminary decree only, is not competent, and I would accordingly, accepting the respondent's objection, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st February, 1927, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st July, 1926.

Mr. Faqir Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in dispute covers an area of 12 marlas which was in the Settlement of 1884-85 a part of khassra No. 824, the total area of which was then 5 kanals 5 marlas and which was shown as barani agricultural land. By mutation dated the 7th of August, 1884, Bhola, etc., Brahmins, owners of this khassra No. 824 mortgaged it along with land in several other khassra numbers to Dhanna Saini. The mortgage was a possessory one and it is admitted that the mortgagees actually got possession of the entire mortgaged property including the 12 marlas now in dispute. In 1891, one Nandu Sadh, caste Chamar, got possession of this plot of 12 marlas and built a dharamsala on it. In the jamabandi of that year, in the 'cultivation' column the land was shown in possession of Nandu, non-occupancy tenant and in the kaiflat column it was stated that no rent was charged as the land was dharamarth. This entry continued till 1907-08. In 1911-12, at the time of the new Settlement, the plot of 12 marlas was included in the abadi deh and described as a part of khassra No. 1124, which was the abadi of Chamars and was shown as being in their possession.

In 1905 the descendants of the original mortgagors sued the descendants of the original mortgagees for possession of the entire mortgaged property including these 12 marlas and obtained a decree. But as this particular part was in possession of the successors-in-interest of Nandu Chamar, who had not been impleaded in that litigation, they refused to surrender possession of the land to the mortgagors. The present suit was accordingly instituted on the 21st of May, 1925, by the mortgagors against Ram Lok, etc., who had been in possession of this land since the death of their guru, Nandu. The suit was decreed by the trial Court, but on appeal by the defendants has been dismissed by the learned District Judge.

The sole question argued before me is whether the possession of the Chamars has been adverse not only against the mortgagees but also against the mortgagors. Mr. Fakir Chand for the appellants has contended that as the mortgage was with possession and the mortgagees had actually entered into possession of the property in 1884, the act of the Chamars in taking possession of the land in 1891 might be adverse against the mortgagees, but can under no circumstances be adverse against the mortgagors. In support of his contention the learned Counsel has relied on Khanu Mal v. Khan Muhammad (1) and Tarabai Ramrao Patankar v. Dattaram Govindbhai Gujar (2). The facts of those cases, however, are wholly distinguishable from those of the present case. It is, no doubt, true that as a general rule adverse possession against a mortgagee is ineffectual against the mortgagor, especially when it began at a time when the mortgagee was in possession, but when a trespasser takes possession of the mortgaged property and asserts a title, which is hostile not only to the mortgagee but which also assails the title of the mortgagor, and the mortgagor allows 12 years to elapse, the title of the trespasser will become indefeasible not only against the mortgagee but also against the mortgagor. I cannot assent to the contention put forward by Mr. Faqir Chand that in a possessory mortgage so long as the mortgagor is entitled only to the equity of redemption there can be no invasion of his interest and in such a case it is not legally possible for a stranger to acquire an adverse title against him. The question was considered at great length as long ago as 1820 in the great case of the Marquis of Cholmondeley v. Lord Clinton (3) where Sir Thomas Plumer, M.R. held that "an equity of redemption, in common with other equitable estates in land, is capable of being extinguished by the operation of the Statute of Limitation." On appeal this view was affirmed in the House of Lords where Lord Eldon, L.C., enunciated the principle that "adverse possession of an equity of redemption for 20 years was a bar to another person claiming the same equity of redemption." Reference may also be made to the case of Lalla Kanhoo Lal v. Manki Bibi (4), Hubdar Khan v. Gajadhar Chaube (5) and the remarks of Macleod, C.J. at page 546* of the recent case of Tarabai Ramrao Patankar

v. Dattaram Govindbhai Gujar (2) which was cited by Mr. Faqir Chand himself.

In this case, as has already been pointed out, Nandu Chamar took possession of the land in 1891, changed its character from agricultural land to religious and constructed a dharamsala on it. From the report of the local Commissioner it appears that this dharamsala and the appurtenant land was descended from him to his chelas, Ram Lok, etc., defendants. Now, Nandu, by constructing the dharamsala not only denied the title of the mortgagee but also that of the mortgagor and asserted a hostile title to both. In addition to this in 1911-12 the name of the mortgagor was removed from the Revenue papers and this plot was included in khasra No. 1124 described as Abadi Chamaran and in the possession of the latter as owners. These facts leave no doubt that the title openly set up by the respondents in 1891, was hostile both to the mortgagors and the mortgagees and by lapse of time the rights of the mortgagors in the equity of redemption have become extinct.

Mr. Faqir Chand has relied upon the entry in the jamabandi of 1891-92 where Nandu is entered in the "cultivation" column as a non-occupancy tenant. But it is well-known that persons who take possession without any title are shown in the "cultivation" column as non-occupancy tenants as long changes in the proprietary column are not made by mutation. Entries in the "cultivation" column are always to be read along with those in the kaiyat column and reading the two together no doubt is left that Nandu did not hold the land under the mortgagees in 1891 or subsequent years.

This being my view of the facts of this case and the law applicable thereto, I am of opinion that the learned District Judge came to a correct conclusion in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. The appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Confession—Retracted confession as basis for conviction of maker and co-accused.

Even though it is not illegal to base a conviction on the retracted confession of an accused person, in the absence of corroboration in material particulars, it is not safe to convict on a confession, unless from the peculiar circumstances in which it was made and judging from the reasons alleged or apparent of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been resiled from, is genuine. [p. 616, col. 1.]

A retracted confession of a co-accused, even if genuine, is not a safe basis for conviction. [p. 615, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, exercising enhanced powers under s. 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Lahore, dated the 10th December, 1926.

Mr. Pindi Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Khurshid Zaman, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—These six appeals (Nos. 108, 109, 255, 256, 286 and 287 of 1927) are connected and will be disposed of together.

Six persons, viz., Gagi Santa Singh, Chanan Singh, Pala Singh, Bachan Singh and Mohan Singh, were prosecuted for two dacoities committed by them on the evening of the 7th October, 1925. The trials were held separately, but the facts being connected, the learned Magistrate has disposed of the cases in one judgment. In each case, all the accused except Mohan Singh were convicted under s. 395/397 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, the sentences to run concurrently. From this decision Santa Singh, Bachan Singh, Pala Singh, and Gagi have appealed in each case. Bachan Singh and Pala Singh having filed a joint appeal there are thus six appeals before me for disposal.

The facts are briefly as follows:—

(1) On the evening of the 7th October, 1925, Harnam Singh of Daftuh was returning from "Kahna" Mandi accompanied by Kundan Singh and Fauja Singh, when on the way near Purana Kahna he was set upon by five or six dacoits. He was beleeboured with lathis and was robbed of his gun and a belt of cartridges. Harnam Singh went on to the village and lodged a report at the Thana. Harnam Singh's skull was injured and the injury appearing serious he was sent to the Mayo Hospital for treatment. He eventually died from the effects of the injury after some four months but before the culprits could be traced. This will be referred to hereafter as the 'gun' case.

(2) On the same evening one Bhag Singh of Ladhoke Bhullar was returning to his village on his mare from the same Mandi. He was followed at a short distance by two men Sadar Din and Khuda Bakhsh. When Bhag Singh came near the road to the village Sajjada, he was attacked by four men. He was dragged down from the mare and belaboured with lathis. When he raised an alarm one of the robbers fired a gun and hence none came to his rescue. The robbers eventually decamped with the mare, saddle and a blanket. Bhag Singh went to the Thana to report the matter but the Munshi at the Thana wanted money and as Bhag Singh was not willing to bribe him he merely recorded a report about the mare having gone astray. This will be referred to hereafter as the 'mare' case.

No trace of the culprits in the above two cases was forthcoming till Gagi appellant who was arrested on the 5th January, 1926, in connection with certain dacoities gave information relating to them. Gagi mentioned the present appellants and Mohan Singh as having been responsible for the two robberies committed on the 7th October, 1925. The gun and the mare were found and after investigation six persons were prosecuted under s. 395/397 of the Indian Penal Code as stated already.

The commission of the robberies as alleged appears to have been established beyond any doubt. The report as regards the 'gun' case was recorded immediately after the occurrence and Harnam Singh's story was supported by the injuries on his person. In the case of Bhag Singh no report as regards the robbery was taken down by the Police but there seem no good reasons to doubt the genuineness of the story put forward by Bhag Singh. The report about the astraying of the mare seems rather suspicious for reasons given by the learned Magistrate. The identity of the mare has been established beyond any doubt. If the mare had really gone astray, it does not appear why a false story as to dacoity should have been concocted either by Gagi or the Police. There was another case against Gagi and the appellants and the Police had no motive for setting up a false case at all.

The guilt of the appellants in these cases rests mainly on the evidence of certain eye-witnesses who are alleged to have seen them at the time of the commission of the offences and identified them after their arrest and in the case of Pala Singh also on a retracted 'confession'. I shall first deal with the cases of Santa Singh, Bachan Singh and Gagi, who have not made any confession.

Santa Singh.—In the 'gun' case, Harnam Singh died before the culprits were traced as already mentioned. The only two persons who were on the spot and might have been expected to identify the assailants were the companions of Harnam Singh, Fauja Singh and Kundan Singh. Neither of these witnesses was able to identify Santa Singh. Fauja Singh is said to have identified Santa Singh at an identification parade, but he has definitely stated in Court that he could not identify him and hence the previous identification, if any, is of no assistance. The only other evidence to which Counsel for the Crown drew my attention was the retracted confessions of Pala Singh and Chanan Singh co-accused. I shall discuss the admissibility and value of these confessions presently, but assuming that the confessions are genuine and admissible, it seems clear that the mere retracted confession of a co-accused cannot be sufficient to sustain the convictions of Santa Singh. Santa Singh's conviction in the 'gun' case cannot, therefore, be upheld. Jawan v. Emperor (1).

In the 'mare' case, Bhag Singh (P. W. No. 7), identified Santa Singh as one of the dacoits who struck him with lathis. Bhag Singh had opportunity of seeing him at close quarters and has no motive for implicating him falsely. The name of Santa Singh was disclosed by Gagi and it has not been shown that Gagi or any other person had any motive for implicating Santa Singh. In fact he has offered no explanation of the evidence against him.

[His Lordship then discussed the cases against Bachan Singh and Gagi and proceeded:—]

Pala Singh.—Lastly, I come to the case of Pala Singh. This appellant was not identified by any one in the 'gun' case.

Not only this, but Bhag Singh has definitely stated that he did not see Pala Singh amongst his assailants. In the 'mare' case also, there is no evidence as regards his identification. The learned Magistrate has solely relied upon the retracted confession of Pala Singh, and it is, therefore, necessary to examine it carefully.

There is no doubt that it is not illegal to base a conviction even on the retracted confession of an accused person; but as pointed out in Jawan v. Emperor (1) "experience and common sense show that, in the absence of corroboration in material particulars, it is not safe to convict on a confession, unless, from the peculiar circumstances in which it was made and judging from the reasons, alleged or apparent, of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been resiled from, is genuine." Now, looking at the facts of this case, I do not think, this is one of those exceptional cases, wherein a conviction may be justifiable even on a retracted confession. Pala Singh accused is aged only about twenty. In the story put forward by him, he has denied having taken any active part in the commission of the offence. Bhag Singh denies in the 'mare' case that he was amongst the persons who attacked him. He withdrew the confession not long after it was made. The learned Magistrate has held that the confession was not withdrawn at the earliest possible opportunity, but I am not satisfied on this point. The confession was made on the 12th March, 1927, but (according to the Magistrate) was not retracted in Court till the 6th October, 1926, when the statements of the accused were recorded. But the learned Magistrate concedes that from the trend of the prosecution witnesses it was apparent that the confessions were going to be withdrawn. There are actually two applications dated the 3rd June, 1926, retracting the confession on the record, but the learned Magistrate considers that these were smuggled in some time and his order "shamil misl howe" thereon was obtained thereon somehow without his knowledge. But when it is apparent from the cross-examination of the Magistrate who took down the confession on the 12th March, 1926, that the confessions were going to be withdrawn, I do not see why it should be considered improbable that the applications were put in about that time.

The papers on a judicial record are placed in chronological order and entered in the index and I am not at all convinced that these applications were antedated and 'smuggled' at a later date. The accused were not questioned till the 6th October, 1926, and had, therefore, no other opportunity of retracting the confessions.

The circumstances of the retracted confession are, therefore, by no means so exceptionally free from suspicion as to justify a conviction based upon that confession alone.

For reasons given above I accept the appeals of Bachan Singh and Pala Singh and acquit them in both the cases. I accept the appeal of Santa Singh in the 'gun' case (Criminal Appeal No. 256 of 1927) and acquit him.

As regards the 'mare' case, I have found that there is sufficient evidence to justify the convictions of Santa Singh and Gagi, but the convictions should have been under s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code, as according to Bhag Singh's own statement only four persons attacked him. I accordingly set aside the order of the learned Magistrate and alter the convictions of Santa Singh and Gagi in the 'mare' case to those under s. 394 of the Indian Penal Code. I sentence Gagi, who appears to have played a prominent part, to seven years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement under s. 394 of the Indian Penal Code. I sentence Santa Singh to four years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement under the same section.

In the 'gun' case, I alter Gagi's conviction to one under s. 414 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for three years including three months' solitary confinement. The sentences of Gagi in the two cases, will run concurrently.

FIRM TIRKHA RAM-CHUNILAL

THROUGH CHUNI LAL—PLAINTIFF—

versus

HAIDAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Interest—Unconscionable rate of interest—No undue influence—Power of Court to interfere—Compound interest at same rate as principal, whether penal.

The mere fact that a rate of interest is harsh or unconscionable is not a sufficient ground for not enforcing the contract between the parties. [p. 617, col. 2.]

Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) and Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2), followed.

The rule of law is now firmly established that in the absence of proof of undue influence, a provision for charging compound interest at the same rate as simple interest on the failure of the mortgagor to pay the principal or interest on the due date is perfectly legal and cannot be relieved against on the mere ground of hardship. [p. 618, col. 1.]

Mangat Rai v. Babu Singh (3), followed.

"Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th March, 1927, modifying that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Sonapat, dated the 30th of March, 1926.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Parkash Chandra, for Mr. Mohammad Amin, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff instituted the suit, out of which this second appeal has arisen for recovery of Rs. 720 alleged to be due to him as principal, interest and compound interest on foot of a mortgage-deed executed by the defendant-respondent in his favour. The execution of the deed was admitted by the defendant, and the only material plea, put forward was that the rate of interest was penal. It was not alleged, however, that any undue influence had been exercised by the mortgagee over the mortgagor at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed. A number of issues were framed most of which referred to technical points as to the framing of the suit, the only material issue being No. 8 "whether the rate of interest is penal and should be decreed?"

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the rate of interest was not penal, but he was of opinion that the stipulation as to compound interest was "harsh" and should "not be given effect to." He, therefore, allowed simple interest and passed a decree for Rs. 200-6 only.

On appeal by the mortgagee the learned

District Judge held that the compound interest could not be allowed as the consideration for the mortgage consisted of prior dealings between the parties and, therefore, the mortgagee was in a position to dominate over the will of the mortgagor. He, accordingly, held that the term as to compound interest was unconscionable and could not be enforced. He, however, held that the plaintiff-mortgagee was entitled to certain sum on account of rent and enhanced the decretal amount to Rs. 319.

The mortgagee has come up to this Court in second appeal and contends that undue influence had not been pleaded and that the mere fact that the consideration for the mortgage was the amount due on account of previous dealings between the parties, or that the rate of interest was excessive, is no ground in law to disallow compound interest. Mr. Parkash Chandra for the respondent concedes that undue influence was not pleaded in the jawab dawa nor was it covered by the issues. In these circumstances the learned District Judge should not have set up an entirely new case for the defendant and made it the basis of his decision. The Subordinate Judge had refused to allow compound interest on the simple ground that the rate was 'harsh' and the learned District Judge thought the condition to be unconscionable. This, however, is not a sufficient ground for not enforcing the contract between the parties: see in this connection the well-known decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) and Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2).

Both the lower Courts have held that the condition as to compound interest was not penal. Mr. Parkash Chandra for the respondent urges that this finding is not correct and that the condition to pay compound interest on default of payment of the principal or interest is in the nature of a penalty and must be relieved against. This, however, is not a correct view of the law. The question was recently examined by a Division Bench of this Court in Mangat Rai v. Babu Singh (3) where it was held that "the rule of law is now firmly established that in the absence of proof of undue influence, a provision for charging compound interest at the same rate as simple interest, on the failure of the mortgagor to pay the principal or interest on the due date, is perfectly legal and cannot be relieved against on the mere ground of hardship."

I, therefore, hold that the lower Courts were not justified in not allowing compound interest according to the stipulation in the deed. In view of this finding the appellant is not entitled to the amount of rent allowed to him by the District Judge.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the judgment of the District Judge and pass a decree for the sum claimed in favour of the plaintiff-appellant against the respondent with costs throughout.

Nittyamund Roy v. Abdar Raheem (1), referred to.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 19th of February, 1927, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Wazirabad, District Gujranwala, dated the 15th of July, 1926.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellant.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by certain inhabitants of Wazirabad with regard to a drinking well situated in that town, claiming that the well was constructed by their ancestors and had been dedicated to the use of the public, and that the defendant had no right to sell it which he intended to do. The trial Court, finding that the plaintiffs had failed to establish their claim, dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge allowed the plaintiffs to produce additional evidence, documentary as well as oral, and mainly on the strength of an entry in the register of houses that was thus received in evidence, he came to the contrary conclusion and decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

On behalf of the defendant-appellant it is urged that there was no good ground for admitting additional evidence and that the register in question was inadmissible in evidence not being a public document or a document prepared by a Government Officer in the discharge of his official duty. The first objection is untenable. The learned District Judge had a discretion in the matter which he does not appear to have exercised unjudicially.

As regards the second, the said register of houses was prepared in 1856 and again in 1856 and in both, the well in dispute was shown as "shamilat shahr." Now the question is: was the register a public document as defined in s. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act or was it an official book falling within the purview of s. 35 of that Act? There is no evidence to show that the registers were prepared by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty. The registers are kept in the record room of the Deputy Commissioner's Office at Gujranwala, but the mere fact that they are kept in a public office does not lead to the inference that they are public documents. In Nittyamund Roy v. Abdar Raheem (1) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that certain measurement records produced from the Collectorate were not public documents within the meaning of s. 74 where there was nothing to show that they were the record of measurements made by any Government Officer. As already stated, there is nothing to show that these registers were prepared by any Government Officer, or by any public servant whose duty it was to prepare them. Nor is there anything to show that the entries therein were made after due enquiry so that a presumption of correctness should attach to them. This being so, they are inadmissible in evidence.

The learned District Judge based his finding mainly on the said entries. It cannot be divined what his finding would have been if had excluded them from consideration.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case for re-decision of the appeal on the basis of the evidence on the record that is admissible. The costs to abide the event.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 15 (c), thirdly—'Owner of estate', meaning of—Owner in shamilat, whether owner of estate.

If a person has no land in the khewat but owns a share in the shamilat which is culturable and is assessed to land revenue, he is an 'owner of the estate' within the meaning of s. 15 (c), thirdly, of the Punjab Pre-emption Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 7th of March, 1927, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sargodha, dated the 1st of February, 1927.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are set out in detail in the judgment of the learned District Judge and need not be recapitulated. Briefly they are that the defendant-appellant purchased 52 kanals, 7½ marlas of land in two *khata*s, i.e., (a) 52¼ kanals in khata No. 3 and (b) ¼th of ½ kanal of land in khata No. 18. The plaintiff sued to pre-empt the sale and has been successful in both Courts. The defendant-vendee has come up to this Court on second appeal.

As regards, the small plot of land, ¼th of ½ kanal in area in khata No. 18, the finding is that the plaintiff-respondent is a cosharer in the khata, while the defendant-appellant (vendee) is not. It is conceded by Mr. Nanak Chand that the suit has been rightly decreed, so far as this plot of land is concerned. The appeal fails qua this plot and is dismissed. As regards the 52¼ kanals of land in khata No. 3, the findings are that the defendant-appellant (vendee) is a co sharer in the shamilat of the village in which the land sold is situate but has no khewat land in that village, whereas the plaintiff-respondent (pre-emptor) owns land both in the khewat as well as in the shamilat of this village. Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the respondent, concedes that the reason for the vendee holding a share in the shamilat of this village is wholly irrelevant for the determination of the respective rights of the pre-emptor and the vendee and that the real question is whether the land owned by the vendee is assessed to land revenue. He admits that if a person has no land in the khewat but owns a share in the shamilat which is culturable and is assessed to land revenue, he would be an 'owner of the estate' within the meaning of that expression under s. 15 (c), thirdly, of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, as interpreted in the rulings of the Chief Court and this Court reported as Narain Singh v. Gopal Singh (1) and Jawala Singh v. Tara Singh (2). But the materials on the record are insufficient to decide this point. No enquiry has been made as to whether the appellant owns a share in the portion of the shamilat which is assessed to land revenue, and both Counsel are agreed that the case must go back to enable the parties to place the necessary evidence before the Court.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts so far as the land 52¼ kanals in khata No. 3 is concerned, and send the case back to the trial Court for recording evidence on the point above mentioned and decision in accordance with law. The Court-fee on appeal will be refunded and costs will be costs in the cause.

As already stated, the appeal with regard to ¼th of ½ kanal of land in khata No. 18 is dismissed.

A suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts was valued at Rs. 1,100 and filed in the Court of a Sub-Judge, Second Class. No objection was taken by the defendant to this figure with the result that the parties proceeded to trial and ultimately a preliminary decree was passed. No objection as to valuation or jurisdiction was taken in appeal from the preliminary decree which was dismissed. In the meantime the trial Court appointed a Commissioner for examining the accounts who after examining the accounts submitted a report wherein he arrived at a sum of Rs. 14,369-15-9 which was to be distributed as nett profits between the partners. The case was then transferred to Court of competent jurisdiction which passed the decree. On appeal it was objected that the appointment of the Commissioner was without jurisdiction and consequently the whole of the proceedings including the Commissioner's report should have been discarded :

Held, that inasmuch as no objection was taken to the defect of jurisdiction at an early stage and as it was not suggested that the disposal of the case on merits had been prejudicially affected by wrong valuation, the case was covered by s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act. [p. 621, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Agha Haidar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. A preliminary decree was passed as long ago as the 5th of July, 1920, and the present appeal is from the final decree.

It appears that on the 28th of October, 1916, three persons, namely, Ganga Ram, now represented by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, Fakir Chand, plaintiff No. 3, and Budha Mal, defendant, entered into a partnership for dealing in building materials, etc. The present suit with a valuation of Rs. 1,100 was brought on the 1st of August, 1919, by the plaintiffs, and, as already stated, a preliminary decree was passed which declared the shares of the parties to be one-third each. It was further decided that the partnership included a certain liquor business as well. The suit seems to have been instituted originally in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurdaspur. On the 2nd of August, 1919, the Senior Subordinate Judge made an order to the effect that "the plaint be made over to the Court of Maulvi Barkat Ali, Subordinate Judge." Ultimately the trial of the case was held by Mr. Ram Kanwar, Subordinate Judge, Second Class, who passed the preliminary decree on the 5th of July, 1920. An appeal was lodged by the defendant in the Court of the District Judge against that decree. This appeal was dismissed. In the meantime on the 7th of July, 1920, the learned Subordinate Judge of the Second Class, Mr. Ram Kanwar, made an order appointing Pandit Bishambar Nath, Pleader, as a Commissioner for examining the accounts. On the 3rd of May, 1921, the Commissioner submitted his report wherein he arrived at a sum of Rs. 14,369-15-9 which was to be distributed as nett profits between the three parties.

It appears that on receipt of this report Mr. Ram Kanwar, Subordinate Judge, submitted the case to the District Judge for transfer to the proper Court having jurisdiction, because he considered that he could not grant a decree for a sum which was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. The case was accordingly transferred to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge on the 2nd of June, 1921.

Objections were filed against this report by the defendant Budha Mal on the 25th of August, 1921, in which, among other things, it was urged that the case was not triable by the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge and that all the proceedings taken in the Court of Lala Ram Kanwar were null and void and that the case should be tried de novo. On the 19th of October, 1921, this objection was again repeated under the heading of "preliminary objections" where we find the plea of jurisdiction taken in a more crystallised form. It runs as follows:—

"1. The late Presiding Officer of the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the case. For this reason this case has been made over to this Court.

"2. All the previous proceedings should be taken de novo."

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge overruled these objections by an order, dated the 30th of November, 1921. He ultimately came to the conclusion that the total amount of profits of the partnership amounted to Rs. 15,619-12-9 which was distributable among the parties in certain specified sums according to their respective shares.

The defendant has come up in appeal to this Court, and his learned Counsel has repeated with considerable earnestness the plea of jurisdiction. He also urged that the defendant was entitled to more interest on his outlay. He further pleaded that the total figure arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge should be reduced by a sum of Rs. 6,263-9-6 which, according to the defendant, represented the expenses which had been incurred in the partnership but which had not been taken into account by the Commissioner.

As to the plea of jurisdiction, as already stated, the suit was valued at Rs. 1,100. No objection whatsoever was taken by the defendant to this figure, with the result that the parties proceeded to trial and ultimately a preliminary decree was passed. In appeal against the preliminary decree no such objection was taken. In the course of the argument it was faintly suggested by the learned Counsel for the appellant that, as a result of the Commissioner's report, the preliminary decree had also become a nullity. Ultimately, however, he seems to have dropped the contention and concentrated his attack upon what took place in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, immediately after the preliminary decree was passed. He pleaded that the appointment of the Commissioner was without jurisdiction and consequently the whole of the proceedings, including the Commissioner's report, should be discarded. He relied upon a ruling reported as Radha

Kishen v. Kidar Nath (1). That case, however, is quite different from the present case and does not support the contention of the appellant. In that case a suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif for dissolution of partnership and accounts. The Munsif, in order to ascertain whether the suit was within his pecuniary jurisdiction, issued a commission for the examination of account books. As a result of this commission the Munsif came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The Subordinate Judge, First Class, before whom the case ultimately came for disposal, refused to treat as evidence in the case the proceedings taken by the Munsif with the object of ascertaining whether the subject-matter of the suit was cognizable by him. On these facts the learned Chief Judge held that the findings of the Munsif could not be treated as a finding on the merits. He further held that the proceedings before the Munsif were coram non judice so far as the eventual decision of the liability of the parties was concerned and that under these circumstances the order of the Subordinate Judge was correct. It may be noted that this case purports to follow Prabhakarbhat v. Vishwambhar Pandit (2) a ruling which was delivered at a time when the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887) had not been placed upon the Statute Book. Mr. Moti Sagar, on behalf of the respondents, relied upon s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act and quoted the Full Bench decision reported as Sardar Khan v. Aisha Bibi (3). The provisions of s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act are clear and provide a complete answer to the appellant's contention. As already stated, no objection was taken as regards pecuniary jurisdiction as required by s. 11 (a) of the Suits Valuation Act. And if the argument were open to the appellant that after the passing of the preliminary decree and the receipt of the Commissioner's report such objection was raised, the answer is supplied by s. 11 (b) and (2) of the Suits Valuation Act, for it has not been even suggested that the undervaluation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits. I may quote here the following sentence from the Full Bench judgment reported as Sardar Khan v. Aisha Bibi (3):—

(2) 8 B. 313; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 583 (F. B.).

(3) 88 Ind. Cas. 72; 8 Lah. 105; A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 290 (F. B.).

"The object of the Legislature in both cases is the same, namely, that the defect of jurisdiction on territorial or pecuniary ground should not render proceedings in a case abortive if such objection was not taken at the earliest opportunity and there has been no consequent failure of justice."

I may also refer to Khudajiatul Kubra v. Amina Khatun (4) and the observations at page 125* of the report. The inanity of the objections raised by the defendant would further appear from the fact that the Commissioner, Pandit Bishambar Nath, had been appointed by the Court with the consent of parties and even in the objection (dated the 25th August, 1921) to the Commissioner's report the defendant himself asked for the retention of the Commissioner Pandit Bishambar Nath.

I accordingly overrule the plea of jurisdiction raised by the appellant.

As regards the question of interest, it may be observed that in the objections filed by the defendant on the 25th of August, 1921, no complaint is made that the Commissioner did not allow interest on his outlay to the defendant. In fact on the 29th of April, 1921, the defendant stated that interest should be charged on the amount invested by him from the date of the investment to the 1st of April, 1919. In this report dated the 3rd of May, 1921, pages 53—58, at page 56 of the printed paper book No. II, the Commissioner has allowed interest up to the 1st of April, 1919. This sum comes to Rs. 1,962-8. The Commissioner observes as follows:—

"This interest has been calculated with effect from the date of investment of the money to the 1st April, 1919. Lala Budha Mal demands interest on the items other than those of the khata relating to liquor up to the date when all the goods were delivered to him according to the statements of the parties. But, in my opinion, he is not entitled to any other amount of interest because there is profit in each khata, and he received the amount of money spent by him before the 1st April, 1919. I think Lala Budha Mal has been investing sums of money unnecessarily in this khata of his own accord and he has thus unjustly burdened the shop with interest."

Thus the Commissioner has allowed interest to the defendant up to the date

up to which he asked for it, but he has very properly refused to allow interest for having over financed the partnership business. The learned Judge of the trial Court has accepted the reasons given by the Commissioner as regards the interest which has been allowed and also as regards the interest which has been disallowed, and sufficient ground has not been shown to this Court to take a different view.

Mr. Badri Das, the learned Counsel for the appellant, devoted the best part of his argument to the account given at pages 66 and 67 of the printed paper book No. II. The total of these items comes to Rs. 6,263-9-6, and Mr. Badri Das's grievance is that if this amount had been shown among the items of expenditure the sum ultimately found due from the defendant would have been reduced by that sum. What he wanted was, as he frankly admitted, that the case should be remanded and the accounts overhauled once again, but he has not been able to show that these items, which are detailed at pages 66 and 67 of the printed paper book No. II, have not been included in the Commissioner's account. It may be observed that at pages 122 and 123 of the printed paper book No. I the Commissioner has given an abstract of the account and a note by him is subjoined to the same. He says that comparison was made with the original with the help of the parties and mistakes corrected. Then again, there is a long statement by Lala Budha Mal defendant before the Commissioner which is printed at pages 41—43 of the printed paper book No. II. This statement too, does not contain any reference to the omission of the items mentioned at pages 66 and 67 of the printed paper book No. II. I also find from the Commissioner's report that the parties were present throughout the proceedings and that Lala Budha Mal, the defendant, had every opportunity of correcting mistakes, if any, in the Commissioner's report. As has already been observed, in his objections dated the 25th of August, 1921, Lala Budha Mal in para. 9 does not object to the retention of Pandit Bishambar Nath as a Commissioner. In fact he asked the Court that the said Commissioner may be retained, though he prayed that a new Munim may be appointed. Mr. Badri Das was repeatedly asked to show to the Court from the voluminous accounts which have been printed in the case and also from other account books which, we are informed, were on the record that there has been a serious mistake involving a shortage of Rs. 6,000 odd in the account of expenditure, but beyond his assertion that this sum has not been included in the accounts of the Commissioner the learned Counsel did not go any further. I may also observe that Chanan Mal, on whose evidence reliance has been placed to support the argument that the Commissioner's accounts were wrong, cuts a very sorry figure in the course of his cross examination. After giving the details of the various items which go to make up the total of Rs. 6,263-9-6, in cross-examination this witness states as follows:—

"There is no invoice of any of the above items. I cannot say whether the said items are entered in the roznamcha, kachi rokar and khata of the liquor account or not. Some items are not shown in these bahis, while they are shown in the account filed by the Local Commissioner in the Court..... I cannot also say how much money has been paid to the distillery under these bahis and how much money is credited to it. The whole account is given in the report of Pandit Bishambar Nath, Local Commissioner..... I cannot say without checking the account that such and such item of the distillery khata is included in any other item of the sharab khata or not. I have not come across any of the above items, during the short space of time I have been able to check the account."

All this is not very illuminating and is not calculated to inspire confidence in the account given by him in his examination-in-chief. The plaintiffs repeatedly called upon the defendant Lala Budha Mal to produce his account books and the Court also made an order for the production of those account books, but for reasons best known to himself Lala Budha Mal failed to comply with the order of the Court up to the last moment, vide, the application of the plaintiffs dated the 1st August, 1919, (page 3 of the printed paper book No. II), and the order of the Court dated the 7th of August, 1919, page 5 of the same paper book, and a subsequent order dated the 7th of January, 1920, page 17. Lala Budha Mal in his various statements admitted that the bahis were in his possession. A party who does not assist the Court by placing the relevant books which are admittedly in his possession before the Court, cannot in appeal ask for the indulgence of the Appellate Court so as to have a fresh opportunity of going into the accounts on remand. The learned Subordinate Judge has not relied absolutely upon the report of the Commissioner but has tested the accounts of the Commissioner independently and has come to his own conclusions. There is a slight mistake in his account whereby he has added two items, namely, Rs. 374-8 and Rs. 35 to the profits of the liquor business. As would appear from a reference to page 123 of the printed paper book No. I these items had already been credited and by some oversight the learned Subordinate Judge has shown them again in the total of the profits of the liquor business. Mr. Moti Sagar frankly admitted the mistake which the Subordinate Judge had made. This mistake must be rectified.

The result is that Rs. 374-8 plus Rs. 35- Rs. 409-8 must be deducted from the total profits of the partnership business, i. e., Rs. 15,619-12-9. The resultant sum, i. e., Rs. 15,210-4-9 would be equally divisible between plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, who as the legal representatives of Ganga Ram, the deceased partner, would be entitled to a one-third and plaintiff No. 4 and the defendant would be entitled to one share each out of the remaining two-thirds. Thus the share of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 would be Rs. 5,070-1-7, and plaintiff No. 3 and the defendant would be entitled to the same amount each. But the share due to the plaintiffs would be augmented by the addition of a sum of Rs. 875-14-6 which they had advanced, thus making a total of Rs. 5,946-0-1. It will be payable to plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. A sum of Rs. 100 will have to be deducted from the share of plaintiff No. 3 so that his share would be reduced to Rs. 4,970-4-7 which he would be entitled to recover from the defendant. Thus the total amount due to the plaintiffs would come to Rs. 10,916-1-8.

I would accordingly allow the appeal to the extent stated above and, modifying the decree of the Court below, order that a decree may be prepared granting the plaintiffs their shares as noted above. These sums would be recoverable by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and plaintiff No. 3 from the defendant. As the defendant has succeeded to a very small extent only, I would order that the parties should bear their own costs of this appeal. The plaintiffs, of course, must make good the defiency in Court-fee before they can proceed to execute the decree which they have obtained.

Broadway, J.—I agree in the order proposed.

Partition decree—Execution of decree by defendant, legality of.

A decree for partition is a joint declaration of the rights of all the co-sharers interested in the property of which partition is sought and each co-sharer is entitled to obtain possession of the share allotted to him under the decree by applying for execution of the decree whether he is a plaintiff or defendant.

Wasdeo v. Rupchand (1), followed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 25th March, 1927.

Mr. Kahan Chand, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—No body appears on behalf of the respondents to oppose this miscellaneous appeal. The order of the Court below which is appealed against is contrary to Wasdeo v. Rupchand (1) in which it was held that a decree for partition is a joint declaration of rights of all the co-sharers interested in the property of which partition is sought. Each co-sharer is entitled to obtain possession of the share allotted to him under the decree whether he may be a plaintiff or a defendant. In the present case the appellant was a defendant and a share had been allotted to him. Therefore, he could execute the partition decree.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Court below and direct that the appellant's application for execution be proceeded with according to law.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 77 (3) (d)—Suit by tenant to establish occupancy right—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court.

A suit by a tenant to establish his right of occupancy falls under cl. (d), sub-s. (3) of s. 77, Punjab Tenancy Act, and is cognizable by a Revenue Court.

Petition for revision of the order of the District Judge, Ferozepur, dated the 7th December, 1926, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Fourth Class, Ferozepur, dated the 8th October, 1925.

Mr. J. N. Bhandari, for the Petitioners.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-petitioners claimed to be reversionary heirs of Jiwan Singh and on his death they entered into possession of his occupancy holding, and an Assistant Collector sanctioned mutation in their favour. This order having been set aside by the Collector on appeal, the petitioners instituted a suit for a declaration that they were the lawful heirs of Jiwan Singh and were entitled to succeed to his occupancy holding. The Courts below have concurred in holding that the suit is cognizable by a Revenue Court and not by a Civil Court. This view appears to be correct. The plaintiffs according to their own showing are in possession as tenants and what they want to establish is that they are occupancy tenants. The suit, therefore, falls under cl. (d) of sub-s. (3) of s. 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act and the petition of plaintiffs has been rightly returned to be presented to a Revenue Court.

I, therefore, dismiss this application in revision with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. VI, O. I, r. 8—Representative suit—Suit without leave, but bona fide contested on behalf of community—Decision, whether res judicata in subsequent suit under O. I, r. 8.

Order I, r. 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, does not control Explanation VI to s. 11 of the Code, so as to prevent a suit filed with leave under O. I, r. 8, by two or more members of a community who claim a right in common to them and the other members of the community, and seek to enforce it on behalf of themselves and the community, being res judicata by reason of a decision given after bona fide contest in a previous suit filed without leave under s. 30, Civil Procedure Code, 1877, by some other members of the community claiming the same right and seeking to enforce it on behalf of the community. [Case-law considered.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, dated the 17th of March, 1923, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1920.

The appeal came on for hearing before Kumaraswami Sastri and Devadoss, JJ., and their Lordships made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The plaintiffs are Vaniyars or oil-mongers of Tiruchendur. They sue for a declaration that they are entitled to worship in the Subrahmaniaswami temple at Tiruchendur by going into the inner Mayil Maha Mantapam, to go round all the prakarams in the temple, to place their Kavadies on the koradu in front of the Valliamman shrine, etc., and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the right of worship.

The defendants, who are the dharma-karthas, Stanikars of the temple and the three Vellala inhabitants of Tiruchendur, deny the plaintiffs' right to go into the Mayil Maha Mantapam for the purpose of worship and their right to place Kavadies on the koradu in front of the Valliamman shrine and contend that they and their caste-men are prohibited from going beyond the Irawatha Mantapam or going round any of the prakarams. The Subordinate Judge of Tuticorin has granted the plaintiffs the declaration and injunction prayed for. The defendants prefer this appeal.

The first point urged by the learned Advocate-General for the appellants is that the present suit is barred by reason of the decree in O. S. No. 14 of 1877 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Tuticorin which was confirmed on appeal to the High Court in A. S. No. 73 of 1878. Before considering the appeal on the merits it is necessary to record a finding on the question of res judicata, for, if the suit is barred by reason of the decision in the previous suit, it would not be necessary to try the appeal on the merits. The present suit is by the Vaniyars of Tiruchendur. They have obtained permission under O. I, r. 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, to sue on behalf of all the Vaniya Vysia residents of Tiruchendur. The plaintiffs in O. S. No. 14 of 1877 were four Vaniyars, two of whom father and son were residents of Venkatramapuram and the other two were residents of That-tamadam village, Thenkarai Taluk, Tinnevely District. The plaint as translated in the printed record before us is admittedly incorrect and it has been corrected. In prayer 1 the words "and other Vaniyars" should be added between the words "plaintiffs" and "to worship" and at the end of the paragraph the words "and to establish the right of the plaintiffs and others belonging to the Vaniyar caste." Their allegation in the plaint was that they and all the other Vaniyars had from time immemorial been in the habit of worshipping the deity going as far as the wooden Ali (lattice) placed between Ardhamantapam and Mahamantapam in the temple of Sri Subrahmanya Swami at Tiruchendur and also tying and taking Kavadies and placing them before the Valliamman temple comprised within the compound of Sri Subrahmanya Swami temple, and that on the 8th February, 1876, the 1st plaintiff was taking Kavadi and bowing in worship within the temple of the said Sri Subrahmanya Swami along with the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4, that the defendants Nos. 1 to 7 had pushed the plaintiffs out of the said temple unjustly and forcibly and they prayed that "the Court may be pleased to pass a decree establishing the right due to the plaintiffs to worship the deity going as far as the wooden lattice placed between Ardhmantapam and Mahamantapam in the temple of Sri Subrahmanya Swami and to tie and take Kavadies and place them before the Valliamman temple comprised within the compound of the said temple of god Subrahmanya and to establish the right of the Vaniyars and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from causing obstruction to them and other Vaniyars and for damages for Rs. 5,000 for loss of dignity and mental pain caused to the plaintiffs." The defendants were the Maniyam, Archakar, other servants and the dharma-karthas of the temple. They in their written statement denied the right of the plaintiffs and other Vaniyars to go into the Mahamantapam and averred that from immemorial usage the limit prescribed for their worship was the spot marked "O" in the plan, and that as they had exceeded that limit they were properly sent out of the temple. The Subordinate Judge of Tuticorin after a careful consideration of the evidence dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. They appealed to the High Court in A. S. No. 73 of 1878. Mr. Justice Innes and Mr. Justice Muttuswami Ayyar dismissed the appeal with the remark that "the reasons assigned by the Judge who passed the decree dismissing the plaintiffs' suit are satisfactory to show that plaintiffs have not made out the right they claim."

It is urged by the learned Advocate-General that O. S. No. 14 of 1877 was filed by the plaintiffs to assert the right of all Vaniyars and as it was litigated bona fide, Explanation VI to s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to the case and the present suit which is brought for the same relief as that claimed in that suit is barred by res judicata. The contention of Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar is that there is nothing to show that O. S. No. 14 of 1877 was brought to assert the right of the whole community of Vaniyars, that the provisions of s. 30 were not complied with and that it was a suit for a personal remedy by way of damages and, therefore, the decision in that case cannot bar the present suit. It is urged by the learned Advocate-General that permission need not be express and he relies on Krishna Kumar Deb v. Atul Chandra Ghose (1). He also urges relying on Dhunput Singh v. Paresh Nath

Singh (2) that the Court ought to presume that the rules and forms of pleading were complied with by the Court. No doubt in the case of mandatory provisions of the processual law, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the Court would presume that all rules and legal forms were complied with as the tribunal is presumed not to deviate from the rules and forms laid down for its guidance. But where, as in this case, the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of 1877 are only enabling and not mandatory, such a presumption does not arise. We are satisfied that no permission was applied for orally or in writing and that no permission was granted expressly or impliedly under s. 30 corresponding to O. I. r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, to the plaintiffs to sue on behalf of or for the benefit of all the Vaniyars interested along with the plaintiffs to worship in the Tiruchendur temple as alleged by the plaintiffs for the following reasons:—

(1) There was no provision in the Code of 1859 corresponding to s. 30 of the later Codes:

(2) The provisions of s. 30 were for the first time enacted in the Code of 1877 which came into force on the 1st October 1877, and

(3) It was very unlikely that the Pleaders of Tuticorin would have become familiar with the provisions of the new Code before the 8th November, 1877, the date on which the plaint was filed.

(4) Neither in the plaint nor in the written statement which is found in the printed records of A. S. No. 73 of 1878 nor in the judgment is there any reference to the new provision contained in s. 30 of the Code.

The next question is whether O. S. No. 14 of 1877 was brought in order to establish the right of the whole community and not merely the personal right of the plaintiffs on record. The only materials upon which any conclusion can be arrived at are the plaint, the judgment and the decree. In para. 1 of the plaint it is stated that the plaintiffs belong to the third caste, Vaisyas. In para. 2 the averment is "the plaintiffs and all the other Vaniyars have from time immemorial been in the habit of worshipping the deity" etc. In para. 3 they (meaning the defendants) have also from that date to this day been obstructing the entire community of Vaniyars including the plaintiffs from crossing the outside compound and entering in." In para. 4 it is alleged: "on account of the aforesaid act and obstruction the plaintiffs and other Vaniyars have been lowered in the estimation of the people of other castes of an equal status." In prayer 1 the relief is asked for establishing the right due to the plaintiffs to worship the deity, etc., and to establish the right of the Vaniyars; and in prayer 2 injunction is asked for against the obstruction caused to the plaintiffs and other Vaniyars.

(1) Whether oil mongers commonly known as "Vaniyar" are admitted into the plaintiff temple to worship at the spots A and B?

An attempt was made by the plaintiffs to raise the larger issue whether the plaintiffs were Vaisyas as they hoped by proving that they were Vaisyas they would be entitled to go to the Mahamantapam of the temple for worship. The Subordinate Judge thought it was unnecessary to consider the issue "whether the plaintiffs come under the class of Vaisyar," as he thought that the claim was "based entirely upon immemorial usage" and "the question of caste was not one capable of easy decision among Hindus." The decree simply says that the suit is dismissed. From the pleadings, from the issue, from the way in which evidence was adduced and the number of witnesses examined and the contentions of the parties appearing in the judgment, we have no hesitation in holding that the suit was brought to assert not merely the title of the plaintiffs but also the right of the Vaniyars to enter the Mahamantapam of the temple and the relief asked for was not one personal to the plaintiffs but one which was common to them as well as to all the Vaniyars. The mere addition of a claim for damages does not change the nature or the character of the suit which was one for the establishment of the right of the whole community of which the plaintiffs were members. That the suit was litigated bona fide cannot be disputed. A large number of witnesses were examined; various documents were produced and every attempt was made to prove the case to the hilt. After they were defeated in the Subordinate Judge's Court, the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the High Court where also they sustained a defeat. There is no suggestion, much less proof, that O. S. No. 14 of 1877 was not conducted bona fide by the plaintiffs. The question is whether the decision in that suit bars the present suit. There are a number of decisions on the point and they are not quite reconcilable. We shall deal with cases which support the appellants' contention. In Godimella Rangamma v. Panchangam Narasimha Charyulu (3) it was held that "Explanation VI to s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not confined to cases in which the prior suit was brought with the permission of the Court under O. I. r. 8 thereof. The Explanation does not become inapplicable because the prior suit was for the establishment of the plaintiff's individual right in addition to the right claimed by him in common to himself and others in so far as his claim in respect of the latter right is concerned." In that suit some Agraharamdars brought a suit to eject the defendants from their possession. In a former suit for the same relief, one of the plaintiffs in the later suit was not a party to the earlier suit. It was contended that inasmuch as the plaintiff was not a party to the previous suit, he was not bound by the decision in that suit. Sadasiva Ayyar and Moore, JJ., held that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by the decision in the previous suit. Sadasiva Ayyar, J., after an examination of several cases on the point came to the conclusion that Explanation VI to s. 11 made no reference to O. I. r. 8 and, therefore, O. I. r. 8 cannot control Explanation VI. He observed at page 31*: "The addition of an individual claim to a right of way cannot prevent the decision as to the right claimed on behalf of all the Agraharamdars (which is also the right claimed in the present suit) from being res judicata in the present suit." Moore, J., observed at page 32*: "The joint right which the plaintiff claimed is identical with the relief sought for in the present suit, and he was clearly litigating bona fide in the interests of all the Agraharamdars. I am unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge that Explanation VI to s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code must be treated as confined to cases in which permission to sue in a representative character is obtained under O. I. r. 8, of the Civil Procedure

Code." In Srooman Madabushi Gopalarthi v. Emmāni Subbamma (4) it was held "Explanation V to s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, applies not only to cases where leave of Court has been granted under O. I, r. 8, but also to cases where some of the persons claiming a private right in common with others litigate bona fide on behalf of themselves and such others." Sir John Wallis, C. J., who felt considerably pressed by the argument that Explanation V was enacted at the same time as s. 30 in the Code of 1877 and, therefore, the Explanation is applicable only to cases where the consent of the Court to the institution of the suit had been given under s. 30, observes at page 492*: "The Explanation no doubt applies to such cases, but it is not in terms confined to them. It may be, that if a suit to which s. 30 is applicable were brought without the consent of the Court, the plaintiff could not be considered to be litigating bona fide on behalf of the other persons interested, that is, not only honestly but with due care and attention, or in other cases in which he failed to implead parties who ought to have been joined, but it is in terms wide enough to include accidental slips where no real prejudice has been caused, and we should not in my opinion be justified in refusing to apply it to such cases." He considered almost all the cases on the point and referred to the decision of Sir John Edge, C. J., in Ram Narain v. Bisheshar Prasad (5) as to the care that should be taken in applying the Explanation only to cases which come within its very wording. These two cases were followed by Sir William Ayling and Odgers, J.J., in Chevraya Goundan v. Athappa Goundan (6), wherein they held the fact that the former suit was not instituted with the leave of the Court under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, did not exclude the application of Explanation VI to s. 11. In Veranakot Narayanan Namburi v. Veranakot Narayanan Namburi (7) it was held by Kernan and Forbes, J.J., that Explanation V of s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, is not limited to the case of a suit under s. 30. In that case a decree was obtained against a karnavan of a Malabar tarwad. The suit was brought to set aside the decree. The question for decision was whether the plaintiff, a member of the Malabar tarwad, was bound by the decree against the karnavan of the tarwad declaring that a certain land was not the jenm of the tarwad but was held by the karnam on kanom. The karnavan was the defendant in the previous suit. After referring to the position of the karnavan of the Malabar tarwad and its usages, the learned Judges observed at page 332*: "Explanation V is not limited in its language to a suit under s. 30, which authorises a suit or defence by one or more parties on behalf of numerous other parties having the same interest in a suit. In such suits the parties suing or defending must have permission of the Court to sue or defend, and must in the plaint or defence purport to sue or defend expressly on behalf of himself and the others, and notice is required to be given to those interested who are not parties to the suit." This observation of the learned Judges was relied upon by Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in Godimella Rangamma v. Panchangam Narasimhacharyulu (3). In Madhavan v. Keshavan (8) Kernan and Parker, J.J., observe: "There are no grounds for supposing that the litigation of the Uralars with 5th defendant was not bona fide and, therefore, we think that the matter is res judicata under s. 13, cl. (5) of the Civil Procedure Code." In that case the Uraima right over a certain Devaswam was vested in certain Illams, one Urala representing each Illam. All the Illams except that of plaintiff were represented in the litigation with defendant No. 5 in 1881. The plaintiff in the later suit was not a party to the previous one. The learned Judges held that the plaintiff was bound by the decision in the previous suit inasmuch as the previous suit was in the nature of the assertion of the common right of all the Uralars. We may remark here that Explanation VI of the present Code was Explanation V, and O. I, r. 8, was s. 30, of the previous Code. In Chandu v. Kunhamed (9) the mortgagee of the share of defendant No. 1 in paramba brought a suit for possession of that share. An issue was raised in the previous suit whether the piramba was partible or not and was decided against the present defendant No. 2 who was defendant No. 6 in the previous suit. Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Handley, J., held that the "present defendant No. 1 and the other co-sharers may be said to claim under the plaintiffs in that suit by Explanation V of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure" and, therefore, the decision in the previous suit adverse to the 2nd defendant's title was res judicata and conclusive against him in the present suit.

It is argued by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar that these cases do not touch the point as Godimella Rangamma v. Panchangam Narasimhacharyulu (3) was a case of Agraharamdars and the case in Srooman Madabushi Gopalacharlu v. Emmani Subbamma (4) was also a case of Agraharamdars and to such cases the provisions of s. 30 could not be applied and, therefore, they are not authorities for the contention as to res judicata. His argument is that s. 30 is applicable only to cases where there are numerous parties who cannot all be conveniently brought before the Court, but where parties are not too numerous they should all be made parties to the action as no one is authorised to file a suit or defend one on behalf of another, and, therefore, the provisions of Explanation VI must be confined to cases covered by O. I. r. 8, and also to cases where persons are by law entitled to represent a class or authorised by persons to represent them before the Court. Explanation VI of s. 11 of the present Code is: "Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating." This Explanation is a reproduction of Explanation V of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 with the addition of the words "of a public right." These words were added on account of the enactment of the new s. 91 of the present Code. Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, i. e., where persons bring a suit or defend a right common to themselves and others and the litigation is not merely for the benefit of the persons on record but for all the persons who are interested in that common right, all other persons interested in such right shall be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating.

If s. 30 is to govern this Explanation, the Legislature would not have used the words "deemed to claim under the persons so litigating," for when permission is granted under s. 30 to a few persons to sue or defend on behalf of the whole class, every member of that class is a party to the proceeding. The use of the words "deemed to claim," we think, gives a clue to the meaning of the section where persons sue for themselves as well as on behalf of others; though they may not get the permission of r. 8, yet their litigation is for the benefit of the whole class and when that litigation is conducted bona fide, there is no reason why the decision in that suit should not bind all the persons for whose benefit it was conducted. It has been held in a number of cases that r. 8 is only an enabling provision. It is open to the defendants in a case to bring to the notice of the Court that leave ought to be obtained as was done in Vasudevan v. Sankaran (10). But where the defendants do not object to the suit proceeding without the permission under r. 8, the persons for whose benefit the litigation is conducted cannot in case of failure to succeed turn round and say that they are not bound by it, for, if the common right had been established, they would be the first to claim the benefit of that decision.

We shall now deal with the cases relied on by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar in support of his contention. In Elayachanidathil Kombi Achen v. Kenatumkora Lakshmi Amma (11) it was held that if it was sought to make a decree in a suit binding on a Malabar tarwad, the procedure laid down in s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877, should be followed if the members are numerous. Ianes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ., observe at page 206*: "If a tarwad does not strictly fall within the denomination of a corporation, s. 30, in cases in which the members of the tarwad were numerous, would at all events apply, which, while authorising one of the persons interested to defend by leave of the Court on behalf of all, requires notice of the institution of the suit to be given to all; and a decree in such case, it is presumed, would be a decree against the entire body defending by such person." The question there was whether a decree which was obtained against the karnavan was binding upon the whole tarwad. In Kunnathumillath Vasudevan Nambudri v. Narayanan Nambudri (12), the same question arose whether a decree obtained against the karnavan of a Nayar tarwad or of a Nambudri illam is binding on the family. Innes, J., held differing from Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayana Namburi (7) that "Every member of the tarwad is interested in the joint property and ought to be made a party or have notice under s. 30, so that he may have the option of coming in as a party in any suit, the object of which is to affect the property." Kernan, J., who agreed with Innes, J., does not observe that Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayana Namburi (7) was wrongly decided but explains the decision on the facts. He observes at page 129*: "I fully assent to the proposition that all persons whose interests are sought to be prejudicially affected by a suit should be parties to it. But there are exceptions to that rule when such interests are considered to be sufficiently represented and protected by parties to the suit." In Muringa Mangalath Gopalan Nayar v. Kiyaka Kovilagath Valia Tamburatti (13) Sir Charles Turner, C.J., and Kernan, J., observe that "A practice has prevailed in Malabar whereby the karnavan has been recognised as representing the tarwad and entitled to sue or defend suits as such representative without the association of the other members of the tarwad, who were nevertheless held bound by decrees passed in such suits, unless they showed malā fides in their representative. This practice had its origin in convenience, but now that the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 30, contains a special provision to obviate the inconvenience, where a number of persons in the same interest have occasion to assert or defend their rights by suit, it may be doubted how far the practice would be now upheld, and it is advisable that resort should be had to the provisions of s. 30, Civil Procedure Code." In Ittiachan v. Velappan (14) it was held that "although the property of a tarwad may be attached and sold in execution of a decree when the karnavan is sued as representative of the tarwad, members of the tarwad who are not parties to the proceedings and have not been represented in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure, are not estopped from showing that the debt for which the decree was passed was not binding on the tarwad." The principle of this decision is explained by Muttuswami Ayyar, J., in Sri Devi v. Keli Eradi (15). In another case, Thanakott v. Munippa (16), the decision in a suit in which some ryots of the village claimed the right to use water during the day-time which right was common to themselves and other villagers was held not to bar a subsequent suit for the same relief in assertion of the same right by persons who are not parties to the previous suit. Hutchins, J., held on the facts that in the previous suit, the claim was not on behalf of the others, but it was for damages caused to himself individually, and the suit was not a representative suit under s. 30, nor was it under the law as it existed before the amendment of the Code. Kernan, J., observes at page 499*: "One party having a right in common with others is not at liberty or authorised to sue in his own name to establish the right of the others except by their authority. Explanation V must be read with the provisions of s. 30 and the principles to be found in that section." In Sri Devi v. Keli Eradi (15) it was held that the junior members of the Pathirakat Arikkar tarwad were entitled to recover property of which the tarwad was dispossessed in execution of a decree against the karnavan and a senior Anand-ravan on proof that the decree was not substantially correct. The learned Judges explain at page 83† the grounds of the decision of the Full Bench in Ittiachan v. Velappan (14). They observe: "It was held by the Full Bench that the intention to implead the karnavan as representative of the tarwad must appear from the proceedings in the first suit, and that the debt recognised by the decree must be binding on the entire tarwad." They observed at page 82†: "The decision in Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayanan Namburi (7) is a clear authority for the position that Explanation V of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not limited to the case of a suit in which the provisions of s. 30 were complied with, and we should follow it if subsequent decisions did not throw doubt upon it." The question whether a karnavan could represent the tarwad in a properly framed suit is only one of historic interest as it has been definitely settled by the Full Bench, in Vasudevan v. Sankaran (10). It was held in that case "a decree in a suit in which the karnavan of a Nambudri Illam or a Marumakkatayam tarwad is, in his representative capacity, joined as a defendant and which he honestly defends is binding on the other members of the family not actually made parties." Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar relies upon some of the observations of the learned Judges in the case, but the question turned upon the principle of substantive law whether a karnavan could represent the tarwad so as to bind it. The karnavan of a Nambudri Illam or a Marumakkatayam tarwad could bind the Illam or tarwad when he acts in a representative capacity. Shephard, J., observes at page 139*: "The 30th section is of a permissive character. So far as concerns the principle involved there was nothing new in the provision. It had been acted on before the Code of 1877 came into force [Srikhanti Narayanappa v. Indupuram Ramalingam (17)]*." Subrahmanya Ayyar, J., observes at page 142, after referring to the case of Hindu widows with reference to reversioners and other persons having an estate analogous to that of a Hindu widow, "In the cases last mentioned the limited owners possess the representative capacity to sue or defend by virtue of their position. This, as already shown, is eminently true in the case of a karnavan. Consequently, he does not require the aid of s. 30 to be a representative, but has the inherent right to act as such, provided, of course, there is in the particular case no conflict between his own interest and that of the family." In Srinivasa Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (18) Shephard, J., held that s. 30 was only an enabling provision and a suit was not liable to be dismissed by reason of the failure of the plaintiffs to obtain permission given under s. 30 of the old Code. The omission could be rectified at any stage if objection is taken by the defendants. The above are the cases of the Madras High Court which take a different view from the view in Godimella Rangamma v. Panchangam Narasimha-charyulu (3), Sroomin Madabushi Gopola-charlu v. Emmani Subbamma (4), Chevraya Goundan v. Athappa Goundan (6), Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayana Namburi (7) and Madhavan v. Keshavan (8).

In Muhammad Amir v. Sumitra Kuär (19) it was held by Sir Henry Richards, C. J., and Sir Pramadha Charan Banerji, J., that where a suit had been brought by two persons as members of the public for a declaration that certain property was wagf property, and it had been decided that the property in question was not wagf, the decision operated as res judicata in the case of any other similar suit which might be brought by other members of the public as such claiming a similar declaration. The learned Judges held that the previous litigation was a bona fide one and that the plaintiffs were litigating as members of the public and not in the private capacity. In Baiju Lal Parbatia v. Bilal Lal Pathuk (20) it was held that s. 30 of the Code was an enabling provision and did not debar the plaintiffs from suing in their own right in that case. Ameer Ali, J., at page 389*, observes: "That section (meaning s. 30) is, as has been already pointed out, an enabling section and must be read, it seems to me, in conjunction with Explanation V to s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code." In Shankarlal Purshottam Gor v. Dakor Temple Committee (21) it was held that C. I. r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, is merely an enabling rule and does not prevent a representative suit being brought in any manner that the law permits.

The principle of s. 30 was given effect to before it was enacted. A representative suit could be brought by a few persons in order to obtain a relief common to them as well as a number of other persons. In Srikhanti Narayanappa v. Indupuram Ramalingam (17) it was observed: "Convenience requires that in suits where there is community of interest amongst a large number of persons, a few should be allowed to represent the whole; and if the whole body be represented in the suit, then it is proper that the whole body should be bound by the decree, though some members of the body are not parties named in the record." The learned Judges Bittleson, Ag. C. J., and Ellis, J., after considering the English practice held that the principle of representation should be applied to the members of a Hindu village community. In Anandray Bhikajiphadke v. Shankar Dajicharya (22), West, J., observes at page 328*: "The case of Jenkins v. Robertson (23) is instructive in this respect and indicates that it may be consistent with general principles that certain judicial proceedings taken by, or against, a select number as representing a large class may, if fairly and honestly conducted, bind or benefit the whole class." Before s. 30 was enacted, the practice was in vogue, both in Bombay as well as in Madras, for persons to bring a representative suit to obtain relief in respect of a right common to themselves as well as others and the decision in such a suit was held to bind the persons whom they represented provided the right claimed was litigated bona fide. The terms of the Explanation VI of the present Code which are the same as the terms of the Explanation V of the old Code except for the addition of the words "public right" are so wide as to include cases where the right common to the plaintiffs on record as well as others is litigated bona fide in the interest of the whole class and there is no warrant in any other provisions of the Code to limit it only to cases coming under s. 30 or to cases where persons, either by law or by act of parties, are entitled to represent the others whose names do not appear as parties on the record. It is urged that there is danger in giving a literal interpretation to Explanation VI, for, if a few persons are allowed to sue on behalf of a large community, the community would be bound by the decision in the suit litigated bona fide, though the case might not have been placed in all its aspects owing to the ignorance of the plaintiffs or their inability to secure evidence which would really help them. On the other hand, a right which is common to the members of a numerous community should not be litigated for every infraction by a few persons coming forward each time as plaintiffs and thereby harassing the defendants who are obliged to defend several actions in protecting their rights. It is unnecessary to pursue this speculation any further. As there is a serious conflict of authority on the point, we think a reference ought to be made to the Full Bench of the High Court for a clear decision on the point. We would, therefore, refer the following question to the Full Bench:—

Is Explanation VI to s. 11 controlled by O. I, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code, so as to render a subsequent suit filed with leave under O. I, r. 8, by two or more members of the community who claim a right in common to them and the other members of the community and seek to enforce it on behalf of themselves and the community, res judicata by reason of a decision given after bona fide contest in a previous suit filed without leave under s. 30, Civil Procedure Code, 1877, by some other members of the community claiming the same right and seeking to enforce it on behalf of the community?

This appeal came on for hearing before Sir William Watkins Phillips, Kt., Officiating Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Ramesam and Mr. Justice Beasley on the 7th and 8th of September, 1927, in pursuance of the said Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

The Advocate-General and Mr. K. S. Sankara Ayyar, for Appellant No. 2.

Mr. T. Nallasivam Pillai, for Appellants Nos. 2 to 6 and 8 to 10.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Ayyar, T. L. Venkatarama Ayyar and V. Sambandam Chetti, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 6.

The Court expressed the following

Ramesam, J.—The facts of the case are fully stated in the referring judgment and need not be repeated here. The question referred to the Full Bench is stated as follows:—

"Is Explanation VI to s. 11, controlled by O. I, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code, so as to render a subsequent suit filed with leave under O. I, r. 8, by two or more members of the community who claim a right in common to them and the other members of the community and seek to enforce it on behalf of themselves and the community res judicata by reason of a decision given after bona fide contest in a previous suit filed without leave under s. 30, Civil Procedure Code 1877, by some other members of the community claiming the same right and seeking to enforce it on behalf of the community?"

As was pointed out at the time of the argument by my Lord the Chief Justice, the word "render" in the second line seems to be a slip for "prevent"; the sentence will then run "so as to prevent a subsequent suit . . . on behalf of themselves and the community being res judicata . . ."

The idea is, if O. I. r. 8, does not control Explanation VI to s. 11 and the Explanation has its full effect unhampered by any other consideration, then there is res judicata; if O. I. r. 8, controls Explanation VI, that is, effect is not to be given to Explanation VI on the ground that the procedure in O. I. r. 8, is not followed, then there is no res judicata. The question referred to us is, which of these two alternatives is to be adopted?

It is true that Explanation V to s. 13 in the Code of 1877 corresponding to Explanation VI to s. 11 of the present Code was introduced for the first time along with other Explanations in the Code of 1877 and s. 30 of that Code corresponding to O. I. r. 8, of the present Code was also introduced for the first time in that Code following the enactment of O. XVI, r. 9, in 1873 in the Supreme Court Rules of Practice in England. Prior to the Code of 1877, that is, in the Act of 1859, there is nothing corresponding to s. 30 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 and the section relating to res judicata was a very general section without the Explanations which appear in the Codes of 1877, 1882 and 1903. But this does not mean that the principles of the law of res judicata were changed or underwent an alteration in 1877. In theory the law was always the same and the same principles were always applied; only the expression of that law in the form of a section in the Code as required by Indian conditions underwent alterations as time went on. A representative suit by some persons only on behalf of a large class similarly interested was allowed both in England and India prior to 1877 and if such a suit was bona fide litigated, the judgment in it was held to bind persons not actually parties to the litigation. In Duke of Bedford v. Ellis (24) apply the practice of the Court of Chancery to all divisions of the High Court. The old rule in the Court of Chancery was very simple and perfectly well understood. Under the old practice the Court required the presence of all parties interested in the matter in suit, in order that a final end might be made of the controversy. But when the parties were so numerous that you never could 'come at justice,' to use an expression in one of the older cases, if everybody interested was made a party, the rule was not allowed to stand in the way. It was originally a rule of convenience; for the sake of convenience it was relaxed. Given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit was in order if the relief sought was in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent."

Again at page 10*, he observed, "I doubt whether it is accurate to say that in the case of representative suits we have advanced a long way since the days of Lord Eldon. It is, of course, not necessary now-a-days to go to a Court of Law in order to establish legal rights. But in all other respects I think the rule as to representative suits remains very much as it was a hundred years ago. From the time it was first established it has been recognised as a simple rule resting merely upon convenience. It is impossible, I think, to read such judgments as those delivered by Lord Eldon in Adair v. New River Co (25) and in Cockburn v. Thompson (26) without seeing that Lord Eldon took as broad and liberal a view on this subject as anybody could desire.

Earlier, at page 9*, Lord Macnaghten mentions the case of Chaytor v. Trinity College (27) as one of the earliest applications of the rule. The case in Sewers Commissioners v. Gellatly (28) is a good example (vide Daniel's Chancery Practice, Vol. I, page 175). When, in the year 1866, it was held by the Madras High Court that the decree in a former suit defining the boundary between two villages was binding on the inhabitants of one of the villages in a later suit though they were not parties to the former suit on the ground that the former suit was a representative one [Srikhanti Narayanappa v. Indupuram Ramalingam (17)] they were merely following the well established English practice. The learned Judges observe: "This principle of representation is acted upon in the English Courts of Common Law." They refer to R. v. Inhabitants of Houghton (20) and proceed: "The same principle is recognised by the English Courts of Equity, when they allow suits to be maintained by a few expressly for themselves and others with whom they have a community of interest, as by some inhabitants of a parish for themselves and the rest." Similarly in Anandran Bhikaji Phadke v. Shankar Daji Charya (22); West J. observed at page 328*: "The case of Jenkins v. Robertson (23) is instructive in this respect and indicates that it may be consistent with general principles that certain judicial proceedings taken by, or against, a select number as representing a large class may, if fairly and honestly conducted, bind or benefit the whole class." In the last mentioned case which was from Scotland, though it was held that there was no res judicata on the ground that the former litigation terminated in a compromise, all the Scotch Lords were agreed that but for that fact the former decision would have barred the second suit as res judicata. It appears, therefore, that even prior to 1877 (1873 in England) if there was a properly constituted representative suit and the trial in it proceeded on the footing of representation, the judgment in it may bind in a later litigation persons who were not actually parties to it. The cases falling under Explanation VI after 1877 may be grouped under the following heads:—

1. Where permission has been expressly granted by the Court under s. 30. This is a plain case and it is conceded by both parties that the decision in the earlier suit will bar the later suit as res judicata.

2. Though no permission was sought or was given under s. 30, still some of the parties sue or are being sued in a representative capacity. Where a plaintiff sues in a representative capacity he has authority to so represent other persons not parties to the suit under the general law. Where a defendant is being sued in a representative capacity he has similarly authority under the general law to represent other persons not parties and he is himself willing to conduct the litigation on behalf of such others.

Examples of the second heading easily occur in Hindu Law and Malabar Law. Where the manager of a Hindu joint family sues or is being sued on behalf of the family, where the karnavan of a tarwad sues, or is being sued on behalf of the tarwad, or where a Hindu father sues or is being sued as manager of a sub-branch consisting of himself and his sons, the manager, karnavan or the father, as the case may be, acting in a representative capacity will bind others whom they represent. As to the case of a Malabar tarwad there is a very large number of decisions of this Court which are quoted in the referring judgment. I do not think it is necessary to refer to them in detail. They begin with Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayana Namburi (7) and end with the decision of the Full Bench in Vasudevan v. Sankaran (10) in which the matter was finally set at rest. It is unnecessary to discuss these cases because Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar, the learned Vakil for the respondents, conceded the correctness of the last Full Bench decision. He concedes that s. 30 is not confined to cases where leave is expressly sought for and obtained but will cover cases where under the law a person like the karnavan of a tarwad had authority to represent other persons not parties to the suit.

3. Where the trustees of a temple sue or are being sued, for example, the case in Madhavan v. Keshavan (8), where the litigation by certain Uralers of a Devaswom was held to bind the other Uralers. But Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar distinguishes this case on the ground that in such cases the idol of the temple is the real party in both suits and there is no question of one party representing another. Though he is able to distinguish the case in Madhavan v. Keshavan (8) in this way because it happened to be a case of trustees of a Hindu temple, I doubt whether the said ground of distinction will be available in cases of private trust. In a case where there are a number of trustees (not of a religious institution but) acting on behalf of some cestui que trust under some trust deed and only some of the trustees are sued, I fancy the decision would be the same as in Madhavan v. Keshavan (8). Both the cestui que trust and the other trustees would be bound by a litigation conducted bona fide by some only of the trustees and the distinction suggested by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar will not be applicable in such a case. So far as the cestuis que trustent are concerned it may be said that they claim through the trustees but as to the co-trustees, Explanation VI must be invoked. But apart from the above three categories there may still be a large number of cases which cannot be labelled under a particular heading and in which there may be several persons with similar interest and some only may sue but purporting to sue on behalf of all the others. If in such a case permission of the Court under s. 30 was not sought for by oversight and the Court itself overlooks the necessity for the procedure under s. 30, what is the result of final decree in the case? This is really the point to be decided before us. Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar contends in such a case that the failure to obtain leave under s. 30 is fatal and that the suit cannot be regarded as a representative suit. His contention amounts to this: A suit is representative or not according as leave is given under s. 30 or not in all cases where there is no authority under the general law. I agree with Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar's contention to this extent, namely, that where a person acting in a representative capacity has no authority under the general law, if his litigation is to be a representative one so as to bind others, he must at least get authority from the Court; but this does not necessarily mean that such authority from the Court should be necessarily in the form of an order on a petition filed under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If a suit filed by a plaintiff in a representative capacity was allowed to proceed in that character without objection by the defendant and by the Court and if a general issue is framed so as to put in issue the right of the whole class in whom it is alleged to exist and the evidence adduced is of a general character and the findings, the judgment and the decree are also perfectly general in their nature, I do not see why such a judgment should not bind persons not parties to the suit in spite of the fact that no application was filed under s. 30 and no order passed on it. The object of s. 30 in the Codes of 1877 and 1882 and of O. XVI, r. 9, in the Supreme Court Rules was merely to make more definite some kind of procedure which was previously going on for more than 100 years in England and India. The prior procedure was apparently not regulated by any enactment and was more a matter of practice left to the discretion of the individual Judges. Later on, it took a more definite shape the object being to impose some safeguards and to avoid possible hardships in the working out of the rule of res judicata by reason of representative suits. It was supposed that a special notice to the persons having any right where they are not numerous, or a general notice where they are very numerous, and the provision permitting any of them to be made parties would avoid any possible hardship or injustice arising out of the rule of res judicata by reason of Explanation VI. But if the exact procedure prescribed in the section is not followed though the suit proceeds in a representative capacity, it does not follow that the character of the suit is altered. All that can be said at the most is that there is an irregularity. It is possible sometimes that the irregularity may be serious; and if there is any reason to think that the serious irregularity has led to collusion or fraud or a grossly negligent conduct of the case, then the Court will hold that the litigation was not carried on bona fide and will not hold a later suit barred by res judicata. But when there is no ground to suspect that the irregularity was serious or led to collusion or fraud, or by reason of want of publicity the case was conducted in an improper manner, the irregularity is by itself no ground for holding that Explanation VI is not applicable. The irregularity may be an element in considering the question whether the former litigation was conducted bona fide [see e. g., Kumarandy Kudumban v. Venkatasubramania Iyer (30)]. But in spite of the irregularity, if one comes to the conclusion that the conduct of the litigation was bona fide, the irregularity itself does not matter: in other words, I am of opinion that Explanation VI to s. 11 is not controlled by O. I, r. 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure. I may here observe that it is not correct to say that the power of one person to represent others when there is no authority under the general law is based on their consent as was supposed by Kernan, J., in Thanakoti (30) 101 Ind. Cas. 58; 52 M. L. J. 641; A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 645.

v. Muniappa (18) where he says: "Unless the other plaintiffs were aware of the suit of plaintiff No. 3 and authorised him to make the claim for them, plaintiff No. 3 would have had no authority to claim on their behalf so as to bind them from afterwards bringing their own suit." I think the real basis of the power to represent in such a case is derived from the action of the Court in permitting the action to go on on that basis. The consent of the others need not be obtained, Markt v. Knight Steamship Co. (31). Examples of cases in which similar conclusion was reached are not wanting. In Godimella Rangamma v. Panchangan Narasimhacharyulu (3) Sadasiva Ayyar and Moore, J.J., held that one Agraharamdar was bound by the result of a former litigation in which he was represented by another Agraharamdar and the litigation was conducted bona fide; but no order was obtained under O. I, r. 8 in that case. Res judicata followed because the issue raised a very general question applying to all the Agraharamdars. It might have been prudent for the Court to follow the procedure in O. I, r. 8 in that case. But the fact that they did not follow, did not make it less res judicata. The decision in Srooman Madabushi Gopalacharlu v. Emmami Subbamma (4) was also a case of Agraharamdars. Wallis, C. J., and Spencer, J., held that Explanation VI applies not only to cases to which the procedure in s. 30 applied but also to other cases and it was in terms wide enough to include accidental slips where no real prejudice has been caused. These two cases were sought to be distinguished by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar on the ground that the parties there were not numerous and s. 30 could not in strictness be applied. He also argues that Godimella Rangamma v. Panchangan Narasimhacharyulu (3) was wrongly decided. These two cases were followed in Chevraya Goundan v. Athappa Goundan (6) which was a case of trustees of a temple. In Chandu v. Kunhamed (9) it was held in a suit by a mortgagee of one share, that the decision in a previous suit on a general issue whether the paramba was partible or not bound the other sharers in a later litigation. It is true that this was overruled by a Full Bench in a later case. But the ground was that the other co-sharers who was sought to be bound when asked to join the plaintiff refused to join and when impleaded as a defendant remained ex parte and he was not interested in the decreeing of the prior suit. Several other cases referred to by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar, such as for instance the decisions in Srinivasa Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (18) relying on May v. Newton (32) Walker v. Sur (33), Thedla Ranganayakamma v. Maddi Jagayya (34) and Baiju Lal Parbatia v. Bulak Lal Pathuk (20) are not decisions holding that the absent parties were not bound in the later litigation but either granting leave under s. 30 or refusing to grant such leave. Observations occur in these cases discussing the binding nature of the decree without leave being obtained under s. 30, but they are in the nature of obiter dicta.

In Muhammad Amir v. Sumitra Kuar (19) Richards, C. J., and Banerji, J., held that the decision in a suit by two persons as members of the public for a declaration that certain property was waqf was binding upon the other members of the public claiming a similar declaration. All that we have got to see is whether the former suit was allowed by the Court to proceed to the end as a representative suit and whether the suit was considered by that Court in that way. If this test is satisfied, what procedure was actually followed is not strictly pertinent to the matter.

In the present case the learned Judges who referred the matter in the Full Bench observe: "We are satisfied that no permission was applied for orally or in writing and that no permission was granted expressly or impliedly under s. 30 corresponding to O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, to the plaintiffs to sue on behalf of or for the benefit of all the Vaniyars interested along with the plaintiffs to worship in the Tiruchendur Temple as alleged by the plaintiffs." As I understand this observation, especially the portion of it using the word "impliedly" what the learned Judges meant to say is that no order purporting to be under s. 30, either expressly mentioning the section, or without mentioning it but merely with reference to it, was passed. But lower down the same page they observe: "From the pleadings, from the issue, from the way in which evidence was adduced and the number of witnesses examined and the contentions of the parties appearing in the judgment we have no hesitation in holding that the suit was brought to assert not merely the title of the plaintiffs but also the right of the Vaniyars to enter the Mahamantapam of the temple and the relief asked for was not one personal to the plaintiffs but one which was common to them as well as to all the Vaniyars. The mere addition of a claim for damages does not change the nature or the character of the suit which was one for the establishment of the right of the whole community of which the plaintiffs were members. That the suit was litigated bona fide cannot be disputed. A large number of witnesses were examined; various documents were produced and every attempt was made to prove the case to the hilt." Though no order was passed under s. 30 impliedly or expressly, when we remember that that section was only a section laying down a definite procedure for what was somewhat indefinite prior to 1877 but otherwise really attaining the same object as before, it is still open to the learned Judges to find whether the Subordinate Judge who tried the former suit with reference to the issues, findings, etc., meant to allow the suit to proceed in a representative capacity for the benefit of all Vaniyars. As I think there is no express finding and as it is a question of fact, we have nothing to do with the matter. I only observe that it is open to them to so find if they choose to do so with reference to the pleadings, the issues, judgment and decree.

My answer to the reference is that Explanation VI to s. 11 is not controlled by O. I. r. 8.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17 —Suit for dissolution of partnership—Prayer for amendment of plaint by including business not originally included—Cause of action whether changed.

In an action by a partner for dissolution of partnership if the plaintiff comes to know that there is a business carried on for the partnership in some place of which he was not aware at the time of the filing of the plaint, he is entitled to include a prayer by way of amendment for dissolution of that business also. Such an amendment does not introduce any new cause of action. [p. 638, col. 2; p. 639 col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Devakottah allowing an amendment of the plaint at the instance of the plaintiffs-respondents herein. The plaintiffs and defendants are Nattukottai Chetties and the plaintiffs' suit is for dissolution of partnership and other incidental reliefs. The plaintiffs got leave to amend the plaint more than once and on the third occasion they asked leave to amend the plaint by including a relief as regards a firm at Kolalampur, Straits Settlements. The contention of Mr. Rangachariar for the petitioners, is that the plaintiffs abandoned their claim, if any, in respect of the firm at Kolalampur and they should not now be allowed to include a claim which they deliberately abandoned and secondly, that this amendment introduces a new cause of action which would materially prejudice the defendants in their defence and, therefore, the amendment should not be allowed. The plaintiffs are father and son. The 1st plaintiff is the brother's son of the 1st defendant. The plaintiffs and defendants are a family of Nattukottai Chetties carrying on business in Burma and other places. The plaintiffs ask for dissolution of partnership of the firm in Burma. I suppose by firms they mean the business in Burma and with regard to the business at Kolalampur they state in paras. 9 and 10 of the plaint that monies belonging to the partnership were utilised at Kolalampur and, therefore, they are entitled to be paid back the amount with interest and certain profits. This allegation was, no doubt, repeated in paras. 9 and 10 which were reproduced in the two amended plaints filed by the plaintiffs. In March, 1927, they applied for leave to amend their plaint by including a relief with regard to the firm at Kolalampur and this amendment the learned Temporary Subordinate Judge allowed. Now the question is whether the plaintiffs abandoned their claim to relief, if any, in respect of the Kolalampur firm. As I read paras. 9 and 10 of the plaint, I cannot find any words in them to show that they abandoned any claim which they had. What they stated in para. 9 of the plaint was "The plaintiffs have no concern or share in the Kolalampur firm referred to in the said reply notice. The plaintiffs believe that defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 have set up that firm without the permission of and without any reference to either the 1st plaintiff or anyone else acting for the 1st plaintiff." If the plaintiffs did intentionally or knowingly abandon their claim or any portion of it, no doubt it will not be proper for the Court to allow that claim to be brought into the action very lightly but where the plaintiffs did not give up their claim but only stated that they had no concern with the partnership at Kolalampur, it cannot be said that they gave up anything which they had. The matter is rendered simple by the fact that the 1st defendant himself in his notice sent so far back as 8th September, 1924, stated that the Kolalampur business was a part of the business of the family of which the plaintiffs were members. No doubt the 1st plaintiff repudiated his share in the partnership by a notice dated 19th November, 1924. He did not give up his right. What he said was that it was not a partnership business belonging to the family, but owing to reasons which it is unnecessary for me to detail, he has now chosen to include a relief in respect of that firm. The question is whether the learned Judge has acted without jurisdiction in granting the prayer for amendment or acted with material irregularity in granting it. I cannot find either of them in the order made by the learned Judge. Issues have not been settled in the case and the case is only in its early stages. That being so, it cannot be said that the defendant would be prejudiced by granting the amendment prayed for. It would be so at a stage when the case is closed or a good deal of evidence on both sides has been adduced. What the defendants contend is that they have by virtue of the notice dated the 19th November, 1924, taken into partnership certain persons and a dissolution of partnership that is being carried on at Kolalampur would materially affect the interests of those partners and, therefore, the amendment should not have been allowed. But this is a matter which will have to be tried in the course of the suit. At present the Court is not in a position to say whether any persons were taken into the partnership subsequent to November, 1924, or what arrangements were made with regard to the partnership assets before that date. That being so, it is unnecessary to speculate as to what has or has not been done subsequent to November, 1924. Mr. Rangachariar relies upon Subramania Iyer v. Hitchcock (1) in support of his contention that this granting of this amendment was without jurisdiction. The observations of the learned Judges in Subramania Iyer v. Hitchcock (1) do not in any way affect the merits of the case. Each case would depend upon its circumstances and in an action for dissolution of partnership if the plaintiff comes to know that there is a business carried on in some place of which he was not aware at the time of the filing of the plaint, he is certainly entitled to include a prayer for dissolution of that business. The 1st plaintiff is a young man of 24 years of age and he was not personally aware of what actually went on at Kolalampur. The decision in Lowther v. Heaver (2) has no application to the present case. In that case the defendant was personally aware of the re-roofing of the building in his possession and he did not choose to put forward the plea with regard to re-roofing and the learned Judge, if I may say with respect, very properly disallowed the prayer for amendment of the pleading by an inclusion of a plea on the ground of re-roofing. In this case it cannot be said that the 1st plaintiff had any personal knowledge of what was going on at Kolalampur and, therefore, that case cannot apply to the facts of the present case.

The amendment introduces no new cause of action. The cause of action is the same and the only question is what are the businesses that belong to this partnership and if the Kolalampur business is one of the businesses belonging to the partnership, the plaintiffs are entitled to have that business also taken into account when a dissolution is ordered. If it does not belong to the partnership, the plaintiffs will not have any relief with regard to it. The powers of the Court under O. VI. r. 17 are wide. No doubt the amendment should be confined to matters which may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties, what are the real questions in controversy between the parties here? The main question is what are the partnership assets? and for determining that, all the business of the partnership will have to be taken into account. I hold that the learned Subordinate Judge did not act with material irregularity in granting the amendment prayed for. The civil revision petition is dismissed with costs. The stay petition is also dismissed with costs.

An order of a Single Judge on the Original Side of the High Court referring back a report of the Official Referee in a pending suit for further consideration is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and is, therefore, not appealable. [p. 640, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, Offg. C. J.—A preliminary objection is taken to this appeal that no appeal lies because the order appealed against is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. This question was considered by a Full Bench in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1) and it was there laid down that the test to be applied in deciding whether an order is or is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 is as follows:—

"If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the nature of the application on which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause."

The present order is an order referring back a report of the Official Referee for further consideration and it is contended that the report of an Official Referee is a final order determining the rights of the parties. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar, however, had to concede that a Judge is not precluded from varying or discharging such report and that it cannot take effect until it has received his imprimatur. It was then argued that the Judge could only alter the report if objection were taken in the manner prescribed by the rules of this Court. Rule 12 of O. XXIII distinctly lays down that at the hearing upon a report, the Court may at once proceed to give judgment in the case or may make such order as it thinks fit. There is nothing in this rule which would imply that the Court can only hear this report when objection has been taken to it; it stands to reason that when the report is submitted, the Court is bound to hear it and to decide whether it shall act in accordance therewith or not, whether the parties file objections or not. Until, therefore, such decision has been arrived at, the report cannot be deemed a final order, for it only receives authoritative power by the order of the Court.

The only other argument adduced was with reference to the case in Howard v. Wilson (2) which is referred to by Sir Arnold White, C. J., in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1) expressing his agreement therewith. That decision related to an order refusing to confirm an award. It has since then been dissented from both in Calcutta and in this Court; but, even apart from that, an award can hardly be said to stand in the same position as the report of an Official Referee. An award is an adjudication by arbitrators who have the power of giving a quasi-judicial decision. The Official Referee has no such power and consequently his report stands on a very much lower footing than an award. In the present case undoubtedly the order of the learned Judge, does not put an end to the suit before him, for it will have to come up again on a fresh report from the Official Referee. He will then proceed to deal with it and pass final orders. No such final order having been passed, this appeal does not lie and must be dismissed with costs.

Reilly, J.—Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar has tried to persuade us that the combined effect of r. 1 of O. XXIV and rr. 11, 12 and 13 of O. XXIII of the Original Side Rules is that, when the Official Referee submits his report in any matter, if no objection is raised by any party, the Judge is bound to accept the report, even though there is in it the most glaring mistake or omission which jumps to the eye at the first glance. The rules themselves do not say explicitly that the Judge must accept the Official Referee's report in such circumstances, and I find it very difficult to believe that, if it had been the intention so to tie the Judge's hands, it would not have been stated in the clearest and plainest manner. To my mind there is no such implication in the rules, and, if there were, if through some oversight the Court had by implication put itself in the power of one of its subordinate bound hand and foot, then I think it would be a matter calling for immediate amendment.

But let us suppose that the Official Referee has submitted a report in a suit and the Judge has accepted it either on consideration or, as Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar has suggested, on compulsion. What is the result? Under r. 13 of O. XXIII the report will then be conclusive evidence of the facts stated in it. But evidence, even the most conclusive evidence which governs the result of a suit is not a judgment. If the Judge accepts the report, he accepts the evidence, and he then has to apply it to the issue between the parties and pronounce judgment. If he does not accept the report but refers the matter back to the Official Referee, that is, he declines to pass judgment at that stage and postpones it to a future date, how can we say that he has pronounced judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent as interpreted by the Full Bench in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1). We might almost as reasonably say that an order of adjournment is a judgment within the meaning of that clause.

I agree that this appeal is incompetent and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, Offg. C. J.—The finding of the lower Court which has been especially attacked in this appeal is a finding that the defendant (appellant) mingled his earnings as Vakil with the income from the admitted joint family property and thereby must be deemed to have thrown his self-acquisition into the common fund. Admittedly there was an income of at least Rs. 280 from the joint family property and this came into the defendant's hands on the death of his brother who was the husband of the first plaintiff. The main contention raised in appeal is that this income from the joint family property was insufficient for the mere maintenance of the defendant, his wife, his mother and four children and that, therefore, he utilised other monies to provide such maintenance and it is argued that there can be no inference from that fact that he intended to make these other monies, or rather his self-acquisition joint family property. This contention has been specifically negated by the Privy Council in Rajanikanta Pal v. Jagamohan Pal (1), where they say, "Indeed, the fact urged on behalf of the respondents that the joint family expenses exceeded all the property which, according to their contentions, was properly joint, in their Lordships' opinion tells against the respondents instead of in their favour." That remark is equally applicable to the facts of the present case. It is contended that beyond the amount of money taken from the defendant's self-acquisition and spent on the joint family there is no inference that the rest of the self-acquisition was similarly treated. This is quite a possible state of affairs and it was open to the defendant to prove it by showing that he did not treat his two sources of income as one and that he treated his self-acquisition as a separate fund and the income from the family property as another separate fund. This he evidently did not do and he has not produced any accounts to show how he has dealt with the two funds in his hands. He says that he keeps no private accounts, but he must keep an account for his profession and even that might have been of some assistance in determining the manner in which the monies have been appropriated. He has admittedly mingled a portion of the one fund with the other thereby raising a presumption that he has treated the whole of that sum as joint family property, and that presumption must be carried further, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the two funds which have been mingled were treated as bearing one characteristic, namely, that of joint family property. Many cases have been cited by the appellant, but they all embody the same principle that, where two separate funds are mixed, one being joint family property and the other separate property, the mingling makes them both joint family property. The facts of those cases are, no doubt, quite different from what we have before us, but the principle is the same all through. The lower Court's finding on this point must, therefore, be accepted.

The next question that is raised is in regard to arrears of maintenance. The first plaintiff has claimed just over eight years' arrears of maintenance. She is legally entitled to do so, and in fact, Courts will not disallow the claim, unless abandonment or waiver is expressed or can be implied from the circumstances of the case. There is no plea in the present case that there has been abandonment and although it is curious that the first plaintiff should have kept quiet for so many years without suing for her maintenance, we have the evidence of P. W. No. 11 who is an uncle of the defendant that demands had been made from 1914 onwards but to avoid unpleasantness in the family no suit was filed. Finally the second plaintiff attained an age when she was about to be married and for this purpose the first plaintiff had not sufficient funds and has now come forward not only for her maintenance but also for an allowance for the marriage expenses. That is a very plausible explanation for her not suing earlier, and no waiver of her claim can be inferred from her conduct.

As regards the amount awarded, the Subordinate Judge has taken into consideration the first defendant's annual income, which he calculates at Rs. 1,000, excluding what he earns professionally and has fixed a maintenance of Rs. 30 per mensem for the mother and the daughter. Against this he has set the amount which the first plaintiff has been receiving as interest on an investment of Rs. 4,000. This sum of Rs. 4,000 is made up of Rs. 2,870 the price of the jewels which formed her stridhanam property, and Rs. 1,700 her husband's provident fund money which he had evidently kept separate from the joint family estate. In making this deduction he has been decidedly generous to the defendant, and there is no reason to reduce the amount decreed for arrears.

As regards the future maintenance the amount of Rs. 15 allotted to the first plaintiff, the second plaintiff now being married, there is no dispute.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Relly, J.—I agree with Mr. Narasimhachari's contention that the self-acquired property of a member of a Hindu joint family can only become property of the joint family by his volition and intention. The main question that has been argued before us is whether we can infer from the evidence that the defendant has intentionally made the accumulations of his earnings as a Vakil form part of the joint family property. The defendant became the manager of his joint family in 1914 on the death of his undivided brother. It appears that besides himself at that time there was only one other coparcener, his infant son; but he had also to support from the joint family funds his mother and his brother's widow and daughter, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It also appears that there was no joint family house: the defendant from 1924 onwards has been living in Cuddappah with his mother, the son who was alive in 1914 and his subsequently born sons and a daughter. It appears that the income from the joint family property was about Rs. 280 a year. Mr. Narasimhachari has pressed strongly upon us that that is an amount obviously insufficient for the maintenance of the defendant and the members of his family whom he was maintaining at Cuddappah, so that the defendant had to use for their support not only the joint family funds in his hands but also a considerable part of his own self-acquired earnings. That statement of Mr. Narasimhachari is in effect very much against his client's case. If the defendant, being the manager of the family and having joint family funds in his hands, spent on the maintenance of the family not only the joint family funds but also a considerable part of his self-acquired property, the reasonable inference is that he meant to treat that part of his self-acquired property as joint family property. As my Lord has pointed out, that test has been mentioned by the Privy Council in Rajanikanta Pal v. Jagamohan Pal (1). But Mr. Narasimhachari has suggested that, even if this additional sum used from the defendant's earning for the support of the joint family must be treated as joint family property, still the accumulations and the remainder of his earnings are not affected by that. While it is possible that the defendant might have made a part of his separate earnings joint family property and kept the rest for himself, in this particular case he does not appear to have made any distinction between two parts of his self-acquired property as according to his own story he has kept no accounts. Now the defendant is a Vakil and he must be aware of the importance of accounts in a case like this as showing whether the manager has kept his earnings separate or has made them joint family property. If he really has kept no accounts, that is a very strong piece of evidence against him. It is not at all unnatural or unreasonable that the defendant, with few members of the joint family to provide for, should have been content to make his self-acquisitions joint family property. The only thing which would make that a little unlikely in this case is that, if he did so, his sister-in-law, plaintiff No. 1, with whom he had a quarrel, would be gaining an interest in the enlarged joint family property to the extent to which it might affect the maintenance which she might get. But it is a part of the defendant's case that in 1914 he entered into a settlement with plaintiff No. 1, by which he supposed that he had finally bought off her claims. If that were so, there would be nothing unnatural in making his self-acquired property joint family property for the benefit of his sons, though it has turned out that plaintiff No. 1 gets some benefit also in this way.

I agree with the judgment pronounced by my Lord in other respects and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

proviso—Ryotwari tenant—Use of water flowing from legitimate source on account of breach caused by natural causes—Ryotwari tenant, whether liable to pay water cess.

A ryotwari tenant in possession of mamool wet is not liable to pay penal assessment in respect of water which has flowed into his land from a legitimate source through breach caused by natural sources. The question whether the ryot had any benefit from the flow of such water or whether the water caused him any damage is quite immaterial. [p. 645, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 209 of 1923, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Ellore, in O. S. No. 582 of 1922.

Mr. P. V. Rangaram, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, Messrs. B. Satyanarayana and V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is a registered pittadar of some lands. She brought a suit against the first defendant, the Secretary of State for India in Council, for the recovery of a sum of money collected from her as penal assessment for unauthorised irrigation of her fields with water from a Government channel. The District Munsif gave a decree in her favour; but the Subordinate Judge dismissed her suit on the ground that the water which flowed through a breach aided in the cultivation of her lands. The facts found are that there was a breach in the channel which supplies water to the appellant's fields. That was closed and a few days after its closure it was again breached owing, it is alleged, to cattle passing and re-passing on the portion of the bund newly put up and the water that flowed through the breach passed on the appellant's fields. The Subordinate Judge holds the appellant liable to the levy of penal water cess as her lands were benefited by the water which flowed through the breach. His finding on this point is in the following terms:

"It cannot be said that the cultivation of the lands in question was not aided by the Government water which flowed through the breach for 3 or 4 days into them and that ploughing was not facilitated by the said water. Hence I am of opinion that the water which flowed through the breach into the lands in possession of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 aided in the cultivation of the said lands."

The question is whether on this finding a ryotwari tenant in possession of what is known as mamool wet is liable to pay penal assessment in respect of water which flowed into his land without his doing anything to let the water into it. The channel in which the breach occurred is admittedly the channel which supplies water to the appellant's fields for irrigation. The contention of the first defendant is that the pipe through which water flows from the channel into the appellant's fields was closed for a time by the Revenue Authorities and, therefore, the appellant was not entitled to get water during that time from the channel and the use of the water flowing through a breach was not water to which the appellant was entitled and, therefore, the Revenue Authorities are entitled to levy penal assessment. Does the case of the appellant come within the proviso to s. 1 of the Irrigation Cess Act VII of 1865. The proviso is in the following terms:—

"Provided also that no cess shall be leviable under this Act in respect of land held under ryotwari settlement which is classified and assessed as wet; unless the same be irrigated by using without due authority water from any source hereinbefore mentioned and such source is different from or in addition to that which has been assigned by the Revenue Authorities or adjudged by a competent Civil Court as the source of irrigation."

Under this proviso in order to make a ryotwari tenant in possession of land classified and assessed as wet liable, he should irrigate without authority water from any source mentioned in the preceding clause of s. 1, and such a source should be different from or in addition to that which has been assigned by the Revenue Authorities or adjudged by a competent Civil Court as a source of irrigation to such a land. If water flows from the source which is the source of water for the irrigation of his land, he cannot be held liable to pay penal water rate. If he takes water or uses water from a source which is not assigned by the Revenue Authorities or adjudged by a competent Civil Court as a source of irrigation to his land then he may be liable for penal assessment. But where he uses water from a source which is the legitimate source of irrigation for his land, then he would not be liable for penal assessment unless he takes water at a time when he is not permitted to take water or when he is not entitled to take the same. When water flows from the legitimate source of irrigation without any act or illegal omission on his part can he be liable? In this case the water flowing from the breach flowed over the fields situated between the breach and his lands and after flooding them, the water seems to have overflowed the ridges of his neighbour's lands or percolated through them. The water flowed through the breach only for 3 or 4 days. Whether he had any benefit from the flow of such water or whether the water caused any damage to him by preventing the field from drying up during the period during which it should be allowed to dry up is not a necessary question for considering whether the appellant is liable to penal assessment or not. Where water standing in a neighbour's field overflows the ridges of that field and flows into another man's land, the latter cannot be held liable for penal assessment for he could not have prevented the overflow. No doubt if he actively aids or does something to let water into his field at a time when he is not entitled to that water, he may be said with some show of reason that he has taken water unauthorisedly. But in this case it is quite clear that the water which flowed through the breach first filled the neighbouring fields and then entered the appellant's field.

The learned Government Pleader has admitted that water of the channel flows through a pipe inserted in the bund to the fields belonging to the appellant and his neighbours. It follows that the channel is the legitimate source of irrigation to the appellant's fields. It appears that water flowing through a breach not caused by him or at his instance filled his neighbour's fields, then overflowed their ridges and finally flowed into the appellant's fields. On these facts it is not possible to hold that the appellant is liable to pay penal assessment. The proviso clearly says that no cess shall be leviable in respect of mamool wet unless the land is irrigated without due authority from a source different from that to which he is entitled. A person cannot be said to irrigate his fields if water collected in his neighbour's fields overflowed the ridges and then filled his lands. There may be cases where water flowing in such manner might flow for a long time and thereby enable one to cultivate his field at a time when he is not entitled to water but the flow of water for a short time, say for a day or two through a breach or sluice which is closed but which gives way owing to natural causes cannot make a ryotwari tenant in possession of land classified and assessed as wet liable to pay penal assessment. The learned Government Pleader relies upon Secretary of State for India v. Swami Naitheswarar (1), for his contention that if water flows into a man's fields even without his volition or anything being done on his part to get water he is liable to pay water cess to Government. The facts of that case are distinguishable from those of the present. That was a case of inam lands. The inamdār was not entitled to the use of water. He did make use of the water which flowed into his lands and raised crops. It was held that he was liable to pay water cess. If a person who is not entitled to water from a Government source gets water owing to a breach or owing to overflowing of the water bunds and raises crops with the help of such water, or uses the water which comes into his lands to which he is not entitled and raises crops, then he would, no doubt, be liable to pay water rate to Government. But the case of a ryotwari tenant in possession of lands classified and assessed as wet is different. The case in Kopalli Krishna Row Garu v. Collector of Krishna (2) is also distinguishable from the present. In that case the plaintiffs irrigated from two pipes instead of one which was the authorised source of irrigation. Though there was nothing to show that the second pipe was inserted at their instance, it was held that they were liable to pay water rate. There the finding was that the water from the second pipe to which they were not entitled was used for irrigation and as they were not entitled to the use of water from the second pipe. It is upon that finding that a Bench of this Court held that they were liable to pay water rate.

The expression "unless the same be irrigated by using water" must be given its proper meaning. A person cannot be said to irrigate his land if for a few hours water overflows his neighbour's fields and then falls into his lands. Supposing the Revenue Authorities closed a certain sluice which is the source of irrigation to a man's land and owing to natural causes, the sluice gave way and for a day or two water flowed into his land without any act on his part, he cannot be said to irrigate his lands by using water without due authority. In order to bring the ryotwari tenant in possession of lands classified as wet within the meaning of the section, he must do something in order to let water into his lands or must raise or attempt to raise a crop with the help of the water from a source to which he is not entitled or at a time when he is not entitled to get water from his legitimate source. What seems to have happened in this case is that the Revenue Authorities not being able to fix the blame upon any one in particular with regard to the breach of the channel thought it best to assess everyone into whose fields the water from the breach flowed. On the facts of this case, I have no hesitation in holding that the 1st respondent is not entitled to levy penal water rate from the appellant. I, therefore, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the Court below, to be paid by the 1st defendant.

Where nothing more appears than that one of several co-obligors has made a payment, or an acknowledgment of liability, such payment or acknowledgment will not save limitation against the other obligors of the debt. Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. Rajagopalachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant is the applicant. The suit was brought upon an oral agreement entered into between the parties on or about the 18th May, 1925, by which the defendant agreed to pay Rs. 55 to the plaintiff in satisfaction of his liability to the plaintiff under a promissory note which had been executed in plaintiff's favour by the defendant and some others jointly on the 31st July, 1915, for Rs. 300. The plaintiff's case is that the executants of the promissory note including the defendant made several payments towards the amount due on the note and after giving credit for such payments there remained some balance due to the plaintiff and that four of the executants of the note agreed each to pay a certain amount to the plaintiff severally in discharge of their joint debt and that in accordance with such arrangement the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff Rs. 55 the suit amount. The defendant in his pleadings denied the oral agreement as true. He contended also that, even if proved, it was invalid under s. 25 of the Indian Contract Act as the debt due under the prior promissory note was barred by limitation and, therefore, the agreement by the defendant to pay a barred debt will be valid only if it is in writing. The learned District Munsif found the oral agreement as true. He also found that the defendant's liability under the prior promissory note, Ex. A, was not barred by limitation and upon this finding he gave a decree for the plaintiff for the amount claimed. In this petition both the findings are contested by the defendant. As regards the factum of the agreement it is a question of fact and the finding of the District Munsif cannot be questioned in this petition. The only point which is pressed on his behalf is that so far as the defendant is concerned the prior promissory note had become barred by limitation and that, therefore, the oral agreement which is sued on is not enforceable having regard to s. 25 of the Contract Act. The prior promissory note is Ex. A, dated the 31st July, 1915. It was executed by six persons of whom the defendant is one, being the second executant of the promissory note. There are three endorsements of part-payment made on the promissory note. The first is dated 12th June, 1916, and it evidences a payment of Rs. 250. That payment was by Ramaswami Dikshitar the first of the executants. The second endorsement is dated the 11th June, 1919, for the payment of Rs. 2 and it is signed by another executant Venkataramana Ayyar. The third endorsement which is dated the 24th May, 1922, was for a payment of Rs. 5 towards interest and it was signed by the defendant and three others. It will be seen that each of the successive endorsements was made within the period of limitation prescribed for a suit on the note and that the oral agreement on which the present suit is brought was made within three years from the date of the last endorsement on the note. The contention which is urged on behalf of the defendant is that the prior endorsements made on the note (A-1 and A-2) which were not made by the defendant but by some of his co-obligors cannot operate as against him to save the promissory note from the bar of limitation either under s. 19 or s. 20 of the Limitation Act, and his own endorsement of payment of interest having been made long after the period of limitation for a suit on the note had expired, does not fulfil the requirements of those sections and cannot, therefore, save limitation as against him. The District Munsif overruled that plea and, in my opinion, he was right in doing so. Under ss. 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act, part-payment or acknowledgment of a debt must, in order to save the debt from limitation, be made by the person liable to pay the debt or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf. Section 21 further provides that nothing in ss. 19 and 20 shall render one of several joint contractors chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed or of a payment made by or the agent of, any other or others of them. Where nothing more appears than that one of several co-obligors has made a payment, or an acknowledgment of liability, such payment or acknowledgment will not save limitation against the other obligors of the debt. It has to be shown that he made such payment or acknowledgment not only on behalf of himself but also as the duly authorised agent of his co-obligors. Such authority, however, need not be express; it may be inferred from the conduct of several co-obligors. In this case there were three successive endorsements. The second endorsement A-2 was made more than three years after the date of the pro-note and at a time when in the absence of authority on the part of the co-obligor who made the first payment the suit as against the rest would be barred. It must be held that the person who made a second endorsement did by his conduct ratify the prior payment of Rs. 250 which had already been made and the payment of which was endorsed on the pro-note on the 12th June, 1916. So also when the third endorsement was made on 24th May, 1922, by the four executants including the defendant the only reasonable inference to be drawn from their conduct is that they held themselves as still bound under the promissory note by reason of the two prior endorsements evidencing part-payments which had already been made to the plaintiff therefor. Of the four persons who have signed the endorsement A-3, Ramaswami Dikshitar had made the first payment which was endorsed on the 12th June, 1916, and another, namely, Venkataramana Ayyar made the second payment which was endorsed on the 11th June, 1919, and the defendant and another for the first time signed in the last endorsement A-3 which purports to be for payment of interest. On these facts it must be held that the defendant and the other co-obligor who for the first time made a payment for interest and signed the endorsement A-3 adopted the previous payments as made on their behalf also; the persons who made those payments and endorsed them on the note must be held, therefore, to have been duly authorised in that behalf by the defendant for the purposes of ss. 19 and 20. In a similar case it was so held by Hannay, J., see Annimalai Pattar v. Natesa Iyer (1). I am, therefore, of opinion that as against the defendant the promissory note, Ex. A, was not barred at the date of the oral agreement on which the suit is brought. It follows, therefore, that the oral agreement is not void under s. 25 of the Indian Contract Act.

The applicant wants to raise a new ground, namely, that the oral agreement sued on cannot be set up as it amounts to a variation of the written contract embodied in Ex. A and as proof of such agreement effected only orally is barred under s. 91 of the Evidence Act. This point was not raised either in the lower Court or even in the grounds of the application and it is raised for the first time now. The plaintiff's case is that the joint and several liability of the executants under the promissory note for the balance due on it was split up with the consent of all parties into a several liability on the part of each of the executants to the plaintiff. I do not see how this arrangement is obnoxious to s. 91 of the Evidence Act. Further I am not prepared even if the point is arguable to allow the plaintiff to raise such a technical plea for the first time at this stage of the case. The application is dismissed with costs.

Practice—Dispute in Appellate Court as to what took place in trial Court—Contradictory affidavits by Pleaders on both sides filed long after event—Procedure.

Where a dispute arises before an Appellate Court, as to what took place in the trial Court in respect of a certain matter and there is a direct contradiction between the affidavits of the Pleaders on opposite sides, and the affidavits are filed after a long time has elapsed, the proper procedure to adopt would be to rely upon the note of the Judge made at the time and presume that it correctly represents what took place. [p. 649, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Salem, dated the 27th September, 1926, and passed in A. S. No. 201 of 1925, (A. S. No. 352 of 1925 on the file of the District Court, Salem), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional Munsif, Salem, in O. S. No. 422 of 1924.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of remand. The suit was filed for an injunction and other reliefs. When the case came on before the District Munsif, the parties agreed to abide by the oath of the plaintiff and the question is what the nature of that agreement was. The note of the District Munsif is as follows (page 5): "25th August, 1925. On the application of both the parties the suit is advanced to 31st August, 1925. Defendants' Vakil challenges the plaintiff to take plain oath in open Court that the allegations in the plaint are true and the allegations in the written statement are not true. Plaintiff's Vakil accepts the challenge and says that the plaintiff will take oath on 31st August, 1925. Suit adjourned to 31st August 1925." We find in the diary the following entry as to what took place, "Defendants' Vakil challenges plaintiff to take oath. Plaintiff took oath. Decreed for plaintiff."

An appeal was filed by defendants on the ground that what was agreed to was not the order as referred to in the Judge's note but that each allegation in the plaint and each allegation in the written statement were to be put to the plaintiff and that he should affirm on oath that his allegations are true and the allegations of the defendants are false. It is also contended in the affidavits filed in the Appellate Court that the case was adjourned for the defendants' Pleader to formulate questions and that the oath was to be taken in respect of each question so formulated. The plaintiff's Vakil filed an affidavit denying any such agreement and stating that what took place was what was agreed to and what took place in Court is evidenced by the Judge's note. We may point out that although the defendants were present when the oath was administered, there is nothing on record to show that they took any objection; they filed no affidavit in the Munsif's Court, stating what took place was not what they agreed to and asking for a re-consideration of the view and even in the Appellate Court they file no affidavit as to what took place then. It is the Vakil who states that the defendants came to him afterwards and represented that in spite of their objections the oath was taken by the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge had before him the note of the Judge and the proceedings in Court and the affidavits filed by the Pleaders on each side, the Pleader for the plaintiff contradicting the allegations made by Pleader for the defendants. We also find that these affidavits were put in more than a year after the disposal of the suit in Court. Having regard to these facts, the question is whether the Subordinate Judge was justified in accepting the affidavit of the Vakil for the plaintiff, and in reversing and remanding the suit for disposal on the merits. We think that in cases like this where there is a direct contradiction between the affidavits of the two Pleaders and where the affidavits are filed after a long time has elapsed, the proper thing to do would be to rely upon the note the Judge made at the time and presume that what took place in the presence of the Judge who must have been aware of the facts and the nature of the agreement was what was agreed to between the parties. The Judge had no interest or motive in supporting the allegations of one side or the other and we must presume he acted properly in administering the oath in accordance with what the parties agreed to. We are unable to uphold the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

It is argued by the respondents that even in the Subordinate Court the defendants agreed to abide by the oath which the plaintiff would take if it was according to their version of what the agreement was and the plaintiff refused to take the oath. We do not think this is a ground for drawing any adverse inference against the plaintiff. If the agreement as to the oath was as stated by him, the plaintiff was not bound to take an oath in a different form and we think the remand was not justified. We allow the appeal and set aside the order of remand. The decree of the Munsif will, therefore, stand. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs of this appeal and costs before the Subordinate Judge.

A mortgage-bond provided that interest on the mortgage amount was payable on or before a fixed date every year and the principal, after 5 years, and that in default of payment of principal or interest on such due dates, interest was to be added on to the principal and paid 'whenever the mortgagee required' without regard to the date fixed in the bond. It was found that the mortgagor paid soon after a default in the payment of the interest, not only the interest payable under the default clause but also portions of the principal amount which under the primary clause was payable only at the end of 5 years:

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and E. Jagadisa Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, M. Patanjali Sastri and R. Somasundaram Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the fourth defendant in a mortgage suit brought to enforce the mortgage security for the recovery of the amount due to the plaintiff as assignee of the mortgage from the mortgagees. The mortgage-bond is dated the 22nd January, 1908, and it was for the sum of Rs. 6,000. The material portion of the bond to which reference has to be made in connection with the questions arising in this appeal is as follows: "As the total sum of Rs. 3,000 has been received by us as per particulars mentioned above, we shall pay before the 22nd January of each year the interest arrived at on the said amount at the rate of $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per mensem and pay the principal sum within a period of 5 years from this date. In default of payment of interest or principal on such due dates, we agree to your adding to the principal sum the interest due each year from the date of default and recovering the total amount with interest at the said rate, without regard to the due date for (payment of) principal whenever you require, by proceeding against us and the under-mentioned hypotheca."

The plaintiff's case as alleged in the plaint is that towards the suit mortgage-bond, the following payments were made Rs. 3,347-8-0 on the 15th June, 1909, towards the principal and interest, Rs. 800 on the 15th June, 1909, towards principal and interest and Rs. 250 on the 4th November, 1909, towards interest but the balance of principal and interest was not paid. The mortgagee assigned the mortgage-bond in plaintiff's favour for Rs. 7,600, on the 25th November, 1922. The plaintiff says that a sum of Rs. 8,420-14-0 was due on the mortgage at the date of the suit, and he prays for a decree for the sale of the mortgaged properties to recover the said amount with subsequent interest and costs. The cause of action for the suit is stated to have arisen on 22nd January, 1913, i. e., on the expiry of the period of 5 years provided in the mortgage-bond, and the plaint was presented on the 30th January, 1924. The plaintiff has impleaded as defendants the legal representatives of the mortgagor as well as subsequent alienees of different portions of the mortgaged properties.

The fourth defendant among other pleas raised the plea of limitation. In para. 4 of his written statement he says that as the mortgagors failed to pay interest due for the first year the mortgagee made a demand on the mortgagors to pay the entire amount of principal and interest according to the conditions stipulated in the bond and pressed for payment of the same. Thereupon payments towards the principal and interest were made to the mortgagee as admitted in the plaint itself; and the suit is, therefore, barred by limitation, as the cause of action, therefore, arose in 1909.

The sixth defendant also raised a similar plea in para. 4 of his written statement. It was he who paid to the mortgagee Rs. 3,347-8-0 on the 15th June, 1909, and endorsed payment of the same on the bond.

With reference to the above plea, the third issue, viz., is the plaintiff's suit barred by limitation? was framed. The suit after several adjournments came on for trial on the 4th March, 1925. But on that day neither the fourth defendant nor the sixth defendant appeared and the trial of the suit proceeded against them ex parte. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred by limitation. He also disposed of the other issue in the case and passed a decree for the plaintiff for the amount claimed.

The main point pressed before us in this appeal is that the lower Court erred in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation. On behalf of the appellant it is contended by his learned Vakil that upon the terms of the mortgage-bond already set out, the cause of action for purposes of limitation began to run as soon as there was default in the payment of interest for the first year and that the stipulation on the part of the mortgagors that they agreed to pay the entire amount of principal and interest without due regard to the due date whenever the mortgagee required the amount did not render a demand on the part of the mortgagee a condition precedent to his enforcing that right. The argument is that the words "whenever you require" has the same meaning as the expression 'on demand' which is a term of art meaning immediately or forthwith. This contention which appears to have been the only one put forward before the Subordinate Judge was overruled by him. He observes as follows: "It will be seen by a reference to Ex. A that it is only a privilege given to the mortgagee to claim the mortgage amount if interest is not paid at the end of every year. He may exercise that privilege or not. That being so, it cannot be said that the mortgagee is bound to claim the amount before the period fixed." In our opinion the learned Subordinate Judge has taken the right view that the stipulation in question gives only an option to the mortgagee to call in at once the principal amount and interest due on the mortgage-bond without reference to the period stipulated for payment, if there is default. There is, no doubt, some conflict of authority on the point between this Court and some other High Courts and it may also be observed that some of the earlier decisions of this Court may support the appellant's contentions but later decisions of this Court with which we agree and which the Subordinate Judge has followed support the view that a stipulation so worded only gives the mortgagee an option which is open to him to exercise or not as he chooses; and the time will not run against him unless he exercises the option [see Ramadh Bibi Ammal v. Kandasami Pillai (1), Narna v. Ammani Amma (2) and Netta Karuppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (3).] We may before leaving this point refer to a recent decision of the Privy Council in Pancham v. Ansar Hussain (4) which was an appeal from the Allahabad High Court. Their Lordships considered this question and their observations rather tend to show that they do not approve of the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in two Full Bench cases in Gaya Din v. Jhuman Lal (5) and Shib Dayal v. Meharban (6) and they are inclined towards the view adopted by this Court in the later cases. These observations are, no doubt, obiter and the appeal was disposed of on some other point, but as stated in their Lordships' judgment itself they were made in view of the conflict of authority which exists on the point between the several High Courts.

It is next urged on the appellant's behalf that there is satisfactory evidence in this case that the mortgagee did exercise the option in 1909 and that, therefore, the cause of action for the suit accrued when he did so. This question was separately not argued before the Subordinate Judge. It was probably due to the fourth defendant as well as the sixth defendant being absent at the final hearing. The facts on which reliance is placed in support of this contention are (1) the admitted payment of Rs. 773-12-0 for interest and Rs. 2,573-12-0 towards principal on the 15th June, 1909; (2) payment of Rs. 800 by adjustment of account on the same day; and (3) payment of Rs. 250 on the 4th November, 1909. The 2nd and 3rd payments are not endorsed on the bond. As regards the alleged payments not only there is no dispute but they are also referred to in the assignment of the mortgage in plaintiff's favour, Ex. B dated the 25th November, 1922.

Taking first payment made on 15th June, 1909, it will be seen that interest which was paid represents the interest due on the entire amount of the mortgage-bond up to the 15th June, 1909, interest being calculated on the basis of there having been a default at the end of the first year. In addition to all interest due up to that date Rs. 2,573-12-0 was also paid towards the principal. This seems to be a strong evidence of the mortgage amount being treated by the mortgagee as having fallen due on the date of that payment. Otherwise it is difficult to understand why interest which would not be due till the end of the 2nd year, viz., till the 23rd January, 1910, was paid up to the 15th January, 1909. Besides the aforesaid payment there was also another payment of Rs. 800 to the mortgagee on adjustment of accounts on the same day. As that amount was not paid by the sixth defendant it is only reasonable to presume that the adjustment of the account was between the mortgagee and the mortgagors all of whom are now dead. This adjustment also by itself is good evidence of the mortgagee having elected to exercise the option conferred on him in case of default in payment of interest and the same observation also applies to the further payment of Rs. 250 which also may be presumed to have been made by the mortgagors themselves.

The plaintiff's (1st respondent's) Vakil has endeavoured to meet the appellant's contention based on the above payments. His argument is that on the construction of the default clause in the mortgage-bond, the mortgagee becomes at once entitled to payment of enhanced interest as provided in the bond. The operation is so to speak automatic and requires no exercise of operation on his part. That option is confined only to the mortgagee calling in the principal amount together with interest due till the date of his exercising the option. In other words, that there are two independent covenants in the bond one of which relates to the payment of enhanced interest which operates automatically on the happening of the default and the other requires the exercise of the option given to the mortgagee. In support of this contention the learned Vakil for the respondent relies on the case in Ramadh Bibi Ammal v. Kandasami Pillai (1). But on a reference to the terms of the mortgage-bond in that case which is set out in that report clearly shows that in that case there was a separate covenant for interest and a separate covenant conferring on the mortgagee the option to call in the entire amount of principal and interest, and they have been so construed by the learned Judges who decided that case. This contention cannot, therefore, be accepted.

The respondent's Vakil next contends that payments relied on were voluntary payments and not payments made pursuant to any demand. He draws our attention to the evidence of P. W. No. 1 the agent of the mortgagee who says he was present when the sixth defendant made the payment on the 15th June, 1909. Plaintiff's witness No. 1 further says that the payment was voluntarily made by Subbiah Pillai (6th defendant). It is not quite clear what the witness meant thereby. He does not say that there was no previous demand at any time by the mortgagee and it was merely to oblige the mortgagors the mortgagee received payment before the time provided in the bond; nor does he speak to the other two payments. This is the only evidence in support of this contention. The mortgagors and mortgagee being dead no stress can be laid on the fact that there is no oral evidence on either side as to whether there was a demand or not by the mortgagee in 1909. We have, therefore, to see what is the reasonable inference to be drawn from the conduct of the parties themselves as evidenced by the admitted payments. It seems to us hardly likely that the mortgagors (who were evidently in embarrassed circumstances) would have voluntarily without any demand or pressure on the part of the mortgagee paid, either interest at the enhanced rate, which provision comes into operation only when default has been made, or the sums paid by them towards the principal amount long before the due date fixed in the bond if there was no default. On the other hand, it seems to be a much more reasonable inference that when the default occurred the mortgagee elected to exercise the option and pressed for payment of the entire amount, viz., the principal and interest due on the bond and that the payments were made in consequence of such demand. The fact that all interest according to the enhanced rate up to the 15th June, 1909, when interest for the second year was not due, was paid and a further amount was paid towards the principal shows that the whole amount was treated as due immediately. The adjustment of Rs. 800 which was also made on the same day also points to the same conclusion. At any rate all the payments are good evidence from which the Court may well presume that the mortgagee in exercise of the option made a demand on the mortgagor for the payment of the mortgage-money. This view received support from the case of Brown v. Rutherford (7) cited by the appellant's Vakil. In that case it was held by the Court of Appeal reversing the decision of the Vice Chancellor that the endorsement of payment of interest on the promissory note which was all the evidence in the case, imported that a demand had been made for the payment of interest. The presumption, no doubt, is one of fact and not of law but on such a question it is only right that the Court should draw such inference as is probable having regard to the common course of human conduct as laid in s. 114 of the Evidence Act. For debtors will pay more by way of interest if they can avoid it and voluntarily accelerate the date of the payment of principal amount together with the enhanced interest except on demand by the creditor. If we find them doing so it is only reasonable to infer that there has been pressure put upon them by the creditor. We are, therefore, of opinion that there is sufficient evidence in the case to show that the creditor has exercised the option and that, therefore, the cause of action for the suit arose in 1909 and that under Art. 132 this suit is barred by limitation.

On this finding it is unnecessary to go into the other questions which were argued before us which relate to the order in which the mortgaged properties should be sold. The suit must be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by limitation, but we do not think that this is a case in which the appellant should have his costs. He failed to appear at the trial for no sufficient reason. If he had appeared and the point had been argued before the learned Subordinate Judge it is quite probable his decision might have been the other way and the appeal would have been quite unnecessary. Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 429 of 1925 is preferred by the fourth defendant against the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to set aside the ex parte decree against him. We see no sufficient ground for allowing this appeal and we dismiss and in the circumstance without costs.

Where a sale in execution of a decree is set aside or becomes infructuous, the decree-holder is liable to re-pay the purchase-money if called upon by the purchaser to do so but not otherwise and the cause of action for the decree-holder to proceed against his judgment-debtor does not, therefore, arise till he is compelled to pay the money to the auction-purchaser. Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order passed by the District Judge reversing the decision of the District Munsif in an application to execute the decree passed in O. S. No. 1215 of 1908 which was filed on 11th January, 1924. The facts are, the decree-holder in O. S. No. 1215 of 1908 filed an application (No. 157 of 1913) to execute his decree and obtained satisfaction of the decree by the sale of the properties which were charged for the decree. The auction-purchaser, according to the statement of account we find in the judgment, got possession, cultivated the land sometime but was dispossessed by a third person who claimed a title to the properties. We may state here that the suit was not on a mortgage, but that there was a consent decree, the defendant having given these properties as a security for the decree amount. Finding that he was dispossessed, the purchaser filed a suit to establish his title to the property but was unsuccessful. As he could not get possession, the purchaser filed O. S. No. 366 of 1917 to recover the purchase-money which went in satisfaction of the decree and to that suit he made the present respondent a party. The respondent, however, was exonerated and a decree was passed against the other party. The appellant had to pay the decree amount and after he paid the amount he applied to execute the original decree on the ground that it was not satisfied and sought to attach and sell other properties of the respondent. Before the District Munsif the pleas that were raised by the respondent were that the execution application is barred because limitation started from the date of the decree in O. S. No. 366 of 1917 and not from the date when he actually paid the amount of that decree. The other objection taken was that the present application is barred under s. 48 as it was over 12 years. The District Munsif held that limitation began to run from the date when the appellant actually paid the amount and also held that s. 48 was not a bar, and there is no discussion as regards the applicability of s. 48 as he held that the subsequent application was a revival of the original application. The District Judge reversed the decision of the District Munsif on the ground that the three years began to run from the date of the decree passed in favour of the auction-purchaser and that it was the duty of the present appellant to have paid the amount then and not to have waited till the auction-purchaser pressed for execution and that the application was, therefore, barred. In that view it was not necessary to consider s. 48.

It is argued for the appellant that the judgment of the District Judge is wrong and that the starting point would be from the date when in execution of the decree he was compelled to pay the amount, because if for any reason the decree-holder did not execute his decree, there was no damage which the appellant could suffer. He could not then say that he has suffered damage because he had to re-pay any money which he got in satisfaction of the decree in the original suit. We think that the observations in Ramireddi Venkata Appa Rao v. Lakoojee China Ayyanna (1) support the argument of the appellant. At page 211* the learned Judges observe:

"When the sale is set aside, the decree-holder is liable to re-pay the purchase-money if called upon by the purchaser to do so, but not otherwise. His position in this respect is analogous to that of the bankers in the case of Torab Ali Khan v. Nilruttun Lal (2) who had paid out money to a wrong person: it was held that their cause of action against that person for recovery of the money did not arise before they were compelled to pay the true owner: till then it could not be said that they were damaged by the action of the defendants. 'Until the money was paid the plaintiffs did not suffer any loss. The mere demand by the heirs of Asgar Hossain (the real owner) did not give the plaintiffs a cause of action against the defendants, nor did the institution of the suit. The demand might have been abandoned, or the suit dismissed.

(1) 30 M. 209; 17 M. L. J. 194.

(2) 13 C. 155; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 602.

"So here the judgment-debtor's action in getting the sale set aside did not injure the decree-holder until he was compelled to refund the purchase-money to the purchaser, and till then he had no right to call upon the judgment-debtor to pay his debt a second time."

We think that these observations apply with equal force to a case like the present where matters simply rested in a decree obtained against him which might or might not be executed. We think that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the mere passing of a decree cast on the appellant the duty of paying the money and applying for execution of his own decree on peril of his decree being barred, if he did not do so within 3 years.

Mr. Sambasiva Rao for the respondent did not seriously support the judgment of the District Judge on this question. He, however, raised two points and seeks to support the judgment on the other grounds. The first point raised is that O. XXI, r. 91 makes the sale absolute and binding if not set aside by the auction-purchaser within 30 days and that in the present case the auction-purchaser not having done so, the decree in his favour was a decree which was not a proper decree to have been passed, and that as his client was exonerated, it is open to him to take the point that the original satisfaction recorded stands good as the sale has not been set aside in 30 days as required by the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act. He also argues that s. 48 is a bar to the present proceedings. We do not think that in a case like this where the subsequent application is for entirely different reliefs, it can be treated as a continuation of the original application. To do so would be to allow the party to treat any application made subsequently as a continuation of the original application.

If the respondent wants to contend that s. 48 is a bar to the present application as a fresh application for execution and not merely as a continuation of the previous application, the appellant would be entitled to contend that by reason of fraud or any other reason which the law allows, s. 48 would not apply.

As regards the contention that O. XXI, r. 91 bars any relief, the objection was not raised in the Courts below. Having regard to the decisions in Muthukumarasamia Pillai v. Muthusami Thevan (3) and Mundlapati Jagannadha Rao v. Rachapudi Basa-wayya (4), we think the question is one which should be gone into as it is clear that unless the appellant can prove fraud or any other abuse of the process of the Court, the sale would become absolute and it will not be competent to the auction-purchaser to file a suit to recover the purchase-money. We think the proper course will be to set aside the order of the District Judge as it was passed on the grounds which we cannot support and remit the case to the District Munsif for decision as to whether O. XXI, r. 91 applies to the facts of the present case so as to bar the application for execution now presented and whether the present execution application is in time and not barred by s. 48, Civil Procedure Code. It will be open to the parties to adduce fresh evidence in support of their contentions on either of these points.

As regards costs, as the appellant has substantially succeeded and as we are sending back the case on a point which was not taken in the Courts below, the respondent will pay the costs of the appeal here and in the lower Appellate Court and the costs in the first Court will abide and follow the result.

Malabar Law—Nambudiris—Succession to self-acquisitions of male member—Wife and children or tavazhi, whether entitled to succeed in preference to tarwad—Custom excluding tarwad, proof of.

Their Lordships upheld a finding that there was no special custom among the Payyanoor Nambudiri families in Malabar by which the self-acquisition of a male member dying intestate devolves upon his wife and children or on his tavazhi in preference to the tarwad.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, at Mangalore, in Appeal Suit No. 338 of 1922 presented against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Kasargad, in Original Suit No. 51 of 1921.

Mr. Sivarama Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kutti Krishna Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Sivarama Menon for the appellant wants to contest the correctness of the decision in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (1). That decision was followed by me and Mr. Justice Spencer in Vazhayil Abuyakkar v. Kunhikuttyali (2). I am not prepared at this stage to refer the appeal to a Bench on the ground that the decision in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (1) should be re-considered.

There is another point in the appeal which requires consideration. The parties belong to a class of Nambudiris who have adopted to some extent the Marumakkathayam Law. The appellant asked the lower Court to take evidence on the question of custom obtaining in the class of Nambudiri families to which the parties belong of the self-acquisition of a male member devolving upon the tavazhi and not upon the tarwad in case he dies intestate. This point was neither raised in the pleadings nor in the trial Court and the District Judge who heard the appeal did not think it necessary to call for a finding upon the alleged custom. Considering the fact that this class of Nambudiris has adopted to some extent the Marumakkathayam Law, the question is whether the whole of the Marumakkathayam Law is applicable to them. It is stated that the males in the families contract lawful marriages. Seeing that there is some departure from the ordinary incidents of Marumakkathayam Law in the case of these Nambudiris, I think it would be best in the interests not only of the parties to this litigation but in the interests of the whole of this class of Nambudiris to call for a finding on the alleged custom. The appellant will pay the costs of this inquiry in any event to the respondents, as he did not raise the point in the trial Court. The District Judge will,

there, record a finding on the following issue:—

"Is there a custom in the Payyanoor Nambudiri families by which the self-acquisition of a male member dying intestate devolves upon his wife and children and in the absence of wife and children upon the tavazhi and not as in the case of ordinary Marumakkathayam families upon the tarwad."

Time for return of findings is two months and seven days for objections.

In compliance of the order of the Court calling for a finding upon the issue referred to the District Judge of South Kanara submitted the following

FINDINGS.—I am directed by the High Court to submit a finding on the issue:—

"Is there a custom in the Payyanoor Nambudiri families by which the self-acquisition of a male member dying intestate devolves upon his wife and children; in the absence of wife and children upon the tavazhi, and not as in the case of ordinary Marumakkathayam families upon the tarwad?"

* * * * *

I find, therefore, that it is not proved that there is a custom among the Payyanoor Gramam Nambudiri families by which the self-acquisition of a male member dying intestate devolves upon his wife and children.

The next question is whether there is a custom among the Payyanoor Gramam Nambudiris by which the self-acquisition of a male member dying intestate devolves on his tavazhi.

* * * * *

On the whole, I have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff has not proved that there is a custom among the Payyanoor Gramam Nambudiris by which the self-acquisition of a male member dying intestate devolves upon his tavazhi, in the absence of his wife and children, I, therefore, find the issue remitted in the negative.

After the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court the Court, delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The finding is accepted and the second appeal is dismissed with costs including the costs incurred in the finding proceedings.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by manager—Legal necessity—Actual enquiry by creditor, whether invariably necessary—Belief as to legal necessity, when sufficient—Absence of legal necessity—Money spent for use of family—Loan, whether binding on family.

In order to make an alienation by the manager of a joint Hindu family, binding on the members, it is not necessary in every case to prove actual enquiry by the creditor as to whether there was legal necessity for it: it would be sufficient if it is proved that the creditor had the belief that there was such necessity provided that it was based on information that could reasonably give rise to such belief, whether that information was obtained by direct or indirect enquiries or in any other way. The question of enquiry into the necessity, or of reason to believe in its existence, can only arise when there is no proof of its existence or proof that it did not exist; then the lender is covered by proof, that he believed it to exist even if it did not. But when the lender is familiar with all the circumstances of the family to which the money was lent, the only way in which the family could be made liable in such a case would be by proof that the necessity did exist. [p. 657, col. 2]

Even in the absence of proof of actual existence of necessity the family would be liable to re-pay the loan, if it is proved that the loan was taken for the family and spent for it, irrespective of the question whether the person borrowing the loan had or had not the authority to borrow it. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 11th February, 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 119 of 1926.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—It has been found, and it is beyond all possibility of doubt, that Bhaurao was the manager of the joint Hindu family consisting of himself and the appellants and that they knew he was dealing with the plaintiff and everybody else and was borrowing money from the plaintiff in that capacity. Apart from the false allegation that this was not so, the pleas put forward for them are that there was no necessity for the borrowing, as the family had a sufficient income for its needs and the plaintiff did not satisfy himself by proper enquiries that there was any such necessity.

In a large number of such cases, if no actual necessity for borrowing is proved, the lender can have had no reason to believe in its existence unless he made enquiries from the borrower at, or shortly before, the time the loan was made. From this the idea has arisen, and is now very common, that it is necessary to prove in every such case, that the lender formally asked the borrower on each occasion whether the money was really required or not, and he replied that it was and explained how and why. Such an enquiry would ordinarily indicate that there had been no proper enquiry at all. The confusion arises out of substituting "enquiry" for "reasons to believe." The matter in issue is not the enquiry but the belief based on information that could reasonably give rise to it, whether that information was obtained by direct or indirect enquiries or in any other way.

But in the present case the lender was familiar with all the circumstances of the family to which the money was lent, and he knew whether the necessity for borrowing arose or not. The question of enquiry into the necessity or of reason to believe in its existence can only arise when there is no proof of its existence or proof that it did not exist; then the lender is covered by proof that he believed it to exist, even if it did not. But he cannot possibly prove that here because, if it did not exist, he was well aware that it did not. The only way in which the family could be made liable in such a case would be by proof that the necessity did exist. As to that it has been found in the lower Appellate Court that the family was in chronic need of cash, and I can see no reason for disturbing that finding even if I were allowed to do so.

But even the question of the actual existence of the necessity does not arise. If a person borrows money for me, without my authority and even without my knowledge and though I have plenty of money of my own already, and I take the money from him and spend it myself, I am surely bound to re-pay it to the lender. That is made clear in more than one section of the Contract Act. Now it is beyond doubt that the whole of the money borrowed by Rambhau for the family was spent on it or by it, whether on necessities or luxuries or even debaucheries. That fact has been practically admitted all through. The only approach to a denial of it is to be found in a pleading in which the word "benefit" appears at the end, though the meaning of the whole plea is clearly that the family did not benefit by the borrowing, not that it did not receive the money. Even if it had been pleaded that the family did not receive the money, there is no evidence to that effect, and the fact that the manager for a long time openly borrowed the money in its name in the same village, of which nearly a half is now admitted to have been spent on the family, is proof that it did.

But even if we accept the impossible suggestion that Bhaurao went on all that time borrowing money openly in his own village in the name of his family, and spent more than half of it on himself, the appellants are little better off. Their actual plea, if any such plea was ever taken, was, of course, that Bhaurao spent the whole of the money on himself, but it is now admitted that the plaintiff has proved, without the help of the absence of any denial by the appellants, that the family did receive the benefit of a sum of Rs. 2,160, expended on wheatseed, the building of a house, the payment of lease money and the assessment on their land. That leaves Rs. 2,976 shown as borrowed for "cultivation and house-hold expenses" which according to the appellants, Bhaurao spent on himself and they never saw. But Bhaurao re-paid Rs. 2,125, and there is no more evidence of that having come out of family funds than of the Rs. 2,976 having gone into them, so that all that is left of the sum that Bhaurao spent on himself is Rs. 851, and the balance due by the appellants on the account would be Rs. 1309 instead of the Rs. 2,160 the plaintiff says it is.

The appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondents.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. P. Vaidya and M. R. Indurkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the first Court, by which the plaintiff's claim was dismissed. The learned District Judge, in dismissing the appeal, held that it was permissible in the present case to prove that Musammatt Gendibai alone was entitled to recover the amount in deposit under the receipt (P-1), and also dismissed the present plaintiff's appeal. He has now come up to this Court on second appeal.

The first matter for decision is whether, in view of the terms of P-1, it was permissible for the lower Courts to hold that Gendibai alone without the present plaintiff was entitled to give a complete discharge for the amount in question. There has been some argument in this Court to the effect that the words of the receipt do not necessarily imply that Gendibai and the plaintiff were co-promisees; I will assume, however, that this was so. It has been urged strongly on behalf of the appellant that, in view of s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, it was not permissible for the defendants to prove, or for the Courts to hold, that Gendibai could give alone a valid discharge as regards the amount covered by P-1. Section 92 of the Evidence Act only lays down that in the case of a written contract, "no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to" the contract "for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms." In the case of consideration mentioned in such a written document, it is open to the party contesting it to show that there was no consideration, or that the consideration was different from that described in the contract. In the present case, the position of the defendants is that the present appellant joined in the execution of the document at his own request and that he was allowed to do so, being the husband of Gendibai. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Baijnath Singh v. Vally Muhammad Hajee Abba (1) have remarked as follows:

"It is true, as was laid down in Balkishen Das v. Legge (2) that under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, as between the parties to an instrument, oral evidence of intention is not admissible for the purpose, either of construing deeds or of proving the intention of the parties. But in the view their Lordships take of the circumstances of this case, the section and the ruling have no application to it.

"The preamble to the Evidence Act recites that 'it is expedient to consolidate, define and amend the Law of Evidence', and s. 92 merely prescribes a rule of evidence; it does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances. To these circumstances their Lordships will briefly advert."

The position in the present case seems to me to be precisely analogous to that adumbrated in the second passage from their Lordships' judgment just quoted. If the findings of the lower Courts on the questions of fact involved stand, viz., that this money was, in reality, Gendibai's and that at the time her husband was fully aware of this and never attempted to contest the fact, then it seems to me obvious that, in the circumstances of the present case, it is open to this Court to take into consideration the evidence which has been produced on behalf of the defendant—version of the circumstances under which P-1 was executed. I do not think there is any necessity to have recourse, as the learned District Judge did, to the analogy of a benami transaction. The analogy may exist, but, at the best, it is a vague and imperfect one. It has, however, been urged before me that the lower Appellate Court was incorrect in holding that the money in question was in reality Gendibai's own property. This money, it has been argued, represents the sale-proceeds of the field of Gendibai's father. Gendibai has a son alive and she is now residing with the plaintiff. It is suggested, therefore, that she has only a life-interest in the money and that, in the circumstances, it is incorrect to hold that the money was Gendibai's sole and absolute property.

A further argument has also been adduced that, in any event, Gendibai having allowed her husband to join as a promisee in the note (P-1), the presumption arises that she had made him a gift pro rata of the amount concerned, or had constituted him, so to speak, a partner in the money concerned.

Neither of these arguments seems to me to be of any avail in the present case. We have in the first Court's judgment a careful finding of fact as regards the circumstances under which the present plaintiff executed the receipt, dated the 7th November, 1923, (3 D-1). The astounding story told by the plaintiff in this connection only needs to be read to be disbelieved, although it is not more obviously false than various other pleas of fact offered by him, on which the Subordinate Judge has animadverted with well-deserved severity. Holding, as I do, that this document was executed voluntarily, it is perfectly obvious that the plaintiff cannot now be heard to say that the money was his under the ordinary principles applicable to a Hindu woman, or by gift, or by partnership. Even the very receipt, dated the 21st May, 1923, (1 D-1), was also attested by him. It has, indeed, been suggested on behalf of the appellant that the mere fact that the plaintiff executed the document (3 D-1) implies that he had been interested in the property concerned. I am unable to accept this suggestion. Considering the relations existing between a Hindu husband and a Hindu wife, third parties may well take the precaution of obtaining the husband's signature on documents like those we are concerned with, and the fact of the appellant's signature being taken leads, in my opinion, to no necessary presumption that he actually had a title to the property in question.

The case, in short, is, in my opinion, clearly one in which, on the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case quoted above, the Court is bound to go behind the written terms of P-1 and to elucidate the real facts of transaction. On the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Courts—findings which there is not a shadow of ground for disturbing it seems to me inevitably to follow that, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, Gendibai must be held to have been capable of giving a valid discharge for the debt as she professed to do. This being so, the plaintiff-appellant is clearly out of Court and I need hardly add, that, from the equitable point of view, he has never had a shadow of case. The appeal fails and is dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondents' costs. Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

LUNGRAJI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

"Ghat"—Long user—Presumption—Persons in use, when liable to be ejected.

The existence and regular use of a "ghat" for a very long time is conclusive proof of the fact that it had its origin in an express grant and the persons in regular use must be held to be at least licensees of the land covered by the ghat, and cannot be ejected by the malguzar, unless it be for using it for any other purpose than as a ghat.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Betul, dated the 27th of January, 1927, arising out of the decision in Civil Suit No. 75 of 1926, in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, Multai, dated the 30th September, 1926.]

Mr. S. A. Ghadge, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Judges of the two lower Courts may have had clear ideas of what the "ghat" to which this case refers is like, but it is impossible to get anything but a very vague idea of it from the record. From explanations given in this Court it appears to consist mainly of two stone walls in the bed of a river, parallel to each other and to the stream, about ten feet long and five feet apart, with perhaps lower stone walls at each end. The stones are not cemented or joined in any way, but the structure is permanent; a stone or two may require replacing every year, but otherwise it is unaffected even by heavy floods.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court that the malguzar, who was a resident of the village till 1911, knew nothing about this "ghat", which has been in existence and in regular use every year for at least sixty years, is impossible, and it is disproved by the plaintiff's own evidence. In his plaint filed in February, 1926, he made the positive statement that the "ghat" had been constructed in the previous September, which was untrue to his own knowledge. The actual facts are apparent from the evidence of the Kotwar, Jairam Mahra (P. W. No. 2) and indeed most of the other witnesses.

The facts are these. For some time before September, 1925, the malguzar and most if not all of the other villagers have desired that the "ghat" should be removed for the convenience of a sadhu who had come to live near it or wished to do so. In September, 1925, which is the time the malguzar falsely states to be that of the construction of the "ghat", there was a panchayat in the village at which it was decided that the defendants would have to go, to make room for the sadhu. The defendants, however, refused to go, and the malguzar filed this suit; apparently on behalf of the villagers, preferring untruth to the truth as a basis for it.

The existence and regular use of the "ghat" for such a long time proves conclusively that it had its origin in an express grant of permission from the malguzar. On that it might even be possible to say that the defendants are occupancy tenants of that part of the bed of the river covered by their "ghat", paying no rent for it, though the definition of "tenant" in the Tenancy Act was certainly meant to refer only to land held and used for agriculture.

or purposes subservient to it. But anyhow they are at the least licensees of that land, with a right granted to them by the owner to remain in possession of it free of rent as long as they use it as a "ghat" which is practically the same thing.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the first Court dismissing the suit will be restored.

The plaintiff will be ordered to pay the whole of the costs of both parties in all three Courts. The learned Judge of the first Court was guilty of ordering that a Pleader's fee of one rupee should be paid. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be thirty rupees.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), s. 4—Income from villages in Nizam's Territory brought into Berar, whether taxable.

Income derived from rents realized from tenants of revenue-free villages situated in Nizam's Territory and brought into Berar is taxable under the Income Tax Act.

Reference made by the Commissioner of Income-Tax on 27th January, 1927, under the Income Tax Act of 1920.

Mr. D. N. Chaudhury, R. B., for the Applicant.

Messrs A. V. Khire and W. B. Pendharkar, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The question of law referred by the Commissioner of Income-tax is stated as follows:

"Whether the rents realized from the tenants of Kosgaon and Dhotra villages situate in the Dominions of His Exalted Highness the Nizam and brought into Dewalghat in Berar are taxable under the Income Tax Act, in view of the fact that these villages form part of one single jagir consisting of four villages which jagir was granted revenue-free to the ancestors of Nawab Mohammad Salamullah Khan, Khan Bahadur, O. I. E., and in view of the fact that owing to distribution of territories, two of them, i. e., Kosgaon and Dhotra, happened to go to the Nizam's Territory."

The last phrase is an incorrect statement of fact, as the two villages did not happen to go to the Nizam's Territory but happened to stay there, while the other two happened to go to Berar. But neither that nor any of the other facts stated has anything to do with the question of the exemption from Income-tax of the income derived from the villages and brought into Berar, nor has any other fact or consideration been stated which can be regarded as even relevant to it. The answer is that the income in question is taxable under the Income Tax Act.

JUDGMENT.—I think under s. 67 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act, 1917, the Settlement Officer was competent to record the plaintiff as the malik makbuza of the land in suit. The defendant was not recorded an occupancy tenant in the papers of the Settlement of 1913 which preceded the Tenancy Act of 1920, but on the contrary he is recorded as a sub-tenant. He has, therefore, not acquired the status of occupancy tenant under s. 37 of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs, Practice—Pleader's fees—Method of calculation.

The proper Pleader's fee to be allowed in a suit is not the sum calculated to the last pie on the valuation of the suit according to the rates stated in the rules made under the Legal Practitioners Act, but is what is actually paid or what may reasonably have been paid, whichever is less. The rules are a good general guide to the sum that may have reasonably been paid, but no more.

There are several factors to be considered in fixing the Pleader's fee, in addition to the valuation of the suit, and even that must be its real value, not the arbitrary or artificial valuation which is often sufficient for all other purposes.

Reference made by the District Judge, Ohhindwara, dated the 25th November, 1927.

ORDER.—The use of Latin words in legal matters is seldom more convenient than sticking to one or other of the three languages which are prescribed for use in the Courts of the Central Provinces and Berar, and then only slightly, but it gives rise to many inconveniences in many cases. Apart from that, it is hardly consistent to speak of this Court taking action of its own motion in moving it to do so by the submission of records with the suggestion that the taking of that action should be considered.

The idea underlying the application made in the District Judge's Court is that the only Pleader's fee that can be allowed as between party and party is the sum calculated to the last pie on the valuation of the suit according to the rates stated in the rules made under the Legal Practitioners Act. In most cases that was a wholly improper sum to allow under the old rules, and it is so in many cases under the amended rules. The proper sum is what was actually paid or what might reasonably have been paid, whichever is less. The rules are a good general guide to the sum that might reasonably have been paid, but no more.

The fee allowed in the District Judge's decree was Rs. 152 8, and that calculated according to the rules then in force on the stated valuation of the property in dispute was Rs. 52 8. It was by accident that the common absurdity was avoided of a Judge solemnly stating in the decree that the Pleader's fee which, in his opinion, was paid or ought to have been paid was a sum ending in a number of pies not even making an integral number of pice. It is, however, obvious that neither sum was the proper sum to allow, and indeed that the learned Judge who passed the decree never considered it was or thought about the matter at all. There is then no more reason for reducing the Rs. 152 8 to Rs. 52 8 than for raising the Rs. 52 8 to Rs. 152 8. Indeed if any change ought to be made, the very first would be the removal of the odd Rs. 2 8 at the end.

There are several factors to be considered in fixing the Pleader's fee, in addition to the valuation of the suit, and even that must be its real value, not the arbitrary or artificial valuation which is often sufficient for all other purposes. In this case the dispute was over the right to separate possession of a half of 74 67 acres of land, and the Pleader's fee allowed in this Court was Rs. 200. Before any amendment of the decree of the lower Appellate Court can be possible it must be shown that the sum of Rs. 152 8 is more than was paid or might reasonably have been paid by the plaintiff to his Pleader in that Court, not merely that the arithmetical process by which the Judge nominally (and his Reader actually) arrived at that sum was wrongly applied.

Even if there were any apparent cause for altering the decree, that could probably be done only in a review, and an application for that was time-barred when the present application was presented. But there is no such cause at all, and I decline to interfere.

No prohibitory order for attachment of money can be made under O. XXI, r. 46 of the Civil Procedure Code unless the Judge issuing such order has jurisdiction over the place where the attachment is to be made.

Payments to be made to a Railway contractor for work done by him are not attachable under the rule as it is neither the salary nor the allowance of a servant of the Railway Company. Nor is the Station Master of the place where the contract work was done, the proper person to whom such an order can be issued.

Revision of an order of the Small Cause Court, Khandwa, dated the 6th March, 1926, in execution proceedings arising out of Civil Suit No. 414 of 1925, dated the 17th March, 1925.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—The applicant in this case obtained a decree against one Bala for Rs. 218-6-6 including costs. Bala was a contractor for the G. I. P. Railway Company. The applicant applied for execution to the Small Cause Court, Khandwa, and asked for a prohibitory order for attachment of certain money due to Bala by the G. I. P. Railway Company. The applicant obtained the order and it was sent to the Chief Auditor, Bombay, and to the Loco Traffic Manager, Nagpur. The Bombay Office returned it on 27th March, 1925, pointing out, and rightly so, that the attachment obviously fell under O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, and should come from a Judge having jurisdiction in Bombay. Then the prohibitory order was served on the Station Master, Khandwa, obviously a wrong person to address such a document to. The execution proceedings have been struck off as wholly infructuous.

It is fairly obvious that unless the applicant can bring the prohibitory order under O. XXI, r. 48, Civil Procedure Code, he has no case. I am certain that the property in this case, which belonged to a Railway contractor and consisted of payments to be made to him for work done, is neither the salary nor the allowance of a servant of the Railway Company. It is also clear that the Station Master, Khandwa, was not the proper person to address to in the matter. On the facts I have no hesitation in finding that the execution proceedings have been properly disposed of. I accordingly dismiss this application with costs. The applicant will pay the non-applicants' costs. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

First appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class Seoni, dated the 26th July, 1926, in Civil Suit No. 15 of 1926.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. R. Boble and M. D. Khandekar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, idol of Mandir Shri Sheoji of Mauza Mohgaon (Seoni), filed the present suit against the three defendants-appellants for a declaration that it was entitled to have the partition of the said village effected and to have separate possession of a 4-annas share thereof together with all rights appurtenant thereto, and the defendants have now come up to this Court on appeal. The pleadings of the parties and the facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of the lower Court and I proceed at once to dispose of the questions which have been agitated in this appeal.

On the appeal coming on for hearing, the Counsel for the appellants did not press the objection with regard to limitation in view of the fact that the order, dated the 26th May, 1922, of the Deputy Commissioner (cf. copy P-4) shows that the latter officer considered he was acting under s. 165 of the Land Revenue Act.

The first point pressed on behalf of the appellants was that Jairamgir, as the sarbarakar of the temple, could not alone file the present suit. In this connection, reference has been made to the so-called trust deed and it is suggested that there must be four panchas duly appointed before the present suit could be filed by them. I am unable, however, to accede to this proposition. The deed in question is perhaps an irregular and faulty one. Musammam Sonabai gifted the property to the idol but remained manager during her life. Then the four panchas named were to manage after her death, but the terms of the deed clearly imply that the deity was to be the owner and that the panchas were to be mere managers. The Mutation Record of 1912 (P-2) bears out this view and it is perfectly clear that Jairamgir has been de facto manager on behalf of the idol. In those circumstances, I am in agreement with the view taken in Sheo Ramji v. Sri Riddhnath Mahadeoji (1) and am of opinion that Jairamgir had power to file the present suit in the form it was filed. There was no distinct provision in the deed constituting the so-called trust that when any panch died, another was to be appointed in his place. Even if the panchas were to be given the position of trustees—which is extremely doubtful in view of the terms of the deed—s. 76 of the Trusts Act would be a sufficient answer to the appellants' allegation on appeal in this connection. The trust deed does not lay down that, if any of the trustees die, the others shall be incapable of acting until a fresh trustee is appointed. On the contrary, the only provision in this connection laid down therein is that, if all the panchas are absent (or presumably dead), the existing King should take over the management and make proper arrangements. The first contention urged on appeal, therefore, fails.

The next contention urged is that Sonabai had owned a 5-anna 4-pie share of the village and had gifted the 4-anna share without khudkasht to the temple and that the remaining 1 anna 4 pie share with khudkasht had been given to Parasadgir and has now fallen into the share of the present defendants appellants. In other words, it is urged (cf. the jamabandis D-3, D-4, and D-5) that whatever khudkast Sonabai had at the time of the gift to the temple, did not pass thereto, it being admitted at the same time that, if any khudkasht land was subsequently created in respect of the 4-anna share, that would pass therewith.

As regards the sir land, similarly it is urged that the plaintiff-respondent was not entitled to claim partition with respect to any sir lands, as these exclusively belonged to the defendants. In the absence of any distinct pleading or proof that there has been a partition of sir and khudkasht lands and that these are in the exclusive possession of the defendants-appellants, I do not think this contention can succeed. Even the defendants' witnesses (cf. the evidence of D. W. No. 1, Madangopal) professed ignorance as to whether there had been any partition of sir and khudkasht lands, while Laxmi Chand (D. W. No. 2) definitely said that there had been none. This question, therefore, seems to me to be essentially one for the Revenue Officer to determine in the course of the partition; cf. ss. 137 and 175 of the Land Revenue Act. It may conceivably be found that there is no sir and khudkasht land appurtenant to the share, but prima facie, on the record, as it stands, the partitioning officer must have power to determine whether this is so or not. The judgment of the lower Court is somewhat ambiguous in its para. 7 on this point because, in one part thereof, it refers to the fact of there being no bar to the division of the proprietary rights in the sir land appurtenant to the 4-anna share, while, in a later part, almost contradictory statements are made as to whether or not plaintiff is entitled to cultivating rights in sir. The decree as given in the terms it is, viz., "plaintiff is entitled to have the partition of the entire village effected and to have separate possession over its 4-annas share along with sir and khudkasht, land appurtenant to that share", is perhaps a faulty one in that it gives rise to the assumption that there is sir and khudkasht land appurtenant to the share in question. Personally, I think this question must be left an open one for the partitioning officer to determine and it would be premature for the Civil Court to determine it at this stage. Any misunderstanding, which might arise in this connection, will be obviated if the words "if any" are inserted between the words "land" and "appurtenant" in the passage from the decree just quoted. This modification is perhaps unnecessary, but anyhow it is a case of erring on the side of safety.

I accordingly order that the decree be amended accordingly by the addition of words given above. To all intents and purposes, the present appeal has, however, failed and the appellants must bear the respondent's costs therein. Costs will be borne in the lower court as already ordered.

A judgment of an Appellate Court which does not discuss the points urged in the memorandum of appeal and without giving any reasons, holds that a conviction is correct, is not a legal judgment under s. 424 read with s. 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Jairam v. Emperor (1), followed.

Application for revision from a judgment of the Magistrate First Class, Bilaspur, in Criminal Appeal No. 220 of 1927, passed on the 31st October, 1927.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant,

ORDER.—Applicant Kalikram Kotwar of Bagnipali was taken to Bilaigarh by Head Constable Muhammad Mobin who had gone to Bilaigarh in the month of June 1927, to hold an enquiry, in an offence under s. 457, Indian Penal Code. Subaran was staying at the house of Puran, when her ornaments and clothes were stolen. During Police investigation, applicant told Puran that as theft was committed in his house, he would be troubled by Police, and demanded Rs. 10 to save him, saying that he was heard by Police. Puran borrowed Rs. 6 from Likhiram and paid the amount from Budhwa. Puran was taken by Head Constable to Debhra, and Head Constable Muhammad Mobin says that Puran informed him a day after his house was searched, that Kalikram had taken Rs. 6 from him to save him as Police had suspected him. The matter was brought to the notice of the Sub Inspector of Police who made an enquiry about it in the same month, and, after getting necessary sanction, filed this complaint on 30th August, 1927. The applicant has been sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment and his appeal has been rejected.

The first ground which has been urged before me is that the appellate judgment, not being in accordance with s. 424 read with s. 367, Criminal Procedure Code, is not legal and Jairam v. Emperor (1) is cited in support of this point. I have carefully read the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and the memorandum of appeal filed in that Court on 21st October, 1927, by Mr. Katireat. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court consists of two paragraphs, the first one gives a summary of the facts of the case and the second one consisting of about five lines, without discussing the points urged in the memorandum of appeal and without giving any reasons holds that the conviction is correct. The judgment is not a legal judgment as it does not contain the point or points for determination raised in the memorandum of appeal, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision. I, therefore, set aside the order of Mr. S. S. Parkhe, Magistrate, First Class passed on 31st October, 1927, dismissing the appeal, direct that he do re-hear the appeal and dispose of it according to law.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 17, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree—Application to set aside decree—Proper service—Burden of proof—Summons affixed to house—Names and addresses of witnesses not given in report—Service, whether proper—Burden, whether shifts—Agent, whether can refuse to accept service.

In proceedings to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that the defendant was not served, the burden of proof of non-service lies on the defendant, if the report of the process-server is according to law. But, under O. V, r. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code it is compulsory that names and addresses of persons, if any, in whose presence the copy of the summons is affixed must be given and if the report of the process-server does not give such names, it is not in accordance with law and does not furnish prima facie proof of due service, and it is for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant was duly served.

An agent is not invariably entitled to refuse summons.

In the matter of the Petition of Luchmee Chund (1), distinguished.

Application for revision against an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Mehkar, dated the 12th December, 1926, in Miscellaneous Case No. 37 of 1925.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. R. Pathak, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—The applicant was the defendant in a Small Cause Court suit. On the date fixed for hearing he did not appear. There was a report made by the process-server that his agent had refused to accept the summons and that a copy of the summons had then been duly affixed to the applicant's house. It was held that he was duly served and the case proceeded ex parte. The applicant, when he learnt that an ex parte decree had been passed against him, applied to the trial Court and produced his agent who deposed that the summons had not been offered to him. The learned Judge disbelieved the evidence of the agent and remarked that the applicant should have called the process-server. The Judge refused to set aside the ex parte decree and the applicant applies in revision to this Court.

It is first urged that the non-applicants ought to have proved that the service was proper and should have called the process-server. Had the report of the process-server been entirely in accordance with law, it would have been for the applicant to prove that he had not been served; but there was a serious defect in the report of the process-server. Order V, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that the report shall contain the name and address of the persons, if any, in whose presence the copy was affixed. The applicant is a merchant of Khamgaon, and there must have been persons present at the time of service. The report does not contain the name of any witness and is thus not framed in accordance with law. It does not, in my opinion, furnish prima facie proof of due service and it was for the non-applicants to prove, by examining the process-server, that the applicant had been duly served. I direct that the question whether the ex parte decree should be set aside should be re-considered in the light of these remarks.

It has also been urged that the agent was not empowered to accept service of summons.

But it appears clear that he was so empowered. Another argument is that an agent, if so empowered, has an option to refuse summons. Reliance is placed on In the matter of the Petition of Luchmee Chund (1). But r. 17 of O. V, of the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code lays down the procedure to be followed if an agent of the defendant, empowered to accept summons, refuses to do so: eventually the Judge may declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as he thinks fit. It is quite clear from this rule that an agent is not invariably entitled to refuse summons. All that the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court held was that, in the particular circumstances, the agent might be justified in refusing to accept summons: it may be noted that the defendant was a private gentleman and the agent was a Calcutta firm. In the present case the facts are very different and the Court rightly considered that the agent was bound to accept service.

Costs in this case will be costs in the application to the Small Cause Court. Pleader's fee Rs. 20.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 11 (2)—Proceedings for dissolution of marriage—Dispensing with name of co-respondent, grounds for—Discretion of Courts in India—Unwilling to take the risk, whether sufficient ground.

The Indian Courts do not have the same discretion in divorce proceedings to dispense with the naming of a co-respondent as the English Courts have. The three grounds mentioned in s. 11 of the Divorce Act are the only ones on which leave can be so granted to proceed with a petition for dissolution of marriage.

The mere fact that the petitioner has suspicions against two persons and, in spite of efforts and inquiry, has been unable to obtain substantial proof against either of them and that he is, therefore, reluctant to take the risk of making them co-respondents is not a sufficient ground for dispensing with the naming of the co-respondents under s. 11 (2) of the Divorce Act.

Petition against an order of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 29th August, 1927, in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1927.

Dr. Sir H. S. Gour, Kr., for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The petitioner, Charles Henry Smalley, applies for revision of an order of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated 29th August, 1927, in Civil Suit No. 3 of the same year. By this order, the District Judge declined to issue any citation or to proceed further on Mr. Smalley's petition for dissolution of marriage. In para. 5 of the petition in the lower Court it was alleged that Mrs. Smalley, the respondent, had committed adultery in Darjeeling in the year 1926 with a person unknown to the petitioner. The learned District Judge further examined Counsel for the petitioner with reference to the fact of any co-respondent having been cited, and accordingly the said Counsel is said to have stated orally that the petitioner was aware of the name of the alleged adulterer, but that as he was an officer holding a high position in Government service, he did not wish to disclose it. The learned District Judge held that this reason, as well as the fact that the petitioner having no absolute proof of the adultery, did not wish to cite any particular person as co-respondent, were inadequate ones and he, therefore, declined to proceed further as stated.

I have had an affidavit filed by the petitioner in this Court and have also examined him further on oath. From the affidavit and the said examination on oath it would appear that there has been some misunderstanding of the real position of the petitioner in this matter. It is now clear apparently that his wife, in the oral confession she is said to have made to him, did not disclose the name of her paramour or paramours. From independent enquiry, however, the petitioner has suspicions against two men, one of whom is a Government official, but he has sworn that his reason for not mentioning their names is that, in spite of efforts and enquiry, he has been unable to obtain any substantial proof against either man and he, therefore, is reluctant to take the risk of making them co-respondents.

It has been suggested on behalf of the present applicant that the remarks of Lindlay and Smith, L. Js., in Saunders v. Saunders (1) are applicable in the present case and that the learned District Judge erred in not proceeding further in spite of the failure of the petitioner to name a co-respondent. I do not think, however, that in this matter the Indian Courts have the same discretion to dispense with the naming of a co-respondent as the English Courts have. The three grounds stated in s. 11 of Act IV of 1869 are the only ones on which leave can be granted to proceed with the petition for dissolution of marriage. The second ground therein stated, viz., "That the name of the alleged adulterer is unknown to the petitioner although he has made due efforts to discover it", will not, it seems to me, apply in the circumstances of the present case. The petitioner has apparently knowledge where his wife is now residing and it is almost inconceivable to suppose that, with due effort and enquiry, he would not be able to discover the name of the alleged adulterer or adulterers. It may be remarked in this connection that the English Statute is more widely worded and the co-respondent may be dispensed with on special grounds to be allowed by the Court. Here, on petitioner's own statement, it is fairly obvious that he has well-grounded suspicions against two men and, if he is not (?) prepared to make due enquiry and, if after such enquiry have been made he is not prepared to mention the name of either man, or of both, the position would be different, but, as the case at present stands, I cannot, on the material before me, hold that the name of the alleged adulterer is unknown to the petitioner, although he has made due efforts to discover it.

In this view of the case, I am of opinion that the District Judge was justified in declining to proceed further until the petitioner has either satisfied the Court that he is unable to discover the adulterer's name, or, in the alternative, satisfies the Court that, due effort having been made, the name of the adulterer cannot be discovered.

The application is accordingly dismissed.

On such election being made, the title of the suit has to be corrected and thereafter, the proceedings for filing the award and passing a decree in terms thereof or for superseding the reference or remitting the award, etc., has to be commenced. The Court is not entitled to call upon the major plaintiff to file objection to the award unless he is examined to show his willingness to carry on the litigation to a termination in his name. [ibid.]

A Judge is bound to give notice to the parties of the fact of the filing of the award by the arbitrator. He is also bound to see that with the award is filed the depositions and documents, which have been taken and proved before him. Appeal against a decree of the Second Class, Subordinate Judge, No. 1, Akola, dated the 7th January, 1927, in Civil Suit No. 217 of 1919.

Messrs. A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—I think this revision must be allowed. The Second Class Subordinate Judge No. 1, Akola, must understand that there are very grave responsibilities devolving on him by virtue of his office as the Presiding Officer of a Court of Justice. He must bear in mind that there is something like procedure laid down by law for the proper disposal of a case and that he is bound to respect it and cannot act arbitrarily and whimsically as he pleases. The applicant is the widow of the original plaintiff Shrikisan; on his death, she was placed on record as his heir and legal representative (vide order-sheet, dated 5th September, 1922). Her age then was 14 as the amendment in the title of the suit shows. The reference to the arbitration was made on her behalf by her next friend as per application, dated 29th October, 1925, when she was still a minor. How far the reference could be made by a minor's next friend without the leave of the Court expressly recorded in the proceedings was a question which had an important bearing on the validity on the award. Similarly how far the manner in which the enquiry was held by the arbitrator affected the validity of reference and of the award was also a matter worthy of consideration: cf. Sanyasi v. Venkata Rao (1).

She attained majority some time in 1926, i. e., during the pendency of the suit and necessarily of the arbitration proceeding. Nobody took care to ascertain just then from her whether she desired to continue the suit, as soon as she attained majority. This necessarily involved the question whether she desired to continue the arbitration proceedings upon the reference made during her minority. There was thus a failure of duty on the part of the next friend within the meaning of r. 9 of O. XXXII, Civil Procedure Code, and it was the duty of the Court to remove the next friend on that account: cf. Doraswami Pillai v. Thungasami Pillai (2).

In any case, there was or could be no doubt that at the date of the award which is dated 30th November, 1926, and which was filed into Court on 1st December, 1926, she had attained majority and it was the duty of the Pleader engaged by the next friend to bring the fact to the notice of the Court at once; and then her next friend should have been discharged, after notice as required by O. XXXII, r. 12 (5), Civil Procedure Code. She had the option to make her own election, either to go on with the suit and accept the award, or to repudiate the same wholly or partially. On such election being made, the title of the suit had to be first corrected; thereafter, the proceedings for filing the award, and passing a decree in terms thereof, or for superseding the reference, or remitting the award, etc., had to be commenced. Until the proceedings pending before the Court were regularized and brought into conformity with law, and, plaintiff who had attained majority was properly shown on the record as willing to carry on the litigation to a termination in her own name, I may say, the Court was not justified in calling upon her to file her objections, if any, to the filing of the award.

In fact, it was the duty of the Court to first put the house, so to say, in proper order, as a preliminary to the reception of the award; but the procedure followed by the learned Judge is so materially irregular that the decree passed by him without serving notice and following the proper procedure is vitiated, and it must be set aside. If he had cared to turn his eyes to para. 10 of the Second Schedule he would have at once known the requirements of law which he was bound to comply with. He had to see whether the arbitrator had filed the award into Court "together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before him." He would also have been able to see therein the imperative provision for giving notice of the filing to the parties. Article 158 of the Limitation Act also makes this clear. There is a deplorable dereliction of duty on the Judge's part which constitutes a grave and material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction, and his judgment is, therefore, liable to be set aside for want of such notice: cf. Rangasami v. Muttusami (3) and Chatarbuj Das v. Ganesh Ram (4).

Even, though the plaintiff made an application to the Court stating that she became major, the Court seems to have taken no notice of her prayer that she wanted to continue the suit as a major plaintiff. This was on 7th January, 1927. By the same petition she requested also for an opportunity to give evidence in support of her objections, but the Presiding Officer ignored the petition. Unmindful of the serious invalidating consequences which his refusal to grant the prayer in the petition would involve, he straight way proceeded to reject it and thinking that he could dispose of the suit by passing a decree in terms of the award, and describing plaintiff as still a minor acting through a next friend, summarily decided the objection as if they were mere questions of law, and, without taking any evidence, made the award the rule of the Court on 7th January, 1927. This seriously invalidates his decree and even an appeal might have lain against it: cf. Maharajah Joymungul Singh Bahadoor v. Mohun Ram Marwaree (5), Ibrahim Ali v. Mohsin Ali (6) and Dawoodji & Son v. Sherman (7).

The Judge thus had the satisfaction of having washed his hands off the case and I cannot help remarking that he indeed secured for practically statistical purposes one disposal to his credit in respect of a big complicated suit pending on his file ever since 26th November, 1919. The Judges of Civil Courts must realize that justice cannot be broken on the wheel of statistics in this slip shod manner. The real merit of a Judge lies in his turning out work of good quality and not showing large disposal merely for statistical purposes. I wish the Judge in this particular case had realized this ere long in the course of his sufficiently long tenure of office as a Judge and resisted the temptation to puff up statistics of his Court by such a disposal.

The objections which were filed by Mr. Athavle, Pleader, on plaintiff's behalf on 23rd December, 1926, were, if I may say so, premature and even incompetent, as plaintiff who was then major could presumably not be duly represented by him under the appointment made by her next friend, as that authority had legally come to an end, as soon as plaintiff attained majority and the guardian ipso facto ceased to represent her and to act as her next friend for the purposes of the suit, unless the aforesaid Pleader had taken care to obtain a fresh power from plaintiff herself. In short, the whole proceeding was in a state of muddle. If the Judge had bestowed more careful thought to the case and to its special requirements at that stage, in view of the altered state of things, I dare say, he would surely have come to realize the difficulties of the situation, and may possibly not have landed himself or, the plaintiff, at any rate, in still greater difficulties, by making the award the rule of the Court, in his great anxiety and haste to terminate the proceedings by somehow disposing of the objections, and going to the length of even holding that they were barred by limitation. If I may venture to say so, I think, that until the notices prescribed by para. 10 of Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, were given to the parties, there was no obligation on them to file any objections. How far the several objections raised to the filing of the award were likely to affect the validity of the award is a matter on which I advisedly refrain from expressing any opinion at this stage. I am drawing the attention of the Judge to the several defects in his procedure and to the requirements of law in the hope that this will enable him to remedy the defects, at least now, if it were possible for him to do so, and thus to bring his proceedings within the strict rules of procedure sanctioned by law, as far as possible.

As I find that the procedure of the Court below is full of material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and principally, that of rejecting the plaintiff's application dated 7th January, 1927, was highly irregular, I have no alternative but to set aside the decree, and re-open the proceedings, and remand the case for proper disposal thereof, according to law with advertence to the above remarks. The Court below must now formally ascertain from the plaintiff on what date she attained majority; whether she is willing to continue the suit in her own name, or, is desirous of even abandoning it, either wholly or partially, and if so, to what extent; and further, whether she elects to affirm the arbitration proceedings initiated and conducted in her name by her next friend; and her agents, partly during her minority and partly after she attained majority, and so far as the proceedings after majority are concerned, whether she had, as a matter of fact, expressly authorised anybody to act on her behalf. The notices of the filing of the award prescribed by the Statute must now be given to the parties, and they should be called upon to file their respective objections, if any, to the award, and to the passing of the decree in terms thereof. Before doing so it will be necessary for the Judge to see that a proper and duly stamped award is before him.

In this connection I may draw the lower Court's attention to the fact that the award in question is unstamped. Unless and until it is engrossed on a stamp paper, it has no validity and cannot operate as an award. As it stands at present it has no valid existence, so to say, and the Court could not be justified in looking at it, or in acting upon it, for less, could it pass a decree in terms thereof. The executant of the award being the arbitrator, under s. 29 (g) of the Stamp Act, it was his duty primarily to direct any of the parties to provide him with the necessary stamp, and to see that he did not deliver or publish his award on a plain paper, and thus save himself from the blame attaching to him of having evaded the Stamp Law. It will, therefore, be necessary for the Court to remit the award to the arbitrator under para. 14 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code to enable him to pass the necessary order for providing him with the requisite stamp paper for re-writing and engrossing the award thereon, and then submitting it to the Court, after publishing the same to the parties, within a time to be fixed by it, for further action.

In the peculiar circumstances of the case I do not think it fit to award costs of one party against the other in this Court, as both parties are to blame for the faulty procedure. Costs in the Court below will follow event.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 ix, Sch. I, Art. 1 —Suit for foreclosure—Appeal against final decree—Court-fees.

There is no difference in principle between a final decree for sale under O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, and one for foreclosure under r. 3 of the Order and anybody desiring to appeal against a final decree for foreclosure must pay ad valorem Court-fees as in any other appeal from a final decree.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 2nd July, 1926, in Civil Suit No. 7 of 1924.

Messrs. M. B. Niyogi and G. R. Pradhan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar, M. R. Bobde and G. R. Trivedi, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The appellants, who were defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in the lower Court, have filed the present appeal against the order of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated 2nd of July, 1925, granting decree final of foreclosure in favour of the defendant No. 10, Ballabhdas, who is respondent in this appeal. Preliminary decree had been granted on 29th July, 1924, the said Ballabhdas being given a final right to redeem. The grounds of appeal are that as respondent had made no application under O. XXXIV, r. 3 (2), Civil Procedure Code, the lower Court had no jurisdiction to make the decree final and that no notice to appellants had issued before decree final was passed. The third ground, viz., that the lower Court should have awaited the decision of this Court in Civil Revision No. 201 of 1926 before granting decree above, can be easily disposed of. On the said revision, the lower Court's order of substitution of defendant No. 10 was questioned, but that order necessarily merges in the order for final decree and can only now be questioned in the appeal therefrom.

The respondent has raised a preliminary objection to the effect that ad valorem Court-fee should be paid on the petition of appeal, and the decisions in Bajrangi Lal v. Mahabir Kunwar (1) and Jankibai Ramdayal v. Chimna Sadashiv (2) have been relied on in this connection. On behalf of the appellants it has been sought to distinguish these cases on the ground that they relate to final decrees for sale under O. XXXIV, rr. 4 and 5, Civil Procedure Code, while here we are concerned with r. 3 idem. I am unable to see that any difference of principle arises in the matter. The final decree under r. 3 equally stops the litigation and any one desiring to appeal against the connected order must clearly pay Court-fees as in any other appeal from a final decree.

The appellants seek to question the respondent's very right to obtain a decree final and this relief can already be valued in money. I am of opinion, therefore, that an ad valorem fee is payable on the petition of appeal and I order accordingly. I allow time until 1st December, 1927, for making up the deficiency in Court-fees and thereafter further orders will be passed.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), ss. 12, 13, 32.

Tenancy holding—Surrender to unauthorized person—Fraudulent transfer—Suit for possession by landlord, whether triable by Civil Court.

A suit for possession of a tenancy by the sole landlord of a patti in a village against one who claims to have taken a lease thereof from a person, who had taken a surrender of the field after he had ceased to be a co-sharer of the patti is triable by a Civil Court.

The venue in a case is determined by the nature of the claim as brought.

If a document of transfer of non-transferable tenancy land, under the guise of surrender has been fraudulently registered as a deed of surrender, a civil suit by the landlord will lie to set aside such a transfer and to get possession of the land.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 26th November 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 67 of 1925.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Patha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 were owners of Mauza Raysana jointly, and on the plaintiff's application his share was divided into a separate patti and he became the sole owner of patti No. 4 in the village, the partition coming in force on 1st June, 1921. He now sues for possession of field No. 54, contending that the 1st defendant Nago has no right to hold the field and that he had taken wrongful possession of the same from August, 1923. It was said that Ragho, the original tenant of the field, was in possession till 30th January, 1923.

Defendant No. 1 contended that he had taken a lease of the field from defendant No. 2 on the 7th April, 1923, and that he is entitled to possession on the ground that he was duly made a tenant and could not be evicted. Defendant No. 2 admitted that he had taken the field in surrender on 31st January, 1923, and let it out to defendant No. 1 on 7th April, 1923. It was further contended that the plaintiff was not appointed the lambardar of the patti and that the lease was given by defendant No. 1 in the ordinary course of management and with the consent of the plaintiff. It was further contended that the remedy was to get the transfer by Ragho set aside by the Revenue Court and that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction.

The trial Court found that Ragho surrendered the field on 31st January, 1923, and that the deed by which the land was surrendered was a transfer, and further that the plaintiff cannot sue in a Civil Court without setting that transfer aside and the suit is not maintainable. The Judge writes:—

"In this case the patti of the plaintiff was separated and the plaintiff became the sole owner thereof from 1st June, 1921. Thus the defendant No. 2 had no interest in that from 1st June, 1921, onwards. Thus the surrender in favour of the defendant No. 2 was a transfer in favour of a stranger and the remedy of the landlord for such a transfer made in contravention of s. 12 of the Tenancy Act is to go to the Revenue Court to get the same set aside and get possession of the field."

The Judge further writes that "no suit can lie unless and until the surrender is set aside and no suit for possession can lie in this Court."

On appeal the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court holds that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction in the case and that the suit was rightly dismissed. The consideration for Ragho's surrender or transfer to defendant No. 2 was said to be arrears of rent, amounted to Rs. 40.

Now, it is absolutely clear that defendant No. 2 had no right to accept a surrender or transfer of the field for arrears of rent, and he is exactly in the same position as an absolute outsider would be. Can it be seriously contended that, if an outsider resident of another village chooses, to accept a surrender or a transfer from a tenant in another person's patti and then gives the land out to another tenant, the owner of the patti is debarred from pressing his claim in a Civil Court? I do not think so. The plaintiff here is the sole landlord, and as to what took place between Ragho and defendant No. 2 is no concern of his and is void as against him. Further, had the document been executed as a transfer, registration would have been refused so, that registration was obtained by fraud, which vitiates the transaction. After all, the venue in a case is determined by the nature of the claim as brought: see Ganpat v. Trimbak (1). In my opinion, the Civil Courts have a right to try the present suit. I, therefore, set aside the decree of both the lower Courts and remand the case to the trial Court for a fresh decision. Costs will abide the result.

Second appeal from the decree of the First Sub-Judge, Cawnpore.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. N. Sen and B. Malik, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been very ably argued by Dr. Kailash Nath Katju, but notwithstanding his able arguments we remained unconvinced.

The suit of the plaintiffs-appellants for dissolution of partnership and for rendition of accounts has been dismissed by the Courts below on the ground that the partnership, the dissolution of which was prayed for by the plaintiffs, had been dissolved more than three years prior to the institution of the suit giving rise to the present appeal, and as such the suit was time barred. The trial Court after pointing out that "no partnership business was done" after 25th January, 1920, on which date the servants of the firm were dismissed, and the rent of the shops in which the partnership business was carried on was paid, and accounts were finally closed, and that on 20th March, 1920, "every thing was finally disposed of, and the pressing machine had also been removed," and after pointing out the other facts that led to the conclusion that the partners had decided to discontinue the business of partnership and to terminate the partnership, came to the conclusion that the partnership in question was dissolved on or about the end of January, 1920, and as the present suit was filed in April, 1923, the suit was time-barred.

The lower Appellate Court has affirmed the finding of the trial Court. The lower Appellate Court has observed that the partners "knew that there was loss in the dealings in 1920 and it was, therefore, natural that they thought it prudent to stop the business. In my opinion this amounts to a dissolution of the partnership."

It further pointed out that the trial Court had fully discussed the evidence and then summarised its conclusion as follows:

"(1) The trial Court has rightly held that the partnership was dissolved in Magh of Sambat 1976" corresponding to January, 1920.

"In second appeal before us it is argued that the mere fact that the business of the firm was suspended does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the partnership was dissolved, and it is contended that inasmuch as the price of certain of the commodities purchased by the firm that were sent to Calcutta for sale was not received till about the month of August, 1923, it could not be said that the partnership was dissolved before August, 1920. In support of this contention reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel on the case of Sathappa Chetty v. Subramanian Chetty (1) and on the decision of Chunni Lal v. Sheo Charan Lal Lalman (2). It is certainly true that the mere suspension of business of partnership does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that there has been a dissolution of that partnership, but the cessation of the business coupled with the other circumstances may legitimately lead to the inference that the partnership had been dissolved. In this case the lower Appellate Court after pointing out that the business was closed has adopted the reasons given by the trial Court for recording the finding that the partnership in question had been dissolved in January, 1920. The decision in the unreported* case referred to above turns on the peculiar terms of the agreement of partnership evidenced by the documents to which reference was made by the learned Judges in the course of their judgments. In the Privy Council decision relied upon by the learned Counsel it was not laid down by their Lordships as a general proposition of universal application that a partnership cannot be deemed to have been dissolved till all its outstandings have been realised. Having regard to the nature of the particular partnership, which formed the subject-matter of consideration in that case and having regard to the other facts pointed out by their Lordships in the course of their judgment, their Lordships came to the conclusion that the finding of the High Court in that case that the partnership was not dissolved till all the outstandings belonging to the partnership had been realised, was correct.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—First suit disposed of on findings on several issues—Necessary and unnecessary findings, doctrine of—Subsequent suit on same cause of action—Res judicata on general principles—Addition of new reliefs in second suit, effect of.

A instituted a suit against B for recovery of possession of certain properties which belonged to B's deceased husband alleging that he was the nearest heir of the husband of B. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance on the ground that B was not in possession of the properties. On appeal the suit was dismissed on the ground that A had not only failed to show that B was in possession but had also failed to establish that he was the nearest heir of the deceased. A subsequently sued B for the same properties on the same cause of action. He, however, prayed in addition that if B was found to be one of the heirs of the deceased, A might be given possession of his share.

Held, that the suit was barred by res judicata. [p. 675, col. 2.]

Per Walsh, J.—The issue whether A was the nearest heir was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit and was res judicata as it was heard and decided by the Appellate Court. [p. 675, col. 2.]

Per Mukerji, J.—Although where only one particular issue is identical in two different suits, one filed after the other, a question would arise whether the decision on the issue arrived at in the former suit would operate or not as res judicata, yet, where the two suits are identical, the failure of the first suit must bar the trial of the second suit even if no issues were raised in the former suit, under the general principle that no man can be vexed twice over the same cause of action. [p. 676, col. 1.]

Where the two suits are based on the same cause of action and against the same party, the mere addition of new reliefs in the second suit will not remove the bar of res judicata. [p. 676, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Walsh, J.—We have come to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed. There is no question about the parties in this suit being the same as in the previous suit. There is also no question about the relief claimed in this suit being identical with the relief claimed in the former suit. That is clearly shown by the reliefs shown in parallel columns in the judgment of the Munsif. In a suit of this nature it was necessary for the plaintiffs, first, more, as a matter of form, than anything else, to prove that the defendant was in possession; further, that she was a widow claiming to be in possession by virtue of the dower-debt of her deceased husband, and that the plaintiffs were residuary heirs of the deceased husband. It is clear that at the trial of the first suit only one point was decided, namely, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the widow was in possession, and on that ground the suit was dismissed. It may often happen that where, as in these cases, there are three or four issues which the plaintiff has to establish, the Judge may choose to decide all of them, or only some of them, or only one of them, even though in his opinion his decision must be fatal to the plaintiff on all of them. In that sense it may be said not to be necessary for him to decide the other issues besides the first, but it may also be said not to be unnecessary, and certainly not incompetent, to decide the other issues. It so happens that in this case there was an appeal, and it so happens also that the appeal in the former suit was heard by the Judge who has decided this case also in appeal. While agreeing in his disposal of the appeal in the former suit with the view taken by the trial Court, the learned Judge in appeal went on to find that the plaintiffs had also failed to prove that they were the heirs, and also that they had failed to prove that the property belonged to the deceased. No doubt there are cases in which it appears, and must be held, that what one may call the issues on the merits did not arise, or were unnecessary to decide, because the suit has been disposed of on some fundamental preliminary point which puts the plaintiff out of Courts. But the true view, as it seems to me, of a proceeding of that nature is that the issues on the merits do not really arise at all, and that any expression of opinion about them is mere dictum, and the Statute is satisfied by holding that the issues upon which these dicta have been uttered were not "directly and substantially in issue in the former suit."

In our opinion that cannot be said of the present case. There is nothing in the Statute about what is necessary or unnecessary to decide. It is undesirable to import into a section, when the Court's duty is to apply the language of the section to the facts of the case before it, any expression which is not to be found there and the question whether an issue was or was not necessary in a former suit is only a test, and not a statutory provision, to enable the Court to decide what the Statute does require, namely, whether the issue was directly and substantially in issue. In these cases to which I have referred, it may be said that having come to the conclusion that the issue in controversy was not necessary, the Court may go on to hold as a consequence of that, that it was not directly and substantially in issue. But in this particular case the learned Judge had found, and it is a finding of fact, which having been arrived at by an Appellate Court is not open to review in this Court, that he decided as an issue, which was undoubtedly relevant, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the two matters which are sought now to be raised in this suit. That being so, it seems to me quite clear that the issue now in controversy, namely, as to whether the plaintiffs were the heirs of Qamaruddin, was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, and was decided adversely to the plaintiffs by a competent Court of Appeal which disposed of the matter. I think the same result is reached by applying Explanation V namely, that any relief and the issue now in controversy would be part of the relief in the former suit which is not expressly granted by the decree in the former suit is deemed to have been refused. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that this issue, which is now sought to be determined in this suit, was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit and cannot be raised again, having regard to the provisions of s. 11.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the suit dismissed.

Mukerji, J.—I entirely agree with my learned brother that the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed as barred by the principle of res judicata.

The facts of the case are given clearly in the judgments of the Courts below. Briefly they are these: The respondents before us brought a Suit No. 446 of 1924 against the present appellant on the ground that the property in suit was the property of one Qamaruddin who had married the appellant, that the appellant did not inherit in spite of the marriage, because of the marriage not having been consummated and that the respondents were the nearest heirs to Qamaruddin. The suit was heard ex parte and was dismissed by the Court of first instance on the short ground that the present respondents had failed to prove that the present appellant was in possession of the property in suit. Evidently the evidence that was given was of the meagrest kind and did not suffice to prove the several ingredients which were necessary to establish for the success of the plaintiffs. The respondents appealed, but their appeal was dismissed. The learned Appellate Judge held that the evidence not only failed to establish that the present appellant was in possession of the property but it also failed to establish several other matters including the alleged fact that the present respondents were the nearest heirs of Qamaruddin. After the suit had failed the respondents started a fresh suit out of which the present appeal has arisen.

The present suit is for the same property against the same party and on the same cause of action as before. The plaintiffs, however, have added certain reliefs in the present suit which were not to be found in the earlier suit. They added that if the appellant was found to be one of the heirs of Qamaruddin the plaintiffs might be given possession over $\frac{3}{4}$ th of the property. Further, they said that if it was found that the appellant was in possession in lieu of dower the plaintiffs might be given possession on payment of the proportionate dower-debt.

The learned Munsif who heard the present suit was of opinion that the two suits were identical and the addition of new reliefs did not improve matters. The learned Appellate Judge was of opinion that so far as the first relief, viz., for possession of the entire property went, the two suits, being identical, the relief was barred as res judicata. He, however, found that so far as the relief for 3/4ths of the property or the one conditional on payment of dower-debt was concerned, they were not barred as res judicata. His reason was that the finding of the former Appellate Court did not operate as res judicata on the title of the plaintiffs.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court did not quote any rulings in support of his judgment but, evidently, he had in his mind some of the cases decided by this Court and the Privy Council in which it was held that where a suit failed on several issues, for the purposes of res judicata only that issue was material and substantial which, in logical sequence, came first to be decided. These cases went to hold that the decisions on the other issues were to be regarded as unnecessary for the trial of the suit. In my opinion it is not necessary to express any opinion on the question whether in the circumstances of the present suit it was or was not necessary for the Appellate Court to decide the question of title (among other matters) of the plaintiffs. In my opinion the suit fails on a much simpler ground and it is this.

Section 11, Civil Procedure Code, deals with the trial of a former suit and also with the trial of an issue raised in a former suit. Where only one particular issue is identical in two different suits, one filed after the other, a question would arise whether the decision on the issue arrived at in the former suit would operate or not as res judicata. But where the two suits are identical, the failure of the first suit must bar the trial of the second suit even if no issues were raised in the former suit. The principle is well-known, viz., no person can be vexed twice over the same cause of action. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that by the addition of the new reliefs to the suit the plaintiffs had succeeded in establishing that their second suit was based on a different cause of action. The learned Judge gave, as an illustration, the case where a former suit sought the ejectment of the defendant on the ground that he was a trespasser and it was held that he was not a trespasser but a mortgagee. In such a case a second suit for redemption has been allowed under certain circumstances. But, in my opinion, this case is not at all analogous to the case the learned Judge had in his mind. There is no finding anywhere that the defendant was in possession as a mortgagee. It is not a case similar to the case of Maina Bibi v. Vakil Ahmad (1) in which it was held that the second suit by the Muhammadan heirs was not barred as res judicata. I once more emphasize the fact that the two suits are identical and so far as the plaintiffs are concerned they have come in the second suit on the self-same allegations on which they instituted the earlier suit. It was never found by any Court that the defendant was in possession in lieu of her dower and that so long as she was in possession she could not be dispossessed. It was the plaintiffs themselves who invented the suggestion that the defendant might be in possession in lieu of dower. In the circumstances, I can find no difference whatsoever between the two suits. The first suit having been heard and dismissed on the merits the second suit must be dismissed as res judicata irrespective of the question whether any particular issues are to be treated as having been decided or not. I would, as already stated, allow the appeal and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs-respondents.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 154, 193—Order remanding case for assessment of revenue and otherwise dismissing suit—Second appeal, whether lies—Order of remand, nature of.

In a suit under s. 154 of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901, the Assistant Collector held that the defendants were rent-free grantees and liable to resumption and accordingly assessed the rent. On appeal by the defendants the District Judge held that the defendants had been in adverse proprietary possession and declared them to be proprietors under s. 158 of the Act. He accordingly made an order to the following effect: "I would remand the case to the Assistant Collector with instructions to assess revenue on the land; otherwise the plaintiffs' suit stands dismissed with costs".

Held, that the order of the District Judge, in spite of the order dismissing the suit, was one of remand and that consequently no second appeal lay from it. [p. 679, col. 1.]

Even though all the important points in a case have been disposed of and the case has practically been decided on the merits, if something is still left to be done by the Court of first instance, before the suit is finally disposed of, the order can only be an order of remand and not a final decree. [ibid.]

Anandgir v. Srinivas (1) and Rao Adya Saran Singh v. Jagannath (2), referred to.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Allahabad.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Boys, J.—This purports to be a second appeal from the Appeal No. 269 of 1923 filed in the Court of the District Judge of Allahabad on the 11th of August, 1923, and decided by him on the 23rd of September, 1924. The question is whether a second appeal to this Court lies or not, and that has to be determined by a decision as to whether the order of the 23rd of September, 1924, is merely an order of remand, is a decree or is a combination of the two, partly a decree and partly an order of remand.

The suit was brought by the plaintiffs as a suit under Chap. X of the Tenancy Act, (Local) II of 1901. The plaintiffs asked for assessment of rent on the defendants. The defendants claimed to be nankardars and claimed that that was equivalent to being proprietors. The trial Court, the Assistant Collector, held the defendants to be liable to assessment to rent. On appeal the learned

District Judge held that he was bound by a finding between the parties in a litigation in 1897 that the defendants were nankardars. He did not specifically consider, as far as I appreciate his judgment, whether that finding involved their not being liable to assessment to rent. In the suit in question in 1917 the only question was whether they were liable to ejectment, and it was found that they were not so liable. The learned Judge then proceeded to dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs on the ground that the defendants were nankardars. Did this order stand alone, I should find it myself very difficult to hold that it did not amount to a decree pure and simple.

It happens, however, that under the Tenancy Act in these cases there is a provision for the Court taking a further step if it arrives at a conclusion such as that already quoted by me as having been arrived at in the present case; and that is, that steps be taken to assess the revenue which the defendants may be liable to pay. In this case no dispute arose before the learned District Judge as to whether the defendants could be assessed to pay revenue or not. They expressed their willingness to pay. The learned District Judge then proceeded, after dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs, to remand the case to the trial Court with instructions to assess revenue.

The defendants were content but the plaintiffs have filed a second appeal against this order of the District Judge. The appeal is filed against the dismissal of the plaintiffs' suit.

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies; because the order was an order of remand and that no appeal against such an order of remand is provided for in the Tenancy Act, and reliance is placed on the decision reported as Anand Gir v. Srinivas (1). In that case (I quote from the record which I sent for) the order from which an appeal was filed in this Court was as follows:—

"It is ordered that the decree of the lower Court, dated the 13th March, 1916, be set aside and the appeal be allowed to the extent that the plaintiff is entitled to be declared a rent-free grantee of so much of the land in suit as he (sic) is entered in revenue papers as occupancy tenant of, and that the suit be remanded to the lower Court for determination of the revenue payable by the plaintiff-appellant. The appellant do get proportionate costs of this appeal."

That order is on the printed form headed as "decree in appeal" and reference is made in the form to O. XLI, r. 35. The particular printed form on which the order is endorsed can in no way be a decisive factor and the order itself must be looked at. I find it impossible to distinguish that order in any material particular from the order in the present case. It was held in Anandgir v. Srinivas (1) that the order of remand following upon what would by itself undoubtedly have been a decree was sufficient to convert the whole order into an order of remand from which no appeal would lie.

I am not aware that this decision has ever been referred to except in Rao Adya Saran Singh v. Jagannath (2) in which case their Lordships declined to consider the correctness or otherwise of the decision. Personally I am not able to feel satisfied that the first portion of the order of the District Judge is not definitely a decree, and if that be so, it appears to me that an appeal should be held competent against it. There have been many decisions of the Board one way and the other, though as I have said the matter only appears to have been the subject of one single decision, to which I have referred, in this Court.

I am unable myself to interpret the first portion of the order in question as anything other than a decree. It definitely decides the relations between the plaintiffs and the defendants and the status of the defendants.

If after the trial Court has decided the question of the amount of revenue to be paid by the defendants both parties are agreed that it is a reasonable decision, there would not, on the merits of that decision, be any appeal at all. Nor can it be said that if the parties are debarred now from filing a second appeal, they could later challenge the finding of the District Judge by filing an appeal from the decision of the trial Court in the matter of revenue, even though they were content with that finding, for the finding of the trial Court in the matter of revenue would not raise any question of the proprietary title and an appeal from the finding of the trial Court, the Assistant Collector, would have to be filed in the Court of the Commissioner.

(2) 78 Ind. Cas. 391; 22 A. L. J. 235; 46 A. 323; A. I. R. 1924 All. 561; L. R. 5 A. 49 Rev.

It is clear that no revision, from the order of the District Judge will now lie in this Court in view of the most recent Full Bench. If then the first part of the District Judge's order is not to be construed as a decree, it would seem that it is final for all time and can never be challenged either in appeal or in revision. These are considerations to some extent merely of expediency and it may be argued that if that is the result it is the fault of the Legislature and the Courts are not responsible for such a disastrous result. This is to some extent the view that was taken in Anandgir v. Srinivas (1). In the present case I do not, of course, suggest that these considerations are grounds for holding that what is not a decree in the ordinary acceptation of the term, should be twisted into being held a decree. I am definitely of opinion that the order of the District Judge dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs and declaring the defendants to be nankardars was definitely a decree and as such appealable, notwithstanding that there may be on the same bit of paper an order remanding another aspect of the case to the trial Court.

I am not, however, able to distinguish this case from the decision in Anandgir v. Srinivas (1). But I am bound by it, sitting as a Single Judge. The case will undoubtedly, whichever way I decide it, whether in accordance with my own view, or in accordance with the case reported as Anandgir v. Srinivas (1), be taken up further in appeal under the Letters Patent. It seems desirable, therefore, to settle the matter forthwith by referring the case to two Judges.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Messrs. N. P. Asthana and N. C. Basu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred to a Bench of two Judges. This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by certain zemindars under s. 154 of the old Agra Tenancy Act. The Assistant Collector held that the defendants were rent-free grantees and liable to resumption and accordingly assessed the rent. On appeal by the defendants, the District Judge came to a contrary conclusion. He held that the defendants have been in adverse proprietary possession of the lands and declared them to be proprietors under s. 158. He went on to hold that the suit ought to be dismissed. But finding that the revenue directed to be assessed under the section had not been determined he passed an order in the following words:—"I would allow the appeal and set aside the order and decree of the Assistant Collector.....I would remand the case to the Assistant Collector with instructions to assess revenue on the land; otherwise the plaintiffs' suit stands dismissed with costs on the ground that the defendants are nankardars." By the word 'otherwise' he clearly meant 'in other respects.' He further remarked that he had no objection to the Assistant Collector postponing the assessment of revenue in case the matter was taken up in second appeal.

It is from this decree or order that this appeal has been preferred. A preliminary objection was taken before the learned Judge before whom this appeal came up first that no second appeal lay. Having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case the learned Judge was inclined to the view that it would be very hard on the plaintiffs if they are deprived of all remedy. He, however, felt that he was unable to distinguish the present case from the decision in Anandgir v. Srinivas (1).

The decree passed by the learned District Judge is couched in unhappy language and it is also clear that it would have been much better and would have saved the parties considerable trouble if the learned Judge had merely sent down an issue to the first Court for the determination of the revenue and not remanded the case. As things, however, stand it is quite clear that the case was not finally disposed of on the 23rd of September, 1924. It did go back to the Assistant Collector's Court and had to be restored to its original number in that Court. It seems to us that an order which does not dispose of a case finally for the time being, (subject of course, to any further appeal), cannot be called a decree which terminates the case. It may be that all the important points have been disposed of and the case has for all practical purposes been decided on the merits; but if something is still left to be done by the Court of first instance before the suit is finally disposed of, the order can only be an order of remand and not a final decree.

This was the view expressed by a Bench of this Court in Anandgir's case (1) referred to above. We agree with Boys, J., that it is very difficult to distinguish the present case from that reported case. The Act has now been amended and the difficulty created by the provisions of the old Act is not likely to arise in future. We are also unable to take a different view from that taken in the reported case which has been followed in numerous cases since then.

We must accordingly hold that the order passed by the District Judge was not a decree, but an order of remand, and that no second appeal lies to this Court, vide, Zohra v. Mangu Lal (3).

We prefer to express no opinion as to any future remedy that may be open to the appellants. The appeal is accordingly dismissed, but in view of the peculiar circumstances of this case we do not think that the appeal was a wholly futile one. We direct that the parties should bear their own costs of this appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 115, 116, 132—Vendor and purchaser—Amount reserved for payment of prior mortgage—Failure of vendee to pay—Suit by vendor for recovery of amount reserved—Prayer for enforcing lien—Limitation—Cause of action.

Where a sale-deed merely recites that the vendee should, out of the sale price, pay off a prior mortgage, without giving the vendee the option to pay it off at some future time or to pay it off whenever he pleased, the presumption is that the vendee is to pay immediately, or if not immediately, at any rate as soon as is reasonably possible; and limitation for a suit to recover the amounts so reserved from the vendee begins to run from the date of the sale-deed or at least within a reasonable time therefrom. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This defendants' appeal arises out of a suit "for enforcement of a hypothecation lien.....by sale of the property specified." The only question with which we are concerned is whether Art. 132 of the Limitation Act or whether Art. 116/115 applies, and whether the suit is barred by limitation. The facts are as follows:—

One Dewan Singh, whose heir is the present plaintiff, had two properties, which we will call A and B. On the 19th of September, 1902, he executed a simple mortgage of both the properties A and B in favour of Ramrich Pal.

On the 18th of November, 1905, he sold the property A to the present defendants for Rs. 700 leaving with them Rs. 480 to pay off the mortgage in favour of Ramrich Pal.

On the 20th of July, 1905, Dewan Singh executed another mortgage in favour of Shamsundar, hypothecating the property B. The defendants did not discharge the mortgage in favour of Ramrich Pal, and accordingly properties A and B both remained subject to the mortgage. The excuse of the defendants for their default was that they did not get possession of the whole of the property, but that excuse appears to have been merely a pretext, for the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court remarks:—

"It is further urged for the appellant that the vendees did not obtain mutation of the whole of the property sold and that consequently the whole claim should not have been decreed. It appears that the vendees for a long time have lain low and have taken no steps to obtain the small area of which they did not get possession."

It is further to be noted that it is not suggested on behalf of the present plaintiff, the mortgagor, that he took any steps whatever to see that the vendees did discharge the first mortgage. So far, therefore, as responsibility for the subsequent confusion can be attributed to either, it would seem that they must both bear it equally.

The next step was taken by Ramrich Pal, the prior mortgagee of properties A and B, by filing a suit, No. 167 of 1911, in which on the 1st of July, 1911, he obtained a decree for Rs. 1,332-2.

Shamsundar, the puisne mortgagee of property B, then brought a suit, No. 1049 of 1911, on his own mortgage and obtained a decree for Rs. 519-7. Shamsundar next proceeded to pay up the decree of the prior mortgagee and secured for himself a consolidated decree for Rs. 2,229-1-3. He proceeded to execute this decree, and in order to save his property the mortgagor paid, on the 15th of January, 1918, a sum of Rs. 1,000 and on the 15th of April, 1918, a further Rs. 400. A sum of about Rs. 700 odd remained unsatisfied, and Shamsundar proceeded to execute his decree for the balance. In pursuance of this execution the property A was sold at auction, and the defendants, who, it will be remembered, were the purchasers of property A, got the sale set aside on payment of Rs. 758. This did not, however, wholly satisfy the consolidated decree, for in the interval further interest had accumulated and there remained due at the date of the present suit to Shamsundar Rs. 377-13.

The net result was that to pay off the consolidated decree against the properties A and B the plaintiffs, heirs of the mortgagor, had paid a total amount of Rs. 1,400. The defendants had paid Rs. 758, and a balance still remained due of Rs. 377-13.

In the present suit the plaint recites these facts and the plaintiff claims that though he paid Rs. 1,400, only Rs. 707, out of the consolidated decree was due to the mortgagee of property B originally in favour of Shamsundar, and that that is all he should have had to pay, and that the defendants were really responsible for the balance of Rs. 693 which the plaintiff had paid and which he never would have had to pay if the defendants had, according to their original agreement of sale, paid half of the mortgage in favour of Ramrich Pal of properties A and B. Plaintiff further claims about Rs. 301 interest. He also urges that before his property B can be held to be perfectly secure, there is the balance of Rs. 377-13 to which Shamsundar is still entitled as the unpaid balance of his consolidated decree. Plaintiff, therefore, also claims this sum from the defendants, apparently on the allegation that he may himself at any time be called upon to pay it if he desires to save his property.

It will be noted that the sale-deed is dated 1905, and the condition that the vendee was to pay Rs. 480 to discharge the first mortgage had no condition attached to it that the Rs. 480 was to be paid at any particular time, or that the defendants could choose their own time for payment, provided that they were responsible for future interest that might accumulate and provided that they paid off the mortgage in time to save the property from being put to sale—a proceeding which would have resulted in the property also being in danger of being sold which the mortgagor had kept with himself. The plaintiff has not brought his suit till 1922, and it is contended for the defendants that the suit is barred by limitation as coming within Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. For the plaintiff it is contended that Art. 116/115 is applicable.

We will consider first which of the two Articles is applicable and then consider whether the suit would be within time even if the plaintiff's contention were to be accepted that Art. 116/115 was the appropriate Article. It appears to us that the plaintiff's suit is avowedly one to which Art. 132 is applicable. The relief asked for is not for compensation for a breach of contract. It is specifically a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property. He specifically asks for "the enforcement of a hypothecation lien by sale" of the property, and that really can only have reference to s. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. It is true that the plaintiff asks for sale of the property in satisfaction of his claim for a sum of Rs. 1,367-8, a total which he arrives at by adding together a sum which he has had to pay so far to preserve the property, interest thereon and the sum which he may be called upon to pay in the future. It may be that if his relief was properly framed as a claim under s. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, it should have been a claim for Rs. 480 together with interest to date. The fact, however, remains strikingly apparent in the suit as framed that it was a claim for "enforcement of a hypothecation lien" and not a suit for compensation for breach of contract. On the face of it, therefore, Art. 132 is the most appropriate Article to apply. It requires very little experience of the Limitation Act to know that in many cases, in addition to the obviously appropriate Article, there are other Articles which can by forced reasoning be, to some extent at any rate, applicable. In our view, however, Art. 132 is clearly the Article applicable to a relief asking for enforcement of a hypothecation lien. (We quote from the relief). This is really sufficient in our view for a decision of the case. Neither of the Courts below has discussed the applicability of Art. 132. They have contented themselves with giving reasons for holding Arts. 116/115 to be applicable. It is, therefore, desirable to say a few words in reference to those Articles. In holding them applicable neither of the Courts has thought it necessary to consider the language of the Articles themselves, but both Courts have contented themselves, with referring to certain rulings. Article 116 merely refers back to Art. 115, and that says that limitation for a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract is to run from the date "(a) when the contract is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases." Neither of the two later conditions is applicable here. We should merely have to consider "when was the contract broken." Bearing in mind the terms of the conditions in the sale-deed, which were merely that the mortgage was to be paid off, without giving the vendee the liberty to pay it off at some future time or to pay it off whenever he pleased, provided that he was responsible for future interest and paid it off before the property was endangered, the presumption is that he was to pay it off immediately or, if not immediately, at any rate as soon as was reasonably possible. It matters little whether that period be held to be 24 hours or a week. He clearly, therefore, broke his contract on the 18th of February, 1905, when he undertook to pay off the mortgage, or within a very short but reasonable period therefrom. Compare Raghubar Rai v. Jai Rai (1). Incidentally it may be noted that in that case Art. 116 was applied but the pleadings were admittedly not clear, and both sides agreed that the suit was to be considered as one for damages on breach of the covenant.

Even, therefore, applying Art. 116/115 the suit would appear to be barred by limitation. This aspect of the case the Courts have not considered. The trial Court relied on the case of Hakim Ali Khan v. Dalip Singh (2). In that case it was held that limitation would run from the date on which the mortgagor or his successor-in-title had to pay the decretal amount. There is nothing in that case to show what were the terms of the contract between the mortgagor and his vendee. Nor is it clear how the suit was framed; nor was there any discussion as to the applicability of Art. 132 or Art. 116/115. In Ishri Pershad v. Muhammad Sami (3) the contract between the mortgagor and a subsequent mortgagee who failed to discharge the prior mortgage with the money left in his hands for that purpose was wholly different to that in the present case. In the contract there the mortgagee had undertaken all responsibility for further interest and could pay the prior mortgage at any time he pleased, and it was held that the cause of action, therefore, did not accrue on the date of the contract but arose only when the mortgagor was damnified.

The result is that we set aside the decree of both the lower Courts and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 10.—Right of pre-emption—Transfer under compromise decree, whether amounts to sale and gives rise to pre-emption.

A transfer which is effected under a decree of a Court, even though the decree is based on a compromise, is not a sale and cannot, therefore, be pre-empted under the Agra Pre-emption Act. [p. 683, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated the 1st June, 1925.

Mr. S. B. Johari, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gadadhar Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think the judgments of both the Courts below in this case are wrong. The suit was a suit for pre-emption and the transfer in respect of which the right of pre-emption was claimed was described as being a transfer by way of sale. Both the Courts below were of opinion that this transfer was "tantamount to a sale" and, therefore, pre-emption was allowed.

The facts may be stated very shortly as follows: By an arrangement which was made under a compromise decree one Jagarnath became liable to transfer a one-pie share of property which was coming to him, to one Puran to whom the other party to the decree in that compromise suit owed a sum of Rs. 545.

Jagarnath, having got the property and being in a position to transfer this one-pie share to Puran, as he was bound to do under the terms of the compromise decree just referred to, failed to convey it to Puran. Puran then resorted for help to three men, Paras Ram, Achhru and Phundi Lal and it was arranged between them that a suit should be brought against Jagarnath's representatives (Jagarnath having died in the meantime) in order to make them hand over the one-pie share which Jagarnath had been under an obligation to convey. And so there was a suit between Puran and his three associates on the one side ranged as plaintiffs and Jugul Kishore and Har Das the representatives of Jagarnath who were arrayed as defendants. The result of this case was a compromise upon which a decree was passed and the effect of the decree was that the two defendants, the representatives of Jagarnath, were under the duty of handing over a 12 kharants share to Puran and the other three plaintiffs.

The decree passed on this compromise bears date the 29th October, 1923, and the plaintiff Neksal comes into Court and says that he is entitled to pre-empt the transfer which has been sanctioned by this compromise. As we have said, the Court of first instance said that this transfer under the compromise decree was "tantamount to a sale" and that Neksal was, therefore, entitled to pre-empt. This view has also been accepted by the lower Appellate Court. We do not agree. In the first place, it is clear that under the Agra Pre-emption Act which governs the present case, a right of pre-emption can only be claimed in respect of sale or foreclosure. This is made clear by a reference to s. 10, which defines when a right to bring a suit for pre-emption arises.

The transfers which are pre-emptible being confined to sales and foreclosures we have to consider what the meaning of the term "sale" is in this Act (Act XI of 1922). There is a definition of sale in s. 4 (10), of the Act and it says that "sale" means a sale as defined in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The definition of "sale" in this latter Act is contained in s. 54 and bearing in mind that any transfer under the Transfer of Property Act must be an act such as is described in s. 5 of that Act, "transfer" means an act by which a living person conveys property in present or in future, to one or more living persons, or to himself or one or more other living persons, and "to transfer property" is to perform such act. It seems to us to be impossible to apply this definition of "transfer" and of "sale" in the Transfer of Property Act to a decree of a Court and we cannot, therefore, allow the contention that a transfer which is effected under the sanction of a decree of Court can be treated as a sale and can be pre-empted under the Agra Pre-emption Act. There are two Bench rulings of this Court which are referred to in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. One is Intizar Husain v. Jamna Prasad (1). In that case it was distinctly held by a Bench of this Court that a right of pre-emption does not arise upon a transfer effected by virtue of a decree though the decree is passed upon compromise. In this judgment the learned Judges followed another judgment of theirs reported as Abdur Razzaq v. Mumtaz Husain (2). The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has attempted to distinguish these rulings from the present case, but no valid distinction can be drawn. It is perfectly true that these judgments were delivered before the coming into force of the Agra Pre-emption Act, but that fact cannot make any difference. We are definitely of opinion that a sale which is pre-emptible in this Act must be strictly a sale as defined in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and that a transfer of property which is brought about by a decree of Court cannot for purposes of pre-emption be treated as a sale within the Act.

The result, therefore, is that the plaintiff had no right of suit. We allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and direct that the plaintiff's suit do stand dismissed with costs to the contesting defendants in all three Courts.

OPINION.

Sulaiman, J.—This is a reference under s. 66, Income Tax Act, 1922. It appears that Munshi Makund Sarup in submitting his income-tax returns for the years 1925-26 and 1926-27 did not include the income derived by him from certain usufructuary mortgages in his favour. The Income Tax Officer on this discovery came to the conclusion that such income was derived from money-lending business and was not derived from landed property and, therefore, liable to income-tax. The assessee appealed to the Assistant Commissioner, who relying upon a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Subramanya Sasirigal (reported in Mr. P. R. Srinivasa's Reports of Income-tax cases, Volume II, Part III, page 152) dismissed the appeal. The assessee then requested the Commissioner to refer the question of law which arose in this case to the High Court. The Commissioner has formulated the question for consideration in the following words :

(1) 1 A. L. J. 247.

(2) 27 A. 334; A. W. N. (1903) 63.

"If a person carrying on money-lending business lends money in the course of such business on the security of lands of which he takes a usufructuary mortgage, and if he immediately leases those lands back to the mortgagor with a stipulation for fixed annual payments, which amount to a definite percentage ($8\frac{1}{2}$ in the case cited above) on the sum advanced, should those annual payments be excluded from the assessment of the profits and gains of his business as being agricultural income within the meaning of s. 2 (1) (a), Indian Income Tax Act, 1922 ?"

The main question underlying this reference appears to be whether if the case is not that of a pure usufructuary mortgage, but one where there is a simultaneous grant of a lease of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor so that the net result is that the mortgagee obtains regular cash payments representing interest on his capital, the latter is exempted from liability to pay income-tax.

Section 3 of the Act in the first place makes all income, profits and gains liable to income-tax, but s. 4 contains an exemption clause which among other matters provides that the Act shall not apply to "agricultural income." New agricultural income is defined in s. 2, sub-cl. (1) (a), as being any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes and is either assessed to land revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collections by Government and collected by officers of the Government as such. And under cl. (b) agricultural income is also income which is derived from such lands by agriculture. These two clauses undoubtedly indicate that the agricultural income can either be derived by a person who is actually carrying on agriculture or cultivation, or it may represent the rent received by him from land which is used for agricultural purposes though the person who received the rent may not himself be cultivating that land.

It seems necessary to clear the ground by first considering the question whether a pure usufructuary mortgagee is liable to pay income-tax. The learned Advocate for the Crown has laid great stress on the assumption in the reference that the present assessee is carrying on money-lending business and that it was in the course of such business that he has invested his capital, the return of which is his income from these lands. It is, therefore, his contention that his gains are gains of business and not rent. It may be conceded that the profits made by a usufructuary mortgagee even though arising out of the land mortgaged to him, are gains of his business, if he has taken this mortgage in the course of his business as an investment. But this concession does not necessarily involve an admission that such gains of business are not rent within the meaning of s. 2 so as to exempt him from liability to pay income-tax. The money which actually comes into the hands of a pure usufructuary mortgagee may be rent received direct from tenants or may be the profits from actual cultivation. It is, therefore, either rent derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, or is income derived from land by agriculture. In either case it is agricultural income. It may also happen to be gains of his business, but that does not necessarily take him out of the exemption clause.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that in the case of a pure usufructuary mortgagee there is no liability to pay income-tax. The position of such a mortgagee is very much analogous to that of a proprietor who is entitled to have his name recorded in the revenue papers and is for the purposes of Revenue Courts treated as a co-sharer. He is also entitled to sue for arrears of rent, eject tenants and to enter into possession and cultivate the land himself, as the proprietor himself could have done. He is further liable to pay Government revenue which a simple mortgagee is not. His position is analogous to that of a lessee who takes a lease of agricultural lands, say for a fixed period on payment of some nazrana. The latter class of transferees cannot be liable to the payment of income-tax. It is thus clear that the income received by a usufructuary mortgagee is really agricultural income, though it just happens to be also a return for the capital invested by him. To hold that he is liable to pay both Government revenue and income-tax would be imposing a double taxation which is against the policy of the Act.

Coming to the next question whether even if a usufructuary mortgagee is not liable to pay income-tax, a mortgagee who at the same time leases back the mortgaged land to the mortgagor with a stipulation that there would be a fixed annual payment calculated on the basis of rate of interest agreed upon between the parties is in a worse position. It seems to me that to hold that such a person is liable to pay income-tax would amount to holding that the transaction is not that of a usufructuary mortgage but almost a simple mortgage. It is impossible to hold in this case that the transaction was not that of a usufructuary mortgage. No doubt the mortgage-deed and the lease were executed at one and the same date and the cross-references in the two documents indicate that the whole transaction was settled at one time. Nevertheless there are certain distinguishing features which make the position of the present usufructuary mortgagee quite distinct from what it would have been if he had taken a purely simple mortgage. He has under the lease the right to recover rent through the Revenue Court which very often is a speedy remedy. He has also the security of the fixed amounts being paid to him regularly year after year with the option of entering into possession on the default of such payment. If he enters into possession after the ejectment of the mortgagor he is entitled to cultivate lands himself or to let the lands to tenants and receive profits from them. Under these circumstances it seems impossible to hold that the position of the assessee is that of a purely simple mortgagee who is liable to pay income-tax.

With regard to the Full Bench case of the Madras High Court relied upon by the Assistant Commissioner, I need only say that the judgment is very brief and contains no reasons in support of the view urged on behalf of the Crown. The learned Judges appeared to have assumed that the finding of fact arrived at by the Commissioner who had made the reference necessarily involved the result of the reference being answered in the negative. Perhaps they meant to assume that the finding of the Commissioner, that in that case the transaction was merely a device to evade the payment of the income-tax and was not in reality a transaction of the usufructuary mortgage and the income was not derived from the land but from a business of the vendee, was a finding of fact which could not be disturbed. I am not saying that the remarks of the Income Tax Officer, did in reality amount to a finding of fact. But the learned Judges appear to have treated it as such, and on that assumption held that the answer must be in the negative.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the answer to the question should be in the affirmative, and the annual payments should be excluded from assessment.

Banerji, J.—I agree. I am of opinion that upon the facts of the present case the income which is derived by the assessee is income which comes within the definition of agricultural income in s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act. The mere fact that the usufructuary mortgagee has granted a lease to the mortgagor, in my opinion, does not alter what in law is the effect of the document executed by the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee. It still remains a usufructuary mortgage and in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, although it would come within the definition of business, it is exempted from the operation of the Act by reason of the definition of agricultural income in s. 4 which says that any income derived from any rent from land which is used for agricultural purposes is exempted from taxation. In my opinion in no case can the profit which the usufructuary mortgagee receives be called anything but rent derived from land used for agricultural purposes.

Ashworth, J.—I concur. The owner of agricultural land who leases land is admittedly not liable to income-tax on the rent received. A usufructuary mortgagee is, for the time being, the owner of agricultural land, and so long as the mortgage subsists, he is in the same position as an owner. The Government Advocate attempted to distinguish the rent paid to an absolute owner from that paid to a usufructuary mortgagee by drawing a very subtle distinction. His argument was that a person purchasing agricultural land must pay the full market price, while a person taking a usufructuary mortgage of that land will never advance the whole market price. Consequently, by reason of the mortgage, he obtains higher profits on the money invested than a purchaser would, and the difference should be regarded as a profit from the business of money-lending. But the price paid for the acquisition of land cannot affect the character of the land acquired. A usufructuary mortgagee is, like the owner of agricultural land free from payment of income-tax, because the land is liable to land revenue. My researches into the history of land revenue have inclined me to believe that it is in reality a rent claimed by Government but collected under the procedure applicable to a tax. The exception in s. 2, Income Tax Act, however, proceeds on a different assumption. It is clear that the exemption is made on the ground that the owner, temporary or otherwise, of agricultural land should not be liable to two forms of taxations, land revenue and income-tax.

If we concede that a usufructuary mortgagee is not liable for income-tax in respect of the mortgaged land, provided that the land is agricultural, then the question referred to us amounts to this: Does it make any difference when by means of a lease, forming a single transaction along with the mortgage, the mortgagee restores possession to the mortgagor, and himself, in the form of rent, receives sum equal to the land revenue plus interest at a definite rate? The answer to this depends on whether the result of the two deeds could have been effected in toto by a simple mortgage-deed. My learned brother has shown that this was not the case. The result of the execution of the two deeds is fraught with consequences that would not attach to the execution of a simple mortgage-deed. One transaction differs from the other not merely in form, but in substance.

The Commissioner of Income-Tax has not suggested in his reference to this Court that the transaction of a usufructuary mortgage and a lease was fraudulent, or colourable, or that the legal consequence of the execution of both deeds can be avoided on this ground; but he has referred to a decision of the Madras High Court in which this point is raised.

There can be no doubt that the decision by the Madras High Court was reasonably invoked by the Income-tax Commissioner. It appears, therefore, desirable to examine that decision both to see how far it is on all fours with the present case, and, if so, on what grounds dissent from it should be expressed. The main distinction to my mind between the reference to the Madras High Court and this reference is that there was undoubtedly forwarded to the Madras High Court an expression of opinion, treated by the Madras High Court as a finding of fact, which is wanting in the reference to this Court. In that reference the Income Tax Commissioner had stated:

"The income received or receivable by the capitalist is not income derived from land, but income derived from the business of money-lending. It appears to me that Taxing Authorities and Courts in such a case as this must look to the substance of the transaction. The source of the petitioner's income is his money-lending business, and the mortgage and lease back are merely devices adopted partly to protect his capital and partly to secure his business from liability to income-tax. It is evident from the drafting of sub-s. (2) (1), Income Tax Act XI of 1922, that the object of the exemption of agricultural income is to avoid subjecting the income from land to double taxation, once in the form of land revenue and once in the form of income-tax."

On this reference the judgment of the Madras High Court was as follows:

"The finding of fact in this case necessarily involves that the question propounded in the reference should be answered in the negative."

Now the question of fact found by the Madras High Court was presumably that the income assessed was not derived from land. If this finding had been stated without reasons, it would clearly have been a simple finding of fact and would have precluded the interference of the High Court. It appears that the Madras High Court treated the reference as containing such a finding of fact, and so it did not discuss the question of law referred to us. In the present reference, on the contrary, all questions that can be raised are left open.

It appears, however, to me desirable to state that if the terms of the reference and the decision of the Madras High Court are rightly reproduced in the publication placed before this Court, what was submitted to the Madras High Court was not merely a finding of fact, but a finding of fact based upon an interpretation of the Income-Tax Act and on a certain proposition of law, from both of which it is necessary to express dissent. The Act does not make the distinction drawn in that reference between income derived from business and income derived from land. The business of money-lending may bring in an income, which is exempt from income-tax on the ground that it is derived from agricultural land. Nor again can the Taxing Authorities avoid an implication arising from the form of a transaction on the ground that, except for a desire to escape income-tax, the transaction would have taken a different form, which is what is meant in that reference by "looking at the substance of the transaction." It is not unlawful to avoid, by any means not forbidden by law, rendering oneself liable to the payment of income-tax, though it is an offence by false return or by concealment to evade payment of income-tax. In this connexion I would quote the remarks of Lord Cairns on the interpretation of a Taxing Statute:

"If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible, in any Statute, what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a Taxing Statute, where you can simply adhere to the words of the Statute." Partington v. Attorney-General (1).

For the above reasons I would concur in answering the question propounded in the affirmative.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 403 (1) —Rash driving resulting in hurt—Conviction under Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914), s. 5—Fresh prosecution under ss. 279, 338, Penal Code, whether barred.

A motor driver, who drove recklessly and thereby caused grievous hurt to a person, was convicted under s. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act. He was subsequently prosecuted under s. 279 of the Penal Code. It was contended on behalf of the accused that the second prosecution was barred under s. 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that though the accused could not be prosecuted for an offence under s. 279 of the Penal Code or for any offence circumscribed by the rash driving, yet his conviction for rash driving could not protect him from prosecution for the consequences of such rash driving under s. 338 of the Penal Code. [p. 688, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mainpuri.

Mr. S. N. Chaube, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, a driver of a motor lorry, was once convicted of an offence under s. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act VIII of 1914 for reckless driving. The reckless driving resulted in the lorry knocking against the chabutra on which one Kallu butcher was sitting and fracturing the bones of his left leg. He is now being prosecuted under s. 279 for rash driving and causing grievous hurt by doing any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life and the personal safety of others.

It is submitted here as it was in the Court of Session that the applicant's further prosecution is barred under the provisions of s. 403 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A person, who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence, shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under s. 236, or for which he might have been convicted under s. 237. In my opinion the argument will apply to one set of cases and not to the other. Under s. 235 (1) an accused person may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, every offence which he may have committed, if in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, more offences than one are committed by the same person. Under s. 403 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, the provisions of s. 235 (1) are not made applicable to those different offences committed in one series of acts. In the present case the one series of acts of the applicant consisted of rash and negligent driving and of knocking against human being and thereby causing hurt to him. The learned Counsel for the applicant argued that there was only one act and not a series of acts. I cannot agree on this point. The one act was the act of rash driving, and even if the applicant's lorry had not knocked against the chabutra and had not injured the butcher, he would still have been liable for reckless driving. There was not only one act of reckless driving but a subsequent act of knocking against a man during such rash driving. It is clear to me, therefore, that his conviction for rash driving cannot protect him from prosecution for the consequences of such rash driving either under s. 325 or s. 338 of the Indian Penal Code. The trial is still pending and has not been concluded, so this Court is not in a position to give any opinion as to what offence has been committed. It is true that the provisions of s. 403 (1) would cover an offence under s. 279, because at the former trial on the same fact of rash driving the applicant could have been prosecuted under s. 279 for rash driving on the public road so as to endanger human life. I do not think that the offence of rash driving which is dangerous to the public, and rash driving so as to endanger human life can be separated though these offences are punishable under different Acts. I am of opinion that the applicant could no longer be tried for an offence under s. 279 or any offence circumscribed by the rash driving. As to the result of the rash driving the applicant must stand his trial for the grievous hurt caused to the butcher. It seems to me that the Magistrate took the same view that the applicant could still be tried under s. 338 of the Indian Penal Code. That is the correct view and the trial should proceed under s. 338, Indian Penal Code, and not under ss. 279 and 325, Indian Penal Code. Obviously, the learned Sessions Judge had not noted this point when he wrote a para. of good advice to the trying Magistrate. I dismiss this application in which also reference is made only to s. 338, Indian Penal Code. It would, however, be more proper to give a further order and to state that the applicant may be prosecuted under s. 338, Indian Penal Code, and not under ss. 279 and 325, Indian Penal Code.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 156, 165—Investigation by Police—Entry into house of stranger to verify truth of statements received during investigation, legality of.

The only authority which a Police Officer making an investigation has to enter a house without a search warrant is when he has reasonable grounds for believing that anything necessary for purposes of an investigation into any offence which he is authorised to investigate, may be found in any place within the limits of the Police Station of which he is in charge. He has no power to make promiscuous entries into houses simply to satisfy himself as to the truth of an allegation made by a complainant, or an accused or a witness during investigation. [p. 689, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhansi.

Dr. N. C. Vaish and Mr. K. O. Carleton, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—I cannot agree with the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court that a Sub-Inspector while he is holding an investigation on a charge of house trespass in the house of A, has the right to enter the house of A's neighbour B. One Baldeo was caught at night in the house of Ohheda Lal, a neighbour of the applicants, who are father and son. Baldeo's explanation to the Police appears to have been that he was carrying on an intrigue with the applicant Jagannath's wife and the applicant Sunder Lal's mother and was caught as he was escaping from the house of the applicant through the house of Ohheda Lal. The Sub-Inspector thereupon, desired to enter the house of the applicants to satisfy himself whether Baldeo's story was true in so far as the possibility of scaling the partition wall from the side of the applicant's house was concerned. The applicants protested and threatened to shoot the Sub-Inspector. Under s. 156 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the local limits within which an officer-in-charge of a Police Station may investigate a cognizable case are defined. No provision is made there of an indiscriminate power of such an officer to enter houses in the neighbourhood of the place where a cognizable offence may have been committed. The only authority which a Police Officer making an investigation has to enter a house without a search warrant is when he has reasonable grounds for believing that any thing necessary for purposes of an investigation into any offence, which he is authorised to investigate, may be found in any place within the limits of the Police Station of which he is in charge. Obviously the search indicated here is for stolen property or for some document or for some tangible object, such as may be summoned to be produced by a Court under s. 94 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The word 'thing' is specifically mentioned and that would not include a configuration of a wall, or the inspection of any place inside a house for purposes of investigation. The provisions of s. 165 are so strict that before entering a house the Investigating Officer has to specify in writing the thing for which search is to be made and also the ground of his belief that such a thing would be found in the house which he desired to enter. A promiscuous entry into houses is not permitted to an Investigating Officer simply to satisfy himself as to the truth of an allegation made by a complainant or an accused person or a witness. I hold, therefore, that the Sub-Inspector in desiring to enter the house of the applicants was not acting in the discharge of his duty as such public officer.

I would have altered the conviction to one under s. 352 and maintained the sentence, if the Sub-Inspector had merely been acting in ignorance of law, but there have been differences between this Sub-Inspector and the applicants, and by reason of those differences the Sub-Inspector's conduct was not only ill-advised but provocative. About two months previously the applicants had sued the Sub-Inspector for defamation for defaming the wife of Jagannath and the mother of Sunder Lal. The suit I am told was pending in July last when the Sub-Inspector desired to enter the house of the applicants. It will be natural in circumstances for the applicant to suspect that the Sub-Inspector had merely got up this arrest of Baldeo in order to justify his implication of immorality of the woman. The applicants acted under great provocation. I alter the conviction to one under s. 358 of the Indian Penal Code and reduce the sentence to the period already undergone by the applicants. If the applicants are on bail they need not surrender.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 498—Woman living with accused of her own free will—Refusal to accompany husband—Offence.

Where a woman was living with the accused of her own free will, and refused to go back to her husband and the only evidence against the accused was that he helped the woman in her not being taken away by force by the complainant:

Held, that the accused could not be convicted under s. 498, Penal Code.

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Azamgarh.

FACTS appear from the following report of the Sessions Judge:—

REPORT.—The applicant has been convicted under s. 498, Indian Penal Code i. e., for keeping one Musammatt Jagdei the married wife of the complainant in his keeping as his mistress.

Musammatt Jagdei was a widow. The complainant says that after the death of her former husband the said woman made a second marriage with him. The woman denies this fact. There is no evidence in this case that the applicant took or enticed away the woman. All that the evidence shows is that the woman herself went to live with the applicant. This being so the chief element which constitutes the offence under s. 498 is wanting. Again my attention has not been directed to any evidence which could prove that the applicant is keeping the woman in his house for the purpose of an illicit intercourse with her. The woman is not willing to go with the complainant and all that the evidence on the record shows is that the applicant also helped the woman in her not being taken away by force by the complainant. In this way the utmost that can be said against the applicant is that he is in a way detaining the woman. It has, however, been held in the ruling reported in the case of Lachman Chamar v. Emperor (1) that there can be no detention where the woman is living with a man of her own free will and refused to go back with her husband. The evidence on the record does not, in my opinion, prove the offence under s. 498, Indian Penal Code, with which the accused has been charged and the conviction of the accused does not appear to be proper. Let the record be sent to the learned Magistrate for an explanation as to why the case should not be referred to the Hon'ble High Court with a recommendation that the conviction and the sentence passed on the applicant be set aside.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

ORDER.—I am inclined to agree with the Sessions Judge. It does not much matter because the sentence has been served, but I formally accept the reference and set aside the conviction.

A Municipal Board leased certain plots on a roadside. Subsequently, the Board passed a resolution that the roadside should not be leased and that the lessees then in possession must be told to quit. The Executive Officer of the Board promptly issued a notice to the lessees under s. 211 of the U. P. Municipalities Act treating them as trespassers encroaching on a public road, and the applicant, one of the lessees, was prosecuted for disobedience of the order:

Held, that the notice under s. 211 was illegal inasmuch as the applicant was at the time of the notice a lessee whose lease had not been validly determined, and not a trespasser, and that the applicant could not be prosecuted for disobedience of such notice. [p. 691, col. 1.]

Quere.—Whether it is open to the High Court in criminal revision to award compensation to the accused under s. 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 691, col. 2.]

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Municipal Board.

Mr. Wali-ullah, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This revision reveals some very high-handed proceedings on the part of the Municipal Board of Cawnpore. The facts are admitted. The applicant Aminullah was allotted one of the plots given to stall-holders along the side of a public road from Collectorganj up to the LaTouch Road crossing. The terms of the lease have not been disclosed to this Court, but taking them to be most favourable to the Municipality they may be from month to month, terminable at the end of a month. The Municipality passed a resolution that this roadside should not be let out in future to stall-holders and that the present stall-holders should be told to quit. The Municipality was entitled to pass such a resolution and it was the duty of its Executive Officer to give proper notice under s. 111 (h), Transfer of Property Act. The Municipality would then have been able, on the expiration of the legal notice, to determine the lease. What the Executive Officer did was promptly to issue a notice under s. 211 to the lessees to remove themselves, treating the lessees as trespassers making an encroachment on a public road. This practically means, and when brought to the point by the Court, Mr. Saila Nath had to admit, that according to the Municipality all the leases terminated automatically and the lessees became trespassers as soon as the resolution was passed that the Municipality no longer wanted the roadside to be occupied by these lessees. This point of view is, in my opinion, entirely wrong. Reliance is placed on bye-law 15 which has been properly notified and published in the Government Gazette. It is quoted in the judgment of the District Magistrate as below:

"No person shall build, keep a stall or otherwise interfere or encroach upon any land which is the property of His Majesty or of the Board or which is under the control of the Board unless permission to this effect has been duly granted by or on behalf of His Majesty or the Board, and no person shall continue to do so after such permission has ceased to be in force or has been withdrawn."

The argument here is that as soon as the resolution was passed the permission to occupy the roadside had ceased to be in force and had been withdrawn. No such illegal claim by a Municipality can be countenanced. A lease can terminate only according to law and the Municipality is not outside the provision of the Transfer of Property Act. Obviously the last words mean the ceasing of permission or the withdrawing thereof according to law and not at the sweet will of the members of the Municipality. If this claim were permitted it would follow that one day the Municipality might grant a registered lease of a plot of land on a roadside for five years to a certain person, and next day the lease would terminate on a resolution being passed by the Municipality withdrawing the permission to occupy the land. A Municipality is as much bound by law as an individual person. When the notice under s. 211 was issued the applicant was a lessee of the Municipality according to law and was not a trespasser and was not encroaching on any street. The notice under s. 211 was, therefore, illegal and there could be no prosecution under s. 307, Municipalities Act, in consequence of breach of that notice.

It was next argued by Mr. Saila Nath that the applicant became a trespasser and encroached on the street at the termination of the notice. This argument completely gives away the case of the Municipality. If the applicant became a trespasser at some date subsequent to the one on which the notice under s. 211 was issued, then obviously, on the date when the notice was issued, the applicant was not guilty of any encroachment and the notice was certainly illegal. It was incumbent on the Municipality to issue a proper notice as required by the Transfer of Property Act. If such a notice was not complied with it was open to the Municipality to treat the applicant as a trespasser and his possession of the roadside as an encroachment, and to issue a notice under s. 211. On the date when this particular notice was issued the time had not arrived for the termination of the lease nor had the applicant become a trespasser or one who encroached upon the land. On that date the applicant was fully justified in occupying the plot of land that he did and was a lessee of the Municipality. The prosecution was harsh and illegal. I wondered whether it would be possible to compensate the applicant by taking action under s. 250, Criminal Procedure Code. It seems doubtful, however, whether this Court has jurisdiction to pass an order for compensation when the matter comes up in revision. As to the accusation being vexatious I have not the slightest doubt.

I set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine, if any recovered, to be refunded. The order regarding stay of the structure is withdrawn. I explained to Dr. Katju that that matter was not before the Court for decision and he accepted the view. The only matter before the Court was whether the conviction of the applicant under s. 307 was legal or not.

The cutting of the branches of a tree belonging to another with the knowledge that the cutting is likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the owner amounts to mischief punishable under s. 426 of the Penal Code. [p. 692, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Allahabad.

Mr. A. M. Khwaja for the Applicants,

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants Mohammad Hasan and Mujai were convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class under s. 426, Indian Penal Code, and Mohammad Hasan was ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 51 and in default of payment of fine to undergo six months' simple imprisonment and Mujai was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 15 and in default of payment of fine to undergo three months' simple imprisonment. The conviction and the sentences have, on appeal, been upheld by the learned Judge.

I am far from holding that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is satisfactory in every respect, and it appeared to me at one stage of the argument of the learned Counsel for the applicants that the judgment is not in accordance with the requirements of s. 367 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, and that in view of the decision reported as Sunehri v. Emperor (1), I must set aside the decision of the learned Sessions Judge and remand the case back to him with a direction to record a proper judgment in the case. But, on a further consideration, I have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, though not entirely satisfactory, complies with the requirements of s. 367 (1), Criminal Procedure Code.

The points that appear to have been argued before the learned Sessions Judge were as to whether or not the branches of the complainant's trees had been cut and if they were cut did the applicants before me cut those branches. On both points the learned Sessions Judge has recorded a finding adverse to the applicants. The learned Judge has further noted that he had been through the record, and I must take it that his findings on the points noted above are based on a consideration of the entire evidence in the case. The case is a petty one and already much public time has been wasted over it. The findings of the learned Sessions Judge conclude this application which must be rejected.

But out of respect to the arguments addressed at the Bar I must notice certain points that were argued in support of the application, though, in my judgment, there is no substance in either of these points. The first point argued was that, there being no finding by the learned Sessions Judge that the branches were cut with intent to cause wrongful loss or damage to the complainant, the conviction of the applicants under s. 426, Indian Penal Code, was bad in law. In advancing this argument the learned Counsel overlooked the fact that if the branches were cut at the instance of the applicants with the knowledge that the cutting of branches was likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the complainant, the offence of mischief was complete. It has been further argued that it appeared from the statement of two of the prosecution witnesses that the applicants did not actually cut the branches of the complainant's trees but that those branches had been cut by the certain persons at the instance of the applicants. He argues that the applicants not having cut the branches could only be convicted of abetting mischief and inasmuch as they were not charged under s. 426/109, Indian Penal Code, they ought to have been acquitted. I am unable to accede to this contention. The point does not appear to have been argued in either of the Courts below, and it was within the province of the learned Sessions Judge to act upon the testimony of the other witnesses for the prosecution and to come to the finding that he has recorded in the case. On those findings the applicants have been rightly convicted and the sentences passed are appropriate. The application is rejected.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 5—Record of custom in mauza, whether applicable to all tolas—'Tola', 'arazi', meanings of.

Where a wajib-ul-arz records the prevalence of a custom of pre-emption in a mauza, the custom must be taken to apply to all the tolas of the mauza. [p. 693, cols. 1 & 2.]

The word 'tola' does not ordinarily mean a subdivision of a mauza in the language of the Revenue Law but denotes a portion of a village or town which is inhabited by a particular class. [p. 693, col. 1.]

The term 'arazi' means plots of land which, though included within the area of mauzas and mahals, are held on a distinct tenure from, and convey no title to rights or interests in, other parts of the mauzas and mahals. Arazidari lands do not constitute a separate revenue unit by themselves. [p. 693, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Second Additional Sub-Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 22nd April, 1927.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This pre-emption appeal is up for admission under O. XLI, r. 11. The question in the Courts below was whether the plaintiff had a right of pre-emption under s. 5, Agra Pre-emption Act. It was pleaded by way of defence that there was no such right inasmuch as no custom recognizing pre-emption had been recorded in respect of the area in which the property sold was situate.

The first Court held in favour of this defence. The lower Appellate Court held that there was a record of custom and that the plaintiff held a right under s. 5, Agra Pre-emption Act.

It appears that the lands in dispute are included in a very large mauza called Dhimsa in the Gorakhpur District. This mauza contains a number of tolas, and it is said that the lands with which we are concerned are situated in a tola named Bharpur. The case for the defence is that this tola Bharpur is a 16-annas unit and that as no Record of Rights is shown to have been prepared in respect of it—a record showing the prevalence of a custom of pre-emption—therefore, the plaintiff was out of Court.

The lower Appellate Court, however, was of opinion that all these tolas were included in one mauza, Mauza Dhimsa, and as the wajib-ul-arz of Dhimsa was produced and contained a record of custom it must be taken that this custom applied to all these sub-divisions which are described as tolas.

We may mention in the first place, that the word "tola" does not ordinarily mean a sub-division of a mauza in the language of the Revenue Law. Tola ordinarily denotes a portion of a village or town which is inhabited by a particular class.

There is on the record a judgment in a previous case which was fought out under the old law of pre-emption. This case related to one of those tolas in Mauza Dhimsa called tola Dubauli and we notice in the Munsif's judgment that this tola Dubauli was admitted before him to be what he calls an arazidari village of full 16 annas and which he thought was quite separate from Mauza Dhimsa. These arazidari holdings are very common in one part of the Gorakhpur District and it was necessary a few years ago for the Pre-emption Bench in this Court to describe the nature of these arazidari holdings. The matter is fully discussed in the judgment of the Pre-emption Bench reported as Surwan Prasad Tewari v. Basdeo Narain Singh (1). There the definition of Mr. Reid, formerly a Settlement Officer of Azamgarh, was referred to according to which the term "arazi" means plots of land which, though included within the area of mauzas and mahals, are held on a distinct tenure from, and convey no title to rights or interests in other parts of the mauzas and mahals. It is quite clear from this definition that arazidari lands do not constitute a separate revenue unit by themselves. They are lands included in a mahal or mauza lands which are held on a peculiar tenure.

We would not, therefore, expect to find any separate Record of Rights drawn up in respect of these various tolas which are included within the ambit of this very large village called Dhimsa. We think the plaintiff is entitled to rely upon the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of Dhimsa. That is the custom which governs the whole of this area including the area in which the land in dispute is situate. We are satisfied that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is correct and that the plaintiff had a right of pre-emption under s. 5, Agra Pre-emption Act. The appeal is dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11.

Hindu Law—Debts—Mortgage-decree against father—Suit by sons to set aside decree—Sons whether bound to prove illegality of debt—Absence of necessity, effect of—Suit against karta and junior members—Decree, effect of—Presumption as to nature of suit

Per Walsh, J.—When the karta of a joint Hindu family together with the other members of the joint family is sued, it must be taken that he enjoys the dual capacity which he enjoys in the family, that is to say, he is sued both as the karta representing the family and managing the family, and as a member of it, having an undivided interest. [p. 694, col. 1.]

The proposition laid down by the Judicial Committee in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (2) that if the managing co-parcener is the father and the reversioners are the sons, he may, by incurring debts so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt, is applicable to decrees on mortgages as well as simple money-decrees. [p. 695, col. 2; p. 696, col. 2.]

Per Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The answer to the question whether a Hindu son is entitled to challenge a decree obtained against his father for sale of the joint family property without asserting and proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes must depend upon the question whether or not the father was sued as karta and manager of the joint family. If he was, the answer must be in the negative. If he was not, the answer must be in the affirmative. [p. 696, col. 2; p. 697, col. 1.]

The proposition that once the joint ancestral property has passed out of the joint family in execution of a decree for the father's debt his sons cannot recover that property unless they show that the debt in respect of which the decree was obtained was a debt incurred for illegal and immoral purposes has reference only to simple money debts which the father is under a personal obligation to pay and simple money-decrees obtained against the father for recovery of such debts. In the case of a debt incurred on the security of the family property by the father, when the mortgagee has not sued for recovery of the debt within six years of the date of accrual of the cause of action, and has thus allowed his right to a simple money-decree against the father to become time-barred, the personal obligation of the father disappears, and the mortgagee is then only entitled to recover the debt by sale of the mortgaged property, and in such case the sons labour under no pious obligation to discharge that debt for the simple reason that the debt is not due from their father. Consequently, if the mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the joint family property without impleading the sons or without suing the father in his representative capacity, the sons are entitled to challenge the validity of that decree on the ground that they being no parties to that decree are not bound by the same, and in such a suit, unless the mortgagee succeeds in proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was for legal necessity, the sons will be entitled to avoid the decree. When the manager of a joint Hindu family is impleaded as a defendant to the suit, the presumption is that he is sued in that capacity. But if, along with the manager, certain other members of the family are joined as defendants to the suit, the presumption must be the other way. [p. 699, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Walsh, J.—This case gives rise to a question of some difficulty, which appears to be an open question so far as this Court is concerned, at any rate in recent years since the comparatively modern decisions of the Privy Council. The suit is brought by a minor to set aside a mortgage-decree. Defendant No. 1 obtained a decree for sale on a mortgage executed by Bhagwant Singh and Imrat Singh, who are assumed for the purpose of this decision to have been, or to have represented, the two branches of a joint Hindu family. It is assumed that they were brothers, and that one of them was the karta. Imrat Singh died before the decree and his two sons became parties as his sons, Bhagwant Singh, being still alive, was also a party, but the minor son of Bhagwant Singh, namely, Jagraj Singh, the present plaintiff, was not a party. There is no evidence that the mortgagee even knew of his existence. So far as I can understand the matter it is immaterial which of the two brothers was the karta at the time of the mortgage, or which defendant was acting as the karta at the time of the decree. When the karta, together with the other members of the joint family is sued, it must be taken that he enjoys the dual capacity which he enjoys in the family, that is to say, he issued both as the karta representing the family and managing the family, and as a member of it, having an undivided interest.

The present plaintiff, who, as I have pointed out, was no party to the suit, has brought this suit for a declaration that the mortgaged property is not liable to be sold in execution of the decree on the ground that it was ancestral property of the family to which he belonged, and that there was no legal necessity for the loan for which the mortgage was given. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it did not lie in the absence of an allegation that the mortgage was made for a debt tainted with immorality. The District Judge overruled this decision and remanded the case as having been wrongly disposed of upon a preliminary point. The difference between the two learned Judges, which has been argued before us, centres round the following controversy: It is admitted that a mortgagee, in order to substantiate a suit upon his mortgage, has to prove that the debt was incurred for legal necessity. It is admitted, on the other hand, that if a decree has been obtained upon a mortgage by the mortgagee, or upon a simple money debt by a creditor, and as the result of either of these decrees the ancestral property has, by sale, passed into the hands of a third party, the absent son or a minor son, who was not represented, cannot recover the property in the hands of a third person without alleging that the debt for which it was incurred was tainted with immorality or, in other words, without showing that the pious obligation of a Hindu son to discharge his father's debts does not apply to this transaction, because there is no pious obligation to pay debts tainted with immorality. But there is a stage midway between these two contingencies, what may be described as a tertium quid: what is the legal position of a son who was no party to the suit where the debt or legal obligation has passed into a decree but no execution proceedings have taken place upon the decree, and no part of the ancestral property has passed into the hands of a third person? A subsidiary branch of the same question arises very frequently in these Provinces where the mortgagee himself purchases at the sale, because in one sense the mortgagee adds the capacity of purchaser to that of decree-holder, although he is in fact the same individual.

The view of the Subordinate Judge is based upon two dicta of the Privy Council. It must be said, by the way, that these dicta are, if the expression may be used, not precisely on the level of what is ordinarily intended to be understood by the expression obiter dicta, but are expressions of opinion by the highest tribunal made with the intention and desire of providing guidance to the Courts in India. They must, therefore, be accepted as authorities binding upon the Courts in India for all practical purposes with the same force as a Statute. The only question is whether they are properly understood, and to what circumstances they are intended to be applied. In the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), Lord Shaw, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships, said as follows:—

"A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property, and rights have thus sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head."

The argument, which we are asked to accept on behalf of the respondent in support of the District Judge's decision, which is under appeal, is that there is a slight verbal variation from what their Lordships intended to convey, and that the expression "a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained" should be read as though the words were "a decree enforcing the mortgage has been executed by sale." It is true to say that the illustration immediately following the passage just quoted certainly deals with the more limited meaning of the passage suggested to us in arguments as the right interpretation. It is equally true to say that, where a decree remains unexecuted and merely places in the hand of the creditor a higher right in which his original right has been merged, with an immediate possibility of obtaining execution, certainly no right of any third person has sprung up against the estate.

The next pronouncement of the Privy Council, which arises for interpretation in its bearing upon this controversy, is the opinion of their Lordships delivered by Lord Dunedin in the more recent case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (2), and particularly the five propositions, laid down expressly by their Lordships for the guidance of the Courts in India, in the closing passages of Lord Dunedin's opinion. The second proposition is the relevant one. It runs as follows:—

"If the managing co-parcener is the father and the reversioners are the sons, he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt."

The first observation upon that passage is that precisely the same criticism may be made upon it as upon the passage cited from Lord Shaw's opinion, namely, that it does not contemplate a right of a third party which has sprung into existence.

In that respect it is consistent. The creditor's claim rests still "upon the hypothesis stated" in a mere decree. There is no third person. Nonetheless, a son absent from the suit cannot challenge the decree without alleging, as the Subordinate Judge held in this case that he ought to allege, the existence of some immorality tainting the debt. It is further to be observed, and this certainly strikes me as an important observation, that whereas their Lordships, in the opinion delivered by Lord Dunedin in Brij Narain's case (2), were careful to review and to correct a solemn and important dictum contained in Lord Shaw's judgment in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) with which they did not agree, they never referred to, and, therefore, did not attempt to review or correct, the important passage also contained in the opinion which I cited above. It may certainly be said that under the circumstances it would not be a violent presumption to suppose that, having studied it and re-considered it, they saw no reason to dissent from it.

The real objection made in argument by the experienced Advocate, who has argued this case on behalf of the respondent, to our applying the second proposition from Lord Dunedin's opinion to this case, is that the second proposition in terms deals only with a simple money debt and a simple money-decree, and in this relation, above all, there is a fundamental difference between the considerations applicable to a simple money-decree and to a mortgage-decree, because a mortgage-decree, being no more than the enforcement of the original contract, and being necessarily and fundamentally concerned with the original alienation of the joint estate, it is, therefore, that one ought to guard oneself with particular care against extending the second proposition to a wider area than that to which it was applied. I recognize the difficulty. Unaided, I recognize, that I might experience considerable difficulty in making up my mind on which side of this dividing line the true intention and interpretation intended to be conveyed by the Privy Council really lies, but I am not altogether unaided. It happens that there are two cases by single Judges cited in argument before us, both by learned and experienced Judges, on this point. Mr. Justice Piggott, for whose judgment I have the most profound respect, in the case of Ali Ahmad v. Sohan Lal (3), gave elaborate reasons for holding the view which I think is consistent with the view of the District Judge in this case. But that was in 1914 before the more recent pronouncements of the Privy Council had been made. Since then Mr. Justice Daniels in the case of Gauri Shankar v. Jang Bahadur Singh (4) sitting in Oudh, and it is true, following previous decisions in Oudh, but obviously, basing himself more upon the recent decision of the Privy Council in Brij Narain's case (2) came to a conclusion, in accordance with that of the Subordinate Judge in this case. If he had not touched the difficulty raised by Mr. Panna Lal, on behalf of the respondent, that the second proposition in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (2) is in express terms confined to a simple money debt, I think I might have yielded to the doubt which that argument raised in my mind. But the final passage of Mr. Justice Daniels' judgment gives reasons, based upon a Madras High Court decision, which has been impliedly approved by the Privy Council, for holding that there is no real distinction between the two cases of a simple money-decree and a decree for a debt secured by a mortgage in relation to this troublesome controversy. I, therefore, prefer the view of the Subordinate Judge. I think the weight of authority is in favour of it. I agree with his view with some hesitation. The question must often arise in the near future, and I can quite understand that, if another two Judge Bench, in a case of higher pecuniary value than this case, has reason to think that this decision requires further consideration, it may well be thought a topic worth the decision by a fuller Bench than two Judges; but for the purpose of to day I am satisfied that we ought to allow this appeal and restore the decree of the first Court.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—I agree in the order proposed, but I prefer to base my decision on grounds other than those assigned by my learned brother.

In my judgment, the answer to the question whether a Hindu son is entitled to challenge a decree obtained against his father for sale of the joint family property without asserting and proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes must depend upon the question whether or not the father was sued as karta and manager of the joint family. If he was, the answer must be in the negative. If he was not, the answer must be in the affirmative.

It is well settled that a Hindu son is under a pious obligation to discharge his father's debts that are not tainted with immorality, and it is equally well settled that once the joint ancestral property has passed out of joint family in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their obligation to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property unless they show that the debt, in respect of which the decree was obtained, was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes: vide Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (5). But it appears to me that these propositions of law have reference only to simple money debts which the father is under a personal obligation to pay and simple money-decrees obtained against the father for recovery of such debts, and that a distinction must be drawn between a simple money debt and a decree for such debt on the one hand and a debt secured by a mortgage of the family property and a decree for sale of such property on the other. So far as simple money debt or a decree for such debt against the father is concerned, the father is under a personal obligation to discharge that debt or that decree, and the sons labour under a pious obligation to discharge the liability of their father. But in the case of a debt incurred on the security of the family property by the father, when the mortgagee has not sued for recovery of the debt within six years of the date of accrual of the cause of action, and has thus allowed his right to a simple money-decree against the father to become time-barred, the personal obligation of the father disappears, and the mortgagee is then only entitled to recover the debt by sale of the mortgaged property, and in such case the sons labour under no pious obligation to discharge that debt for the simple reason that the debt is not due from their father.

If I am right in the distinction that I have drawn between a simple money debt and a decree for such debt and a mortgage-debt and a decree for sale, then, in my judgment, the principle underlying the decision in Suraj Bansi's case (8) cannot be applied to the case of a decree for sale on the basis of a mortgage of the family property. In the case of a suit brought by a creditor against the father for recovery of simple money debt, all that he has to prove, in order to entitle him to a decree, is that he advanced the debt, and it is not necessary for him to prove the purpose for which the debt was incurred. On the other hand, in a suit for sale of the family property the mere fact that the mortgagee advanced the debt does not entitle him to a decree, unless and until he succeeds in further proving that the debt was advanced for family necessity. Because of their pious obligation to discharge their father's debts the sons cannot impugn the validity of a simple money-decree to which they were no party, on the ground of the absence of legal necessity for incurring the debt. But in the case of a decree for sale, when the personal remedy against the father has become time-barred, the sons are under no such obligation and, therefore, if the mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the joint family property without impleading the sons or without suing the father in his representative capacity, the sons are entitled to challenge the validity of that decree on the ground that they being no parties to that decree are not bound by the same, and in such a suit, unless the mortgagee succeeds in proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was for legal necessity, the sons will be entitled to avoid the decree.

If the father in a suit for sale is sued as manager of the family, i. e., in his representative capacity, then, no doubt, the decree will bind all the members of the family and the omission of the father to put the mortgagee to proof of legal necessity will disentitle the other members of the family from challenging the validity of the decree on any ground whatsoever, for the simple reason that in the eye of the law, all the members will be deemed to have been represented by the father in the suit. But if the father has not been sued in his representative capacity, I see no ground for holding why the sons, who were not impleaded as parties to the suit, should not have the right to call upon the mortgagee-decreeholder to prove the existence of legal necessity for incurring the debt secured by the mortgage before he can enforce that decree.

by sale of the family property. To hold that the decree obtained by a mortgagee for sale of the family property against the father alone, when the father was not sued as manager of the family, is binding on the sons and the sons can only avoid that decree by proving that the mortgage-debt was contracted for immoral purposes, would be in effect to hold that the mortgagee, simply by his omission to implead the sons and to sue the father in his representative capacity, can absolve himself of the burden of proving legal necessity as a condition precedent to a decree for sale of the family property, and can shift the burden of proof from his shoulders on to those of the sons, and I can discover no justification for such a proposition of law. The view that I take is the view that was taken in the case reported as Ali Ahmad v. Sohan Lal (3), and if the view taken by Mr. Justice Daniels in the case of Gauri Shankar v. Jang Bahadur Singh (4) is at variance with the view that I have taken, I respectfully dissent from that decision. In the last mentioned case the learned Judge supported the conclusion arrived at by him by reference, amongst others, to the case of Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (6) and to a passage to be found in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). I am unable to discover anything in the Madras case that lends countenance to the view that a Hindu son is debarred from calling into question the validity of a decree for sale of the joint ancestral property to which he was not a party, and which was not obtained against the father as manager of the family, on the ground that the debt secured was not incurred for legal necessity. The passage quoted from the judgment in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1) at first sight appears to support the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge, but in view of the decision of their Lordships in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (2) I am unable to hold that their Lordships ever intended to lay down the proposition of law enunciated in Gauri Shankar's case (4).

The passage referred to by the learned Judge is as follows :

(6) 52 Ind. Cas. 525; 42 M. 711; 9 L. W. 565; (1919) M. W. N. 409; 37 M. L. J. 166; 26 M. L. T. 96.

"A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property, and rights have thus sprung up with regard to the family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head."

After making these observations their Lordships refer to the case of Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (5) and to the case of Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Singh (7). In connexion with the observations referred to above, it is worthy of note that in neither of these two cases it was held that when a decree for sale of the family property is obtained by the mortgagee against the father alone, who was not sued as manager of the family, the sons cannot assail the decree by alleging that that mortgage-debt was not for family necessity. It is further clear that the question which I have now to decide was not the question that formed the subject-matter of decision in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1) and I am, therefore, forced to the conclusion that the observations of their Lordships with respect to the binding nature of the mortgage-decree were obiter dicta. However, those dicta of their Lordships are entitled to the greatest respect, and were it not for certain observations to be found in Brij Narain's case (2) I would have been prepared to hold that their Lordships took the view that was taken by Mr. Justice Daniels in the case referred to above. But in the view of the observations of their Lordships in Brij Narain's case (2) I have no hesitation in holding that their Lordships never intended to decide, or to lay down as a general proposition of universal application, that after the passing of a decree for sale the members of the joint family who were no parties to the suit for sale of the family property cannot challenge that decree without proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was contracted for immoral purposes. In Brij Narain's case (2) their Lordships are reported to have observed—vide Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (2):

"There are, however, some observations in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1), which are not necessary for the judgment, but which their Lordships are bound to say that they do not think can be supported."

(7) 1 Ind. Cas. 476; 31 A. 176; 6 A. L. J. 263.

Having regard to these observations of their Lordships I am not prepared to hold that their Lordships ever intended to lay down that the mere fact of a decree for sale having been passed precludes a Hindu son, who was not a party to the decree, from challenging that decree except on the ground that the mortgage-debt was for illegal or immoral purposes. The second proposition of law laid down at page 104*, in Brij Narain's case (2), appears to be restricted to the case of a simple money-debt incurred by, and a simple money decree obtained against, the father and has no reference to a decree for sale, and that proposition is based upon the obligation of Hindu sons to pay debts due from their father.

But, notwithstanding all that I have said, it appears to me that this appeal must succeed. The mortgage was executed by two persons named Bhagwant Singh and Imrat Singh. Imrat Singh died before the mortgage was put into suit, and his two sons were made parties to the decree. Bhagwant Singh, the father of the present respondent, was admittedly one of the defendants to the suit. If Bhagwant Singh and Imrat Singh were separate, and if Bhagwant Singh and the plaintiff-respondent were the only members of the joint family constituted by them, the presumption must be that Bhagwant Singh was the manager and karta of the family. If he was the manager of the family, it must be presumed, unless the contrary is shown, that he was sued in his representative capacity, and the decree obtained against him must bind his son, the plaintiff-respondent. On the other hand, if Imrat Singh was also a member of the joint family with Bhagwant Singh, the presumption must be the other way. When the manager of a joint Hindu family is impleaded as a defendant to the suit, the presumption is that he is sued in that capacity. But if, along with the manager, certain other members of the family are joined as defendants to the suit, the presumption must be the other way, because, if the manager was being sued as representing the family, there could be absolutely no reason for joining some other members of the family as defendants in the suit. In the present case, if the plaintiff-respondent wanted to rely on the fact that Bhagwant Singh was not sued as manager of the family, it was up to him to state the facts clearly, and to prove that some persons, other than Bhagwant Singh and the plaintiff-respondent, were members of the joint family in question and were arrayed as defendants in the suit in which the decree was passed. This was not done in either of the Courts below, and, therefore, the ordinary presumption, that the father represents the family, must hold the field. In this view of the case the decision of the Subordinate Judge was correct and ought to be restored.

First appeal from the decree of the Second Additional Sub-Judge, Aligarh, dated the 3rd December, 1924.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, Messrs. S. K. Dar and Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case is an unsuccessful plaintiff who brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh for the purpose of avoiding a certain sale in execution of a decree.

The decree under which this sale took place had been passed against a widow, Musammat Lachhmin Kuar, on the basis of two mortgages executed by her, and the case for the plaintiff, who claimed to be the reversioner, was that these two mortgages had been executed by Musammat Lachhmin Kuar without any legal necessity and that consequently neither they nor the decree which was obtained upon them bound the estate in his, the plaintiff's, hands. A number of defendants were impleaded, one of them being the auction-purchaser. The defendants, second party are said to be persons who have taken transfers from the defendants, first party.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit, being of opinion that the mortgages just referred to had been executed for legal necessity and were binding upon the estate. This finding of the Subordinate Judge is challenged here in appeal and there has also been raised before us a question of law which, though not raised distinctly before the Subordinate Judge, has been allowed to be argued before us.

Before coming to the points which have to be determined it is necessary to set out a few facts regarding the history of the property in question and of the family to which it belonged. It is admitted that the property belonged at one time to a man named Tej Singh who died on the 28th January, 1873. Tej Singh left surviving him two widows, Musammat Lachhmin Kuar and Musammat Chhattar Kuar. Of these the former died on 24th November, 1911, and the latter on 8th April, 1922. Admittedly, after the death of the last surviving widow, the plaintiff-appellant is the nearest male heir of Tej Singh.

Tej Singh had a brother named Jawahir Singh, and the documentary evidence on the record shows that immediately after the death of Tej Singh the estate which had been in Tej Singh's possession was seized by Jawahir Singh. The case which Jawahir Singh put up was that he and Tej Singh were members of a joint Hindu family and that he, Jawahir Singh, was entitled to all the property by survivorship.

The two widows of Tej Singh, Lachhmin Kuar and Chhattar Kuar, thereupon brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh (O. S. No. 146 of 1873) for recovery of property belonging to Tej Singh. The case for the widows was that Tej Singh was separated in his estate from his brother Jawahir Singh and that they, as widows of Tej Singh, were entitled to possession. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, copy of whose judgment is on the record at pages 36 to 44. An appeal was taken to the High Court and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was affirmed. The High Court dismissed Jawahir Singh's appeal on 19th July, 1875.

It will thus appear that after the death of Tej Singh these widows were involved in litigation which must have been expensive and it also appears from the record of the suit filed in 1873, that Tej Singh at the time of his death was indebted to a large extent. Jawahir Singh in that suit had raised a plea that Tej Singh had incurred debts.

There can be no doubt that after the widows thus obtained possession of the estate of their husband they came to an arrangement by which they partitioned the property for the purpose of convenient enjoyment, but it is necessary to state here that the only property that was left to these widows was a 10 biswas share in a village called Dhori.

[Their Lordships dealt with a sale deed of 2nd May, 1898, which referred to this arrangement and continued:—]

To come now to the two mortgages with which we are particularly concerned in the present case. They are respectively of the dates 19th January, 1895 and 12th January, 1897. The first of these mortgages executed by Lachhmin Kuar was in favour of one Chhattar Mal who subsequently assigned his interest to Chhattar Singh. In this document, at page 51, it is stated that Rs. 300 have been taken from the mortgagee in order to pay the revenue due for the kharif instalment for 1302 Fasli. It is also recited that a sum of Rs. 50 had been received by Musammat Lachhmin Kuar previous to the execution of the deed. By this document four biswas out of five biswas in the possession of Musammat Lachhmin Kuar in Mauza Dhori were mortgaged by way of security. The second mortgage executed by the same lady in favour of Chhattar Singh on 12th January, 1897, was for Rs. 500. In this document it is stated that she had received Rs. 271 in cash for food, and that the balance, Rs. 229, had been borrowed in order to pay the land revenue due for the khari instalment.

[Their Lordships here discussed the evidence as to necessity and proceeded:—]

We hold, therefore, that the alienations made by Musammam Lachhmin Kuar were for necessity, and we also hold that Musammam Ohhatar, her co-widow, was a consenting party to these alienations.

We come now to the point of law which was raised here and which, as we have said, was not raised in the Court below. Indeed, the point is not taken in the memorandum of appeal, but the question being one of law we thought it proper to hear the learned Counsel on both sides.

Mr. Peary Lal put forward the argument that the alienation made by Musammam Lachhmin Kuar, even if it was found to have been made for legal necessity, could not bind the reversioners unless the co-widow joined in the alienation. We have already indicated our opinion that from the circumstantial evidence it must be taken that Musammam Ohhatar Kuar was a consenting party to this alienation although it is certainly true that she did not join in executing the two mortgage-deeds of 1895 and 1897 respectively.

In support of his argument Mr. Peary Lal relied on a recent ruling of the Madras High Court which is reported as Vallun Appalasuri v. Sasapu Kannamma Nayuralu (1). In this case the learned Judges, after reviewing all the authorities which deal with the legal position of co-widows, have set out six propositions which they have deduced from the previous authorities. Mr. Peary Lal relies on the fifth and sixth of these propositions. The fifth proposition is thus stated at page 486* of the judgment:

"Except for the limited purposes mentioned above, that is, during the lifetime of the alienee in a partition of the first kind or during the lifetime of all the co-widows in a partition of the second kind, there can be no alienation by a widow of her interest; and whether there is necessity or not, an alienation by one co-widow cannot bind the reversioner."

The sixth proposition is stated in the following language:

"If an alienation for necessity is to bind the reversioners, all the co-widows must join in it."

We are not prepared to accept either of these propositions as stated. We have examined for ourselves all the case-law on this subject beginning with Bhugwandeem Doobey v. Myna Bae (2). It must be taken as well established that two co-widows succeeding to the estate of a deceased husband take the property as co-parceners in the strictest sense, and as such the general rule regarding alienation would be that there could be no alienation by one without the consent of the other.

The cases fell into two classes. In some of them the contest has been between the alienee of one co-widow and the surviving co-widow. In others there has been a claim put forward by the reversioner against the alienee after the death of both the widows.

It is necessary to keep these two classes of cases distinct. We need not enter into a decision of the cases in so far as they relate to claims by the survivor of two co-widows against the alienee of the other co-widow. We are dealing here with a claim made by the reversioner after the death of both the widows. Where there is a single Hindu widow the reversioner is bound by any alienation made by her of her husband's estate for legal necessity. It follows, therefore, that if there are two widows and they both join in a sale or mortgage to raise money for legal necessity, the reversioners are bound, and they are bound because of the existence of a necessity which justifies the alienation. How then does the case stand where the two widows have separated for purposes of conveniently enjoying the estate left by the husband? Is it to be said that if one of the widows, acting under the pressure of legal necessity, is obliged to alienate a portion of the estate in her possession the reversioner is not to be bound? It seems quite clear that the existence or non-existence of legal necessity cannot depend upon the consent of the other widow. Take the case of two co-widows, one of whom has three daughters whom she is obliged to marry; her co-widow has no daughters. Or take again the case of one co-widow who is in easy circumstances and who can depend upon her own relations for support in a time of distress, while the other widow has no such resources at her disposal. Is it to be said that because the widow who is well-to-do refuses her consent to an alienation made by the other widow in circumstances which render the alienation necessary the estate is not to be bound? We do not think that any authority for such a proposition is to be deduced from the reported cases. It is, no doubt, true that co-widows succeeding to the estate of their husband are undivided co-parceners and the general rule, of course, is that one co-parcener is not entitled to alienate without the consent of the other. It is also true that no arrangement made by the widows for the separate enjoyment of portions of the estate can destroy their legal position as co-parceners. But is it correct to say that in no case can a co-parcener alienate without the consent of the other? The Hindu Law does not say so, and in this connexion we would refer to a passage in the Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 1, cls. 27 and 28. Clause 27 deals with the general law regarding the rights of disposal by one co-parcener, but cl. 28 declares an exception on that general rule and lays down that even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage or sale of immoveable property during a season of distress for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes.

If that is the Hindu Law to be applied to the case of co-parceners there can be no reason in principle why it should not be applied to two co-widows who, according to all the decided cases, are co-parceners in the strictest sense, and it seems to us, therefore, that if there are two co-widows enjoying their husband's estate as co-parceners, one of them can, under the exception to the rule we have just quoted, conclude a donation, mortgage or sale of immoveable property during a season of distress "for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes." That being so, we are not prepared to accept the argument that, even where legal necessity exists, an alienation by one co-widow will not bind the estate unless the other co-widow joins in the alienation. The proposition has, in our opinion, been laid down far too broadly and the exception contained in the Mitakshara, Ch. I, cl. 28, has not, in our opinion, been kept in mind. In the course of the discussion one case has been referred to, Thakurmani Singh v. Dai Rani Koeri (3).

That, in our opinion, supports the conclusion at which we have arrived. In that case it was held that a mortgage by one widow without the consent of the other was binding on the reversioner to the extent that the debt secured by the mortgage was incurred for legal necessity.

Holding, therefore, that there was legal necessity in this case and being of opinion that Musammatt Lachhmin Kuar was entitled for legal necessity to alienate this property without the consent of her co-widow Musammatt Chhatar Kuar, we are of opinion that the estate is bound. But, as we have said, it must be taken that Musammatt Chhatar Kuar did consent to this alienation, and while it is true that she did not actually join as a party in the two mortgages executed by Musammatt Lachhmin Kuar, we hold that it was not necessary for the purpose of binding the estate in the hands of the reversioners that she should do so.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 164—Co-sharers—Suit for profits—Lambardar's liability—Negligence, whether can be based merely on short collections—Negligence, when question of law—Liability for collections of sir and khudkasht—Presumption—Death of Lambardar—Son's liability.

Negligence on the part of a Lambardar cannot be based merely on short collections. [p. 703, col. 2.]

It is always a question of law what sort of evidence is admissible to prove negligence, and presumably what sort of evidence is admissible to disprove an initial presumption or inference of negligence. [p. 704, col. 1.]

There is a strong presumption against a Lambardar being responsible for the collection of the rent due from the private tenants of the co-sharers holding sir and khudkasht. [ibid.]

A son cannot be made liable for the debts incurred by his father in a personal capacity such as a Lambardar, nor can he be made liable for negligence shown by the father in that personal capacity, unless he has personal assets of the father in hand. [p. 704, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Benares.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Sen and R. C. Ghatak, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These second appeals arise out of two suits for profits brought by the plaintiff-appellant against one Matabadal, Lambardar, under s. 164 of the Tenancy Act. During the pendency of the suit Matabadal died, and the name of his son, Deosaran was substituted as defendant on the allegation that he was the legal representative of his father Matabadal Singh, Lambardar. Both suits were decreed by the Assistant Collector on the basis of gross collection, there being a finding that the Lambardar had shown negligence in collection. This finding was based on the fact that his collection resulted in there being Rs. 200 for division among the co-sharers, whereas collection of the total sum recorded as rental would have made no less than Rs. 2,565 available for division. It was also found by the trial Court that the deceased Lambardar Matabadal had filed about half a dozen suits for arrears of rent but that these two had been withdrawn by his son, presumably at a later date when the son was appointed Lambardar. The Assistant Collector also decreed against the defendant profits on the basis of what the Lambardar could have collected from tenants of the sir and khudkasht land of particular co-sharers.

In appeal, the District Judge of Benares held that the evidence did not justify a finding of negligence and that there was no sufficient evidence to show that the Lambardar was the agent of the co-sharers generally for the collection of rent in respect of khudkasht and sir lands. He accordingly reduced the decree to a decree based on actual collections from the lands other than sir and khudkasht.

The plaintiff has appealed. The first ground of appeal argued before me is that the lower Appellate Court invoked evidence which was not relevant to the matter in order to rebut the allegation of negligence. Reference is specifically made to the District Judge's remark that collection was difficult because of the pendency of partition proceedings. It is urged that the partition proceedings had not commenced during the years in respect of which this suit was brought. To this objection there are two replies. The District Judge has not stated that partition was pending during the years in respect of which the claim was brought. His point is that at the time of writing his judgment in appeal "there is a partition pending." He goes on to say "this almost always leads to difficulties in rent collection." The remark is loose. He was not dealing with difficulties in rent collection of the future, but during the years in respect of which the claim was made. His meaning must, however, be that, where you find a partition suit had been brought, it indicates disagreement between the co-sharers precedent to the date when suit is brought. It is difficult to say that this consideration could not be entertained by the District Judge. But this is not the only consideration on which he found that rent collection was difficult. He has mentioned that on the death of the Lambardar no one could be induced to take his place and the village had to be taken under the management of the Collector temporarily. Lastly he has mentioned that the Sajawal employed by the Collector has given evidence that he tried to collect rent for the year in suit and made little progress. It comes then to this that the District Judge has mentioned one reason for rejecting the allegation of negligence or rather rejecting the inference of negligence arising from the collection being much below the rent roll, and that reason is not of great strength. It is, however, a reason that was admissible as evidence. He has mentioned other reasons which have not been shown to be devoid of any force. He has, I may mention, rightly stated that negligence cannot be based merely on short collections. He has pointed out that the trial Court was wrong in inferring negligence from the fact that only Rs. 200 were available for distribution whereas if the full rent roll had been collected Rs. 2,500 would have been available. The result is, I find, that the District Judge rightly or wrongly has come to the conclusion that the evidence did not justify a finding of negligence. It cannot be said that in coming to this conclusion he admitted any evidence which was entirely inadmissible. He may have given too much weight or too little weight to the evidence, but in second appeal we are not concerned with this. I hold that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was no negligence is a finding of fact with which this Court cannot deal. The appellant's Counsel has referred me to a decision of this Court in which it was settled that in a particular case a finding against negligence was a finding of mixed law and fact. It may have been so in that case. It is always a question of law what sort of evidence is admissible to prove negligence, and presumably what sort of evidence is admissible to disprove an initial inference or presumption of negligence. But nothing has been said in this case to show that any evidence used by the District Judge was not of a nature admissible for such a purpose. Difficulty in making collections is clearly relevant to explain the small amount collected. What was said is that certain facts relied on by the District Judge were not proved. This it is not permissible to urge except on the ground that there was no admissible evidence to prove these facts.

As regards the question of the exclusion from consideration by the District Judge of the sir and khudkasht lands, the District Judge's reason is that the evidence to fix the Lambardar with responsibility for collecting profits thereon was too vague. The appellants' Counsel points to a tabular statement produced by the Patwari and apparently verified by him in his evidence. This statement cannot be evidence that the Lambardar made himself responsible for the collection of rent in respect of these sir and khudkasht lands. It can only be evidence that, assuming such responsibility and assuming total collection the sum would have been so much. There appears to me to be a strong presumption against Lambardar being responsible for the collection of the rent due from the private tenants of co-sharers holding sir and khudkasht. In order to support the plaintiff's claim in respect of these collections that they should be accounted for by the Lambardar, it would be necessary not merely to fix the Lambardar with responsibility for their collection but also to show that he was authorised by the individual co-sharers having made these collections to include them in the general account. The evidence clearly fell far short of this.

During the course of hearing the case some misapprehension was shown by the Counsel of the appellant as to the right of the plaintiff, his client to get a decree against the son of the Lambardar originally sued. It appears that Deosaran, the son, never objected to being brought on the record as legal representative of his father, Matabadal Singh, and as in possession of assets. This being so, the question of his liability could not arise. If he had taken up the position that there were no private assets of his father and that he was joint with his father, and as such was in possession of the joint family property by survivorship and not as legal representative in possession of assets, it would have been impossible to make him liable. A son cannot be made liable for the debts incurred by his father in a personal capacity such as a Lambardar nor can he be made liable for negligence shown by the father in that personal capacity, unless he has personal assets of the father in hand. The case of Bharath Singh v. Tej Singh (1) proceeded on the assumption that the son had not objected to being brought on the record as a legal representative in possession of assets.

For the reasons given above, I find that no interference in second appeal with the decision of the District Judge is justified, and dismiss both appeals with costs.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused are charged under two heads, viz., (1) that they committed the offence of robbery and aided and abetted each other in that offence, and (2) that they committed the offence of robbery and at the time of committing such offence were armed with a deadly weapon, to wit, a loaded revolver, and aided and abetted each other in the commission of the said offence.The learned Counsel for the prosecution has argued that s. 398 of the Indian Penal Code relates to a substantive offence and any person aiding or abetting such offence would be liable under s. 114 for the same offence if he were present at the time the offence took place.I am unable to agree with the argument that s. 398 creates any offence. In my opinion it only regulates the measure of punishment when certain facts are found to exist in the commission of the substantive offence which is robbery. The word "offender" appearing in the section can refer only to the person who is proved to have been armed with any deadly weapon and not to any other who in combination with such person may have committed robbery. Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code has no application, in my opinion, in the construction of s. 398. I agree with the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Emperor v.Ali Mirza (1) which, in my opinion, should be followed in this case.I would, therefore, withdraw from the Jury that part of the second charge which falls under s. 114 of the Indian Penal Code of 1924.

Mr. R. W. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Y. N. Nadkarni, (with him Mr. K.
V. Joshi), for the Respondents.JUDGMENT.—This is a very simple case though it raises points of general importance. One Pandurang died in 1904 leaving a widow and two sons, plaintiff
No. 1 and plaintiff No. 2. His assets consisted in part of certain moneys coming under a provident fund and certain other moneys. Pandurang's widow and natural guardian of the children handed over the moneys to her brother Raoji for the benefit and education of the two boys. On the facts of this case as found in the lower Court it must be taken that Raoji applied part of this trust moneys for that purpose, but put the balance amounting to Rs. 1,600 and upwards into his own pocket. He died in 1918. His representatives are called on to refund this balance and to account, and they set up limitation. In other words an apparently fraudulent trustee who has put trust money into his own pocket is thus to escape by reason of lapse of time.

It is clear, however, that s. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, prevents a suit brought against such a trustee, (provided he is a trustee for a specific purpose), from being barred by lapse of time. The section provides:—

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time".

It was said, to start with, that the property was not vested in Raoji. That, on the facts, is a hopeless argument. It was based on one answer which the widow gave in cross-examination, but as the learned Appellate Judge points out the answer has been an outcome of the ingenuity of the cross-examining Pleader in putting the words of the section into the mouth of the witness. The answer just previous to this one was that the money was entrusted to Raoji for the boys. The word actually used in the subsequent answer was malik, and as my brother Crump has pointed out, no doubt the lady thought that she was being asked whether she constituted Raoji the absolute owner of the moneys. Of course she did not. She had given it to him on trust for the boys. It is clear, therefore, that the money was "vested" in him.

Then was it vested for a specific purpose? Was he, in other words, an express trustee? Clearly he was. The moneys were given to him for the boys—for their benefit and education. In this respect the case resembles that in Bhurabhai v. Bai Ruxmani (1), where a sum was handed over by a husband's father to the keeping of the wife's father as a fund constituting her palla or dowry in accordance with the usual practice prevailing in the caste. That fund was misappropriated by the lady's father, and an action was brought to recover the same. It was held that the property was vested in him for a specific purpose. I may also refer to Soar v. Ashwell (2) where a Solicitor to a trust got certain trust moneys into his own hands and misappropriated them. It was held there that he was in the position of an express trustee, and that under the English Law no lapse of time would bar a suit against him.

Then it was argued that this suit was not one for following trust money. It is unnecessary for us to consider the rulings in India as to the precise meaning of the expression, "following trust property", and as to whether a different meaning ought to be given to what is usually understood in England by that expression, for the decision I have just referred to in Bhurabhai v. Bai Ruxmani (1) was on s. 10 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877, and as my brother Crump has pointed out, that section did not then contain the words which we have in the present section, viz., "or for an account of such property or proceeds". So we may eliminate the words in s. 10 as to following the trust property, and confine ourselves to the question of an account of the trust property or the proceeds thereof.

Then if I understood the argument of the learned Pleader for the appellant correctly, he urged you can only get an order for an account, and not for payment of what is found due on taking that account. That again is an argument which cannot for one moment stand. It is quite erroneous to suggest that the Court has power to direct an account, but at the same time has not power to direct payment. Otherwise the whole object of the account would be frustrated.

Then it was said the proper Article to apply was Art. 98 of the Indian Limitation Act, and that thereunder the period of limitation for making good out of the general estate of a deceased trustee the loss occasioned by a breach of trust was three years. But that is the case of an ordinary breach of trust and not one covered as here by s. 10. Section 10 expressly says "Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore, contained". Consequently, before you can apply Art. 98 you must first get rid of s. 10. Here s. 10 clearly does apply. That being so, this suit was not barred by time.

(1) 32 B. 394; 10 Bom. L. R. 540,

(2) (1893) 2 Q. B. 390; 4 R. 602; 69 L. T. 585; 42 W. R. 165.

In the result the appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Joint First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 1373 of 1925.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, C. J.—This is an extraordinary case, and one to which, in the view I take, the learned trial Judge has not given the care which it deserves. The suit is one to have an award in an arbitration out of Court filed and a decree passed thereon. A startling circumstance in the case is that whereas the agreement for reference (Ex. 28) was on September 11, 1920, the award was not made till after five years viz., on October 6, 1925. Nor is there any reasonable excuse for that delay put forward. On the facts it would appear that the arbitrator had two meetings of the parties in 1920 within the first two months or so of the reference, but that thereafter, nothing whatever was done except that part of the property included in the reference was divided up by agreement between the parties. Notwithstanding this long lapse of time the arbitrator never called the parties again before making his award; and he kept no notes of the evidence in 1920 except some memoranda about certain ornaments and accounts. He does not appear even to have given any notice to the parties that he was proposing to make this award, but proceeded to execute this long document which in itself contains provisions which the appellant, defendant No. 1, objects to.

The mere statement of the above facts at once raises the query in the mind of any lawyer as to how an award could be validly enforced after such an unconscionable and unexplained delay. No case of this sort can be found in the books. Nothing approaching it is within my own recollection even in India. The attention of the learned Judge seems mainly to have been diverted to other points in the case, viz., as to two stupid lies which defendant No. 1 told, viz., first, that he never signed the reference paper at all, and, secondly, that if he did, he at once abandoned the arbitration. The second point, of course, would not really avail him, for, even if he purported to abandon the arbitration, he could not do so legally unless good cause was shown for taking that course.

Having disposed of those two points of fact, the learned Judge thus deals with Issue No. 3 as to whether the long interval between the reference and the making of the award vitiates the award. He says:—

"In the reference paper no date was fixed on or before which the arbitrator had to make his award. The evidence of the arbitrator shows that his award was delayed owing to the difference of opinion in the matter of partition of defendant No. 2's house. No authority has been cited to show that long interval between the reference and the making of the award vitiates the award. My finding, therefore, on issue No. 3 is in the negative".

As regards the reason given by the arbitrator, viz., that the parties themselves were disputing about the partition of a particular house, it is really no excuse whatever. It is possible that this lay arbitrator entirely misconceived at one time the real duties of an arbitrator, and thought that he was merely a negotiator to bring the parties together and record an agreement, if any, at which they should arrive. That is not legal arbitration. His duty was not to negotiate, but to decide. And the fact that the parties could not agree was no reason whatever why he should not perform his duty, viz., of deciding Yea or Nay how certain property should be partitioned so as to give it partly to A and partly to B and so on.

Then as regards the learned Judge's observation about the absence of authority, I would have rather thought that in a strange case of this sort authority would be required not to show that the award could not be made, but to show that it could be made, after this lapse of time.

But it is necessary to consider the matter rather more carefully than the learned Judge has done. This being a mofussil arbitration effected out of Court and not in any suit, the matter comes under the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, para. 20. Then para. 21 provides that where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in para. 14 or para. 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award. Paragraph 14 sets out certain grounds on which the Court may remit the award to the arbitrator. Paragraph 15 provides that an award is not to be set aside except on certain grounds, one of which, viz., (a) is the "corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator or umpire".

Now, in reference to arbitrations we are familiar with the use of the word 'misconduct'. It does not necessarily or at all imply anything in the nature of fraud. But it certainly may include cases where the arbitrator has failed to perform the essential duties which are cast upon him as an arbitrator, as he is occupying a quasi-judicial position. Under English Arbitration Law for instance, it has been held to be misconduct for an arbitrator to see one of the parties about the case in the absence of the other, and without notice to him.

Was there then misconduct within the meaning of para. 15 in the present case? It is quite true, as the learned Judge points out, that no time was fixed here for the making of the award, but I take it that one of the commonest terms which are implied by the Court in dealing with contracts of various sorts is to imply that in the absence of an express term on this point the parties intended that the contract, whatever it may be should be performed within a reasonable time. Otherwise the very purpose of the parties in entering into the contract or arrangement may be entirely frustrated. So here I see no difficulty in holding that the intention of the parties was that the award should be made within a reasonable time.

On the facts I would hold that it is clear that the award was not made within a reasonable time or anything approaching a reasonable time. Then does that imply in any way misconduct on the part of the arbitrator? If that delay is not explained in my judgment it does imply misconduct on his part, because it was his duty to, make up his mind and decide this dispute. It was his duty to see prima facie that the proceedings were conducted with reasonable diligence, and if he so far failed in those duties that he did nothing whatever for some five years, then, in my judgment, he failed in material respects in his ordinary duties as an arbitrator. That being so, in my judgment, he was guilty of misconduct within the meaning of para. 15, and, accordingly the award may be set aside.

Now, the case is not entirely without authority as the learned Judge seems to think. My brother Crump drew attention to a useful and important case, Coley v. DaCosta (1). There there was an agreement to go to arbitration on March 31, 1886. Nothing appears to have been done by the arbitrators beyond the fact that two or three meetings were held, and matters so continued till December 8, 1886, on which date one of the parties wrote withdrawing from the arbitration. The point was whether he was entitled to do that, and the Court held that he was. At page 207* Mr. Justice Pigot says:—

"The powers conferred by the Code upon arbitrators are very great; and we think that a party has a right, if he chooses, to insist upon it, that, once an arbitration is decided upon, it shall be proceeded with with reasonable speed. There is no doubt that in the present case the delay that took place was in itself unreasonable, and, being unexplained and not justified by any acts of the appellant, we hold that he had good cause under the circumstances for revoking this agreement. That being so, it was no longer competent to the Court to order the agreement to be filed under s. 523, and the proceedings were, therefore, invalid."

The Court relied there on a dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pastonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee (2). That was an arbitration between two partners. There was some delay in the appointment of an umpire, and that one of the parties gave notice calling on the arbitrators to make their award within ten days or else to appoint an umpire. It was held that on the facts of that case the partner had no power to fix an unreasonably short time as ten days for the arbitrators to make their award. On the other hand, the question of serious delay was gone into, and at page 131* the judgment of the Board says:—

"If nothing whatever had occurred since the appointment of the arbitrators in June, 1864, and all matters between the appellant and the respondents had remained in exactly the same position that they were in at the date of the submission to arbitration, their Lordships are disposed to think, that this delay of the arbitrators would have justified the course which the appellant adopted. But in truth the facts disclose a very different course of proceeding. In July, 1864, the arbitrators made their award in a very important part of the matter in difference. They dissolved the partnership, and delivered up the business to the appellant, who has, since that time, carried it on alone, and had done so for a year prior to the letter of July 24, 1865. A second decision of the Arbitrators relative to the Ponany farms was made in May, 1865, and acquiesced in by both parties, the appellant and the respondents.

"A notice to the arbitrators to make their award and to appoint an umpire in ten days, does not appear to their Lordships to be sufficient time given to entitle the appellant to stop all further proceedings, and to cancel all further proceedings."

There it will be observed the Board considered that an unexplained delay of approximately a year would entitle one party to withdraw from the arbitration. In the Calcutta case the delay was less than a year. If again we turn to what is reasonable in point of time even in India, we find that in the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, which applies to the Presidency town of Bombay, the time fixed for making an award is three months in the absence of an agreement to the contrary and subject to the time for making the award being enlarged (see First Schedule, para. 3). So we get this much, therefore, as clear on the authorities, that an unexplained delay of even a fraction of the time actually occupied here would entitle the parties to withdraw from the arbitration.

Next as regards the arbitrator himself, it is suggested in Russell on Arbitration, Tenth Edition, at page 197, that an arbitrator might be sued for breach of contract if he refuses to complete the reference and make an award within a reasonable time. The passage runs:—

"It having been established that an arbitrator can recover his fees upon an implied contract by the parties to remunerate him for his services as arbitrator it would seem that he might be sued as for a breach of contract on his part if he refused to complete the reference and make an award in a reasonable time."

In the present case it does not appear that the arbitrator was working for pecuniary reward. In fact we are told by the learned Pleaders that the contrary is the case. That being so, I take it that an action of the kind suggested would presumably not lie against him. In this connection I may refer to another case cited by my brother Crump, viz. Savilappa v. Devchand (3), a decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Mr. Justice Chandavarkar. There the suit was brought against the arbitrator for damages for his fraud in collusion with one of the parties. The ground mainly alleged for establishing the fraud was the delay in making the award. But the Court negatived the charge of fraud, and said (page 135*):—

"But it is impossible to support a charge of fraud built on so flimsy a basis: there is no more reason to presume fraud than to presume negligence, and if there was only negligence, then admittedly the suit will not lie."

(3) 26 B. 132; 3 Bom. L. R. 691.

It does not, however, appear in that case whether the arbitrator was working for reward, nor is it exactly clear how long the delay in that particular case was.

But be that as it may, it does not really affect the precise point which we have to decide here. No doubt an important distinction between the case of Coley v. Da-Costa (1), and the present case is that in the former the award had not been made, whereas in the present case the award has been made. But we have to remember that here the parties were all laymen, and, in my judgment, it is not fatal to the appellant that he did not give a formal legal notice withdrawing from the arbitration. In my judgment, on the facts here, we still have it that the arbitrator failed in his duty, and that consequently the award ought not to be filed.

Under those circumstances I need only allude to other points on which the case might be put. I am by no means satisfied that the case here might not be put on this ground that by their conduct the parties, viz., the litigants and the arbitrator all really abandoned the reference. But that was not the precise way in which the case was put in the Court below, and I do not, therefore, pursue it. Nor need I go into the complaints as to the details of the award that have been urged before us. But one or two I may notice in passing. The arbitrator has purported to direct that the appellant should pay the debts and recover the outstandings, whereas, as has been pointed out by his Pleader, it may be that after this lapse of time all the outstandings have become barred by limitation. Prima facie, then, it is most unfair that the arbitrator should thus allow five years to pass as regards ordinary outstandings without doing anything.

Then there are several other objections which have been urged before us, based on paras. 6 and 8 of the award. They are certainly curious provisions. But we have not gone into them, nor required the Pleader for the respondents to deal with those points, because in our judgment it is unnecessary so to do, having regard to the main point as regards the lapse of time.

Under these circumstances I would allow the appeal, and discharge the order of the learned Judge and dismiss this application.

As regards costs, the appellant has deliberately attempted to deceive the Court by asserting matters which were clearly false to his own knowledge, viz., that he had not signed the reference, and, secondly, that he had abandoned it at once. That being so, this is one of those exceptional cases where, having regard to his conduct, he should be deprived of all his costs. Our order as to costs will, therefore, be that each party do bear his own costs throughout.

Crump, J.—I agree.

Appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, in Darkhast No. 39 of 1925.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Crump, J.—The plaintiff instituted Suit No. 229 of 1917 in the Court of the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar to recover possession of a share of one-third of certain lands. Defendant No. 5 was the brother of plaintiff and supported plaintiff's claim. The other defendants were members of the same family and it was alleged that defendant No. 6 had been adopted by defendant No. 4, the widow of a deceased member named Basvantgouda. The properties in suit were watan properties, and plaintiff and defendant No. 5 claimed to be the nearest heirs under the law applicable to such property. The Court found that plaintiff and defendant No. 5 were the nearest heirs, and that the adoption of defendant No. 6 was not proved. Consequent upon these findings a decree was made giving plaintiff and defendant No. 5 certain shares in the suit properties. A partition was directed, and an order was made directing an inquiry as to the mesne profits due.

Against this decree defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 6 appealed to the High Court making plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 5 respondents. An application was made to stay execution of the decree under O. XLI, r. 5. On this the Court, on December 14, 1920, passed an order in the ordinary form, "rule and ad interim stay". This implied that security was required from the applicants "for the due performance of such decree or order as may be ultimately binding upon them." Order XLI, r. 5 (3) (c). This order was communicated to the District Judge of Dharwar by this Court's writ, dated December 14, 1920, and in reply the District Judge certified that security had been furnished. The writ refers to the petition of "Basangouda bin Mallangouda in Appeal No. 335 of 1920," and directs that execution be stayed on due security being furnished to the First Class Subordinate Judge. Basangouda bin Mallangouda is defendant No. 6. The return is endorsed on the writ under date January 25, 1921, and certifies that "the appellant petitioner having furnished the requisite security the further proceedings have been stayed." The surety was one Jayappa, now the appellant before us, and the bond executed by him was in the form laid down in Appendix G. No. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under it he makes himself liable to the extent of Rs. 4,000. On March 10, 1921, the Court made the following order "Rule absolute, costs costs in the appeal".

The bond is in the following terms:

In the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar.

Suit No. 229 of 1917

Shivangouda bin Dyamangouda Patil... Plaintiff

versus

1. Marewa wife of Mahalinga Gaudas;
2. Somawa wife of Vibhadra Gauda Patil; 3. Basangouda Mallangouda Patil; 4. Basawa Gadoti wife of Mallangouda and others, ... Defendants.

To.

The First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Dharwar.

In this Jayappa Lokappa Narasingnavar residing at Lokur Taluka Dharwar states, by this security bond passed for staying the execution of the decree, as follows:—

In Suit No. 229 of 1917 plaintiff Shivangouda Dyamangouda Patil residing at Lokur has filed a suit in this Court, against Marewa, Samawa, Basangouda and Basawa and others. The suit was decided in plaintiff's favour on March 27, 1920, and a decree was passed therein. And defendants No. 2 Somawa and No. 6 Basangouda and Basawa Gadoti filed an appeal in the High Court against the said decree.

The plaintiff who has got the decree in his favour filed an application for executing the said decree. Defendant has applied for getting the execution stayed and he (awanige) has been ordered to furnish security. I, therefore, voluntarily become a surety to the extent of Rs. 4,000, by mortgaging the property mentioned in the schedule annexed herewith. I hereby agree that in case the decree of the original Court is confirmed in appeal or reversed the said defendant (prativadeyu) will abide by the order and decree of the Appellate Court properly. And if he will have to pay anything in accordance with that he will pay the same and in case he fails to do so the amount that will have to be paid, accordingly should be recovered from the estate mortgaged by this writing. And if the said property does not cover the amount that will have to be paid I and my legal representatives will be personally liable. For this I have passed this security bond.

Dated this day January 5, 1921".

The High Court in appeal confirmed the decree of the lower Court with a variation which is immaterial for the purposes of the appeal now before us. An inquiry was then held as to the amount of mesne profits and these were assessed at Rs. 9,250, and were held to be recoverable from defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 failed to pay the amount and the learned Judge directed that execution for Rs. 4,000 should proceed against the surety Jayappa. Jayappa appeals against this order.

The appeal raises the following questions.

(1) Is the surety bond invalid for want of registration?

(2) Is the appellant liable for the decree except in so far as it is against defendant No. 6?

(3) How and to what extent can it be enforced in these proceedings?

It is urged that the document requires registration and that, therefore, it cannot affect the property or even be looked at as evidence of transaction. This point, therefore, stands in limine.

Reliance is placed on Nagaruru Sambayya v. Tangatur Subbayya (1). A number of other authorities have been cited bearing more or less upon the point, but the first question is whether certain decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, to which I drew attention in the course of the argument, are not decisive upon the matter. I shall, therefore, proceed to discuss these first. I may, however, say here that there is no decision of this Court upon the point and that according to the prevailing practice, so far as I am aware of it, such bonds are not registered. This document "purports or operates to create or declare in the future a contingent right of the value of more than Rs. 100 in immoveable property". It is, therefore, within the scope of s. 17, sub-s. (1), of the Indian Registration Act, 1908. It may be noted that for the present purpose there is no difference between the terms of this Act and those of the previous Act of 1877. Therefore, ordinarily the document under either Act is compulsorily registrable. In both Acts there is a special exemption in favour of "any decree or order of a Court or any award". The result of holding that such a document executed as between a surety and the Court is not exempted from registration either on general principles or as falling within the special words cited would be somewhat embarrassing. What the precise result might be in view of s. 49 is a question difficult to resolve, but the words of s. 17 are very wide and if they apply to proceedings in Courts would cover a variety of documents and necessity might arise for recourse to the registration office at several stages of a prolonged litigation. It is difficult to believe that the Legislature intended any such result. It seems reasonable to suppose that judicial proceedings in general are not within the scope of the Act. Order XXI, r. 34, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides for the registration of documents executed by the Court, but no direction is to be found as to the registration of documents in the form prescribed by Appendix G, No. 2, as appropriate for the purpose of O. XXI, r. 5, or indeed in any other case. The argument ab inconvenienti is certainly very strong here. It would be most inconvenient in practice if the Judge were bound to register a variety of documents such as this. Some of the difficulties will be gathered from the decision in Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Ho Hnaung (2) a decision to which I shall refer later.

Nor is this view without support in the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council. Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (3) is a case decided with reference to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act of 1877 which, as has been said, differ in no way for the present purpose from those of the Act of 1908. The question there was whether compound interest should be allowed on certain mortgages and reliance was placed on a number of petitions for time made by the mortgagors which contained admission that compound interest was due. It was argued for the appellants (the mortgagors) that under s. 17 of the Act of 1877 no effect could be given to those petitions as they were not registered. The matter was fully argued and, though the decision was based on other grounds, Lord Watson in delivering the judgment of the Board remarked as follows (page 15*):—

"Although, in the view which their Lordships take, the question whether those proceedings can be founded on, without their having been registered in terms of the Act of 1877, does not necessarily arise in this appeal, they think it right to add that, having heard Counsel fully upon the point, they are satisfied that the provisions of s. 17 of the Act do not apply to proper judicial proceedings, whether consisting of pleadings filed by the parties, or of orders made by the Court".

This dictum is general in its terms and not expressed to be based on any specific provision of the Act. It might indeed be difficult to bring such petitions within the words "decree or order of the Court or any award".

In Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (4) there had been a previous suit between the parties in 1885. That suit was brought to an amicable conclusion, and on January 16, 1886, two documents were executed. One was termed a "razinamah", the other "agreement of union". Neither was registered under the Act of 1877. The "razinamah" alone was produced in the suit. Both were relied upon in the second suit which came before the Privy Council in appeal. Lord Watson again delivered the judgment of the Board. As to the razinamah the following passage may be cited from pages 103-4* of the report:—

"The second document executed by the same parties, the razinamah, was not registered in terms of Act III of 1877; but it was produced in the suit of 1885; its terms were considered in a judgment delivered by the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam on March 31, 1886, and they were made the foundation of an order passed by the learned Judge, the parties to the document having concurred in moving that a decree may be passed in accordance with the razinamah which they have presented under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Act, after settling".

"The razinamah had incorporated with it four schedules of lands, marked respectively A, B, C and D; schedule D containing a description of the lands which had been expressly excluded from the suit of 1885, and of no others. In the body of the document, the parties, first, set forth in detail the lands as to which they were in controversy in the suit of 1885, and concluded by stating that they had agreed each to take a certain share of these lands and their produce, in full satisfaction of all claims within the 15th of Panguni (27th March, 1886) next; and that both the parties shall bear their respective costs of this suit'. In the second place, the document set forth as follows: Remarks: Not only have we, on this date, entered into a union agreement in regard to the land, etc., referred to in the plaint in this suit, and described in schedule D hereof, and divided thereunder the said lands into two equal shares between us, but a deed of release has also been taken from the 7th defendant's (present appellant's) guardian in relinquishment of the right possessed by the 7th defendant (present appellant) to the said half-share of lands'.

"In the judgment delivered by him on March 31, 1886, the Subordinate Judge, having the razinamah before him, treated the first part of it as the only portion of the contents of the document with which he was desired by the parties to deal. In giving effect to its terms, the learned Judge observed: 'The 7th defendant (present appellant) is her only daughter (i. e., of Ramaswami's grand-daughter) and she and the plaintiff have put in a razinamah in respect to items Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 7, and a decree in its terms has been passed'. It is admitted that items Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 7 specified by the learned Judge, were the lands claimed from the present appellant in the suit of 1885. The learned Judge plainly did not understand that he was asked by the parties either to consider or to give effect to the terms of the compromise which the parties narrated, by way of remark, that they had made with respect to the lands contained in schedule D of the razinamah, which are the subject of this appeal. Accordingly, the order passed by him did not include and had no reference to the lands".

The distinction between the two documents is brought out in the following passage (page 105-6*):—

"It is sufficiently obvious that, in maintaining that defence, the appellant can derive no aid from the terms of the agreement of union. The document has not been registered under the provisions of Act III of 1877; and, therefore, its stipulations are ineffectual in law to create, in favour of the appellant, any right, title, or interest to or in the lands in dispute.

"The razinamah was not registered in accordance with the Act of 1877; but the objection founded upon its non-registration does not, in their Lordships' opinion, apply to its stipulations and provisions, in so far as these were incorporated with, and given effect to by, the order made upon it by the Subordinate Judge in the suit of 1885. The razinamah, in so far as it was submitted to and was acted upon judicially by the learned Judge, was in itself a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration; and any order pronounced in terms of it constituted res judicata, binding upon both the parties to this appeal, who gave their consent to it.

(4) 26 I. A. 101; 1 Bom. L. R. 394; 22 M. 508; 3 C. W. N. 485; 9 M. L. J. 147; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 516; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 363 (P. C.).

*Pages of 26 I. A.—[Ed.]

"If the parties, after agreeing to settle the suit of 1885 on the footing that they were each to take a half-share of the lands involved in that suit, and also a half-share of the lands now in dispute, had informed the learned Judge that these were the terms of the compromise, and had invited him, by reason of such compromise, to dispose of the conclusions of the suit of 1885, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the order of the learned Judge, if it had referred to or narrated these terms of compromise, would have been judicial evidence, available to the appellant, that the respondents had agreed to transfer to her the moiety of land now in dispute. But their Lordships are unable to find that any such course was taken, either in the razinamah or in the judicial order which gave effect to it. The razinamah merely referred, by way of remark, to the lands now in dispute; and the Judge was only asked to give effect to a compromise which related to the lands then in dispute before him. This order, accordingly, merely concerns the latter, and has no reference whatever to the lands described in schedule D of the razinamah. So far as regarded these lands, the compromise was not submitted to the learned Judge, but was deliberately left by the parties to stand upon their unregistered agreement of union."

The distinction drawn is that the "act of union" was not submitted to the Court and was not made the foundation of any order: the "razinamah" was so submitted and an order was founded on it. It was thus "in itself a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration."

In this case too no reference is to be found to any special exemption created by the Act itself. As in Binderri Naik's case (3) the judgment rests on a broad general principle that the proceedings of Court do not require registration. It is permissible to doubt whether the head-note in Pranal Anni's case (4) is not too narrowly expressed.

It is surely no straining of language to hold that the security bond in the present case is "in itself a step in a judicial procedure". Plainly the order making the Rule absolute was founded upon it, and in my judgment it matters not that it was submitted to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge and not to the High Court. The Subordinate Judge certified that the required security had been furnished and the Judges of this Court were seized of that fact when they made their order.

But even if it be supposed that in the two cases cited their Lordships of the Privy Council based their judgment on the expressed exemption in the Act, though they do not allude to it, the result is the same. If those proceedings fall within the exemption why not the proceedings in the case before us? I am unable to see any real difference. All are steps in the procedure of the Court.

The question is further dealt with by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. Ltd., (5). In that case a petition of compromise had been made in a previous suit between the parties. The petition was not registered. The whole was embodied in a decree, but as to one clause of the petition the decree was not operative as that clause was outside the scope of the suit. The question raised was whether that clause could be put in evidence. It was held that the special exemption in s. 17, sub-s. 2 (vi), applied inasmuch as there was a decree or order of the Court embodying the disputed clause. Their Lordships refer to Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (4) and cite a passage from Lord Watson's judgment which has been set out above. They then say (page 248*) :—

"Section 375 and its effect were clearly under the consideration of the Board, and the judgment thus expressed showed that, merely regarding the question as a question of evidence and not as to the effect of the decree on lands outside the subject of the suit, such a document as that in the present case when incorporated in a decree was clearly admissible as judicial evidence. Though this judgment does not in terms refer to s. 17, sub-s. 2 (vi) of the Registration Act, it gives full effect to the opinion that their Lordships have formed as to its interpretation. The decree in the present case is a decree which makes no difference whatever in its language between one part and another part of the compromise; it incorporates the whole; and it is, in other words, a decree which, though affecting the lands in the suit as a decree, incorporates the whole of the agreement which led to the suit being compromised. For this reason their Lordships think that the registration of the agreement was unnecessary and that the decree is sufficient evidence of its terms."

Now it is true that here the surety bond is not embodied in the Court's order, but nonetheless the Court's order is based on the surety bond, and were the order writing out in extenso it would of necessity refer to the bond which had been made an exhibit in the case. Thus in my judgment the matter is within the scope of the judgments of Lord Watson, if not directly covered by the case last cited.

Reliance was placed for the appellant on Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Ho Hnaung (2), but the point of registration was not decided there. The bond was registered. The question was whether it had been validly registered. It was assumed that registration was compulsory. The case was heard ex parte and the only point decided was as to the proper method of presentation. At page 397* their Lordships say. "The respondent was not represented on the appeal and their Lordships have accordingly not heard an argument in support of the validity of the bond". It would be wrong to rely on this decision as being in any sense an authority on the point before us.

In my opinion it is a fair conclusion upon these authorities that, on the facts of this case, the surety bond executed by the appellant does not require registration. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the judgments of the Madras High Court in Nagaruru Sambayya v. Tangatur Subbayya (1). It does not appear that the decisions of the Privy Council set out above were cited or considered in that case.

I now turn to the second point. Did the appellant undertake to be bound by the decree which might be passed against the appellants other than defendant No. 6?

First Appeal No. 335 of 1920 was filed by defendants Nos. 2, 4, and 6. The application for stay of execution describes the applicants as "Basangouda bin Mallangouda and others". Basangouda is defendant No. 6. It is carelessly drafted. In the preamble, in para. 1 and also in the concluding sentence the plural "petitioners" is used. In para. 3 the word "petitioner" appears in the singular. The affidavit in support is made by defendant No. 6 and it sets out that execution proceedings were being taken against defendant No. 2. The Court's order "Rule and ad interim stay" clearly meant, having regard to O. XLI, r. 5, that security must be given by the applicant and the application must be read as being, on behalf of all the appellants. But the Court's writ speaks of one petitioner only, viz., defendant No. 6. It was upon that writ that the surety bond came to be executed. The precise terms of the bond are set out above. A surety bond must be construed strictly and upon a strict construction it appears that the appellant before us agreed to become surety for one defendant only. The word used is masculine and singular and as one only of the three appellants was a male, the description can apply to him alone. That one defendant is defendant No. 6. Thus there is a very real doubt as to whether the obligation of the surety extends beyond the decree as against defendant No. 6. The result is unfortunate but, in my opinion, a surety cannot be held liable except to the extent to which he is clearly bound. It is impossible to say that the appellant knowingly undertook to be liable for the decree which might be passed against the defendant No. 2. That being so the attempt to hold him so liable must fail.

Marten, C. J.—This first appeal raises numerous questions which are far easier to ask than to answer and which have not been adequately dealt with in the trial Court. The main questions are (1) whether the security bond, Ex. 11, of January 5, 1921, which was expressed to be given by the appellant surety Jayappa to the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Dharwar in Suit No. 229 of 1917, requires registration under the Indian Registration Act and (2) whether this security bond can be enforced in the present. Darkhast either against the property thereby expressed to be mortgaged, or against the obligor personally or otherwise, and (3) if so, in respect of whose default is the appellant surety liable.

The present Darkhast is No. 39 of 1925 taken out in Suit No. 229 of 1917. That was a suit filed by the plaintiff Shivangouda in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar against Mareva defendant No. 1, Somawa defendant No. 2, Bosangouda defendant No. 6, and Basava defendant No. 4, and others. The suit was decided in the plaintiff's favour on March 27, 1920, and a decree was passed therein. Somawa defendant No. 2 and Basangouda, defendant No. 6, and Basawa, defendant No. 4 filed an appeal in the High Court against the said decree. The plaintiff, who got the decree in his favour, filed an application for executing the said decree. Thereupon an application was made to the High Court in which the petitioners were described in the title as "Basangouda and others." A Rule nisi was granted by the High Court for a stay of execution on terms. Subsequently on the security being furnished that Rule nisi was made absolute. The security in question is this bond, Ex. 11 of January 5, 1921. It is expressed to be given to the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Dharwar.

The first point for consideration is whether this bond required registration under the Indian Registration Act. I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my brother Ormump on this question, and I respectfully agree with his reasoning and conclusion that the Act does not apply here by reason of the fact that the bond was part of the judicial proceedings and incorporated therewith. It follows, therefore, I think that s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act does not necessitate registration; for "registered" is defined to mean "registered under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents". Further, ss. 5, 58, and 100 contemplate a transaction between two persons, but here the bond was to "the Court" and, as stated in Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (6) the Court is not a juridical person.

This brings me to the next point, viz., that the security was given to the Court and not to a named individual and is therefore void. Now the form is one taken from the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, Appendix G, Form No. 2, but that form is headed "To (blank)" and is no doubt intended to be given to a named individual. In Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider a case where the old Code of Civil Procedure was in force when the suit began, but the new Code of 1908 was in force when the application against the widow and sureties for the recovery of mesne profits was started. There also a security bond had been given to the Court, but no person was mentioned in the instrument. After stating at page 236* that "there remains a matter which has given their Lordships considerable trouble" and after holding that s. 145 did not apply because the lower Court had construed the instrument as giving only a charge upon property, and after holding that ss. 47 and 144 did not apply, the judgment proceeded (page 237*):-

"But the questions of their liability upon the instrument, whether they were personally liable, and whether, in the events which happened, it had become applicable, were matters which they were entitled to have determined against them in a regular and authorized manner. The contention for the appellants is that for this purpose there should have been a separate suit to enforce the charge, and that this must have been one according to the procedure provided by s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act.

"In order to see whether this is so their Lordships turn to the instrument itself. For a proceeding under the Transfer of Property Act there must be a mortgagor and a mortgagee. Their Lordships have to examine whether in this case there is any mortgagee, any person to whom the security was given. Now, no person is mentioned in the instrument. It recites the decree that the widow has been ordered to furnish security, and then the declarants furnish security by hypothecating their property. The form of an instrument such as this, in the absence of any special form being provided by the Code, and there is no suggestion that there was any such form provided under the Code then in force, must vary according to the practice of the Court. It appears that in the High Court at Calcutta, in instruments of this nature, the parties bind themselves to some named officer of the Court, and that, if the instrument has to be put in suit, either the officer sues, or he, under order of the Court, assigns the security to the party who wishes to avail himself of it; but this instrument does not purport to bind the sureties to any individual officer or to anyone.

"It is suggested that they are bound to the Court. But the Court is not a juridical person. It cannot be sued. It cannot take property, and as it cannot take property it cannot assign it. It remains, therefore, that there is an unquestioned liability, and there must be some mode of enforcing it; and that the only mode of enforcing it must be by the Court making an order in the suit upon an application to which the sureties are parties, that the property charged be sold unless before a day named the sureties find the money. This form of procedure is that to which the High Court of Allahabad gave its sanction in the case of Janki Kuar v. Sarup Rani (7).

"The new Code of Civil Procedure, that of 1908, provides a special form of security bond to be given during the pendency of an appeal (Appendix G, No. 3). The form shows that it is intended to be given to someone and not to be a mere undertaking to the Court. Whether that someone should be the other party or an officer of the Court is not made clear; but with this form in use it is not likely that the difficulty which surrounds the present case will arise in future".

Stopping there for a moment, unfortunately that very difficulty has arisen in the present case because the bond was given to the Court, as I have already stated, and not to a named individual. Then their Lordships proceeded (page 238*):—

"It appears to their Lordships that the proper way of dealing with the present case is to consider that there are three steps: 1. The assessment of the mesne profits to which the sureties need to be parties. 2. The construction of the instrument determining that the property charged is liable as security in the events which have happened. 3. The order that the property be sold unless the sureties pay.

(7) 17 A. 99; A. W. N. (1895) 19; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 389.

"It might have been more regular to take the first by itself.....and to take the second with the third; but unless it be that there is possibly some increase of costs, no harm has been done. It is idle to talk of the proceedings as if they had been taken before a Court which had no jurisdiction; and no serious objection was raised to the form of procedure; nor can the appellants point to anything which would show that justice has not been done to them.

"In the result, therefore, their Lordships think that except as to the matter of the personal liability of the appellants, the decree appealed from is right".

They accordingly directed that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be varied by substituting the words "the property hypothecated by the instrument of security of September 16, 1902, is liable" for the words "the two sureties are liable".

The effect of that decision was that the property hypothecated by the surety bond was held liable for the sums in question. The result, therefore, was that in effect their Lordships enforced the security bond given to the Court. Accordingly, stopping there, it would seem on the authority of that case that the present security bond could be enforced by the Court against the property in appropriate proceedings.

An alternative view is that the words in the bond refer not to the Court but to the Judge for the time being occupying the position of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar. That view presents obvious difficulties particularly having regard to what their Lordships say at page 238*. Having regard to the numerous changes which take place unfortunately amongst the personnel of the Subordinate Judges, I can understand the practical convenience of a bond to the Court instead to an individual Judge by name. But an undertaking to the Court is one thing, and could, I take it, be enforced by any Judge of the Court to whom the action was assigned for the time being. A mortgage to the Court as pointed out by their Lordships is quite another.

The next difficulty is that the present application is said to be based on s. 145 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section provides that the decree or order may be executed against him (the surety) to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees. Now in the above case of Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council, as I have already pointed out took the view that s. 145 only applied if the sureties were personally liable, and as the instrument there only gave a charge on the property, the section had no application; nor was it in fact relied on. A similar decision has been arrived at by this Court in Gurushantappa Sangappa v. Gurava Madivallappa (8). That was a case where, pending insolvency proceedings, a composition deed was arrived at between the creditors and the insolvent. The appellant Gurushantappa became a surety for the insolvent, and hypothecated his property as surety, and he also became personally liable. It was there held in effect that the personal liability of the surety could be enforced as if it was for a money decree, and that then the property in question could be sold in execution of that quasi money decree. But in doing so the parties entitled to the benefit of the security bond, or the Court in their behalf, would only be in the position of unsecured creditors. Consequently, supposing the surety had assigned his equity of redemption to the third parties, then the mortgage security could only be enforced in a separate suit. Thus Sir Norman Macleod says (page 606*):—

"If, therefore, the surety has not disposed of the equity of redemption, the position is this, that the decree-holder, if he wishes to rely upon the mortgage contained in the surety bond, must get a decree upon the mortgage before he can realize his security. But he is not obliged to rely upon the security given him by the hypothecation of the property under the bond. He can rely upon the personal liability of the surety and seek to attach the property on account of that personal liability. Thereby he only releases his own interest in the mortgage, and runs the risk of other claims being made against the property either by persons entitled to later charges on it, or by other attaching creditors. However, that is a matter which the present respondent must consider for himself. At present we say that the order made by the Judge for sale of the property in question was right, and the appeal must be dismissed..."

In the present case it does not appear that the surety has mortgaged or assigned his equity of redemption. But the decree-holder, the plaintiff, does not wish to be put to a separate suit to enforce the charge given by the security bond. His Darkast is framed in the alternative, and if necessary he contends that the security bond creates a personal liability on the part of the surety; and that consequently proceedings can be taken against him under s. 145 on that basis. The two cases above cited are in his favour on that point. If, however, contrary to our view, the Indian Registration Act had applied, then on the construction of his particular bond a difficult question might arise as to whether the personal covenant was severable. Alternatively it was argued for the surety that this was a contingent liability within the meaning of s. 32 of the Indian Contract Act, because it was dependent on the property charged proving insufficient, and so, it could not be enforced until the contingency happened. But, in the view we take, I need not pursue this point.

I arrive then at the conclusion that the bond could be enforced in appropriate proceedings against the property itself. The next main question then arises whether the surety, the so called defendant No. 8 was liable for the default of defendant No. 6 only as he contends, or for that also of defendants Nos. 3 and 4, as the plaintiff contends. I say "so-called defendant No. 8," because the surety was not an original party to the suit. He has only been a party to the present Darkast proceedings to enforce the bond he gave. Now the above question as to the liability of defendant No. 8 depends primarily on the construction of the bond itself taken in conjunction with the proceedings referred to in the body of the bond itself. My mind has fluctuated on the point, and the case appears to me to be on the line. But, undoubtedly, there was carelessness in the application to the Court for a stay, and in the subsequent orders that were made. I mean as to the person or persons for whom security was to be given. Unfortunately for the plaintiff, this Court's writ of December 14, 1920, mentioned only one petitioner, viz., defendant No. 6 : and the return to the writ by the District Judge on January 25, 1921, is to the like effect. Further, the bond given is more consistent in its language with one petitioner and he of the male sex than with three petitioners of different sexes. In the result, I think, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the surety. Accordingly I agree with my brother Crump in holding that the surety is not liable for the default of the female defendant No. 2.

In the result, therefore, this appeal will be allowed, and the order of the trial Court, set aside, and the Darkhast dismissed with costs throughout including the costs of this appeal.

Mamlatdars' Courts Act (II of 1906), s. 26 (b)—
'Has been the subject of previous proceedings,' meaning of—Jurisdiction of mamlatdar in respect of matter pending in Civil Court.

The words 'has been the subject of previous proceedings' in s. 26 (b) of the Mamlatdars' Courts Act include pending proceedings in a Civil Court. [p. 720, col. 1.]

A mamlatdar has, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain a suit in respect of any dispossession, recovery of possession or disturbance of possession which is the subject of a suit pending between the parties in a Civil Court. [p. 720, col. 2.]

Application for revision against an order of the Mamlatdar, Godhra, in Possessory Suit No. 13 of 1926, confirmed in revision by the Collector, Panch Mahals.

JUDGMENT.

Madgavkar, J.—The question in this application is whether the words "has been" in s. 26, cl. (b), of the Mamlatdars' Courts Act include the word "is" or only refer to past proceedings. The dispute between the present parties was whether the petitioner was or was not a permanent tenant of the opponents. The petitioner brought a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that he was a permanent tenant with consequential reliefs. The opponents sued, subsequently and during the pendency of the civil suit, in the Mamlatdar's Court for ejectment. The Mamlatdar held that the petitioner was not a permanent tenant and granted ejectment. The petitioner applies in revision, and it is argued on behalf of the opponents that the words "has been" cannot include a pending suit but only decided suit.

This contention is, in our opinion, untenable. In a decided suit, the question as to recovery or disturbance of possession or dispossession would be res judicata, and no express clause such as s. 26 (b) would be necessary. It follows that the words "has been" are used to include present proceedings, that is to say, proceedings that are pending; and, therefore, apply to the proceedings between the parties; and, in fact, s. 5, in any case, gives the Mamlatdar a clear discretion to refuse ejectment. It cannot for a moment be supposed that the Legislature contemplated that proceeding in the final Tribunal to decide the question between the parties should be allowed to be disturbed by proceedings before a Tribunal whose powers are much more limited, such as the Mamlatdar, which is created to prevent resort to force and not to interfere with the trial and decision by the Civil Courts.

The order of the Mamlatdar was, therefore, without jurisdiction; and the application must be allowed, the Rule made absolute and the order set aside, without prejudice to the remedy, if any, of the opponents in the civil suit which is now pending.

Patkar, J.—This is an application to revise the order of the Mamlatdar in a possessory suit brought by the inamdars against the defendant on the ground that he was a yearly tenant and that the lease terminated on March 31, 1926. The defendant contended that he was a permanent tenant and was not liable to be evicted by the plaintiffs inamdars who are only alienees of the Royal share of the revenue. The Mamlatdar awarded possession to the plaintiffs.

It is contended before us that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as the defendant-tenant had filed a Civil Suit No. 233 of 1926 on July 5, 1926, for a declaration that he was a permanent tenant and for an injunction against the inamdars restraining them from disturbing him in his possession.

Under s. 26, cl. (b), of the Mamlatdars' Courts Act, no suit shall lie under the Act in respect of any dispossession, recovery of possession or disturbance of possession, that has been the subject of previous proceedings, to which the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-interest was a party in a Civil Court.

It is contended by Mr. Thakor on behalf of the opponents that cl. (b) of s. 26 does not apply to the present case where the proceeding in the Civil Court is pending, but applies only to previous proceedings which have terminated. I think that the words "has been the subject of previous proceedings" would include pending proceedings in a Civil Court. If the proceedings in a Civil Court have ended in a decree, the rights of the parties would be determined in the civil proceedings and the decision would be binding on the parties to the litigation. It would not be necessary, in my opinion, to make any provision in the Mamlatdars' Courts Act with regard to the civil proceedings which have ended in a decree.

In Ramchandra v. Narsimhacharya (1) it was held that the Mamlatdar's decision was not conclusive and the plaintiff was entitled to bring a second suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. In Nagappa v. Sayad Badrudin (2) it was held that the Mamlatdar had jurisdiction to try a possessory suit notwithstanding the fact that there were previous proceedings between the parties under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In order to give effect to the view, overruling the above two cases, that the remedies under the Mamlatdars' Courts Act on the one hand and the Specific Relief Act and the Code of Criminal Procedure on the other hand should be alternative and not cumulative, s. 24 of Bill No. IV of 1905 seems to have been drafted. Section 26 as now enacted, enlarges the scope of s. 24 of the Bill and substitutes a proceeding in a Civil Court for a proceeding under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act as proposed in s. 24 of Bill No. IV of 1905. It is clear, therefore, that the pendency of a civil proceeding in any Court would be a bar to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Mamlatdar under the Mamlatdars' Courts Act (Bom. Act II of 1906). The usual course for the parties is to have recourse to the Mamlatdar's Court for a speedy relief before they seek assistance of a Civil Court, and the defeated party is generally driven to bring a suit in the Civil Court. The procedure adopted by the inamdars in this case was very unusual. They brought a suit in the Mamlatdar's Court after they were sued by the tenant in a Civil Court. Under the proviso to s. 5 of Act II of 1906 it is discretionary with the Mamlatdar to refuse to exercise the power under the Act if he is of opinion that the case before him would be more suitably dealt with by the Civil Court. The decision in the Mamlatdar's Court does not finally decide the rights of the parties. If a Civil Court decides the rights of the parties, then clearly apart from s. 26 of Act II of 1906 the Mamlatdar's Court would have no jurisdiction to entertain a suit under the Mamlatdars' Courts Act. Under the proviso to s. 5 (1) of the Mamlatdars' Courts Act, discretion is given to the Mamlatdar to refuse to exercise the power under the Act if he is of opinion that the matter would be suitably dealt with by a Civil Court.

I think that s. 26, cl. (b), bars the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar when there is a civil suit pending between the parties in respect of any dispossession, recovery of possession or disturbance of possession. I think, therefore, that the contention on behalf of the applicant is well-founded and that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to entertain the present suit.

I would, therefore, make the Rule absolute, reverse the decree of the Mamlatdar and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 35 (ii)—Suit for damages for use and occupation—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

The plaintiff had obtained symbolical possession of certain land against the defendants. Litigation went on between the parties, and taking advantage of the said litigation the defendants continued in possession and took away the paddy that was standing on the land. They further raised fresh crops and appropriated the same to their own use. The plaintiff sued for damages for use and occupation:

Held, that the damages claimed by the plaintiff were not in respect of any act amounting to a criminal offence within the meaning of Chap. XVII of the Penal Code and that the suit was not, therefore, barred from the cognizance of Small Cause Courts by Art. 35 (ii) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. [p. 722, col. 1.]

Mr. S. C. Bose and Babu Saroj Kumar Chatterjee, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhuri and Babu Santi Kumar Roy Choudhuri, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—I am of opinion that to accede to the contention urged on behalf of the petitioners in this Rule would be to hold that all suits for recovery of mesne profits against trespassers are outside the cognizance of Court of Small Cause. Schedule II, Art. 31 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act was construed by this Court prior to the introduction of cl. (ii) of Art. 35 in the case of Kunjo Behary Singh v. Madhub Chandra Ghose (1) and a Full Bench of this Court held that such suits were cognizable by Courts of Small Causes. To find out whether the introduction of cl. (ii) to Art. 35 in the said Schedule has effected any change in the law it may not be out of place to refer to what was said in that case by Trevelyan, J. He observed that suits for damages in the nature of mesne profits were cognizable by a Court of Small Causes even under Act XI of 1865. It would require very strong reasons to suppose that the introduction of cl. (ii) was made in Art. 35 with the object of unsettling the practice that has obtained in this country ever since the foundation of Courts of Small Causes, and indeed to those who are familiar with the history of this clause it is well-known why and to meet what class of cases this clause was introduced.

Turning now to the allegations contained in the plaint upon which the plaintiff's cause of action is founded what is stated in paras. 6 and 7 thereof is this that the plaintiff had obtained as against the defendants delivery of possession through the Court on the 17th of November, 1924, that thereafter litigation went on between the plaintiff and the defendants, and that taking advantage of the said litigation the defendants did not give up possession and continuing in such possession took away the paddy that was standing on the land on the said 17th of November, 1924, and that thereafter they illegally grew paddy on the land in the year 1332 and appropriated the same to their own use and for that the plaintiff sued "for damages for use and occupation." These allegations standing by themselves would hardly make out a case either under s. 379 of the Indian Penal Code or under s. 447 thereof. Other elements have got to be proved in order to establish a case of criminal trespass or of theft as against the defendants. It might well be that the defendants acted under a bona fide claim of right, that although the Court had delivered possession of the land to the plaintiff they were not willing to part with their possession in view of such rights as they thought they had in the lands, and that after acting in that belief they did not give up possession but continued to be in occupation of the lands and to grow crops thereon and to take such crops as had actually been grown by them and belonged to them. I do not see how it can be said that the acts committed by the defendants necessarily amounted to theft or criminal trespass. My attention has been drawn to a decision of this Court in the case of Abinash Chandra Sarkar v. Atul Krishna Bose (2) in support of the position which the petitioners have taken up, namely, that the allegations in the plaint, if established, do constitute a criminal offence. It will be seen, however, that there is a broad distinction between that case and the present one. The difference lies in this that in that case the complainant having obtained a decree for possession against a certain person had obtained actual possession of the land in respect of which the decree had been passed—actual possession in the sense in which the expression is understood in criminal law. I am of opinion that the damages that have been claimed in the present suit are not for any act which would amount to any criminal offence within the meaning of Chap. XVII of the Indian Penal Code. We need not in the present case look at the exceptions contained in Chap. IV of the Indian Penal Code for the determination of this question at all. I accordingly hold that the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to deal with this suit.

The Rule is, in my opinion, fit to be discharged and I order accordingly. The opposite party will be entitled to costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—The only ground on which this Rule has been issued is that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit in view of Art. 31 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

There were two defendants in the suit, the defendant No. 1 being the principal defendant and the defendant No. 2, the pro forma defendant.

The plaintiffs claimed to recover Rs. 170 as house rent together with Rs. 10 for compensation against the defendant No. 1 who was the tenant in the house. The claim against the defendant No. 2 was worded thus in the plaint: If it appears and is legally proved that the defendant No. 1 has in good faith paid to the defendant No. 2 the rent claimed or the rent for any month then a decree may be passed against the defendant No. 2 for such amount as may be so found to have been paid.

In the course of the trial the plaintiffs appear to have reduced their claim to 2/3rd share of the rent, the defendant No. 2 being entitled to the remaining 1/3rd. The defendant No. 2 having admitted to have realised the rents and the learned Munsif having found that the defendant No. 1 had made the payments in good faith, he passed a decree against the defendant No. 2 for 2/3rds of the amount which he had realised.

It is urged in support of the Rule that the suit in so far as it is against the defendant No. 2 is to recover the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant. That, no doubt, is so. But as pointed out by the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Kunjo Behary Singh v. Madhub Chundra Ghose (1) the only class of suits excluded by Art. 31 are those in which the plaintiff claims an account of the monies which the defendant has received and to an account of which the plaintiff is entitled because the monies belonged to him (Per Petheram, C. J., at page 889*). A suit in which accounting is involved is not necessarily a suit for account. Trevelyan, J., also at page 890* says "But the jurisdiction of the Small Cause

(1) 23 C. 884; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 587.

* Pages of 23 C.—[Ed.]

Court is, in my opinion, only excluded by the Act where such suit is a suit for an account, that is, a suit which seeks for a decree, not for a definite sum of money but ordering the defendant to account to the plaintiff for monies received by him. The machinery necessary for the putting in force of that decree is of a kind with which Small Cause Courts have never been supplied, and it has always been the object of the Legislature to confine Small Cause Courts to simple suits which are concluded by the first decree. A suit for an account is a suit which seeks for discovery in pursuance of the decree." It is clear from these observations that unless a decree for accounts is asked for, a suit for money against a person who is alleged to have wrongfully realised monies due to the plaintiff does not come within the Article. The plaintiff in a suit of the present nature can have a decree for money so long as he is able to prove what monies were so realised by the defendant.

The ground of the Rule, in my opinion, fails. In view of the limited character of the Rule it is not necessary for me to consider whether on any other ground the Rule may be supported, nor indeed have I been asked to do so.

The Rule is discharged with costs—one gold mohur.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 30, 31, 36. —Carrier conveying goods without passenger's permission—Loss of goods—Suit for price—Limitation.

For the presumption of an implied contract to carry goods, delivery of the goods to the carrier so as to enable the carrier to acquire lawful possession of the goods for the purpose of carriage, is an indispensable essential.

The plaintiff put certain goods on the defendant's ferry boat for conveyance and himself got on to it but finding that the boat was being overloaded got down and wanted to take down his goods. The defendant refused to allow him to do so. The boat capsized on the way and the goods were lost. The plaintiff sued for the price of the goods:

Held, that the suit was governed not by Art. 30 or Art. 31 but by Art. 36 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act.

Rule against the judgment of the Munsif, First Court, Sudharam (Noakhali), dated the 29th April, 1927, in S. O. C. Suit No. 1436 of 1926.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Petitioners.

Babu Akhil Chandra Dutt, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which arises in this Rule is whether the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation.

The learned Munsif has held that the suit is barred under Art. 30 or 31 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act having been instituted more than one year after the date when the loss or injury took place or when the goods ought to have been delivered.

Shortly stated the facts which have not been controverted are that the plaintiff put the goods on the defendants' ferry boat for conveyance and himself got on to it. Other passengers with their goods also did so. The plaintiff found that the boat was being overloaded and feeling it unsafe to travel on it, he got down and wanted to take down his goods but the defendants refused to allow him to do so. Notwithstanding the plaintiff's protest the boat started on its journey with his goods and capsized on the way and the goods were lost. The claim is for recovery of price of the goods.

To give rise to those special privileges or liabilities which attach to transactions by or with carriers, the relationship has to be first established. There was admittedly no express contract for carriage; and for the presumption of an implied contract to arise, delivery of the goods so as to enable the carrier to acquire lawful possession of the goods for the purpose of carriage is the indispensable essential. It is difficult to see upon the facts set forth above that there was any delivery in this case. The Article applicable to the case is, therefore, not Art. 30 or 31 but Art. 36, and the claim was not barred.

The other facts having been found in plaintiff's favour, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree.

The Rule is made absolute. The decree of the learned Munsif is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs in the trial Court as well as in this Court. Hearing fee in this Rule is fixed at one gold mohur.

One of several mortgagors who redeems the entire mortgaged property by depositing the full amount due to the mortgagee under a decree obtained by the mortgagee against all the mortgagors, and obtains a decree for contribution charging the properties of the other mortgagors for the respective amounts due from them, is entitled to enforce his charge in execution of his decree by sale of the properties charged by the decree, without bringing a second suit to enforce his charge. JUDGMENT.

Page, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Rajshahi allowing the opposite party's objection to certain properties being attached in execution of a decree, and ordering the properties to be released from attachment. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 mortgaged some properties including the property in suit to defendant No. 6 on the 19th of May, 1912. On the 26th of January, 1914, the appellant purchased the properties set out in schedule ka in execution of a money-decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. A mortgage suit was then brought by the mortgagee to enforce his mortgage and some other property belonging to the mortgagors and subject to the mortgage was sold in execution of the mortgage-decree. The appellant as the auction-purchaser of part of the property mortgaged comprised in schedule ka was anxious to save the property still unsold from being put up to auction in execution of the mortgage-decree, and on the 19th September, 1916, deposited in Court the full amount remaining due under the mortgage-decree. Thereupon the properties still unsold which had been subject to the mortgage were freed from liability to attachment under the mortgage-decree. Now, pursuant to the rights given to him under s. 95 of the Transfer of Property Act the appellant brought a suit to obtain contribution from the other owners of the mortgaged property freed from liability to the mortgagee. That suit was numbered 510 of 1919. On the 21st January, 1921, the contesting respondent to this appeal one Tarini Kanta Roy purchased Sarat Sundari Debi defendant No. 1's 1/3rd share of property No. 2 in schedule ka. On the 27th July, 1923, a decree was passed in the contribution suit, and in order to obtain execution of that decree an application was presented by the appellant in respect of which the present appeal arises. The application was for leave to execute the decree by selling the properties of the other owners to the extent to which under the decree they were proportionately liable to contribution. One of those properties was the 1/3rd share of property No. 2 of schedule ga which belonged to Sarat Sundari, and which had been purchased by Tarini. Tarini objected to execution being levied in respect of the property which he had bought from Sarat Sundari, and his objection was upheld by the order against which the present appeal is preferred. Tarini based his objection to execution being levied upon the share in the property mortgaged that he had bought from Sarat Sundari upon three grounds. The learned Vakil who appeared for the respondents urged that in the circumstances disclosed in the evidence, the Court ought to hold, whatever the legal position might be, that the appellant must be taken to have released the property in dispute from any liability to contribute towards the liquidation of the mortgage-debt and the learned Vakil, while admitting that the release did not amount to an estoppel, claimed that it must be held that the appellant had foregone any right which he might have had to obtain contribution from Tarini's property. In my opinion, there is no substance in this contention as will be seen as soon as the relevant facts are stated. It appears that the appellant was the holder of an interest in a jote under which the property was held a share of which was purchased by Tarini, and after Tarini's purchase on the 21st January, 1921, Tarini went to his landlord, that is the appellant and asked him if he would allow mutation of names in his sherista. It was agreed that there should be mutation of names in the sherista upon Tarini paying a selami of Rs. 200 and four years' arrears of rent. It is in those circumstances that the learned Vakil contended that the Court ought to hold that the appellant had agreed to forego any right that he might have in respect of any other charge upon the property. It is quite obvious that no such inference reasonably can be drawn. Tarini purchased the share belonging to Sarat Sundari with full knowledge of all the facts, for he was a party to the contribution suit, and whether there was a charge or whether there was not a charge as alleged upon this property it was necessary that Tarini should obtain a mutation of names in the sherista. There was no evidence whatever to support the contention that it was made a term of Tarini assenting to become a tenant and to pay the sums that I have mentioned that any other charge upon the property which the appellant might have should be released. That contention, therefore, fails.

The learned Vakil further urged that the appellant was in a dilemma. Either the decree in the contribution suit was a personal decree against the parties against whom the decree was made, or it was a decree granting a charge upon the property for the amount for which the property was held liable to contribute. If it was merely a personal decree against the defendants the property of the objector could not be attached in execution. If it was a decree imposing a charge upon the property and not merely for money, then, it could not be enforced by way of sale in the present suit, but must be made the subject of a second suit. The ground upon which this contention was based was that under O. XXXIV, rr. 14 and 15 it was clear that the Legislature intended that before the mortgaged property was brought to sale the mortgagor, or mortgagors if there were more than one, should have an opportunity of redeeming the property before it passed by way of sale out of the hands of its former owner, and the learned Vakil in this connection referred to two cases: Aubhoyessury Dabee v. Gouri Sunkur Panday (1) and Gobind Chandra Pal v. Kailash Chandra Pal (2). The learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that there is a difference between a suit upon a mortgage which had developed in the present proceedings and a suit upon a charge not amounting to a mortgage, which was the case in each of the two authorities to which the learned Vakil referred. Where a suit is brought against several co obligors upon a bond for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that there was a charge upon the property secured by the bond no doubt an opportunity should be given to the co-obligors to redeem the debt secured by the bond, and so to release the property. But in the present case the ratio upon which it has been held in the decisions referred to above that it is incumbent to bring a separate suit is absent, for in the present case a mortgage suit was brought, and in that mortgage suit the co-mortgagors were each of them in a position in which if they elected to do so, they could redeem the mortgaged property by paying the mortgage-debt. The predecessor of Tarini, to the extent to which she was a mortgagor of the interest purchased by Tarini although she had the opportunity to do so, elected not to redeem the property. This opportunity having been given to the mortgagors and the appellant alone having availed himself of the chance of redemption open to all the co-mortgagors now brings a suit for contribution, and, assuming that the decree was not a mere personal decree for money against the defendants, but also declared a proportionate charge which attached to the several properties, in my opinion, the two cases upon which the learned Vakil for the respondents relied are inapplicable. The third contention raised on behalf of the respondents, therefore, becomes material, namely, was this decree a mere money-decree, or was it also a decree under which the several properties were proportionately charged with the amounts due for contribution? The plaint in the suit has not been printed in the paper book, but reference has been made to it, and it does not appear from the plaint (so far as we are in a position to understand it), that any specific claim was made that a charge should be laid upon the properties liable to contribution. But in order to enable us to understand the decree we have been referred to the judgment in the suit which is in the printed paper-book, and, in my opinion, it is clear beyond doubt or controversy that the decree in the contribution suit did impose not merely a personal obligation upon the defendants against whom the decree was passed, but also a proportionate charge upon the properties liable to contribution. It is enough to say that in more passages than one the learned Subordinate Judge emphasises the importance of bearing in mind that "the liability attaches to the property and not to the person, and, as the mortgage charge is indivisible and attaches to the property, every person who holds the property must contribute." In dealing with issue No. 12, which relates to the relief to which the plaintiff is entitled, the learned Subordinate Judge specifically states that there is to be a charge upon the properties, and he takes the opportunity of specifically laying down the contribution chargeable to each of the several properties liable to contribute. The decree recites what the plaintiff's claim is, and after stating in detail the several sums which the plaintiff claims as payable by the owners of the several properties respectively proceeds to state that the plaintiff reserved a lien for the said sums on the respective properties set out in the schedule and held by the defendants. Coming to the operative part of the decree "it is ordered and decreed that this suit be decreed with costs," and although no special reference is made to the word 'charge,' it is, to my mind, abundantly clear that the learned Judge by this decree declared and imposed a proportionate charge upon the property liable to contribution to be paid by each of the properties respectively. It follows, therefore, in my judgment, that the application for execution was well-founded, and that the objection of Tarini was misconceived. The order will be that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge be discharged, that the objection of the respondent Tarini be dismissed, and that the application of the plaintiff-appellant for leave to issue execution be granted. The appeal, therefore, in this sense will be allowed with costs in both the Courts—the hearing-fee in this Court being assessed at three gold mohurs.

The application is dismissed without costs.

Bhikaji Ramchandra v. Purshotam (2), Subbaya v. Samundayyar (3) and Rahim-un-nissa Begam v. Srinivasa Ayyangar (9), referred to.

Per Mallik, J.—For the determination of the question whether an appeal is competent after partial abatement, the true test is whether the appeal can be heard in the absence of the appellant who is dead and the question whether the appeal can be heard in his absence will depend upon the nature of the suit and the decree made. [ibid.]

The tenants of a holding brought a suit for correction of an entry in the Record of Rights relating to the amount of rent and obtained a decree in their favour. The landlords appealed but one of them died during the pendency of the appeal and the appeal abated as against him as his legal representatives were not brought on record:

ment Officer, Kotechandpur, dated the 15th September, 1923.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are these:—

In Khatian No. 128 the rent of the holding was entered as Rs. 10. The plaintiffs, who are the tenants of the holding, brought a suit under s. 100, Bengal Tenancy Act, on the allegation that the rent was really Rs. 7 and praying that the record might be corrected accordingly.

The Assistant Settlement Officer held that the rent was Rs. 10 as entered in the Record of Rights and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Special Judge. The Special Judge was of opinion that the rent was Rs. 7 and decreed the appeal.

The landlord-defendants who are 4 in number appealed to this Court.

Before the hearing of the appeal one of the appellants, defendant No. 4, died. His heirs have not been brought on the record and consequently the appeal, so far as he is concerned, has abated.

The respondent now contends that as the appeal has abated with regard to one of the appellants, the whole appeal must fail, because the right to appeal does not survive to the other three appellants alone. If they are allowed to appeal and are successful, the result will be that so far as some of the landlords are concerned, the rate of rent will be Rs. 7 and as regards others Rs. 10. The contention, no doubt, is correct. See Kali Dayal Bhattacharjee v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (1). The appellants, however, argue that the three appellants who are still on the record can appeal and as regards the appellant in whose case the appeal has abated the Court can apply the principle of O. XLI, r. 4.

His Counsel contends that the three appellants on the record have appealed from the whole decree on grounds which are common also to the 4th appellant and that, therefore, the Court can reverse, or vary the decree in his favour also. (Order XLI, r. 4).

(1) 54 Ind. Cas. 822; 24 C. W. N. 44; 30 C. L. J. 217.

The first difficulty I have in accepting this contention is that I cannot imagine that the Court can vary or reverse a decree in favour of a person who is dead and no longer has any existence. So far as the 4th defendant is concerned, he is no longer a defendant, for he is dead. Possibly he has some heirs but they are not on the record and so are obviously not parties. Order XLI, r. 4 can have no application therefore. A dead person is no longer a party to a suit in any capacity. No doubt, the death of an appellant does not cause the appeal to abate if the right to appeal survives, but this does not mean that any decree can be passed in favour of the dead person. It merely provides that his heir or representative may carry on the litigation if they so desire and have themselves duly been made party. There is a further consideration which I think also makes it clear that O. XLI, r. 4 can have no application. The appeal having abated so far as appellant No. 4 is concerned, the rights between him and the respondents have been determined.

As pointed out by Sargent, C. J., in the case of Bhikaji Ramchandra v. Purshotam (2) an order of abatement is virtually a decree as it disposes of the plaintiffs' (in this case the appellants') claim as completely as if the suit has been dismissed. This view was followed by the Madras High Court: Subbayya v. Samindayyar. (3). So long as the order of abatement remains it must be considered to have determined the rights between the parties. To allow an appellant whose appeal has abated to gain the advantage of O. XLI, r. 4 would result in the anomaly that so far as that appellant was concerned there would be two decrees in the same suit in existence at the same time: one in his favour and one against him. The conclusion to which I have no difficulty in coming is that O. XLI, r. 4, cannot be applied to the case of an appellant whose appeal has abated by his death.

No doubt there are decisions to the contrary: Chintaman v. Gangabai (4) and Somasundaram Chettiar v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (5). The view, however, which I have taken seems to have found favour with this Court : Protap Chandra Chatterjee v. Durga Charan Ghose (6). Clearly the appeal as it now stands is incompetent, for one of the necessary parties in whose absence the appeal could not proceed is not on the record. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed as being incompetent. The respondent is entitled to his costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Malik, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was one under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenants were the plaintiffs in that suit. Their prayer was for a correction of a certain entry in respect of Khatian No. 128 on the allegation that the rent of the holding was Rs. 7 and not Rs. 10 as entered in the Record of Rights. The Assistant Settlement Officer who tried the suit held that the rent of the holding was Rs. 10 and on that finding he dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Special Judge found that the rent of the holding was not Rs. 10 but Rs. 7 and accordingly he directed a correction of the entry as prayed for. The defendants-landlords have appealed to this Court.

On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal is incompetent. It appears that one of the appellants, defendant No. 4, died after the institution of the appeal to this Court and it appears also that his legal representatives have not been brought on the record. It was said that under O. XXII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, the result of this is that the appeal has abated so far as defendant No. 4 is concerned and after that abatement the appeal does not stand properly constituted. To meet this contention a number of cases decided by Courts other than this Court were cited before us. Among them are the cases of Chandraśang Versabhai v. Khimabhai Raghabhai (7), Chintaman v. Gangabai (4), Ram Sewak v. Lambar Pande (8) and Somasundaram Chettiar v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (5). These cases were decided on the principle laid down in O. XLI, r. 4, Code of Civil Procedure. Order XLI, r. 4 runs thus: "Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit, and the decree appealed from, proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be." It was said that although defendant No. 4 had died and his legal representatives had not been brought on the record, the Court might proceed to hear the appeal under O. XLI, r. 4. I do not think that this contention is sound. In cases falling under O. XLI, r. 4 the Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants. But in the present case that is not possible. The appeal has abated so far as defendant No. 4 is concerned. This order of abatement operates as a judgment as between him and the respondents to the same extent as a judgment on merits: Rahim un nissa Begam v. Srinivasa Ayyangar (9). For the determination of the question whether the appeal is competent after partial abatement the true test seems to be whether the appeal can be heard in the absence of the appellant who is dead. Now whether the appeal can be heard in the absence of one of the appellants will depend on the nature of the suit and the decree made. In the present case the suit was for correction of a certain entry in the Record of Rights and the decree made was the correction of that entry from Rs. 10 to Rs. 7. The appeal, if heard, will have to be either allowed or dismissed. There would be no difficulty in the case of dismissal. But considerable difficulty will arise in case the appeal is allowed. The figure Rs 7 will have to be altered in the case of the present appellants, but it will have to be kept intact so far as the heirs of defendant No. 4 are concerned. This, I need hardly say, would be an impossible position. I am, therefore, of opinion that in the circumstances of the case the appeal cannot be heard in the absence of the legal representatives of defendant No. 4. The result of the partial abatement is that the appeal is imperfectly constituted and in the absence of necessary parties I do not think that we can proceed to decide the appeal on merits. In this view of the matter I am supported by the decision in the case of Kali Dayal Bhattacharjee v. Nagendra Nath

Where there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code expressly providing for a remedy and none which prohibits a remedy being administered and such remedy is called for in order to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which it exists, the provisions of s. 151 may and should be resorted to. A suit contemplated by O. XXI, r. 103, Civil Procedure Code, is one which may be instituted after a due and proper investigation of the matter in accordance with O. Revision against an order of the Munsif, Second Court, Tamluk, dated the 13th November, 1926.

Babu Apurba Charan Mukherji, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order passed by the Munsif, Second Court, Tamluk, on the 13th November, 1926. The petitioners had applied under O. XXI, r. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure in connection with an execution case that was pending in the Court of the learned Munsif. The application was registered as a claim case and was taken up for hearing on the 2nd July, 1926, when the decree-holder not having appeared, the petitioners' claim was allowed. On the 22nd July, 1926, the decree-holder filed an application under O. IX, r. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside the aforesaid ex parte order and for the rehearing of the claim case. The learned Munsif dealt with this matter on the 13th November, 1926. He came to be of opinion that there was some mistake somewhere in consequence of which the decree holder was unable to appear on the day on which the claim case was heard. He held, however, that O. IX of the Code of Civil Procedure was not applicable to applications arising out of execution proceedings and in that view of the matter he was unable to give relief to the decree-holder under the provisions of that Order. He thought that in obtaining the ex parte order the claimants had not put the whole case before the Court and accordingly this was a matter which called for the exercise of the Court's powers under s. 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this view of the matter he ordered the claim case to be restored to file. It is this order against which the present Rule is directed.

Now, in the judgment of this Court in Sarat Krishna Bose v. Bisweswar Mitra (1), to which I was a party, it was held on a discussion of the authorities, bearing upon the subject that O. IX of the Code of Civil Procedure is not applicable to applications arising out of execution proceedings and it was further observed that in cases where there is no remedy provided for by the Code when such an application is dismissed for default and there is nothing in the Code to suggest that no remedy should be given, the Court may very well in a proper case resort to the provisions of s. 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On behalf of the petitioners it is contended that a remedy in this particular case is provided for by the Code itself, inasmuch as an aggrieved party may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims in the claim case in accordance with the provisions of r. 103 of O. XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure. That, no doubt, is so; but a suit contemplated under that rule is one which may be instituted after a due and proper investigation of the matter in accordance with r. 100 of O. XXI of the Code. Where the matter has not been so investigated but has been disposed of on default on the part of one or other of the parties the remedy by way of suit is hardly a remedy for the dismissal by default, but is merely a further step which the law provides for all unsuccessful parties in such cases. I am accordingly of opinion that it cannot be said that the provision with regard to suit to which reference has been made on behalf of the petitioners in any way stands in the way of the applicability of the provisions of s. 151 of the Code. In the case to which I have referred it has been laid down that where there is no provision in the Code expressly providing for a remedy and none which prohibits a remedy being administered and such remedy is called for in order to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which it exists, the provision of s. 151 may and should be resorted to. In this particular case the learned Munsif was of opinion that all the facts had not been properly brought to his notice and being of that opinion he thought fit to exercise his powers under s. 151 of the Code. The only defect in the procedure which the learned Munsif adopted appears to have been this that it did not give the petitioners an opportunity of being heard in connection with these proceedings. Ordinarily, that would have been a good ground for our interference. But in view of the fact that he is the same officer who thought that the facts were not properly placed before him and also in view of the fact that after all the whole matter will now be heard on its merits in the presence of both the parties I do not think the case calls for the interference of this Court.

For these reasons, I would discharge the Rule. The opposite parties not having appeared there will be no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 25—Order of remand—Reasons expressed, whether binding on Court hearing appeal finally—Landlord and tenant—Permanent, heritable and transferable tenure—Rent, whether enhancible—Presumption of fixity of rent.

An order of remand made under O. XLI, r. 25, Code of Civil Procedure, decides nothing, and the reasons that the Court gives for its support are given merely for its own convenience for the purpose of the determination of the appeal under O. XLI, r. 26, Code of Civil Procedure, and for helping the lower Court to proceed rightly in carrying out the order. The Court, either the same or differently constituted, when determining the appeal finally, has ample jurisdiction to go back on the views as expressed in the order of remand passed under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Code, and it would fail in its duty if, in deference to those views, which, no doubt, are entitled to the highest respect, it persists in them, although it is satisfied that they are erroneous. JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The facts relating to the litigation which has given rise to this appeal and the circumstances under which the appeal has come up for hearing before us are as follows:—

The plaintiff instituted the suit for ejecting the defendants from a tenure after service of a notice to quit, and in the alternative for enhancement of the rent of the tenure either at the customary rate or up to such limit as the Court thinks fair and equitable. The defence was that the tenure was an etmam, and that it was held as a permanent tenancy at a fixed rate of rent, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's claim should be dismissed.

The plaintiff's case was that the tenure was a temporary one bearing a rental of Rs. 12 and was created by a kabuliyat in 1212, M. E. (=1851). The trial Court held that the question whether the kabuliyat was genuine or not was barred by res judicata and though it was inclined to hold that it was genuine, it felt constrained to hold otherwise because it had been so found in a previous suit. It held that the tenancy was an etmam—which in the part of the District of Chittagong to which the suit relates means a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure. The plaintiff's claim for khas possession was accordingly dismissed by that Court and there it ended.

On the question of enhancement of rent, the defendants relied upon the presumption contained in s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and also the further presumption based on the dictum of the Judicial Committee in the case of Port Canning and Land Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Katyani Debi (1) which is to the effect that where a tenure is proved to be permanent, heritable and transferable, the presumption of fixity of rent must arise in favour of the tenant.

The trial Court gave effect to the latter presumption and dismissed the plaintiff's claim for enhancement. The District Judge on appeal by the plaintiff appears to have ignored this presumption and was unable to give the defendants the benefit of the presumption under s. 50 as it was not known whether the rent of the tenure created in 1851 by the amalgamation of the two tenures that existed before was any different from the sum total of the rents of the latter. Being of that opinion the District Judge held that the rent of the tenure was liable to enhancement. In that view he set aside the decree of the trial Court and remanded the suit for a fresh decision on framing the relevant issues that would arise in a suit for enhancement of rent under s. 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He suggested the following issues:—Is there any customary rent payable by persons holding similar tenures in the vicinity? If so, what is the customary rent? If not, what is the fair and equitable rent? What are the gross rents of the tenure-holder?

The defendants then preferred the present appeal. It came on for hearing before a Division Bench of this Court. On the 14th June, 1926, that Bench made an order under O. XLI, r. 25, Code of Civil Procedure. The substance of the order then made was that the Munsif would, on giving the parties opportunity to adduce such further evidence as they might desire, record his findings on the following questions and then re-submit the records to this Court; 1st: Whether Rs. 12 the rent of the tenure represented the sum total of the rent of the holdings amalgamated in 1851, and whether the presumption under s. 50, Bengal Tenancy Act, arose in favour of the defendants; 2nd: Whether the presumption of fixity of rent which arises from the fact that the etmam is a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure has been rebutted; and 3rd: What is the customary rate or what is a fair and equitable rent for the tenure. It was indicated in the order that the onus of proving that the presumption mentioned in the 2nd question was on the plaintiff, and that the 3rd question need not be gone into if the Munsif found that the rent is not enhancible.

The Munsif in an elaborate judgment has held that the presumption under s. 50 does not arise but that the other presumption, namely, as to fixity of rent which arises from the fact of the tenure being permanent, heritable and transferable has not been rebutted. On these findings, there was no necessity for him, under the terms of the remand order, to go into the 3rd question and he has not done so. The appeal has then come up before us for final determination.

On these findings of the learned Munsif the appellants contend that there should be an end of the plaintiff's suit. The respondent, on the other hand, contends that there is no presumption, either in fact or in law, that because a tenure is permanent, heritable and transferable, its rent is fixed; or, in other words that the remand order made by this Court was misconceived and the enquiry into question of fixity of rent as based on this presumption has been useless. To this contention the appellants rejoined that inasmuch as a Division Bench has already held, rightly or wrongly; that there is such a presumption, that finding or decision is conclusive as between the parties to the appeal and it cannot be re-opened. This position, however, cannot be seriously maintained in view of a long course of decisions of this Court: Ganendru Nath Roy v. Surja Kanta Roy (2), Hiatunnessa v. Kailash Chandra Saha (3), Honuman Das v. Gursahay Singh (4), Official Assignee of the Calcutta High Court v. Bidyasundari Dasi (5) and Kamini Kumar Deb v. Durga Charan Nag (6). An order of remand made under O. XLI, r. 25, Code of Civil Procedure, decides nothing, and the reasons that the Court gives for its support are given merely for its own convenience for the purpose of the determination of the appeal under O. XLI, r. 26, Code of Civil Procedure, and for helping the lower Court to proceed rightly in carrying out the order. The Court—either the same or differently constituted—when determining the appeal finally, has ample jurisdiction to go back on the views as expressed in the order of remand passed under O. XLI, r. 25, Code of Civil Procedure, and indeed it would fail in its duty if, in deference to those views, which, no doubt, are entitled to the highest respect, it persists in them, although it is satisfied that they are erroneous. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the respondent's contention on its merits.

The presumption, it must be noted, has no foundation in any Statute Law and indeed seems to be in conflict with general principles, such as are recognised in numerous authoritative decisions. It rests entirely upon a dictum of the Judicial Committee in Port Canning and Land Improvement Co. Ltd. v. Katyani Debi (1) which runs in these words: "Ordinarily the two admitted characteristics (meaning, heritability and transferability which were the two admitted characteristics in that case) would create a presumption in favour of the tenant, and throw on the plaintiff the onus of showing that the tenure is wanting in the characteristic of fixity of rent." The decision of their Lordships in that case, however, did not rest on this presumption but, on the other hand, proceeded in spite of it and throwing the onus on the defendants, the tenants, as is clear from the passages which follow. Though, thus obiter, the dictum was treated as laying down a principle well worth acceptance and the order of remand made by this Court was based on it. A later pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in the case of Krishnendra Nath Sarkar v. Kusum Kamini Debi (7), however, seems clearly to militate against the correctness of the dictum. No such presumption was relied on in that case, though it should have been if the dictum was correct, and, on the other hand, the effect of that decision is to hold that unless there is something to indicate that the landlord abandoned his right to enhancement, such right must be taken to exist even in the case of a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure. In the case of Nirod Chandra Singha v. Harihar Chakravarti (8) it has been pointed out that the dictum was meant to apply to the special circumstances of the case, namely, that the land was let out for purposes of reclamation, that for some years from the commencement of the tenancy no rent was payable, that there was a progressive scale of rent for several periods prescribed thereafter and that there was no provision for any different rent for any period thereafter. It has been pointed out that in view of these special circumstances the last of the series of rents so prescribed was held as being intended to have been fixed in perpetuity. However that may be the dictum in its broad form in which it is laid down can no longer be treated as authoritative. The appellants seek to justify the correctness of the dictum by reference to the decision of the Privy Council in Bamasoondery Dassiah v.

Radhika Chowdhra (9). That decision relates to the rights of a zemindar holding under a perpetual settlement to enhance the rent of his rent-paying lands, and deals with taluks within the meaning of the 51st section, and ryoti and other undertenures provided for in the 49th section of the Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793. The decision has very little bearing on the present case. The plaintiff in the present case is the holder of a Noabad taluk in respect of which the Government stands in the same position as an ordinary zemindar: Nazir Ahmad Choudhury v. Secretary of State for India (10). The elmam has not been proved to have existed from the time of the Permanent Settlement so as to attract the operation of s. 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The dictum being out of the way, the rent must be held to be enhancible and the issues necessarily to be decided in order to deal with the question of enhancement will accordingly have to be gone into.

There was one contention advanced on behalf of the appellants at the time when the appeal was heard by the former Division Bench. It relates to the form of the remand which was made by the learned District Judge. This contention was reserved for consideration till now. The respondent concedes that it is not necessary to send the whole case down to the trial Court, but that it will be sufficient if the necessary issues are framed and sent to the trial Court for decision—the procedure that is contemplated by O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code. This contention must be upheld.

We accordingly allow the appeal to this extent that we affirm the decision of the learned District Judge that the rent of the tenure is enhancible and while setting aside the order of remand passed by him in the form in which it has been made, direct that he do lay down the necessary issues, including the three issues already framed by him, and send them to the trial Court for its findings, and on receipt of the findings from that Court, finally dispose of the appeal.

We think that in the events that have Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 90—Error on question of limitation, whether ground for revision—Application for setting aside sale—Auction-purchaser impleaded after limitation—Maintainability of application—Auction-purchaser, whether necessary party.

An error on a question of limitation is not necessarily such an error as would bring the case within the purview of s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 735, col. 1.]

Obiter.—An application under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, is not incompetent merely because the auction-purchaser is not made a party therein till long after the prescribed period of limitation for such an application has expired. All that is required by the law is that before the sale can be set aside or confirmed, notice of the application has to be served upon the auction-purchaser. [p. 734, col. 1.]

Civil revision against an order of the Additional District Judge, Dacca, dated the 23rd January, 1926, affirming that of the Munsif, Narainganj, dated the 31st October, 1925.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule arises out of an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure which was filed on behalf of the judgment debtors on the 4th April, 1925, in connection with a sale that had taken place on the 11th January, 1922. In the application as originally filed the auction-purchaser was not made a party. He applied on the 5th September, 1925, to be made a party to the proceedings and on that day an order was made to the effect that he should be made a party. The application was dealt with on its merits by the learned Munsif of Narainganj who on the the 30th October, 1925, set aside the sale and directed the decree-holder to take steps for re-sale of the property. From this order appeals were preferred by the judgment-debtors as well as by the auction-purchaser and the result of these appeals was that the learned Additional District Judge of Dacca affirmed the order which the learned Munsif had passed. The auction-purchaser had now moved this Court and obtained the present Rule.

The question which arises in this Rule is whether the application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure was competent inasmuch as the auction-purchaser was not made a party therein till long after the prescribed period of limitation for such an application had expired. The question raised is one not free from difficulty. The learned Munsif was of opinion that there was no analogy between the addition of a party in a suit and that in an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that it would not have mattered in the least if the name of the auction-purchaser was not mentioned in the application. In his opinion all that is required by the law is that before the sale can be set aside or confirmed, the notice of the application has to be served upon the auction-purchaser and that such notice should be given by the Court whether the applicant does or does not pray therefor. Upon a consideration of the relevant provisions of the Code, I am inclined to agree with the learned Munsif in the view that he has taken. There are, however, conflicting decisions on this point in the different Courts. In the Patna High Court Mr. Justice Ross, sitting singly held in the case of Sumitra Kuer v. Damri Lall (1) that the auction-purchaser is a necessary party to an application to set aside an execution sale, and where he is not made a party within the time allowed by the law for making the application, the application cannot be entertained. The Patna High Court, however, in a very recent case has taken a contrary view. A Division Bench of that Court in the case of Iswardas Marwari v. Biseswar Lal Marwari (2) overruled the contention that was put forward on behalf of the auction-purchaser to the effect that it is necessary to have the parties affected by the application as parties to the application and held that the whole object of r. 92, O. XXI, is to provide that no adverse order be passed in the absence of the persons affected by the order and that in one sense all the decree-holders and the auction-purchaser are to be treated as being parties to the proceeding inasmuch as their names are already on the record. The learned Judges purported to follow another decision of the same Court in the case of Bibi Zainab v. Paras Nath (3). The Bombay High Court has held definitely in the case of Ganesh Bab Naik v. Vithal Vaman Mahalya (4) that in a case under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure to which the same considerations would apply, although the auction-purchaser was a necessary party for the determination of the question which would arise under O. XXI, r. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure an application in which he was not made a party but which was filed within thirty days was not bad on the ground that he was not made a party therein. The same view appears to have been taken in Oudh [Abdur Rahman v. Har Narayan Das (5)]. There is a decision of the Allahabad High Court under the Code of 1882 in which a contrary view was taken. That is the case of Ali Gauhar Khan v. Bansidhar (6). It may be pointed out that this decision was by Mr. Justice Burkitt sitting alone. So far as this Court is concerned there is no case on the point reported in any of the authorised reports. There are, however, two unreported decisions one in the case of Ajiuddin Ahamed v. Khoda Bux Khondkar (7) and also a decision in Civil Rule No. 950 of 1923 in which it has been held that an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure though made within the period of limitation prescribed for such an application is bad if the auction-purchaser has not been made a party therein. These two decisions, therefore, take a view contrary to that which the learned Munsif has taken and were it not for the reasons which I am about to state and on account of which I do not consider this case to be one which calls for our interference it would have been necessary for me to follow these two decisions although I may say, as I have already said, I do not agree with them. I may state here that for myself I am inclined to take the same view of an application like this as was taken of an application under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, in the case of Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Ambika Charan Dutta (8). The considerations which weigh with me in not interfering with the order that has been passed are, firstly, that an error on a question of limitation is not necessarily such an error as would bring the case within the purview of s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure; secondly, the auction-purchaser in the present case is the Sadar Naib of the decree-holder and was looking after the execution proceedings all along on behalf of the decree-holder as appears clearly from a vakalatnama which was filed in the execution proceedings on behalf of the decree-holder and to which my attention has been drawn; and, thirdly, the findings of the Courts below on the question of the service of the processes and sale proclamation and generally on the question of the proceedings held in connection with the sale clearly go to show that a fraud was perpetrated on the judgment-debtors by the decree-holder and presumably also in collusion with the auction-purchaser who is but an officer of the decree-holder. In such a case as this merely because there has been an error on the part of the Munsif with regard to the view that may be taken on the question of limitation aforesaid, if really there has been any error at all, I do not think this is a fit case in which this Court should exercise its powers of revision.

I am accordingly of opinion that this Rule should be discharged but I would make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—In a lease executed by defendant No. 4 in favour of the landlords whose interest has now devolved upon the plaintiffs, creating a miras karsha there was a covenant that if the tenant transferred the holding without the landlord's consent the landlord would have the right of re-entry. In 1326 defendant No. 4 sold the holding to defendant No. 1 who purchased it in the benami of defendant No. 2. Thereafter the plaintiffs brought the present suit for recovery of khas possession of the holding on the ground of breach of the covenant and also of abandonment. The defence was that defendant No. 4 was not aware of the stipulation in the lease and that she had a permanent transferable interest in the holding. The most important question raised at the trial was whether the plaintiffs' suit was maintainable in view of s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act. There was also a denial of abandonment inasmuch as defendant No. 4 had taken a sub-lease from the purchaser (defendant No. 1) of the holding in suit. The Munsif found both the points in favour of the plaintiffs and gave them a decree. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has reversed the findings of the Munsif on these two points and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim for khas possession allowing them a decree declaring their title to the oshat nimhowla and mira-sijara claimed by them and further declaring that defendant No. 4 had no right to transfer the holding in suit.

The plaintiffs have appealed and it is argued on their behalf that the view of law taken by the learned Subordinate Judge on the two vital points raised in the case, viz., the application of s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, and the abandonment by defendant No. 4 are erroneous.

With regard to the first point, the question that falls for determination is whether a case of breach of covenant giving the right of re-entry to the landlord is covered by s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, and makes it compulsory on the landlord in suing on the covenant for recovery of khas possession to serve a notice upon the tenant under that section. That a covenant which gives the landlord the right of re-entry on the tenant transferring the holding is subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be doubted. It has been held that even if there be such a covenant under which the landlord can take possession of the holding without the intervention of the Court, he is unable to do so by virtue of s. 89, Bengal Tenancy Act. Buddhimanta Pramanik v. Sarat Chandra Banerjee (1). Section 155, so far as it is relevant to the present purpose, says that a suit for ejectment of a tenant on the ground that he has broken a condition on breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between him and the landlord, liable to ejectment, shall not be entertained unless the landlord has served, in the prescribed manner, a notice on the tenant specifying the particular breach complained of prima facie and giving their natural meaning to the words of the section it is clear that whenever a landlord sues for ejectment of a tenant he is bound to follow the procedure laid down in s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act. But on the authority of the decision in the case of Dwarika Nath Roy v. Mathura Nath Roy (2) it is argued that where a tenant holding under a lease covenanting against alienation sells the tenancy he ceases to be a tenant and, therefore, s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, is not applicable in his case. The high authority of the decision has made it incumbent upon me to look very closely into the law and the reasoning which induced their Lordships to hold the view expressed therein. With very great respect, I do not find anything either in s. 155 or in the general law to hold that because a tenant commits an act in breach of the terms of the tenancy, he ceases to be a tenant within a meaning of s. 155. He continues to be a tenant until he is declared by a Court of Justice that he has forfeited his tenancy and is liable to be ejected. (Section 89, Bengal Tenancy Act). The view taken by one of the learned Judges in that case seems to be otherwise, but the wording of s. 155 is so general and clear that it cannot be questioned that the application of the section does not depend upon the nature of the covenant the breach of which is complained of but it applies to every case where the landlord sues the tenant for ejectment even though on the allegation that he has forfeited his tenancy on account of the breach of a covenant in the lease. It is not necessary to dwell further upon this point because the ratio decidendi of the case Dwarika Nath Roy v. Mathura Nath Roy (2) is not applicable in the present case. The learned Chief Justice held that the purchaser from a tenant under disability as regards transfer is a trespasser and, therefore, he cannot rely on s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, which is not applicable to one in his position. Mookerjee, J., based his judgment more on this fact than on any other. He observes: "In the case before us it is, in my opinion, plain that no title passed to the first defendant by the execution sale, the landlord has not waived forfeiture by receipt of rent or otherwise, and the forfeiture must be held to have taken effect from the date of sale. The first defendant thus cannot take advantage of s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, as he is not a tenant but a trespasser. The original tenants are quite content with the decrees for ejectment and do not claim to be relieved against forfeiture." This view does not commend itself to me inasmuch as the plaintiffs sue for recovery for possession and they must prove even in the presence of a trespasser that they have obtained the right to recover possession by following the procedure as laid down in law. In view of the facts of the present case we need not consider this question further. The defendant No. 4, the original tenant, has appeared in his suit and objected to the plaintiff's recovering possession of the holding. In this connection we prefer to follow the ruling in the case of Afiladdi v. Satish Chandra Banerji (3) where the learned Judges held that s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, applies to every case of breach such as breach of covenant against alienation. In this view I am of opinion that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs' present suit is barred under s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, is correct.

With regard to the second question, that is, abandonment, the Subordinate Judge has found that defendant No. 4 is still in possession of the land; she was sued for rent by the plaintiffs for a period after the transfer and there is no evidence that there was any repudiation of the tenancy by defendant No. 4. On these grounds he held that there was no abandonment in law. With regard to the second ground as regards the suit for rent, he is not quite precise. The sale by defendant No. 4 was on the 22nd Kartick 1326 and the suit for rent was for the years 1323 to 1326 Pous. There was an overlapping of a few months only and there is nothing to show that the plaintiffs were aware of the sale by defendant No. 4 to defendant No. 1 before they brought the rent suit. The other ground seems to me on the authorities to support the view of the lower Appellate Court. In Monmatha Kumar Ray v. Josada Lal Podder (4) it is said that a landlord is not entitled to treat a holding abandoned where the original tenant is in possession as a sub lessee without some act of repudiation of tenancy by him. I am not prepared to accept the view without further consideration as it would seem that the very fact of the tenant transferring the whole of the holding to a stranger and attorning to him is sufficient evidence of repudiation of tenancy under the original landlord. But I am not at present disposed to differ from the view taken in that case and the other cases which it has followed. I must, therefore, hold that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is substantially correct and must be upheld. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Cammiade, J.—The finding of the Subordinate Judge regarding the status of the defendant who has transferred his interest is that that defendant's interest was a non-transferable occupancy holding. The case has been argued before us on that footing both sides having accepted that finding. The suit was instituted by the plaintiffs for ejectment of both the transferor and the transferee from the land of the holding. The question is how such ejectment may be effected. The grounds on which the ejectment is prayed for are, firstly, that there was a breach of covenant against alienation in which there is a proviso for re-entry by the landlord; secondly, that the tenant has abandoned the holding. With regard to the relief sought on the first ground the question is whether or not the vendor is still to be considered a tenant for the purpose of the suit for ejectment. In the first place, the provisions of s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act, undoubtedly relate to all cases of breaches of conditions which create forfeiture of tenancies and render the tenants liable to ejectment and, therefore, covenants restraining alienation must be held to be included within the scope of the section. A further consideration is that the tenancy being an occupancy holding unless the relationship of landlord and tenant is determined by some act on the part of the contracting parties or by operation of law that relationship continues and the vendor must, therefore, be a tenant till he is ejected under the provisions of s. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act. For these reasons I am entirely in agreement with the view expressed by a Bench of this Court in Afiladdi v. Satish Chandra Banerji (3). In that case also as in the present one the tenant who had sold the holding which was also an occupancy holding had remained in possession by taking a sub-lease from his vendee; and it seems to me, specially in cases of this nature, that there can be no doubt that the notice required by s. 155 (1) is necessary before a tenant can be ejected. In the case of Dwarika Nath Roy v. Mathura Nath Roy (2) it appears that the tenants had vacated the land and took no interest in the result of the suit for ejectment; and, therefore, as the purchaser who was the only contesting party was a trespasser, as far as he was concerned, no notice was necessary.

The other ground on which ejectment has been sought cannot be supported, on the rulings of this Court in various cases: Monmatha Kumar Ray v. Josada Lal Podder (4), Separian v. Ramdeb Rai (5) and Madar Mondal v. Mohima Chandra Mazumdar (6). In all these cases it has been held that there is a non-transferable occupancy holding is sold by the raiyat who after transfer takes sublease from the vendee and continues in possession, there is no abandonment of the land and there is nothing in the mere act of transfer to show any intention either to abandon the holding or to repudiate the relationship of landlord and tenant. This being the view held by this Court in various cases, we are bound to follow that view. I accordingly agree with my learned brother that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Rule against an order of the Court of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, dated the 23rd August, 1927:

Mr. Bipin Chandra Mallik and Babu Kusi Prasun Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This application in revision is by the Official Receiver of this Court against an order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal by which the learned President refused to make over certain Government promissory notes held in his Court to the petitioner. In the circumstances of the case there is no opposite party and we had to hear this matter ex parte. We have given our earnest consideration to the facts of this case and to the observation made by the learned President in his judgment. The facts are that a portion of the premises No. 28, Giri Babu's Lane, in Calcutta belonging to the debutter estate of certain idols was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and the compensation thereof was deposited with the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal under s. 31 of the Act. Thereafter some of the shebait of the said idols instituted a suit in the Original Side of this Court against certain persons for a certain declaration which will be more particularly mentioned later. In that suit an application was made by the plaintiffs for the appointment of a Receiver and the Court appointed the Official Receiver as Receiver in the suit with all the powers with which a Receiver can be vested under O. XL, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code. The Receiver thereafter applied to the President of the Tribunal that the Government securities representing the compensation money awarded in respect of a portion of the debutter property acquired might be made over to him. The learned President on certain considerations has refused to make over these securities to the petitioner. Before proceeding further it is necessary to observe that the order appointing the petitioner as Receiver ran in the following words: "And it is further ordered that the said Receiver be also at liberty to withdraw the securities representing the compensation money in respect of premises No. 28, Gori Babu's Lane and deposited with the Tribunal of the Improvement Trust Calcutta, and the interest accrued due and to accrue due thereon." Since the learned President has declined to part with the securities in spite of the order of this Court, the matter has assumed an importance which demands very careful consideration by us. The main grounds on which the learned President has refused to make over the securities to the petitioner may be summed up thus: (1) The Receiver is only a trustee for the parties to the suit, and no party to the suit is a person competent to alienate the land within the meaning of s. 31 of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894 or a person entitled to act under s. 3, proviso (iv) of the Act; (2) That the suit in the High Court is a suit between parties claiming to be shebaitis to which the idols are not parties either in name or in substance; and, therefore, the properties which belong to idols should not be made over to the Receiver appointed in such a suit; (3) The order of the High Court appointing the petitioner to be the Receiver cannot deprive the Improvement Tribunal of the statutory right which it has under the Act of retaining the money, under O. XL, r. 1 (2) and the order of appointment of the Receiver cannot operate so as to remove from its possession or custody the property as no party to the suit has a present right so to remove.

As regards the first ground it is clear on the authorities that the view expressed by the learned President is not tenable in the circumstances of the present case. As has been held in the case of Harihar Mukherjee v. Harendra Nath Mukherjee (1) a Receiver appointed by the Court is not ordinarily the representative or agent of either party in the administration of the trust. But his appointment is for the benefit of all parties and he holds the properties for the benefit of those ultimately found to be the rightful owners; and reliance has been placed on the decision in Jagat Tarini Dass v. Naba. Gopal Chaka (2) where it is laid down that the Receiver is the representative of the Court and may be deemed to be right arm of the Court in exercising jurisdiction invoked in such cases for administering the property because the Court can only administer through a Receiver. The learned Judges further observed that, no doubt, in some cases the expression is used that the Receiver may be considered as a representative of the parties to the suit but this only in the sense that as against an adverse claimant his title does not stand higher than that of the parties to the litigation; and upon this notion of the character of the Receiver is founded the provision in O. XL, r. 1 (2), Civil Procedure Code. In Harihar Mukherjee's case (1) the question was whether the Receiver appointed by the Court could take possession of the property without a Succession Certificate. It was held that a Receiver when he seeks to take possession of the subject-matter of the litigation under an order the Court is not a person who claims to be entitled to the effects of a deceased person under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, and he is in no sense a representative of the deceased person but is merely entrusted by the Court with certain power over the estate for temporary purposes. The decision in Radha Binode Mandal v. Gopal Jiu Thakur (3) rests on the fact that there the suit was for declaration of plaintiffs' title as shebaitis in which the idol was not interested.

This brings us to a consideration of the nature of the suit in the High Court which is connected with the second ground on which the learned President's judgment is founded. The suit in the High Court as appears from a perusal of the plaint is no doubt for a declaration that the plaintiffs and some of the defendants are shebaitis "of the idol. But there are also two prayers in the plaint which are relevant for our present purposes. The prayer (o) is to this effect: "If necessary the said debutter estate be administered by and under the direction of this Hon'ble Court", and, (p), "if necessary a scheme be framed for the proper performance of the worship of the Thakur." It is conceivable that in view of these prayers this Court appointed the Receiver and authorised him to take possession of all the debutter properties including the promissory notes in the hands of the Improvement Tribunal. In the suit the plaintiffs further prayed that certain unauthorised alienations of the idols' properties might be set aside. Considering the entire scope of the suit it is difficult to hold that the idols were not interested in the suit. As has been observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Devi (4) that although an idol may be regarded as a juridical person capable of holding properties, it is only true in an ideal sense; but the fact remains that the possession and management of the dedicated properties belong to shebaitis; in other words though the idol is the owner of a property but being incompetent to manage it, the right of management and possession is vested in the shebaitis. The suit is for the benefit of the idols though a portion of it relates to matters personal to the plaintiffs. We are told that all the other properties belonging to the idols have been taken possession of by the Receiver. There appears to be no reason why the promissory notes which are in the possession of the Tribunal should not be taken possession of by the Receiver as a part of the debutter estate. As has been held in Mrinalini Dasi v. Abinash Chander Dutt (5) the compensation money representing the estate of an incompetent person partakes of the nature of real property and does not lose its character as such because it has been transformed in shape. The money in the hands of the Tribunal, therefore, is a portion of the debutter property which would have come into the possession of the Receiver under the direction of the Court if it were not acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. See also Kamini Devi v. Promotho Nath Mukerjee (6).

As to the third ground under s. 32 of the Land Acquisition Act the acquisition Court is not absolutely vested with the compensation money. It is apparent that possession of the Receiver is the possession of the Court and the money if made over to the Receiver will remain in custodia legis. The law does not vest the acquisition Court with such power as to retain the money in its possession in spite of the direction of a competent Civil Court. Taking all these facts into consideration I am of opinion that the order of the learned President of the Improvement Trust should be set aside and that he be requested to comply with the order of this Court by making over the money to the petitioner. This Rule is made absolute.

Graham, J.—I agree and desire to add only a few words. The Rule was issued at the instance of the Official Receiver to show cause why an order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal rejecting the application of the Official Receiver to withdraw certain securities deposited with the Tribunal under s. 31 of the Act should not be set aside and an order made directing the delivery of the said securities to the petitioner. The learned President of the Improvement Trust Tribunal in refusing the application proceeded mainly upon the ground that he was precluded by the terms of the Statute (Land Acquisition Act I of 1894) from acceding to the application, and he has referred in support of the view taken by him to certain provisions of the Act. He has held that the Receiver stands in the shoes of the parties and represents them, and that that being so he cannot have any greater power than is possessed by the party whom he represents. The learned President has perhaps not considered sufficiently the fact that a Receiver by his appointment does not become the representative of the party, but is an officer and representative of the Court which appoints him. Indeed he is frequently spoken of as "the hand of Court" and is merely in possession of the property on behalf of the party who may be ultimately declared to be entitled thereto. One or other of the parties must eventually be declared to be entitled to the securities in question, or at all events to retain possession of them.

(4) 31 I. A. 203; 32 C. 129; 8 C. W. N. 809; 6 Bom. L. R. 765; 1 A. L. J. 585; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 698 (P. C.).

(5) 6 Ind. Cas. 508; 11 C. L. J. 533; 14 C. W. N. 1024.

(6) 10 Ind. Cas. 491; 39 C. 33; 13 C. L. J. 597.

A Receiver appointed by the Court is merely a temporary custodian of the property on behalf of the Court, and holds them for the benefit of the party successful in the litigation. He cannot deal with the properties in any way without the consent and approval of the Court, so that no apprehension need arise that the interest of either of the contesting parties is likely to suffer in any way by reason of his temporarily retaining possession of the properties. For these reasons and also in view of the order made on the Original Side of this Court by Mr. Justice Pearson I agree with my learned brother that the order which has been made by the President of the Improvement Trust Tribunal cannot be sustained and that this Rule should be made absolute.

Mr. Hemendra Nath Sen, (with him Babu Gopendra Nath Das), for the Appellant.

Babus Rupendra Kumar Mitra and Ajendra Nath Dutta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal may be disposed of on the short ground that the plaintiff's suit as framed is not maintainable under s. 42, Specific Relief Act. The plaintiff claims the land in the suit as a co-sharer with the defendants. The defendants deny that they were ever the plaintiff's co-sharers and say that the properties belonged to them by transfer from the rightful owner. The plaintiff brought the present suit for declaration of his title to the properties in suit and for confirmation of possession. The trial Court found all the issues relating to title and possession against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit. The learned Additional District Judge has not gone into the question of title but on his finding on the question of limitation he is of opinion that the suit is not maintainable. He has found that the plaintiff was never in possession, either actual or constructive, of the properties in suit and, therefore, the present suit which is brought under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, is not maintainable. The learned Advocate who appears for the appellant argues that the view taken by the learned Judge on the question of limitation is wrong and that as he is a co-sharer the possession of the defendants should be presumed to be his possession; in other words he was in possession of the properties in suit through the defendants. Various objections can be taken to this contention: (1) The plaintiff in his plaint admits that the defendants were claiming the entire moveable and immoveable properties on the strength of a Will and Probate. It is said that this conduct of the defendants has only clouded his title, but the facts cannot be concealed that the defendants were in possession in their own right to the exclusion of all others including the plaintiff. If the defendants were possessing the properties on the strength of a Will they were certainly possessing them as against the plaintiff, if he had any title to them. (2) The learned Additional District Judge's finding on the question of limitation does not appear to be erroneous in law. The Will under which the defendants are in possession is dated 1892. The present suit was brought in 1924. For so many years the defendants were in possession in their own right derived under the Will. Every case between co-owners with regard to the question of adverse possession must be decided on the particular facts of that case. Admitting that the plaintiff was ever a co-owner his exclusion from this property for such a length of time under a title inconsistent with the title set up by the plaintiff is enough to entitle the Court to deduce from it that there was an ouster of the plaintiff from the properties. Ayennessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (1). (3) The principle of possession between co-owners is that every co-owner is a tenant-in-common and that possession of a tenant-in-common is not adverse to his co-tenant. But a person cannot be a tenant-in-common with a person whom he never recognised as a co-tenant and probably had no knowledge of his existence. Since 1892 the defendants have been in possession of the property in their exclusive right. They never regarded the plaintiff as a co-sharer and it is possible on the case they have proved before the trial Court that they were not aware even that he was their co-sharer.

The plaintiff was out of possession at the time of the institution of the suit. That being so, the case comes within the purview of the proviso to s. 42, Specific Relief Act, and is not maintainable in its present form. It may be noted that the plaintiff describes the suit in the plaint as one for declaration of title and has affixed necessary Court-fees for such a suit. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Babus Upendra Kumar Roy, Monomohan Banerjee and Ramendra Chandra Roy, for the Appellant.

Babu Sasadhar Roy (Sr.), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is one of the most preposterous cases which shows that it was absolutely necessary to enact something in the nature of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. In this case the principal defendants borrowed Rs. 400 on mortgage of properties which admittedly are very valuable. The interest charged was Rs. 7-8 per cent, per mensem which would come up to nearly 100 per cent, per annum with annual rests. The result is that within 4 years, as the Subordinate Judge observes, Rs. 400 principal swelled up to over Rs. 7,600. The Subordinate Judge says the rate is monstrous, we unhesitatingly endorse that opinion. Mr. Roy for the assignee of the mortgagee who is the appellant before us contends that that is the usual rate of interest in that part of the country. If that is so nothing can be more deplorable than the fact asserted, and in every such case the Courts would be justified in rigorously applying the Usurious Loans Act in that part of the country, whenever such a course is justified. The evidence, however, does not satisfy us that that is the usual rate of interest in that part of the country, for mortgage bonds. The pro forma defendants who were the original mortgagees are, no doubt, very hard money-lenders and they exacted usurious rates of interest in other cases as they have proved themselves. The Courts ought to be alert in allowing them interest in cases which are brought before the Court when usurious rates of interest are claimed by them. We have nothing to add to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in this case except to point out that it is unnecessary in such cases to consider whether the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower. Where the rate of interest is high the Court may proceed to give relief under s. 3 (1), cls. (a) and (b) read with the explanation to the proviso in cl. (d) where it is stated that interest may, by itself, be sufficient evidence that the transaction was substantially unfair. In our opinion nothing can be more unfair than 100 per cent. interest with annual rests where there is sufficient security for the debt.

The next point argued on behalf of the appellant is that he comes within sub-s. (4) of s. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918, inasmuch as the plaintiff was a bona fide transferee from the original mortgagees. To assert such a proposition seems to be a mere effrontery. To say that they were not aware that the rate of interest was unconscionable seems to us to be absurd. Then again he purchased the mortgage-bond for Rs. 2,000 when the actual amount due on the bond was over Rs. 5,000. Was he not put upon an enquiry why the mortgagees were selling their interest at such a loss? The absurdity of the position taken up appears from the very statement of the fact.

This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at ten gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The plaintiff claims rent at the rate of Rs. 13-3-15 gandas with cesses and damages. His claim was based upon a decision under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defence was that the rate of rent was Rs. 12-6-4½ pies only. The learned Munsif decreed the suit at the rate at which the plaintiff laid his claim with costs and interest and from that decision the defendants having preferred an appeal, the decree of the trial Court was modified, the plaintiff being given a decree only at the rate which was admitted on behalf of the defendants. The substance of the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is that the lands which formed the subject-matter of the suit consisted of undivided shares of parcels of homestead lands which did not constitute a holding and in respect of which no rent could be settled by the Settlement Officer under the provisions of s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Judge also was of opinion that certain matters which should have been taken into consideration in determining a fair and equitable rent for the lands had not been taken into account by the Settlement Officer and that there were grounds which stood in the way of any enhancement being made in respect of the rent of the lands. For these reasons the Subordinate Judge took the view that the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to make the order that he did under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that, therefore, the order was a nullity and was not binding on the parties. The plaintiff who has preferred this appeal challenges the correctness of the view which the learned Subordinate Judge has taken as aforesaid. I am clearly of opinion that the appellant's contention should succeed. I can put my reasons in no better words than what have been used by the learned Munsif in his judgment in this case. The learned Munsif has observed thus: "A decree in s. 105 proceedings operates as Civil Court decree (vide s. 107) and there cannot be any doubt that the Settlement Officer who enhanced the rent here had jurisdiction to try the case under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act brought by the plaintiff against the defendant. Even if the Court made a mistake, the Court had jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right and if the wronged party did not take the course prescribed by law to set the matters right the decision, however wrong, cannot be disturbed now. So in any case the decision under s. 105 proceedings must be taken to be binding on the parties". This view is amply supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Dharani Mohan Ray v. Asutosh Mukerji (1). The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been under an entire misconception as regards the true meaning of the word 'jurisdiction.' What amounts to absence of jurisdiction in circumstances such as these and under what circumstances a decree passed by a competent Court may amount to a nullity as being passed without jurisdiction have been clearly explained in a very recent decision of this Court in the case of Ishan Chandra Banikya v. Moomraj Khan (2).;

For the reasons given above, I am of opinion, that this appeal should be allowed, the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the trial Court restored and I order accordingly; but there will be no order for costs in this Court or in the Court of Appeal below.

Vendor and purchaser—Suit by purchaser against trespasser—Trespasser, whether entitled to question bona fides of sale or adequacy of consideration—'Paper transaction', meaning of—Transaction found to be sham—Order for refund of price, whether proper.

A sued B and C for recovery of possession of certain properties alleging that he had purchased the properties from C and prayed that if C was found to have had no interest at the time of the purchase the price paid might be decreed to him. B pleaded that he had purchased the same properties from C's predecessors-in-title long before the alleged sale to A. C contended that he had validly transferred the properties to A. The lower Appellate Court found that the sale set up by B was untrue, and that the sale set up by A was a mere 'paper transaction' created by C to enable A to bring the suit, and, while dismissing A's suit for possession, directed that the amount admitted by C to have been received from A should be refunded to A. In second appeal:

Held, (1) that B, being a trespasser, was not entitled to challenge the validity of the sale to A on the ground that it was a mere 'paper transaction' or was for inadequate consideration; [p. 746, col. 1.]

(2) that C having admitted that he had sold the properties and received the price therefor and A having admitted that he had purchased the properties and paid the consideration therefor, there was no principle of law under which C could be compelled to return the purchase-money to A. JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the plaintiff for recovery of possession of a certain piece of land said to have been purchased by him from defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5. The plaintiff's case was that the land belonged to three brothers Raj Mohan, Nanda Mohan and Deba Mandal. After the death of Raj Mohan and Deba Mandal their shares were inherited by the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the 5th defendant being one of the brothers. The defence of the principal defendants was that the property belonged to Raj Mohan alone and that he had transferred it to the defendants before his death. During the progress of the suit in the trial Court the plaintiff added an alternative prayer to his plaint, namely, that if it was found that his vendors had no interest in the property the price paid by him to them might be decreed against them. The defence of the vendor defendants was that the land belonged to the three brothers and that Raj Mohan did not sell the land to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as alleged by them but that they had sold the land to the plaintiff; and consequently a decree for refund of purchase-money should not be made against them. Judhistir, defendant No. 3, further said that the entire purchase-money as mentioned in the kobala was not paid to him and a portion of it was still unpaid. The Munsif in the trial Court held upon an examination of the evidence that the case for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was true and that the property belonged to Raj Mohan alone who had sold it to the defendants as alleged by them. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge found that the property did not belong to Raj Mohan alone that it belonged to all the three brothers jointly, and that the kobala propounded by the defendants was not executed by Raj Mohan and was not a genuine document. After entering this finding against the defendants the learned Subordinate Judge went on to discuss the merits of the plaintiff's case and remarked that the consideration of the three kobalas from the defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 though they had equal shares was not the same. He, however, does not question the genuineness of the plaintiff's kobalas but records an opinion about them in these words: "In my opinion, all these kobalas were mere paper transactions and they were created to enable the plaintiff to bring this suit. If the plaintiff really intended to purchase this land, he would have paid Rs. 200 to Judhistir. I, therefore, find no reason to decide the question of title in plaintiff's favour." In the result he confirmed the decree of the Munsif which was to the effect that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed and that the amount admitted by defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 to have been received from the plaintiff should be returned to the plaintiff by the defendants. I regret that I am unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge in this matter. He finds that the defendants' kobalas were not genuine. The defendants are, therefore, trespassers and he holds that the plaintiff's kobalas are genuine but says that they are paper transactions created in order to enable the plaintiff to bring this suit. It is difficult to understand what the learned Subordinate Judge exactly means by using the words 'paper transactions.' This is one of the instances where expressions are loosely used without attaching proper legal significance to them. The reason that the Subordinate Judge gives for holding that the plaintiff's kobalas are paper transactions is that they were created to enable the plaintiff to recover possession of land from the defendants. If that is the idea with which the documents were created I do not see why they should be called paper transactions. The vendors admit that they sold the property and the purchaser claims that he has purchased this property. That being so, it is difficult to imagine any circumstance which would enable the Court to say that the documents were paper transactions. In the case of Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain Khan (1) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that where the plaintiff suing in ejectment claimed under a transfer from the true owner the deed of sale containing an untrue statement as to the payment of the purchase-money, but being otherwise reasonable in its terms, and affirmed and acted upon by both vendor and purchaser, and neither champertous nor contrary to public policy, it operated as a present transfer to the plaintiff giving him a good title on which it was competent for him to sue, unless the defendants succeeded in proving that the transfer was not merely voidable but absolutely void. The present case seems to me to fall exactly within the principle enunciated by their Lordships. It is a suit against a trespasser who has no right to retain possession of the property as against the true owners of it. The true owners are defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5. They say that they had sold the property to the plaintiff and the plaintiff in virtue of that transfer—it does not matter whether the entire consideration money was paid for the transfer—brought the present suit against the defendants who had no right to retain possession of it in the presence of his vendors. In support of the view of the Court below reference has been made to the decision in the case of Kamini Kumar Deb v. Durga Charan Nag (2) where it has been held that if a document is fictitious the principle of the decision in Lal Achal Ram's case (1) does not apply. Though I consider that the law as broadly enunciated in that judgment is an inroad upon the principle underlying the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lal Achal Ram's case (1), I do not think that the considerations which influenced their Lordships in Kamini Kumar's case (2) to hold against the document are present in the present case. In Kamini Kumar's case (2) there is no finding that the defendants were trespassers. In fact on the statement of the facts of that case it is evident that they had some ostensible right to the possession of the lands in suit there. It has not been further found that the person who had title to the land supported the plaintiff's title either in the plaintiff in his own right or in the plaintiff as the representative of the true owner. The contention of the defendants in that case was that the conveyance upon which the plaintiff relied was without any consideration and passed no right. It may be said that a transaction without any consideration is void and, therefore, falls outside the decision in Lal Achal Ram's case (1). In the present case there was consideration, though inadequate according to the Subordinate Judge upon which plaintiff's title was well founded. If the consideration is inadequate the vendors may have the right to avoid the transaction or in other words, it renders the transaction voidable. If the whole of the purchase-money is not paid to one of the vendors he has the right of an unpaid vendor under the law. But any question that may arise between a vendor and a vendee with reference to the transaction is outside the competence of a trespasser to challenge the validity of the sale on any such ground.

Now, the reason which the Subordinate Judge has given to hold that the kobalas are paper transactions is that they are created to enable the plaintiff to bring the suit. Admitting the object to be as stated by the Subordinate Judge I do not find any reason why the plaintiff cannot maintain the suit. The vendors, defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5, had the right to maintain the suit. The plaintiff under those transactions is either their agent or benamdar: in either capacity he is entitled to maintain the suit. Then again under the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge the amount of consideration received by defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 has been decreed against them. The vendors admit that they have sold the property and received the price therefor and the purchaser says that he has purchased it and paid the consideration for it. I fail to see on what principle of law the vendors can be compelled in these circumstances to return the purchase-money. In my opinion on the findings arrived at by the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff is entitled to succeed.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs throughout.

Graham, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—The decree of the lower Appellate Court which has given rise to this appeal is divisible into two parts. The first of these parts is the decree for arrears of rent that has been awarded to the plaintiffs. The second part of it relates to the question of enhancibility of the existing rent. The appeal to this Court is directed against the second part aforesaid and is confined to the relief which the plaintiffs claimed for enhancement of rent. The trial Court decreed the suit at the existing rate of rent with damages at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The prayer for enhancement of rent was dismissed by that Court. The lower Appellate Court has confirmed the decree for arrears of rent with the modification that instead of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. as damages, damages have been awarded at 25 per cent. As regards the prayer for enhancement of rent the order that has been made by the lower Appellate Court is that the decree of the trial Court is to be set aside and the case remanded for a fresh decision of the question in the light of such further evidence as the parties may think fit to adduce. The order in question appears to me to be one which is not one of those orders of remand from which an appeal would lie under the Code of Civil Procedure. It is an order which the learned Judge evidently thought fit to pass in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction and for the ends of justice. I am, therefore, of opinion that no appeal would lie from this decision and that the present appeal must, therefore, on that ground be dismissed.

I have been asked by the learned Vakil for the appellants to treat the memorandum of appeal as an application under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I have given the matter the consideration that it deserves but I am unable to say that the reasons which the learned Additional District Judge has given for making an order would not justify the same. Speaking for myself, I would perhaps not entirely agree with the view which the learned Additional District Judge has taken at least as regards the form in which he has made the order. That, however, is a different matter. On the whole I am unable to hold that the order, such as it is, calls for the interference of this Court under the provisions of s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The learned Vakil for the appellants has brought to my notice the fact that settlement operations are in progress in the District to which the case relates and that in view of the provisions of s. 111 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the further trial of the suit that has been ordered by the learned Additional District Judge should be stayed. This, no doubt, is a matter that has got to be considered but I would leave it to the trial Court to determine whether the section to which I have just now referred is applicable under the circumstances and to pass such orders as regards this matter as it may consider proper to pass.

The appeal is dismissed but in the circumstances there will be no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by some of the defendants, that is, defendants Nos. 7, 10, 16 and the representatives of the original defendant No. 14, against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Chittagong, dated the 15th September, 1925. The suit was originally brought by the plaintiff No. 1 only by making the plaintiff No. 2 a pro forma defendant who was subsequently transferred on his own application to the category of plaintiffs. These two plaintiffs claimed the property in suit as the reversionary heirs of one Bhabani Das Bhattacharja who died in October or November 1874 leaving a widow Bama Sundari him surviving. Bhabani had previously executed a Will dated the 28th July, 1874, by which he had appointed several executors. The executors renounced their executorship and the widow applied for Letters of Administration with the copy of the Will annexed which was granted to her on the 8th of February, 1875. It appears that on the 6th May, 1879, the widow Bama Sundari executed two permanent leases in favour of one Gour Hari Das (Choudhury), the predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 7 to 15 and the properties covered by these two leases are the only subject matter of dispute in this appeal. The Subordinate Judge has made a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs making the defendants liable for mesne profits. From that decree these defendants have appealed to this Court.

The history after the grant of the Letters of Administration is that the agnates of Bhabani Das oppressed his widow in various ways so that she was obliged to leave the family dwelling-house of her husband and had to go to live in her father's residence. In September, 1899, she applied to the District Judge for permission to sell certain properties. This permission was refused and in that order the District Judge made certain observations about the revocation of the Letters granted to her. In November 1899 two of the executors applied for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed of Bhabani Das and the plaintiff No. 1 also made a similar application. In the meantime on the 28th September, 1899, Bama Sundari sold her right to all the properties to the predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 1 to 6. The learned District Judge granted Letters of Administration to one of the executors named Kebab Krishna Bhattacharji. On appeal the High Court set aside that order, and the result was that the original grant to Bama Sundari was not interfered with. In September 1906 Bama Sundari brought the properties covered by the two pattas of 1879 to sale after having obtained a decree for rent. It will be noticed that this was after she had parted with all her interest in the properties left by her husband. The disputed properties were purchased by the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants Nos. 16 to 19, who has been found to be a benamidar of the original lessee Gour Hari. Bama Sundari died on the 10th January, 1921, and this suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of the properties left by their maternal uncle Bhabani Das, of which the properties subject to the aforesaid leases are now the subject-matter of this appeal. The ground urged by them is that there was no legal necessity for permanent leases. The Subordinate Judge in his judgment discusses various points and has come to the conclusion that the leases were not granted for legal necessity. He has further held that the widow had only limited powers of alienation as administratrix and has not the power before the passing of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, to grant permanent leases without the sanction of the District Judge. He has also held that the transaction entered into by the widow in granting permanent leases was not a bona fide one. He appears to have been of opinion that the selami which was said to have been paid to the lady before the Sub Registrar was not actually received by her, but that there was only a show of payment. In that view he has decreed the suit.

The first contention on behalf of the appellants is that the Subordinate Judge has misread the law as regards the powers of an administrator governed by the Hindu Wills Act before the passing of the Probate and Administration Act as stated in Phillips and Trevelyan's book on Hindu Wills (2nd Edition, page 225) by omitting a 'not' in the quotation made by him. This is true. Their argument is that before the passing of the Probate and Administration Act, an administrator acting under the Hindu Wills Act had the same authority as an executor under s. 269 of the Indian Succession Act which was made applicable to Hindus by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act. Section 269 of the Succession Act of 1865 runs thus: "An executor or administrator has power to dispose of the property of the deceased, either wholly or in part, in such manner as he may think fit." I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in his view of the law as regards the powers of an administrator under the Hindu Wills Act before the passing of the Probate and Administration Act of 1881. Whether the leases are binding on the plaintiffs or not will depend on other considerations and the matter will be dealt with later on.

The next point urged is that in any view of the case under the terms of the Will, it should be held that the widow forfeited her right to succeed to the property by the sale of all her properties inherited from her husband on the 28th September, 1899, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to come in as heirs under the Hindu Law on that date; and the suit having been brought in January 1924 was barred by limitation. With regard to this point we are of opinion that the appellants' argument cannot be sustained. Even assuming that the sale would work a forfeiture of the right of the widow, which we are not prepared to hold, there is no subsequent disposition of the property under the Will and the result would be an intestacy. The widow was the heir under the Hindu Law and she would be entitled to hold the property as the heir of the testator Bhabani Das under any circumstance when there was no gift over under the Will; and so long as Bama Sundari was alive, the plaintiffs would have no title to the property left by Bhabani.

The first point is a more substantial one and requires careful consideration. It is contested on behalf of the respondents that Bama Sundari did not give the permanent leases of the property in question in the course of the administration of her husband's estate, and, therefore, the power conferred upon an administrator under s. 269 of the Succession Act of 1865 does not come into play. Letters of Administration were granted to her in 1875. The finding of the Subordinate Judge is that there were no debts to be paid by the administrator. It was not necessary for the administrator to alienate the property for the purpose of administration; nor does it appear that the administration had not already come to an end at the time when the permanent leases were given. The leases, therefore, granted by the lady were not granted by her as administratrix but should be taken as granted by her as a Hindu widow and not being supported by legal necessity are not binding on the plaintiffs. It is further argued that on the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the leases were not bona fide they are not binding on the plaintiffs under any circumstance.

The lease Ex. B (15) shows the reason why it was given. The other lease, we are told, was in the same terms. There the lady describes herself as the widow of Bhabani. It is stated that the istemrari mokarrari kaemi daemi patta was given for the purpose of her husband's Gaya sradh, for the expenses of her residence at Benares and other necessary expenses. These are matters which cannot be held to be for the purpose of the proper administration of the estate of her deceased husband, and she does not describe herself in granting the leases as administratrix nor does it anywhere appear that the lessee was aware that she was given Letters of Administration of her husband's estate.

I apprehend that the powers given to an executor under s. 269 of the Succession Act of 1865 were for the purpose of conversion of the testator's estate into money for the payment of debts to the creditors and for the facility of division of the legacies. The powers granted under that Act were the same for all cases of administration, whether the testator died after leaving a Will or died intestate. Where it is clear that no debt has to be paid and no legacies have to be divided, it would be difficult to say that an administrator has an unlimited power of sale for his own purposes. No authority in point has been cited at the Bar with regard to any restriction on the exercise of the power of an executor or administrator under s. 269 of the Succession Act, but as that section was taken from the English Law, I think it is permissible to refer to English authorities in order to explain the nature of the power, which I shall presently do.

It was contended by Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen in reply that the fact that the lady did not describe herself as administrator did not affect the right of the lessee and he relied on the case of Preonath Karan

v. Surja Coomarr Goswami (1) where the Court held that the fact that the vendors did not describe themselves as administrators but described themselves as heirs did not affect the case, because either as administrators or as heirs they were entitled to sell, though as heirs they could not sell anything more than their own shares. This would be applicable only to the case of bona fide purchasers who had no knowledge that the money was to be applied otherwise than for the payment of the testator's debts. [See Corser v. Cartwright (2) referred to in the above case.] In Soloman v. Attenborough (3) one of two executors without the knowledge of his co-executors pawned articles of plate belonging to the testator's estate with certain pawn-brokers, who had no notice that he was not the absolute owner thereof, and he misapplied the money advanced upon them for his own purposes. At the date of the pledge all the testator's legacies and debts so far as they were known had been paid, but the residuary estate had not been completely realised and distributed. On the death of the pledgor the transaction was discovered, and an action was brought by his co-executor and a new trustee against the pawn-brokers to recover the plate. The Court of Appeal held, reversing the trial Court, that inasmuch as the pledgor had not purported to act as executor, and the defendants had no notice that he was executor, the latter had no title to the plate and must deliver it up to the plaintiffs. The House of Lords affirmed the decision on appeal on the ground that the proper inference from the facts was that the executors at the time held the plate not as executors but as trustees and, therefore, the deceased executor had no power to pledge the plate: Attenborough v. Soloman (4). In Ricketts v. Lewis (5) it was held that an administrator has no power to mortgage lease-holds of an intestate under leases not containing repairing covenants in order to raise money for repairing the property. And such a mortgage will be set aside as against a mortgagee who has notice of the purpose for which the money is raised. Fry, J., (as he then was) observed: "What authority had the administratrix to raise money for the purpose of repairing the property? It may be that she was liable to repair by virtue of covenants in the lease, but having regard to the length of the terms and the time when they were granted that does not appear probable, and the onus of proving that there was such a liability is on the mortgagee, and he has not discharged it. It comes then, shortly, to this, that at the date of the mortgage Mrs. Lewis did not require the money for any purpose which it was her duty to perform as administratrix, and that she did require it for the purposes of her own beneficial enjoyment."

Applying the principles laid down in these cases there cannot be any doubt, in my judgment, that the leases in dispute cannot be sustained. There was no debt to pay off the testator; the lessor did not purport to grant the leases as administratrix, she did so rather as the widow of Bhabani Das: the lessee does not appear to have any knowledge that Letters of Administration had been granted to the lessor, there was clear notice in the lease to the lessee that the money was required for purposes quite different from what it was the duty of the lessor to perform as an administratrix, all these circumstances establish that the leases are not binding on the estate left by Bhabani Das, even assuming that the lessee did actually pay the premium to the lady as stated in the leases. An executor or administrator does not appear to have according to the law an absolute power to dispose of the property of the deceased if it is not necessary for the purpose of administration of the estate, but a bona fide purchaser may be protected in certain cases where a transfer is not for that purpose.

There can be no doubt that she could make alienations for necessity as a Hindu widow. But the Subordinate Judge has found that there was no necessity for such alienation and no attempt has been made to show that that finding is incorrect. It is further argued on behalf of the respondents that the Will itself does not give a free power of alienation by way of leases even to the executors. Paragraph (8) of the Will says: "In case it becomes necessary to grant any permanent leases to tenants, the executors shall be com-

It is urged that it cannot be reasonably said that when the executors had renounced, the widow would according to the Will itself, get an unfettered power of making alienation by way of permanent leases by taking Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. I am not quite sure that if it was necessary for the purpose of administration the widow could not grant a permanent lease by reason of these provisions. But on the grounds already stated we are of opinion that the leases which were granted by the lady were granted by her in the exercise of her right as the owner of a widow's estate as heir of Bhabani, and, as such, not being supported by legal necessity, the reversioners are entitled to recover possession after the death of the widow.

On these grounds the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The effect of allowing an application for review is to vacate the decree originally passed, and the decree that is subsequently made on the review, even if it does not modify the decree originally passed, is a new decree superseding the original one; and it is, therefore, open to a party to prefer an appeal from the decree passed on review even if it does not in any way modify the decree originally passed. dated the 7th of March, 1925, reversing that of the Munsif, South Raozan, dated the 9th of August, 1923.

Babus Krishna Kamal Moitra and Rabindra Nath Choudhury, for the Appellant.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was instituted by the plaintiff for declaration of title and recovery of khas possession of certain lands.

The lands comprised of two plots,—the southern portion of Cadastral Survey Plot No. 3315 and the whole of Cadastral Survey Plot No. 3316. The plaintiff's case was that the lands originally belonged to his father in ryoti right and comprised a holding held under one Nobo Chandra Saha, that the said Nobo Chandra Saha sold up the holding at a rent sale, and that one Ramesh Chandra Rakshit purchased it at the said sale and let it out to the plaintiff in dar-ryoti interest on the 23rd April, 1920, that the defendants dispossessed him in August, 1920, upon which he instituted a suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act but was unsuccessful therein and hence the suit. The case of the defendant No. 1 was that Cadastral Survey Plot No. 3315 was held by his father in dar-ryoti right under one Sarada Charan Sikdar who in 1917 also mortgaged his ryoti interest to the said defendants' father. The case of the defendant No. 3 was that Cadastral Survey Plot No. 3316 belonged to certain persons, that under a partition and a transfer subsequently made it came to be owned in ryoti right by the defendant No. 3, and that he settled it in dar-ryoti to the defendant No. 1.

The Munsif decreed the suit, but the Subordinate Judge on appeal has dismissed it.

The Subordinate Judge has found that the documents showed that one Nobo Chandra Saha having obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the plaintiff's father Ratanmani put the holding up to sale and Ramesh Chandra Rakshit purchased it at such sale in 1900, that in 1906 Sarada Charan Sikdar sold his interest in the lands to Ramesh Chandra Rakshit, and in April, 1920, plaintiff obtained a settlement thereof from the said Ramesh Chandra Rakshit. He was of opinion that there was nothing to show who this Nobo Chandra Saha was or whether he was the sole landlord and whether Ratanmani was the sole tenant, and that there was no explanation why Sarada was not made a party in the rent suit which Nobo Chandra Saha instituted though Sarada along with Ratanmani were recorded in Cadastral Survey Records as the tenants in respect of the two plots Nos 3315 and 3316 which were also described therein as one holding with the defendant No. 1's father as a korfa tenant under them. On the whole he was of opinion that the rent-decree and the sale was a shady and suspicious transaction. He, however, decided the appeal on the ground of limitation holding that the suit failed as neither the plaintiff nor his lessor Ramesh was in possession within 12 years before the suit. It is this finding on the question of limitation that is challenged on behalf of the plaintiff who has preferred this second appeal.

To the maintainability of the appeal a preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents. It is pointed out on their behalf that this appeal was filed on the 24th June, 1925, that prior to filing the appeal the plaintiff had filed an application for review on the 30th April, 1925, before the Subordinate Judge and the application for review was allowed on the 14th September, 1925, the result being that the appeal was again heard and on the 20th January, 1926, a fresh judgment was delivered by which the original judgment was held to stand good and a fresh decree was prepared and signed on the 27th January, 1926. It is urged that the present appeal is in the circumstances not maintainable. The appellant, on the other hand, urges that by the order granting the application for review the Subordinate Judge merely kept his original judgment "in abeyance", as he expressly said in his order passed on the 14th September, 1925, and that when by the judgment ultimately passed on the 28th January, 1926, and the decree prepared and signed on the 27th January, 1926, the original judgment was held to stand good, the appellant is competent to attack the original judgment and the original decree in this appeal. In my opinion the effect of allowing an application for review is to vacate the decree originally passed, and the decree that is subsequently made on the review, even if it does not modify the decree originally passed, is a new decree superseding the original one. For this view that I take, I do not find any authority directly or clearly in point. The case of Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Prasad (1) was one in which the former decree was modified in important particulars on the review; so also in the case of Brijbasi Lal v. Salig Ram (2) there was a modification. In the case of Pyari Mohan Kundu v. Kalu Khan (3) it is said at page 1016*, that if the application for review is successful the appeal cannot proceed, and Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Prasad (1) is quoted in support. The decision of the Lahore High Court in Basheshar Nath v. Ram Kishen Das (4) is perhaps the only authority which may be cited as fully supporting my view.

In the circumstances I think it proper to record my views on the merits of the appeal on which also I think the appeal must fail. The argument on the merits is that as the defendants cannot claim any higher rights than those of under-ryots, and inasmuch as Ratanmani's and Sarada's names were recorded as ryots in the Cadastral Survey Records, and because the defendants cannot dispute the purchase by Ramesh of Ratanmani's interest at the rent sale and of Sarada's interest by private purchase, or challenge the lease granted by Ramesh to the plaintiff, it should be held that the under-ryoti tenancy which was at one time held under Ratanmani and Sarada still continues and, therefore, the possession of Ramesh and also of the plaintiff is established. In other words, it is contended, that the relationship as between ryot and his under-ryots not having been determined even though no rent may have been paid or received, Ramesh must be held to have been in possession and so the plaintiff. This argument assumes that a mere assignment or transfer is sufficient to put the assignee or transferee in possession as against persons claiming to hold under the assignor or transferor, a proposition which cannot be seriously put forward. In my opinion, the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the question of possession is a question of fact and should be viewed as such.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 80—Pro-note silent as to interest—Interest from date of note, whether can be awarded.

The liability on a promissory note payable on demand arises from the date of the note from which date limitation begins to run and not from the date on which a demand is made for payment, and, therefore, where such a note is silent as to interest, interest is claimable under s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act at 6 per cent. from the date of the note.

Framroz Eduljee Dinshaw v. Mahomed Essa (2), followed.

Best v. Haji Muhammad Sait (1), dissented from.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 12th of March, 1927, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 5th of July, 1926.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The main point urged in this second appeal is concluded by the findings of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge. The plaintiff-respondent sued the defendant-appellant for recovery of Rs. 807-2 due on foot of a pro-note which was admittedly executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 650. The defence set up was want of consideration. The trial Court accepted this plea and dismissed the suit but on appeal the learned District Judge, after carefully going through the evidence and examining the story set up by the defendant-appellant in all its aspects, came to the conclusion that he had failed to prove that the pro-note had been executed without consideration. Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellant has tried to attack this finding but he has been unable to point out any substantial error in procedure which would justify interference by this Court on second appeal. It must, therefore, be held that the defendant has failed to prove that the pro-note was without consideration.

The second point urged by Mr. Mehr Chand is that in the pro-note no rate of interest is mentioned and as the plaintiff has failed to prove that he made any demand from the defendant before the institution of the suit—no interest was legally payable. In support of his contentions he relies on a decision of the Madras High Court reported as Best v. Haji Muhammad Sait (1). There are, no doubt, certain observations in that ruling which support Mr. Mehr Chand's contention, but so far as I am aware the view taken there has never been accepted as correct by this or any other Court. The question was recently considered by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in Framroz Eduljee Dinshaw v. Mahomed Essa (2), where Macleod, Chief Justice, (Coyajee, J., concurring) held that the liability on a promissory note payable on demand arises from the date of the note from which date the time of limitation begins to run and not from the date on which a demand is made for payment. Where, therefore, such a note is silent as to interest, interest is claimable under s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act at 6 per cent. from the date of the note. Following this ruling I hold that the learned District Judge was right in allowing plaintiff interest at 6 per cent. from the date of pro-note till realization.

No further point was urged. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Muhammad Tufail, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In order to clearly understand the points involved in this appeal it is necessary to state a few preliminary facts. The relationship of the parties will appear from the following pedigree table :—

On the 10th of October, 1922, Muhammad Munir mortgaged a house with defendant No. 1. He having failed to make payment in accordance with the terms of the mortgage the mortgagee instituted a suit against him for recovery of the amount due to him and a preliminary decree was passed in his favour on the 12th of November, 1924, for Rs. 12,427-15 which was made final on the 6th of June, 1925. In execution of this decree the mortgaged property was sold by public auction on the 18th of March, 1926, to the decree-holder for Rs. 5,000 only. To this sale the judgment-debtor raised a number of objections which were after lengthy enquiry dismissed by the executing Court and the sale confirmed on the 28th of May, 1926. Muhammad Munir judgment-debtor appealed to this Court against the order of confirmation but the appeal was rejected by Colostream, J., on the 5th of October 1926. After the dismissal of this appeal the decree-holder applied for being put in possession of the property which he had purchased at the auction-sale, but before any proceedings could be taken on this application, the judgment-debtor's wife Musammat Mubarik Begum and his sister's daughter Musammat Aisha Begum, a minor 14 years old, instituted the present suit for a declaration that the property sold to the decree-holder was owned by them under a Will purporting to have been executed by Musammat Hamida Begum, mother of Muhammad Munir, judgment-debtor, on the 10th of June, 1906. On the same day an application was presented in the Court praying that proceedings in execution of the decree passed in favour of the decree-holder against Muhammad Munir may be stayed. It was not stated under what provision of law the application was made. On this application the Senior Subordinate Judge has issued a temporary injunction staying delivery of possession to defendant No. 1 pending the disposal of the suit instituted by Musammat Mubarik Begum and Aisha Begum.

Against this order granting the temporary injunction the decree-holder has preferred a miscellaneous appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1. Mr. Muhammad Tufail for the respondents urges that no appeal lies as the lower Court, in granting the injunction, has acted under s. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Fakir Chand for the appellant replies that the lower Court has really issued the injunction under O. XXXIX, r. 1, and an appeal is competent. He further prays that, in case it be held that the order in question is not appealable, the memorandum of appeal may be treated as one for revision.

In order to decide whether the appeal is competent, it is necessary to determine under what section the lower Court purported to act. It is unfortunate that the judgment of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge granting the temporary injunction is a rambling document and it is not easy to find out under what section the learned Judge purported to act. The judgment is written in such a way that it cannot be said where the recital of the arguments of Counsel ends and where his own decision begins. The difficulty is enhanced by the fact that in the application filed by the plaintiffs on the 29th of November, 1926, it was not stated under what section the applicants were moving the Court, nor did the Court insist upon a compliance by the parties with the instructions repeatedly issued by this Court that every application presented by a party must clearly give the provision of the law under which the party seeks to apply. The observations of the learned Judge in the penultimate paragraph of the judgment are not mutually consistent but I gather from the very last sentence of that paragraph where the Court has expressed the opinion that the injunction in this case was legally issuable "under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code" that he intended to act under that section. Orders passed under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, are admittedly not appealable, and I must accordingly sustain the preliminary objection urged by Mr. Muhammad Tufail and hold that no appeal lies.

But while I hold that no appeal lies I am of opinion that the circumstances of this case are such as to justify interference by this Court on the revision side. The lower Court has, as already held, issued the injunction under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, but in doing so it has entirely overlooked the principle which should be kept in view by a Court in taking action under that section. It is well-settled that when the jurisdiction of the Court is invoked under that section and it is called upon to act ex debito justitiæ, it is necessary for the plaintiff to establish a strong prima facie case and show that if the injunction asked for is not granted, irreparable injury or inconvenience would result. The ruling of the Letters Patent Bench, [Firm of Manohar Lal-Mahabir Pershad v. Firm of Jai Narain-Babu Lal (1)], which has been referred to by the lower Court itself, lays down clearly these propositions. The lower Court has not applied its mind to this aspect of the case. The respondents' Counsel has candidly expressed his inability to make out such a case from the materials on the record. On the other hand, he concedes that when the mortgage suit against the husband of plaintiff No. 1 was pending and protracted proceedings in execution of the decree passed thereon were going on the plaintiffs did not intervene and assert that they possessed any rights in the house, but that as soon as the judgment-debtor had exhausted all his tactics in delaying the execution of the decree, and the sale had been confirmed, plaintiff No. 1 who is the judgment-debtor's wife and plaintiff No. 2, who is a minor relation of his, at once instituted the suit and applied for grant of a temporary injunction to stay delivery of possession to the decree-holder. The plaintiffs' suit was based mainly on a Will purported to have been executed on the 20th of June, 1906, by Musammat Hamida Begum, mother of the judgment-debtor and in para. 5 of the plaint it was stated that in a decree obtained against Ahmad Shah (father of the judgment-debtor) this Will had been set up but had not been accepted by the Court. On these recitals in the plaint it was absolutely necessary for the plaintiffs to make out a strong case before the jurisdiction of the Courts under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, could be invoked, but as already stated, it is admitted that such a case cannot be made out on the record as it stands at present.

I, therefore, accept the petition for revision, set aside the order of the lower Court and discharge the injunction issued staying delivery of possession of the property in question to the decree-holder. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case the parties shall bear their own costs in both Courts.

I wish to make it clear that nothing contained in this judgment is to be taken as in any way affecting the rights of the parties on the merits of the suit, which are yet to be enquired into and adjudicated upon by the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—Two persons Sunder Singh and Agya Singh, were carrying on business as contractors in partnership. About the 20th May, 1925, they decided to end this partnership and referred the questions arising between them to the arbitration of Sardar Bahadur Singh, who had to go into the question of dissolution of the partnership and into the accounts. The arbitrator gave his award on the 5th July, 1925, subsequent to which Sardar Sunder Singh filed an application in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, for an order that the award should be filed and made a rule of Court. On the 30th August, 1926, an order was passed directing that the award be filed and a decree was drawn up in the terms of the said award. Agya Singh then preferred an appeal to this Court attacking the order directing that the award be filed and paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 on the memorandum of appeal. At the hearing of this case a preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Man Singh, on behalf of the respondent Sunder Singh, to the effect that the appeal was insufficiently stamped inasmuch as Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act was applicable. Under that Article the Court-fee prescribed is an ad valorem one. Mr. Man Singh in support of his contention referred to Gauri Shankar v. Anant Ram (1). That was a decision of my own sitting alone. A reference to my judgment in that case shows that the point now before the Court was not decided by me. The proceedings in that case were under para. 16 (1) of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, and I held there that the appeal did not fall within the purview of s. 104 (f), Civil Procedure Code. Reference had been made in the course of the arguments in that case to Dharam Das v. Ajudhia Pershad (2) and Hari Mohan Singh v. Kali Prosad Chaliba (3) and Mr. Man Singh referred to these two authorities. Now both these cases dealt with the old Code. In Dharam Das v. Ajudhia Pershad (2) it was held that inasmuch as Art. 18 of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act did not apply, the only Article applicable was Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act, fixing an ad valorem fee in the case. The question was not discussed at any length by the Judges deciding the case and Hari Mohan Singh v. Kali Prosad Chaliba (3) is really more in point. There it was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court, following Ghulam Khan v. Muham- mad Hassan (4) that an order having the force of a decree is in fact a decree and it was, therefore, held that the fee payable was an ad valorem one. Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (4) was a case decided ultimately by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee who state at page 182* as follows: "The decisions of the Indian Courts on those provisions are so conflicting that it may be useful to state generally the conclusions at which their Lordships have arrived on some of the disputed points brought to their attention in the course of the argument." They then proceeded to lay down certain definite conclusions and the third one is as follows:—

"Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award..... Proceedings described as a suit and registered as such must be taken in order to bring the matter—the agreement to refer or the award as the case may be—under the cognizance of the Court. That is or may be a litigious proceeding cause may be shown against the application and it would seem that the order made thereon is a decree within the meaning of that expression, as defined in the Civil Procedure Code."

Now, it seems to me that their Lordships held that an order directing the filing of an award in circumstances such as exist in the present case fell within the definition of the expression "decree" as defined in the Civil Procedure Code, that was then in force. A reference to that definition and the definition of the term or expression 'decree' as found in the existing Code are different in material particulars. There it was specifically laid down that an order specified in s. 588 of the old Code is not within this definition. A reference to s. 588 shows that an order filing an award or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court was not made appealable. It follows, therefore, that such an order fell within the definition of the expression "decree" and the necessary consequences followed. In the present Code s. 2(2) defines a decree and specifically states that the expression shall not include (1) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order; while s. 104 of the Code (new) in sub-s. (f) specifically provided for an appeal against an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court. In these circumstances it appears to me that the order in the present case is not and cannot be regarded as a decree and, therefore, the remarks of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (4) do not appear to me to be applicable.

Mr. Man Singh on this being pointed out to him admitted that the order in this case was not a decree but contended that it was an order having the force of a decree. He was, therefore, unable to cite any authority in support of his contention and I am unable myself to see how an order of this nature can have the force of a decree and I would, therefore, hold that for the purposes of Court-fees an appeal from an order under s. 104 (f), Civil Procedure Code, would be governed by Art. 11 of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act. In this view I am supported by Sarwan Pande v. Jagat Pande (5) a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court to be found printed in 103 Ind. Cas. 315. At page 316 their Lordships say:—

"In our judgment the Court below was wrong in holding that the memorandum of appeal was not sufficiently stamped. It is to be noted that an appeal is allowed by s. 104 (f), Civil Procedure Code, against an order filing or refusing to file an award without the intervention of the Court. That being so, the present applicant was entitled to file an appeal against the order of the learned Munsif, by which he ordered the award to be made a rule of the Court. The appeal being against an order the requisite Court-fee stamp was of eight annas, and the memorandum of appeal being stamped with a Court-fee stamp of that value, was sufficiently stamped and the appeal ought to have been heard on the merits."

I would, therefore, disallow the preliminary objection and holding that the memorandum of appeal is sufficiently stamped proceed to hear the case on the merits.

Turning to the merits of the case, Mr. Sardha Ram for the plaintiff, Agya Singh, contended that the agreement to refer to arbitration dated the 20th May, 1925, did not contain any reference to matters which the arbitrator decided, namely, the question as to what contracts were joint and what were not joint was not referred to the arbitrator, nor was the question as to the immoveable property of the partnership. The agreement to refer is to be found translated at page 5 of the printed paper book from lines 14 to 22. This translation Mr. Sardha Ram has admitted to be correct. A reference to this shows that the terms of reference were very wide. It recites that the parties to this appeal had been carrying on work as contractors in partnership for a considerable period and had decided to end the partnership business but that for certain reasons, not given, they were unable to dissolve the partnership amicably. They, therefore, referred their mutual disputes which related to the settlement of partnership accounts to Sardar Bahadur Singh, Sub-Divisional, Officer who was to be the sole arbitrator and whose decision on the matter was to be binding on both.

It appears that the arbitrator went into the question as to whether certain contracts were partnership contracts or not, and also dealt with certain immoveable properties which he found belonged to the partnership. It appears to me that there was nothing either irregular or improper in what the arbitrator did. In order to arrive at a proper settlement of the partnership accounts it seems to me that it was necessary for the arbitrator to ascertain first what the assets and liabilities of the partnership actually were, and in order to discover this it was obviously necessary for him to decide any dispute that might arise during the course of his investigation into the partnership affairs as to whether or not any particular contract or property belonged to and formed part of the partnership assets. In this view I am supported by Shamlal v. Parshotam Das (6). I would, therefore, hold that there is no force in this objection and that the agreement to refer to the arbitrator the settlement of the partnership accounts necessarily included a reference of all the disputes that might arise during the arbitration proceedings as to what property was to be taken into account. Had there been any moneys belonging to the partnership in Banks or deposited with other persons it is obvious they would have been and ought to have been included in the distribution and, therefore, I consider that the arbitrator rightly included in his distribution the immoveable property which admittedly belonged to the partnership.

Next it was urged that the arbitrator had been guilty of corruption. This matter was put in issue and decided against the appellant by the Court below. The charge of corruption is based on the fact that while the award was given on the 15th July, 1925, the arbitrator had on the 29th June, 1925, deposited a sum of Rs. 20,000 in the Punjab Sind Bank at Amritsar. Admittedly there is no direct connection between this deposit and any malpractice on the part of the arbitrator. We are, however, asked to presume that this payment was the result of a bribe or illegal remuneration given to him by the respondent. It has not been pointed out to us that the arbitrator had no private means of his own, and I think it would be unfair to raise the presumption contended for.

Next it was urged that the award was bad for want of finality, inasmuch as by cl. 5 of the award the appellant was directed to transfer or endorse the separate title-deeds and documents and other valuable securities in favour of the respondent. It was contended that the arbitrator should have drawn up a list of all the documents referred to. Inasmuch as the arbitrator decided, rightly or wrongly, that the respondent was entitled to all the properties represented by these title-deeds and valuable securities, and as far as can be made from the agreements advanced at the Bar, there is no doubt, as to what these title-deeds and valuable securities actually were. I am unable to see that the award is bad on this account. If in the course of the execution of the decree passed in terms of the award any question arises as to whether or not a particular title-deed refers to property which belongs to the partnership the question can be settled by the Executing Court. The decree itself would to my mind be specific enough.

Finally, it was urged that the arbitrator was wrong in administering a special oath to the respondent. It appears that the oath was administered at the instance of the appellant and this objection, therefore, scarcely appears to be within his powers.

In any event the arbitrator has solemnly stated as a witness of the appellant, that the statement was made by the respondent, on the oath as required by the appellant and he filed the record of the statement made which he said had been signed by both appellant and respondent. The appellant went into the witness-box after the arbitrator had given his evidence and did not deny his signature nor contradicted the arbitrator's statement. I must, therefore, hold that there is no substance in this objection.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Jai Lal, J.—I agree.

Criminal trial—Sentence—Enhancement of sentence in revision, grounds for.

The mere fact that the High Court as a Court of first instance would have passed a heavier sentence is not by itself a sufficient ground for enhancing a sentence in revision especially when the sentence passed by the trial Magistrate is a substantial one.

Empress v. Chuni Lal (1) and Emperor v. Budha (2), relied on.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, First Class, exercising enhanced powers under s. 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Shahpur at Sargoda, dated the 29th June, 1927.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mulk Raj, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants, Khana and Dosa, have been convicted of an offence under s. 304, Part II, Indian Penal Code, for having caused the death of one Saphiya, a blind old man, 60 years of age, and have been sentenced each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for five years. They have now appealed and the Crown has filed an application for enhancement of sentence.

[His Lordship after dealing with the appeal by the accused proceeded as follows:—]

As to the sentence Mr. Mulk Raj for the Crown has strenuously urged that in view of the unprovoked nature of the assault on a helpless, blind old man, the maximum sentence of seven years, which could be passed by the learned trial Magistrate, is the appropriate sentence in a case like this. After fully considering the matter I am, however, of opinion that no adequate grounds have been shown for my interfering on revision with the sentence passed by the Magistrate. The principles upon which this Court acts as a Court of Revision in such applications were enunciated in the well-known case of Empress v. Chuni Lal (1) and have been recently re-affirmed by Mr. Justice Broadway in Emperor v. Budha (2). The mere fact that I myself sitting as a Court of the first instance would have passed a heavier sentence is not by itself a sufficient ground for interference especially when the sentence passed by the trial Magistrate is a substantial one.

I, therefore, dismiss both the appeal filed by convicts and the petition for enhancement of sentence on behalf of the Crown.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 25 (1) —Application for custody of minor—Matters to be considered—Welfare of minor.

An order under s. 25 (1), Guardians and Wards Act, cannot be made but for the welfare of the minor and in considering what will be for the welfare of the minor regard must be had to the age, sex and religion of the minor and where the minor is old enough to form an intelligent preference that must also be taken into consideration. Sarat Chandra Chakrabati v. Forman (1), followed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 21st March, 1927 / 9th April, 1927.

Ch. Zafar Ulla Khan, for the Appellants.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order made by the District Judge of Sargodha under s. 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act. The minor in question named Kushalya is a grown up girl who in company with her mother and a younger sister left the roof of her father Diwan Chand and eloped with a Muhammadan neighbour of the name of Ghulam Yasin. He took them off to Lyallpur where he was prosecuted for kidnapping, etc., and it is stated that he has been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for one year. In that case Musammat Kushalya was examined by Dr. R. T. Wells, Civil Surgeon of Lyallpur, as to her age, and his opinion which he recorded on the 30th March, 1927, was that she was between 15 and 18 years of age—probably nearer 18 than 15. He further found that she was about five months pregnant. While the kidnapping case was pending at Lyallpur, Diwan Chand made an application to the District Judge of Sargodha to be appointed guardian of the persons of her daughters. The District Judge fixed the 29th April, 1927, for hearing the application and ordered that notice thereof should go to the wife of Diwan Chand who was one of the respondents. Before that date, i. e., on the 8th April, Diwan Chand filed another application withdrawing the previous one and praying for immediate action under s. 25 of the Act for the restoration of Musammat Kushalya to his custody. The girl who was previously in the judicial lock-up at Lyallpur had been released therefrom and made over by the District Magistrate of Lyallpur to two Muhammadan gentlemen to produce her when required to do so. On the 9th April the District Judge of Sargodha made an order under s. 25 to the effect that the girl should be handed over to her father Diwan Chand. It is against this order that Musammat Kushalya and her mother appeal and it is contended on their behalf that an order under cl. (1) of s. 25 cannot be made but "for the welfare of the minor" that in considering "what will be for the welfare of the minor" regard must be had to the age, sex and religion of the minor as laid down in cl. (2) of s. 17 of the Act, that Musammat Kushalya is old enough to form an intelligent preference which should be considered and that having regard to the age of Musammat Kushalya and the fact that she has become a Muhammadan and has married a Muhammadan and has borne him a child she should not be compelled to return to her father's custody. This argument is unassailable. In Sarat Chandra Chakrabati v. Forman (1) where a minor Hindu over the age of sixteen, who had embraced Christianity and left the house of his elder brother by whom he had been maintained and brought up, appeared to be well able to take care of and provide for himself, and preferred to be left as he was and had sufficient mental capacity to judge what was best for himself, the Court refused to make any order upon an application by the brother for his custody and guardianship.

In the present case it has not yet been definitely proved what Musammat Kushalya's age is. According to medical opinion referred to above she is about 18. Her father's allegation is that she is about 14 but it has not yet been proved that the entry in the register of births on which he relies, relates to Musammat Kushalya. She might have already attained majority or may attain it after only a few months. She and her mother have been living with strangers for many months and there is nothing to show that she is not happy where she is. The learned District Judge must take into consideration all these facts and if he should consider it necessary he may make an enquiry as to the age of the girl and may also ascertain her wishes before making an order under s. 25. I, therefore, set aside the order under appeal directing that further proceedings, if necessary, may be taken in the light of the observations made above.

Harji v. Emperor (1), referred to.

Criminal appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 14th March, 1927.

Diwan Pindi Das, R. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the afternoon of the 23rd September, 1926, Puran Singh Jat of Jati Umra in Tarn Taran Tahsil reported at the Police Station of Vairawal, some five kos from his village, that his uncle Harnam Singh had been killed in his village by Kirpa Singh, Atma Singh and Thakar Singh. His story was that Thakar Singh's wife had come across the lane from her house in the morning to search for a cup of her own which she believed to be in possession of Musammatt Kisso, Puran Singh's mother. The two women had quarrelled and abused each other and Harnam Singh had remonstrated with both of them. Musammatt Harnam Kaur went off home in rage, threatening reprisal by her men-folk. At mid-day when Harnam Singh, attended by his sister-in-law Kisso, was bathing in the lane in front of his house, Kirpa Singh and his cousin Atma Singh, armed with spears, and Thakar Singh, Kirpa Singh's brother, carrying a lathi, came to the house and abused him and Musammatt Kisso for having insulted Harnam Kaur. Kirpa Singh drove his spear into Harnam Singh who died of his wound. The assailants then ran away.

After reciting this story Puran Singh added that before leaving his village to come to the Police Station he had heard a rumour that Kirpa Singh, Atma Singh and Thakar Singh had, after killing Harnam

Singh, also murdered their cousin Narain Singh, the adoptive father of Kirpa Singh, in order "to save their skins."

While this story was being recorded by the Police, Thakar Singh, one of the men accused and a Lambardar of Jati Umra, arrived at the Police Station with Bhan Singh another Lambardar and told his story. This was that Musammatt Man Kaur, Puran Singh's aunt, had come to Narain Singh's house and stolen a cup and was making off with it when Harnam Kaur snatched it from her. Musammatt Man Kaur ran off towards her house (that is to say, Harnam Singh's house). Shortly afterwards Harnam Singh, his brother Lachhman Singh, his nephews Puran Singh and Ichhar Singh and two other men Dasaundha Singh and Santa Singh had come to Narain Singh's house enraged at Musammatt Harnam Kaur's accusation of Musammatt Man Kaur. A dispute arose and Puran Singh had killed Narain Singh with his spear. Thakar Singh explained that he had been informed of all this when he was working in his fields.

The Police accepted Puran Singh's version and challaned Kirpa Singh, Atma Singh and Thakar Singh who were proceeded against in two separate trials on charges of murdering first Harnam Singh and then Narain Singh.

In the case relating to the death of Harnam Singh the prosecution produced three eye-witnesses, Puran Singh (P. W. No. 3), Santa Singh (P. W. No. 4), whose sister-in-law is engaged to Puran Singh's brother, and Musammatt Kisso to support the story told by Puran Singh in his First Information Report. Bhan Singh (P. W. No. 9) the Lambardar who had accompanied Thakar Singh to the Police Station was also called as a witness. He was not examined for the prosecution, the Public Prosecutor stating that he had nothing to do with the present case. In cross-examination Bhan Singh contradicted the prosecution story and gave an account similar to that which was subsequently put forward in defence by the witnesses produced by the accused.

Puran Singh's and Santa Singh's evidence was that Santa Singh whose house was at a little distance from Harnam Singh had come to the latter's house to borrow a saddle from Puran Singh. Musammatt Kisso was pouring water over Harnam Singh outside the gate of the house. Puran

Singh and Santa Singh heard the three accused abusing Harnam Singh and saying that they would have revenge for the abuse given to Musammat Harnam Kaur. Puran Singh and Santa Singh went to the doop and saw the accused armed as already stated. Thakar Singh cried out "strike, I will be responsible" and Kirpa Singh drove his spear into Harnam Singh's body. Puran Singh searched in vain for the chaukidar. The Lambardars Mit Singh and Bhan Singh refused to help him. So he and Santa Singh started for the Thana taking with them only Lachhman Singh, the dead man's brother. On the way they picked up Sundar Singh Lambardar of Sahsra who went with them to Vairawal. On their way Dasaundha Singh caught them up and told them that the three accused had killed Narain Singh. The evidence of Musammat Kisso (P. W. No. 5) was that the three accused came to Harnam Singh's house while she was helping Harnam Singh to wash his head in the lane outside the haveli door. They began to abuse Harnam Singh who turned towards them. Thakar Singh said "strike him and we will see what will happen" whereupon Kirpa Singh drove his spear into Harnam Singh's heart. She believed that the accused had come to be revenged because she had refused to allow Harnam Kaur to search her house for a cup which she had lost. Musammat Man Kaur corroborated Musammat Kisso's story about the quarrel between Musammat Kisso and Musammat Harnam Kaur over the cup. The medical evidence proves that Harnam Singh had died of a penetrating wound which had pierced his heart.

The accused denied their presence at the spot and called witnesses who supported their plea of alibi and also corroborated Bhan Singh's version of the affair. This version which, unlike the report made by Thakar Singh at the Police Station, accounted for the death of both Harnam Singh and Narain Singh, was as follows:—

Musammat Man Kaur, Puran Singh's aunt, had come to the house of the accused in the morning when Musammat Harnam Kaur, Thakar Singh's wife, was absent. On returning to her house Musammat Harnam Kaur missed a cup. She went to Harnam Singh's house and searched for it there. Musammat Kisso and Musammat Man Kaur who were in Harnam Singh's house quarrelled with and abused her. When she was returning to Narain Singh's house Harnam Singh, Puran Singh, Dasaundha Singh, Lachhman Singh, Ichhar Singh and Santa Singh came running after her armed with spears and sticks and a takwa, and began to abuse her. Narain Singh came out of his house to interfere and Harnam Singh aimed his spear at Musammat Harnam Kaur who ran into the house. Narain Singh snatched the spear from Harnam Singh and stabbed him with it. Then Santa Singh, encouraged by Dasaundha Singh and Ichhar Singh struck Narain Singh with the back of his takwa, and Puran Singh and Lachhman Singh wounded him with their spears. Musammat Harnam Kaur raised an alarm. People gathered and Harnam Singh's party ran away leaving both bodies outside Narain Singh's door. Before the Police came Harnam Singh's body had been removed to near his house.

This was the evidence of Musammat Harnam Kaur (D. W. No. 10) and six witnesses, namely, Mit Singh one of the Lambardars (D. W. No. 2), Gurmukh Singh (D. W. No. 1), Harnam Singh (D. W. No. 3), brother of Bhan Singh, Sarmukh Singh (D. W. No. 6), Vir Singh (D. W. No. 9) and Hakam Singh (D. W. No. 17) son of Mit Singh, who professed that they had seen the death of Harnam Singh and Narain Singh, were produced to corroborate it. Mit Singh, Gurmukh Singh and Harnam Singh declared that they were returning together to the village from their fields when they heard an uproar coming from Thakar Singh's house and got there in time to see Musammat Harnam Kaur run into her house. Harnam Singh was thrusting at her with his spear when Narain Singh seized it and used it against Harnam Singh who fell down dead. Harnam Singh's party then killed Narain Singh. Sarmukh Singh saw all this from the roof of his house and then went and told Thakar Singh in the fields what had happened. Ishar Singh (D. W. No. 5) on hearing a noise went to the roof of an adjoining house from where he saw Harnam Singh's and Narain Singh's bodies lying in front of Thakar Singh's house. Bhan Singh and Mit Singh Lambardars, Gurmukh Singh, Hakam Singh, Harnam Singh, Sarmukh Singh and Tahl Singh were present. On descending into the lane he saw Lachhman Singh and Puran Singh running away with their spears in their hands. Jhanda (D. W. No. 7) a chaukidar of the village, saw both bodies lying in front of Thakar Singh's house before the Police came. He put two sweepers to watch it and went away to prepare fodder for the Police. In his absence Harnam Singh's body was removed to the front of Harnam Singh's house.

The learned Sessions Judge agreeing with the assessors believed Puran Singh's story and convicting Kirpa Singh, Atma Singh and Thakar Singh sentenced them all to death. They have appealed and the sentences of death are before us for confirmation under s. 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We have heard Rai Bahadur Pindi Das who appears for the appellants and Mr. Sundar Das who opposes the appeal on behalf of the Crown and we have carefully considered and weighed the evidence on both sides.

* * * * *

The learned Sessions Judge appears to have attached considerable importance to two matters in deciding that the prosecution story was true:—First the fact that Narain Singh was an older and weaker man than Harnam Singh, and, secondly, the difference between the defence story as told by the witnesses in the Court and the story told to the Police by Thakar Singh which as already noted offered no explanation of Harnam Singh's death. We do not, however, know that Narain Singh was weaker than Harnam Singh and the First Information Report by Thakar Singh cannot be used as substantive evidence against him in this case. The statement of a person recorded by the Police as a First Information Report can be proved to corroborate that person's evidence in Court under the provisions of s. 157 of the Evidence Act or to impeach his credit by cross-examination under s. 145 of the Act provided that the procedure there prescribed is observed. But Thakar Singh was not a witness. The law on this point is clearly laid down in the judgment of Harji v. Emperor (1) to which the learned Judge's attention was drawn at the trial. In the present case it is also to be observed that the report by Thakar Singh was hearsay and even if he had been in the witness-box and not in the dock could only have been used to discredit him had he stated at the trial that his informant told him something different from what he reported at the Police Station.

The report could not, of course, be proved to discredit Sarmukh Singh. No attempt was made to prove that Sarmukh Singh had made a statement to Thakar Singh in the fields different from the statement Sarmukh Singh himself made on solemn affirmation in Court.

Disbelieving the prosecution story and finding it not proved that Kirpa Singh struck the blow which killed Harnam Singh or that he was abetted or instigated by either of the other two appellants we accept their appeal and setting aside the sentences of death acquit Kirpa Singh, Atma Singh and Thakar Singh.

Petition for revision of the order of the Additional District Magistrate, Amritsar, dated the 22nd August, 1927, affirming that of the Magistrate, Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 29th June, 1927.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—Notice was issued in this case on the ground that it was alleged by the petitioners, which allegation was supported by an affidavit of the Counsel, who appeared for them before the lower Appellate Court, that Counsel was not allowed to argue the appellants' case by the Additional District Magistrate.

An explanation has been submitted by the Additional District Magistrate from which it appears that proper opportunity was given by the lower Appellate Court to the Counsel. There may be a difference of opinion as to the sufficiency of the opportunity given between the Counsel and the Court, but having regard to the explanation of the Additional District Magistrate, I must hold that there is no substance in the complaint. The lower Appellate Court has discussed the evidence produced in support of the prosecution case and agreeing with the trial Court has held the guilt of the petitioners proved. I am unable to arrive at a different conclusion in these proceedings.

The petition for revision is, therefore, dismissed.

The petitioners were released on bail pending the disposal of the petition. They must surrender to their bail and serve out the remaining sentence awarded to them.

Though I have accepted as correct the version of the Additional District Magistrate as to what happened in this case, I desire to point out to him that, as appears from his explanation, he holds an opinion about the respective positions of the Bench and the Bar which, to say the least of it is peculiar; he relies in support of his view upon an extract from some extra-judicial remarks made by a learned Judge of another High Court without regard to the context or the occasion on which it was made. He apparently entertains exaggerated notions as to the alleged tendency of a class of legal practitioners to waste the time of the Courts. The learned Additional District Magistrate must bear in mind that so long as he is not guilty of unnecessary repetition or of irrelevant arguments a Counsel is entitled to present his client's case as he thinks best and it is no ground for a Judge to decline to hear him or to cut short his argument merely because he is expected by the Superior Courts to turn out a certain amount of work within a fixed time.

Queen v. Phomonee Ahyn (1), referred to.

Criminal appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 8th September 1927.

Mr. Nihal Singh, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Tek Chand, J.—The appellant, Suba, an Indian Christian of Chak No. 68/10 R, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Multan, under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, for having committed the murder of Musammat Fini, of the same village and has been sentenced to death. He has appealed and the record is also before us under s. 374, Criminal Procedure Code.

The facts are very simple. The wedding of a daughter of Labhu Ram Jhiwar (P. W. No. 2) was being celebrated in the village and on the evening of 8th May, 1927, a number of women had assembled in the courtyard of Labhu's house and were singing. Among those present were Musammat Barkati, the wife of the appellant, and Musammat Fini deceased, a woman 18 years of age, who had been married to Tabu (P. W. No. 5). The appellant came to Labhu's house and asked his wife to go back to her own house as the children were crying. She said that she would go after a short time. He repeated his request three times but she gave the same reply. He accordingly went back. About an hour after, he returned to Labhu's house with a toka in his hand and again asked Musammat Barkati to go along with him. She replied that she would go after the sweetmeats had been distributed. He repeated his request and she said "go and I will come." On this he got excited and struck the toka at Musammat Barkati, but she evaded it by ducking her head and the blow struck Musammat Fini, who was sitting close to her. Musammat Fini lost consciousness at once and about 10 P. M. she was taken to her own house. On the third day she was removed to the hospital at Khanewal and on the 12th her statement (Ex. P-D) was recorded by Altaf Hussain, Sub-Divisional Officer. She remained in the hospital till her death on the 15th of May.

The post mortem examination was conducted by Dr. S. C. Lal (P. W. No. 1) who found the following injuries on her body.

(1) An incised wound on the left side of the head above the temple cutting through the skull.

(2) A granulating incised wound on the left forearm.

(3) An incised wound on the left thigh skin deep.

(4) A fresh incised wound on the bend of the right elbow.

The witness expressed the opinion that death was due to an abscess in the brain following upon a compound fracture of the skull caused by injury No. 1. It was found that the skull had a cut under the wound $3\frac{1}{4}$ inches long and there was also a small loose piece of bone lying embedded in a small thin blood clot on the outer surface of the dura. The witness was of opinion that this injury (No. 1) had been caused by a direct blow struck with a fair amount of force, but that the other injuries were of a simple nature and were probably caused by the falling of the chopper from the assailant's hand on the body of the victim.

The main facts of the story are fully established by the evidence of Labhu Ram (P. W. No. 2) and Musammât Jhandi (P. W. No. 3) and the dying declaration of Musammât Fini (Ex. P-D) recorded on the 12th May. Both these witnesses are absolutely disinterested persons and Counsel could not urge anything against their veracity. It is not necessary to discuss their evidence at length as the appellant in the grounds of appeal which he submitted to this Court from Jail practically admitted all the facts. After describing his first visit to Labhu's house, he states that as Musammât Barkati had not returned to the house after having promised to do so, he felt much excited and made a search for a lathi but as he could not find one he picked up a toka and left for Labhu's house so that he might fetch her after holding out threats to her. On her refusing to return he got still more excited and was about to strike her with a back side of the toka when Labhu came behind him and seized him. In the course of the struggle "he tried to strike his wife with the back side of the toka but she escaped and it hit Musammât Fini deceased with the sharp side."

It will be seen that the appellant's version of the occurrence differs from that of the prosecution in one particular only, viz., that he suggests that he aimed a blow at his wife with the back side of toka but that Labhu seized him and in the struggle Musammât Fini was hit. There is, however, no reason to suppose that the prosecution witnesses have not told the truth on this point. The nature of the injury caused to the head puts the matter absolutely beyond doubt that the appellant struck the blow with blade of the toka with considerable force. The sole question to be decided is whether on these facts the appellant has been rightly convicted under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. There is no doubt that the appellant had no intention to cause the death of Musammât Barkati but at the same time, it is clear that he attacked her with a heavy lethal weapon in such a manner that he must be presumed to have known that he was likely to cause such bodily injury as would result in death. If, therefore, Musammât Barkati had not ducked her head and the blow had struck her, the appellant would have been guilty of an offence under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. The fact that Musammât Barkati evaded the blow and it fell upon the unfortunate woman, Musammât Fini, who was sitting next to her, does not in any way affect the guilt. Such a case is provided for in s. 301, Indian Penal Code, which embodies a well-established principle of criminal jurisprudence based on the doctrine of "transferred malice." It is settled law that where a blow aimed at one person lights upon another and kills him, the offence committed by the assailant is the same as it would have been if the blow had struck the intended victim. The case is very similar to Queen v. Phomonee Ahun (1) where the accused aimed a blow with a sharp dao to B but instead of killing B it struck the child in his arms and killed it and it was held that the offence was of murder punishable under s. 301, Indian Penal Code.

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the conviction under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, must be maintained. But I think that the circumstances of the case are such that the lesser penalty should be imposed on the appellant. He did not strike the blow with the intention of killing his wife and had been provoked by her repeated refusal to go home and take care of the children. I would, therefore, commute the sentence to one of transportation for life.

Petition for revision of the order of the Additional District Magistrate, Multan, dated the 10th May, 1926, modifying that of the Magistrate, Second Class, Lodhran, dated the 28th January, 1926.

Mr. H. D. Bhalla, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—A complaint against the petitioner for erecting a small portion of their new building on public land was preferred by the Small Towns Committee of Kahror. It was under s. 447, Indian Penal Code. It was dismissed and the petitioners were acquitted under the provisions of s. 247, Criminal Procedure Code. On the same facts the Committee decided to institute a fresh complaint but to change the section to 291, Indian Penal Code. The petitioners have been sentenced after trial on the new complaint to Rs. 10 fine each, under s. 38 of the Small Towns Act, the maximum penalty under that section being Rs. 20. It is clear that a conviction could have been had under s. 38 of the Small Towns Act on the first complaint. That being so, the petitioners could not be tried again, as laid down in s. 403, Criminal Procedure Code. I accept the petition, set aside the convictions of the petitioners, and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

JUDGMENT.

Jai Lal, J.—On the 15th of February, 1927, at the village Silwan in the District of Mianwali there was a serious fight between two parties in which injuries were received by Hussain, Musammatt Bhagan, Akbar, Azam, Sher and Dalil on one side, and Muhammad son of Tana and Sikan-dar on the other. Hussain died as a result of the injuries received by him and consequently members of both the parties were sent up for trial to the Court of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali. They were tried with the result that 8 men of one party, which may for the sake of brevity be called the party of Darhal, were convicted for having taken part in the fight. Out of these Zaman was convicted under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to death, while the other convicts were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. Of the other party, i. e., the party of the Silus, two men named Akbar, son of Azam and Sher son of Muhammad were convicted under s. 324 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to two years rigorous imprisonment each. The convicts on both sides have appealed to this Court and the case of Zaman is also before us on the question of confirmation of the sentence of death.

At the outset the learned Counsel, who appeared for the convicts belonging to the Darhal party, raised an objection that the trial in this case was conducted by the learned Sessions Judge in a manner which is not warranted by law and that in consequence his clients have been seriously prejudiced. What appears to have happened is this. Ostensibly two separate trials were held in respect of the accused of each party. The trial of the accused of the Darhal party was held first. After the entire evidence against them had been recorded by the learned Sessions Judge the assessors apparently desired that they would like to hear the evidence in the cross-case before giving their opinion in the case in which the evidence had been recorded. The Sessions Judge considered this request to be reasonable and directed that the case be put up with the cross-case and that the opinion of the assessors be recorded after the evidence in that case had been heard. He thereupon proceeded to record the evidence in the cross-case and then heard the arguments in both the cases, and thereafter recorded the opinion of the assessors and then proceeded to judgment. He wrote one judgment in both the cases and an examination thereof shows that he did not keep the evidence recorded in each case separate but made use of the evidence recorded in the cross case in arriving at his conclusions about the matters in controversy between the parties in the first case.

I will give illustrations what the learned Sessions Judge has done by quoting from his judgment. One matter in controversy was whether there was previous enmity between the two contending parties or whether it was a sudden fight between them. The learned Sessions Judge makes the following remarks:—

"The previous enmity * * * is admitted by both the parties (vide Hayat accused as P. W. No. 2, in the cross-case and Sher, P. W. No. 5, a Silu, in the main case) * * * Hayat accused as P. W. No. 2 in the cross-case has stated that about a year or two ago Ramzan son of Musa and he himself with some other men found Hussain deceased cutting their crop and gave him a thrashing * * *. Again, "Langar, P. W. No. 17, has now professed his ignorance of this previous incident but he was confronted under s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code with the statement which he made to the Police and in which he himself related this incident as an eyewitness. I have, therefore, no doubt that previous to the main incident an altercation did take place between Hayat and Dalil in Raja's field * * *"

Then with regard to the actual incident there were two versions and in arriving at his conclusion about them the learned Sessions Judge remarked:—"The fact that the whole of this story about Dalil's party coming up to Chah Muhammadwala and then following Hayat and Muhammad son of Tana through the fields in pursuit is entirely baseless became clear when Hayat accused as P. W. No. 2 and Muhammad son of Tana as P. W. No. 5 were confronted under s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, with what they stated to the Police. What Hayat stated to the Police (vide Ex. D O) was * * *". Then follows what Hayat had stated before the Police. Again, "Umar, D. W. No. 2, in the main case also confronted with his statement before the Police (Ex. D-E) which also showed that his present version was different from what he had stated originally * * *". The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is full of similar instances of quotations from the evidence in the cross-case when discussing the guilt of the accused in the first case and vice versa and from the statements made before the Investigating Police Officers, which were brought on the record under s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It will thus be observed that the learned Sessions Judge has committed several irregularities. In deciding one case he has not only used the evidence in the other case and which was not recorded in the presence of the accused, but has contravened the express provisions of s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which prohibit the use of the statements made before the Investigating Police Officers except in the limited purpose of contradicting the testimony of the prosecution witnesses produced at the trial. He has used the statements made during the investigation and proved in the cross-case as substantive evidence in the first case. There is absolutely no sanction in law for such a procedure. The opinion of the assessors was influenced by material which could not be legally considered at all and the conclusions of the learned Sessions

Judge are based on irrelevant and inadmissible evidence. The contention of the learned Counsel, therefore, has force that his clients have been seriously prejudiced by the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has dealt with the case.

In the present case there are graver irregularities than existed in Allu v. Emperor (1) where the trials of the accused in two cross-cases were held to be illegal and the cases remanded for fresh trial. What happened in these cases was that, after the prosecution evidence in one case had been finished, the accused and their Counsel stated that they wanted the prosecution witnesses in the cross-case treated as defence-witnesses in their case. Then the cross-case was taken up and after the prosecution evidence had been recorded the accused in that case were asked whether they wanted to call witnesses for defence, they said, no, but added that they wanted the evidence of three prosecution witnesses in the other case to be treated as defence evidence in their case. The arguments were then heard and after the opinions of the assessors had been recorded judgment was pronounced. Eforde, J., expressed himself as follows as to the manner in which those trials were conducted:—

"In my opinion the procedure adopted in the cases before us is wholly unauthorised by law in several particulars. In the first place, though the two sets of accused were intended to have been tried separately—as in law they were bound to be—the mode in which they were actually tried was in substance a joint trial. Only prosecution evidence appears on each record; speeches of Counsel were reserved till the close of both cases, the assessors were not asked to give their findings until both cases had been closed, and only one set of findings was recorded in respect of both and, finally, one composite judgment was delivered. * * *

"In all penal matters the utmost strictness in procedure must be observed. Where the mode in which a criminal trial is to be conducted is, as it is in India, regulated by Statute, a departure from the authorized procedure can itself only be sanctioned by a statutory provision. There is no such sanction for any of the illegalities which have taken place in the course of the trial of these two cases. * * * Finally the learned Judge held that the trials being prohibited in the mode in which they were conducted were, therefore, illegal. These observations apply with greater force to the circumstances of the present case because a procedure somewhat similar to that in the reported case was adopted therein with this difference that in the present case there is not even the consent of the accused and the Counsel to the unauthorized procedure, and use has been made as substantive evidence of statements made before the Investigating Police Officers.

Reference may also be made to Madat Khan v. Emperor (1) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council, advised His Majesty that special leave to appeal should be granted because of the apprehension that it might turn out that evidence which was given in one trial had been improperly imported into a quite separate trial. In that case there were two separate trials in two cross-cases but they were dealt with in one judgment by the Appellate Court. When the case was finally discussed before the Judicial Committee on its merits it turned out that the apprehension mentioned above was not well-founded because in spite of there being one judgment in two cases the Appellate Court had kept the evidence in both separate and it did not appear that the evidence recorded in one case was used as evidence in the other. The appeal was finally dismissed by their Lordships but the reasons given for granting special leave to appeal show that if the apprehension alluded to above had turned out to be well-founded the convictions would probably have been set aside.

In my opinion, therefore, the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has dealt with the two cases is not warranted by any sanction of law and the trials in these cases were illegal. I would, therefore, accept these appeals, set aside the convictions of the appellants in both cases and order a re-trial of the appellants in the manner provided by law.

I wish to make it clear that this order does not authorize the re-trial of those of Easement—Easement to bury the dead, acquisition of.

An easement to bury the dead is not known to law and cannot, therefore, be acquired by prescription.

Second appeal from a decree of the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, with enhanced appellate powers, Rohtak, dated the 30th November, 1926, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Jhajjar, District Rohtak, dated the 23rd June, 1926.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Basant Krishna, for Mirza Jalal-ud-din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case sued a person Nazir for possession of five biswansis of land alleging that Nazir had recently buried a relative of his in this plot of land which belonged to the plaintiffs. Nazir pleaded his own possession first but later on certain butchers of Jhajjar town applied to be made parties in the case alleging that the butcher community were in possession of the piece of land and had been using it as graveyard. Nazir supported them. After some dispute the Court ordered that Noor Muhammad and Abdul Razzak should represent the butcher community and the remaining butchers were ordered to be notified by proclamation under O. I. r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. For some reasons or others, however, when the suit was decreed it was decreed against Nazir and against 11 other persons who had applied to be made parties on behalf of the butchers. Ismail, one of these persons had died during the pendency of the suit and no legal representative of his had ever been brought on the record presumably because only Noor Muhammad and Abdul Razzak were considered to be parties to the suit as representing the entire butcher community. The defendants appealed making Ismail also one of the appellants although he was dead and the learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' suit holding that though the plaintiffs were admittedly owners of the land in dispute which was waste land yet the revenue entries from 1879 to 1924 showed that the butchers had been continuously in possession and, therefore, that the butchers were entitled to remain in possession as the conditions under which they had got possession and could cease to have possession were not known, there being only a reference to the conditions in the exhibit of the jamabandi entry which had been put on the record.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and the first question was whether the death of Ismail had made any difference. Counsel for the plaintiffs had applied to bring the legal representatives of Ismail on to the record but he withdrew this application on the ground that Ismail was not a necessary party on the authority of Udmi v. Hira (1). Counsel for the respondents had nothing to urge against this when Counsel for appellants withdrew his application and, therefore, the appeal proceeded.

Counsel for the appellants urges that the learned District Judge is wrong in saying that the order of the Tahsildar correcting the revenue entries passed on the 18th of March, 1924, was made behind the backs of the present defendants or without calling upon them to show cause. There is nothing in the copy to show this and the copy refers to the fact that this change was made in jalsa am. Further the learned District Judge omitted to consider that the defendants had not pleaded adverse possession in the trial Court but had only claimed a title by prescription to bury their dead. As held in Mangat Ram v. Siraj-ul-Hasan (2) following Gopal Krishna Sil v. Abdul Samad Chaudhuri (3) there is no such easement known to law. Further the learned District Judge does not find that the defendants are in adverse possession but he finds that the defendants are in possession on certain conditions and it is not known whether these conditions have been fulfilled or whether there has been a breach of those conditions, but where the plaintiffs establish their title it is for the defendants to prove how that title is limited qua possession. The learned District Judge further found that the present plaintiffs had purchased the land with full knowledge of the revenue record entries. There is nothing on the record to show that the plaintiffs had any knowledge of these entries or their predecessors-in-interest had any such knowledge. But be that as it may, it seems to me that the case of the defendants in the trial Court was simply one of a right acquired by prescription and as there is no such right and as the plaintiffs have proved their title the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and restore the decree of the trial Court with costs throughout.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 77—Suit for possession against co-tenant—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

A suit for possession by an occupancy tenant against a co-occupancy tenant as such is cognizable by a Civil Court even though the latter happens to be one of the landlords.

Petition for revision of an order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 2nd April, 1927, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 9th June, 1926.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs and one Lalu were joint occupancy tenants of land. According to the plaint the tenancy was partitioned between them and an area of 251 kānals 3 marlas was allotted to the plaintiffs. Though the plaintiffs claim to have been in possession of this area yet the khata entry continued to show joint possession of all the occupancy tenants in the Revenue Records. Lalu died and was succeeded as heir by one Lal Chand, who is also one of the proprietors of the land. Lal Chand's name was mutated in the Revenue Records in place of Lalu's the occupancy holding still being shown to be possessed jointly. The plaintiffs' case is that this Lal Chand has taken possession of the area allotted to them in his capacity of occupancy tenant. They have, therefore, sued in the Civil Courts for a decree against him for possession of the land in question, and in the alternative they have prayed that, if this cannot be granted, they should be given their proper share of the whole khata. The two Courts below have held that this is a case of dispossession of an occupancy tenant by a landlord and that the suit is, therefore, cognizable by the Revenue Courts. Against this finding this revision petition has been preferred.

It is quite clear that the case of the plaintiffs is that Lal Chand, one of the occupancy tenants, has dispossessed the plaintiffs, who are the other occupancy tenants. It is not their case that they have been dispossessed by the landlords though the occupancy tenant in question is one of the landlords. It is obvious that he does not represent the body of landlords. The suit is against him alone in his capacity of a joint occupancy tenant in the same khata with the plaintiffs. As such it is clearly cognizable by the Civil Courts.

In the circumstances I accept the revision, set aside the order of the Courts below and direct the Subordinate Judge Fourth Class, to receive the plaint and proceed with the suit in accordance with law.

Police Act (V of 1861), s. 29—'Violation of duty,' meaning of—Mere neglect, whether offence.

The expression "violation of duty" as used in s. 29, Police Act, connotes something more than mere non-performance of duty. It may, under certain circumstances, include illegal omission but such omission must be of some positive duty imposed by law and it is the duty of the prosecution affirmatively to prove what, under the circumstances disclosed, a person who is alleged to have been guilty of violation of duty should have done and that he wilfully failed to do that. [p. 771, col. 2; p. 772, col. 1.]

Every negligence does not amount to violation of duty as violation implies a certain amount of volition. [p. 772, col. 1.]

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated the 12th August, 1927, modifying that of the Magistrate, First Class, Ambala, dated the 22nd July, 1927.

Mr. Muhammad Amin, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—These are two petitions in revision of the order dated the 12th August, 1927, of the Sessions Judge of Ambala whereby he upheld the conviction of the petitioners under s. 29 of the Police Act and sentenced each to a penalty of two months' pay. The petitioners are two Constables of Police employed in the District of Ambala. Muhammad Ali petitioner was directed by the Sub-Inspector to arrest one Qutbu who had been suspected of theft and to produce him before the Sub-Inspector. Muhammad Ali arrested the suspect and obtained the assistance of Wali Muhammad Constable at the thana of Bilaspur, and was escorting him to the place where he expected to find the Sub-Inspector. He was, it appears, riding a mare while the Constable Wali Muhammad was actually holding the handcuffs of Qutbu. There were some other persons with this party who apparently had been deputed to accompany these Constables by a lambardar at their request. In the way the prisoner escaped.

The petitioners were sent up for trial and were found by the Magistrate guilty of having intentionally allowed Qutbu to escape. On appeal the Sessions Judge has disbelieved the testimony of the prosecution witnesses and has acquitted the petitioners of the offence of having intentionally allowed the prisoner to escape. He has, however, convicted them of being guilty of a "violation of duty" inasmuch as, according to him, they were guilty of negligence in permitting the prisoner to escape. The following extract from the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is an indication of what facts he was prepared to find.

"In my view the only important ground of appeal is the fifth, that there is no evidence on the record to prove that the escape of Qutbu was due either to negligence or intention on the part of the appellants. The Chamar witnesses gave a story which appears to be improbable.....In my opinion this evidence is clearly false and the Chamars have concealed the true facts or else did not accompany the party at all. Had the appellants intended to permit Qutbu to escape it is most improbable that they would have asked Gami lambardar to furnish three Chamars to accompany them.....I can only conclude, therefore, that the appellants never intended to allow Qutbu to escape. The only question remains whether they permitted him to escape negligently. As already stated there is no evidence at all of the actual manner of escape but the Chamars have said that Muhammad Ali was riding a horse and that Wali Muhammad was holding the handcuffs. In default of any explanation by the appellants as to the actual manner of escape, I think it should be held that the escape was due to the negligence of the two appellants for had Muhammad Ali been on the look out he could have chased the man being on horse-back and had Wali Muhammad been on the look out he would not have lost hold of the handcuffs."

The learned Judge then discusses the question whether "negligent sufferance of escape" is an offence under s. 29 of the Police Act and after answering it in the affirmative on the ground that it falls within the expression "violation of duty" as used in that section upheld the conviction.

Now I have carefully considered the question of interpretation of the expression "violation of duty" as used in s. 29 of the Police Act and am of opinion that it connotes something more than mere non-performance of duty. The word 'violation' implies something more than mere omission to perform a duty. It may under certain circumstances include 'illegal omission' but such omission must be of some positive duty imposed by law and it is the duty of the prosecution affirmatively to prove what, under the circumstances disclosed, a person who is alleged to have been guilty of violation of duty should have done and that he wilfully failed to do that. In this case the learned Sessions Judge has convicted the petitioners merely on what appears to me to be an assumption that it was for them to establish the circumstances under which Qutbu escaped from their custody.

The circumstances may and probably do raise an inference of negligence but then I am not prepared to hold that every negligence amounts to violation of duty. In my opinion violation implies a certain amount of volition on the part of the accused. The facts found in this case did not raise any presumption of the existence of any consciousness on the part of the petitioners that they were breaking any rules that governed them in the matter of escorting of the prisoner. The negligence was not wilful. After a careful consideration of the circumstances of the case I have arrived at the conclusion that the facts disclosed do not fall within the ambit of s. 29 of the Police Act.

Accepting his petition I set aside the conviction of the petitioners and direct that the penalty if paid be refunded to them.

G. P. O. HOLMES—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 225-B—Resistance to lawful arrest—Intention, necessity of.

An offence under s. 225-B, Penal Code, is committed only when the resistance to arrest is intentional. A person who makes the resistance not knowing that he is being, or is about to be, arrested, cannot, therefore, be convicted of an offence under the said section. [p. 772, col. 2.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ambala with his No. 776-G of 31st October, 1927.

Facts appear from the following report of the Sessions Judge:—

REPORT.—On Sunday, 22nd May, 1927, at Kasauli the accused G. P. O. Holmes came out of the Church after the service and as the Military Church Party were preparing to move off he took up a position in the centre of the road near the Church gate and he began to preach in a loud voice and obstructed the departure of the military party. The District Magistrate ordered the arrest of the accused under s. 118, Cantonment Act. The European Inspector of Police, Mr. Phillips, being in plain clothes ordered Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh to make the arrest. The latter went up to the accused and took him by the hand and tried to remove him but he struggled. With the help of a Head Constable Zakka Husain and Sergeant Grundy he then removed the accused to a bench on the side of the road where he sat and continued shouting. Captain Hepburn then came up to the accused because he was delaying the marching off of the Church party and succeeded in persuading the accused to go down a side road. Captain Hepburn accompanied him for some way and then advised him to go home. Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh then followed the accused and informed him that he had been arrested and ordered him to come to Police Station. The accused then turned and went back with the Sub-Inspector to the Police Station without any further trouble. The Magistrate has held that during the episode at the Church gate Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh arrested the accused by placing his hand upon him and saying in Urdu, "I arrest you" and that by continuing to struggle after his arrest had thus been effected the accused committed an offence under s. 225-B, Indian Penal Code.

An offence under s. 225-B, Indian Penal Code is committed only when the resistance to arrest is intentional; that can only be when the person who makes the resistance knows that he is being or is about to be arrested.

In the case under consideration the whole trend of the evidence strongly suggests that the accused had no understanding of the fact that he was being arrested but supposed that he was merely being pushed aside to allow the troops to march away. That statement of the accused himself to the Magistrate was also to the effect that he had no knowledge of any arrest of himself at the Church gate but that he was arrested later on his way home and that he offered no resistance to that arrest.

The trend of the evidence referred to above is apparent from the following extracts:—

Mr. Phillips Inspector (P. W. No. 1): "Kuldip Singh caught the accused by the arm and said 'I arrest you.'"

Sergeant Grundy, P. W. No. 2: "I never heard the Sub-Inspector utter the words 'I arrest you.'"

I and the Sub-Inspector caught hold of the accused and tried to remove him. He was still preaching when sitting on the bench. He was very much agitated. He was swinging his arms about and nearly knocked me over.

Zakka Hussain, Head Constable P. W. No. 3 "The Sub-Inspector took the accused by the hand and said 'I arrest you,' He said it in Urdu."

Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh, P. W. No. 4: "I placed my hand on the accused and said 'Holmes Sahib I arrest you,' but he took no notice owing to his excitement. His arrest was ordered after he started preaching."

Captain Hepburn D. W. No. 1 "I should not say that the accused intentionally wished to resist the Police as he was engrossed in his message to the public. The reason why I went up to the accused was because he was delaying the marching off of the Church party and I thought I could persuade him to move out of the way. I think the accused was sitting on the bench on the side of the road when I went up to him. He continued to speak loudly. It was I who suggested that the accused be taken down the road. I had no idea that the accused had been lawfully apprehended, otherwise I should not have interfered. I was ten yards away when the Police went up to Mr. Holmes in the first instance outside the Church."

The accused in his revision petition had laid particular stress on the evidence of Captain Hepburn.

In my opinion, it is clear from the evidence that the accused was so engrossed in his preaching that he continued to preach even when forced on to a bench by the side of the road and that he was in a state of considerable excitement. In such a condition it is very probable that the words "I arrest you" spoken by the Sub-Inspector in Urdu made no impression on his attention and that he attributed the handling, which he received from the Police Officer to a desire to move him out of the way of the troops rather than to an attempt to arrest him.

It is recommended that the conviction of G. P. C. Holmes under s. 255-B, Indian Penal Code, be quashed and that the fine be remitted. The fine has not yet been paid. The imprisonment in default of payment has been undergone.

ORDER.—The case has been referred by the learned Sessions Judge. The accused was convicted under s. 225-B, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 and in default to suffer one month's simple imprisonment.

For the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge I agree in thinking that the intention which constitutes the essence of the offence under s. 225-B has not been proved against the accused. He has already undergone the imprisonment in default. I accept the reference and quash the conviction and sentence.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Apprehension that Magistrate would not give effect to certain legal objections—Transfer.

A case cannot be transferred on the sole ground that it is apprehended that in the ultimate judgment which the Magistrate would deliver in the case he would not give effect to certain legal objections which might be taken at the trial.

Petition, under s. 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of the case from the Court of the Magistrate, First Class, Hissar, to some other Court of competent jurisdiction in the district or in any other district.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an application for the transfer of a case which has been pending in the Court below for a very long time. Under my order dated the 18th November, 1927, a copy of the affidavit and the application for transfer was sent to the Magistrate concerned and also to another Magistrate whose name unfortunately seems to have been dragged in the application. Both these Magistrates have submitted very full and satisfactory explanation. I may observe that the case was originally filed in the Court of a Tabsildar, it was transferred to the Court of Sardar Bishan Singh, Magistrate. The applicants now desire to get the case transferred once again from the Court of this Magistrate to that of some other Magistrate. The affidavit read along with the explanation submitted by the two Magistrates does not make out a sufficiently strong case for my taking the extreme step of ordering the transfer of the case from the Court of the Magistrate where it is pending. It is urged by Mr. Niaz Muhammad, the learned Advocate for the petitioners, that his clients have been already acquitted of the same or similar offences with which they are now charged and that under the provisions of s. 403 they cannot be tried again on the same set of facts. The Magistrate has not so far recorded his judgment. If this point has any substance there is not the slightest doubt that the learned Magistrate would give effect to it. But I have never heard of any application for transfer being successfully made simply because it is apprehended that in the ultimate judgment which the Magistrate would deliver in the case, he would not give effect to a certain legal objection which might be taken at the trial. As stated above no substantial ground has been made out and the affidavit of Mr. Muhammad Sharif, the gentleman who is mentioned in my order dated the 18th of November, 1927, is not forthcoming although Mr. Niaz Muhammad gave me to understand that Mr. Muhammad Sharif would give his affidavit in support of the incident mentioned in para. 3 (d) of the application. The case has been hanging on for a very long time and it is time now that it should come to an end so far as this Magistrate's Court is concerned. I reject this application and at the same time order that this case should be disposed of at the earlier possible opportunity:

Evidence—Circumstantial evidence as basis for conviction—Deceased last seen alive with accused—Guilt, whether established—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302.

In order to justify the inference of guilt, the circumstantial evidence, where there is no direct evidence, must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. [p. 175, col. 2.]

The circumstance that the deceased was last seen alive in the company of the accused, though it raises a strong suspicion against the accused is not sufficient to establish his guilt beyond doubt. [ibid.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 16th August, 1927.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mackey, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the morning of the 17th March, 1927, at about 7 A. M., the corpse of one Juma, an Awan of the village Saroba in the District of Jhelum, was found lying on the Railway line about a mile from the village. The medical witness, who performed the post mortem examination, has deposed that the deceased had sustained several contused wounds, including a contusion 3" wide round the neck, and that his death was due to strangulation.

Three persons, namely, Ghulam Rasul, his father Lal and his brother-in-law Sher, have been convicted of the murder of Juma; and have each been sentenced, under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, to transportation for life. There can be no doubt that the person or persons who killed Juma by strangling him committed the offence of murder, but the question for determination is whether the guilt of the prisoners has been established beyond reasonable doubt.

There is evidence to the effect that Juma's wife Musammatt Bhari Sahd contracted a liaison with Ghulam Rasul, and that the latter was anxious to marry her. He had, therefore, an adequate motive to get rid of the husband. But it is doubtful whether his father would help him in murdering an innocent person in order that he might be able to marry the woman.

Coming now to the evidence dealing with the commission of the crime, we find that there is no eye-witness of the affair, and that the case for the prosecution rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence. Apart from the motive referred to above, the following circumstances have been relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge in support of his finding against the prisoners :

(1) On the night of the 16th March, 1927, Ghulam Rasul went to Juma's house in order to fetch him and the two left the house together.

(2) Shortly afterwards Juma was seen in the company of Ghulam Rasul and the other prisoners.

(3) An about midnight, the prisoners were seen dragging a person near the Railway line.

While there is sufficient evidence to prove the facts that Ghulam Rasul fetched Juma on the night in question from his house, and that the deceased was subsequently seen in the company of the three prisoners, we are not prepared to hold that the third circumstance mentioned above has been established. It is to be observed that Waris, who deposes to the fact of dragging, did not disclose his story to the Police until three days after the night in question; and that Ahmad Din, who, he says, was with him at that time, has not been examined as a witness to corroborate his testimony. Waris also states that he informed his cousin Taja of what he had seen near the Railway crossing but Taja too has not been examined as a witness. In these circumstances, the testimony of Waris, uncorroborated as it is by any other evidence on the record, is wholly insufficient to prove the incriminating circumstance deposed to by him.

The case for the prosecution depends practically upon the solitary circumstance that Juma was last seen alive in the company of the prisoners; but that circumstance, while raising a strong suspicion against them, cannot sustain their conviction. It has been repeatedly laid down that in order to justify the inference of guilt, the circumstantial evidence, where there is no direct evidence, must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. We do not think that the two circumstances proved in this case exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than that the death of Juma was caused by the prisoners. They are not incompatible with the theory that the prisoners had parted company with Juma before he was assaulted and that, as he was in the habit of going out at night in order to commit theft in the fields of other persons he was done to death while he was attempting to commit theft. Be that as it may, there is absolutely no direct or circumstantial evidence to show that the injuries which resulted in the death of Juma, were caused by one or more of the prisoners.

For the aforesaid reasons we hold that the guilt of the appellants has not been established. We accordingly accept their appeal, and setting aside the conviction and the sentences direct that they be released forthwith.

KHAIRATI LAL—ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.
Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 562—Embezzlement—Sentence—Letting off accused on probation of good conduct—Revision—Interference.

Although in a case of embezzlement usually a sentence of imprisonment should be passed, where the trying Magistrate has given the accused the benefit of s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court will not interfere with his order in revision especially after the lapse of a long time. [p. 778, col. 1.]

Emperor v. Partab Narain (1), Abdul v. Emperor (2), Emperor v. Jinga Gamaji (3) and Emperor v. Mathro (4), referred to.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Delhi, with his No. 400 of 1927.

FACTS appear from the following report of the Sessions Judge:—

REPORT.—The accused, on conviction by Onaudhri Surat Singh, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class, in the Delhi District, was sentenced, by order, dated 22nd February, 1927, under s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, to be released on probation of good conduct on his entering into a bond in a sum of Rs. 5,000 with one surety, in order to appear and receive sentence when called upon to do so during a period of two years from that date and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour.

The facts of this case are stated at length in my judgment in Criminal Appeal No. 65 of 1927, decided to-day. Briefly stated, the respondent Khairati Lal, while acting as Cashier and Accountant in the Delhi Branch of the Firm of Messrs. Sulzer Bruderer & Co., committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 3,949. Actually, the shortage was Rs. 6,141, but for the purpose of a single trial the Magistrate charged the respondent in respect of Rs. 3,949 only. The case appeared to me to be amply proved and the respondent's appeal has been dismissed.

The question of sentence was considered by the trial Magistrate, who wrote:

"The offence under s. 408, Indian Penal Code, is not compoundable and the executing of a pro-note by the accused and creating a civil liability on himself does not absolve him of the criminal liability. However, the intention of the prosecution can be inferred from such proceedings. Mr. Stark detected the deficiency on 11th July, entered into a civil contract, received a sum of Rs. 41 by way of part payment and allowed the accused to continue to handle cash and hold charge of godown up till the 28th August, 1926, the day of accused's arrest. All these factors go to show that Mr. Stark did not want anything else from accused but the replenishing of the money found short. Accused is a young man and a first offender. He has lost a good job, the like of which he cannot have again. He is described by Mr. Stark himself as a high caste Hindu and of a respectable family. Mr. Stark's negligence in not checking the accounts even once and his loose control over his staff tempted the unlucky accused to misappropriate the money, the responsibility of which he readily took upon himself by executing Ex. P O pro-note and acting upon it by re-paying Rs. 41 towards it. From this I cannot but conclude that accused's intention to misappropriate the money was temporary. He was responsible for the cash in his charge. He has kept the fair cash account very faithfully and has done no fabrication. All this goes to show that accused was feeling his responsibility and was inclined to admit the misappropriation, if detected, before he had made up the deficiency. To his ill-luck something prevailed upon Mr. Stark and moved him to launch the present prosecution on 28th August, one and a half months afterwards. I am afraid Jail punishment will not have any beneficial effect on the accused because his association with criminals will create criminal tendencies in him. Jail which looks very dreadful to persons of respectable families will no more appear as such to them if once they have been there and associated with criminals whom they cannot avoid. For these reasons I do not propose to send the accused to Jail but apply the principle of locus penitentie to him, and order that he shall be released under s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, on probation of good conduct on his entering into a bond in a sum of Rs. 5,000 with one surety in order to appear and receive sentence when called upon to do so during a period of two years from this date and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour".

There is hardly a word of this with which I agree, except where mere facts are mentioned. To speak of "Mr. Stark's negligence in not checking the accounts even once and his loose control over his staff" as tempting "the unlucky accused to misappropriate the money" is, I maintain, to look at the affair from the wrong point of view. The very fact that the appellant was at once the cashier and the accountant made it all the more incumbent on him to keep a careful watch in the interests of his employers, from whom he gained his livelihood. The executing of the pronote cannot be described as a virtuous act on his part. The Magistrate, again, is wrong in concluding that the "accused's intention to misappropriate the money was temporary." I have shown in my judgment in the criminal appeal that the appellant indulged in a prolonged and systematic career of embezzlement, appropriating more and more as time went on and concealing the shortage by false entries whenever he had to hand over charge before going on leave. The fact that Mr. Stark gave him a locus poenitentiae has nothing to do with the administration of criminal justice. Mr. Stark was merely compounding a felony, and it cannot with reason be described as the appellant's ill-luck that Mr. Stark should have eventually decided to prosecute.

Khairati Lal is a Brahman, 36 years old. He is described as being of good family. He is a first offender. The Magistrate styles him as a young man, but that is hardly accurate. Even if his birth and status be taken into consideration, it is, I maintain an abuse of the provisions of s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, that a crime of this magnitude, extending over so long a period and committed with deliberation and guile, should be treated in the way that it has been treated by the Magistrate. I would press strongly for a substantive term of imprisonment; with or without fine, and I forward the records to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court for orders.

Mr. Raj Krishna, for the Government Advocate, for the Petitioner.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B., for the Respondent.

ORDER.—Khairati Lal, a Brahman of Delhi, aged about 36 years, was convicted under s. 408, Indian Penal Code, of embezzling Rs. 3,940 while acting as a Cashier and Accountant of the Delhi Branch of a piece good firm. For reasons given by the Magistrate he was released under s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, on probation of good conduct on entering into a bond of Rs. 5,000 with one surety for two years. The learned Sessions Judge has dismissed his appeal and has referred the case to this Court for enhancement of the sentence, as in his opinion in this case a substantive term of imprisonment, with or without fine was necessary.

Khairati Lal joined the firm about 1921. He seems to have started his defalcations in December, 1924 and he embezzled the amount mentioned in the charge between that date and October, 1925. After the latter date the defalcations continued. They were detected on the 11th July, 1926.

The fair cash book was properly kept but the rough cash book was not in order. Both were kept by Khairati Lal. It was owing to carelessness on the part of manager in not comparing the cash book with the cash balance that the defalcations were possible. When the manager on the 11th July, 1926, first detected the offence he evidently did not desire to prosecute Khairati Lal. Instead of doing so he got a promissory note for the amount and Khairati Lal in fact repaid Rs. 41 as the first instalment. On the 28th of August, 1926, the manager changed his mind and instituted criminal proceedings. The trial lasted from September, 1926 to the 22nd February, 1927. It was thus nearly a year ago when the order under s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, was passed.

The learned Counsel appearing for Khairati Lal did not contest the finding of the Courts below that he was guilty, but he urged that the discretion vested in the Magistrate should not be set aside at this length of time even though I was of opinion that this was a case in which a sentence of imprisonment should have been passed. It was held in Emperor v. Partab Narain (1) that it was not a sufficient ground for interference on revision that a person given the benefit of the section in question was discovered later to be a previous convict. In Abdul v. Emperor (2) the Punjab Chief Court refused to interfere with an order passed under s. 562 in the case of a conviction under s. 457, Indian Penal Code, which was an offence of a serious nature, though at that time s. 457 did not fall within s. 562. In Emperor v. Jinga Gamaji (3) a servant, who had stolen gold and silver ornaments and who had been convicted under s. 381, Indian Penal Code, was given the benefit of this section and the High Court refused to interfere. The maximum sentence under s. 381 is the same as under s. 408, namely, seven years, while these offences are of a similar nature.

In my opinion this was a serious case. Khairati Lal was in a position of trust and failed therein. The defalcations went over a fairly long period. Nevertheless s. 562 certainly applied in every respect except the circumstances in which the offence was committed. Though these circumstances were such that imprisonment might well have been given I do not think that it would be proper to interfere with the Magistrate's discretion at this length of time. It would not be in the interest of justice to send him to Jail now. The Sind Judicial Commissioners [Emperor v. Mathro (4)] refused to interfere in a case somewhat similar to the present except that in the case before them a great part of the stolen property had been recovered at the instance of the accused, a consideration which they took into account. In this case it is obvious that Khairati Lal wished to repay and started to do so. He also gave a promissory note which was accepted in the first instance. Taking all the above circumstances into consideration, though I agree that usually imprisonment should be given in cases of embezzlement, I must decline to interfere in the present case and I direct the records to be returned.

(1) 88 Ind. Cas. 1054; A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 673; 2 O. W. N. 593; 26 Cr. L. J. 1278.

The revision petition put in on behalf of Khairati Lal was not pressed and is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 204—Summoning accused piecemeal, legality of.

There is nothing either irregular or improper in a Magistrate first issuing process for one of the accused and then changing his mind and issuing process for all the accused before taking further evidence. [p. 779, col. 1.]

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Gujrat, with his No. 1550 of 1927.

FACTS appear from the following report of the District Magistrate:—

REPORT.—Alam, Sardara, and *Musamm*at Baima applicants file an application against the order of Chaudhri Ranjha Khan, Magistrate First Class, dated 30th August, 1927, summoning them as accused to answer a complaint filed by one Mahanda under s. 353, Indian Penal Code, in which complainant stated that *Musamm*at Fatima aged 13-14 years is his daughter, that two months previously the accused kidnapped her from his guardianship and are keeping her for illicit intercourse. That a report was made to the Police and the accused promised to give back the girl but subsequently declined. After recording the complainant's statement the Court issued process against Raja accused alone under s. 363, Indian Penal Code, on 15th August, 1927. On the next day of hearing (30th August, 1927) Raja accused did not appear in Court and the Court ordered warrants to issue against the other three accused.

So far as I can see the order of the Magistrate was not justified by any evidence before him. When he issued the order summoning the present applicants he had no further evidence than the statement of complainant which had been made before him on 15th August, 1927. On that date (15th August, 1927) the Magistrate saw cause only to summon one of the accused. The Magistrate has given, as his reason, for issuing the summonses against the other accused, that it appears that they are abetting Raja accused but this reason is not based on any evidence. The action of the Magistrate in first summoning one accused only on 15th August, 1927, and later on 30th August, 1927, summoning three others without recording any further evidence against them seems arbitrary and not in accordance with the procedure laid down in s. 204, Criminal Procedure Code. I cannot find any definite provision in the Code prohibiting a Magistrate from summoning accused persons at any stage in the case, but it is desirable that a ruling should be obtained on this point, as the procedure in the present case seems objectionable. I, therefore, accept the application for revision and under s. 438, Criminal Procedure Code, forward the case to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court for their orders.

Malik Muhammad Amin, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—A complaint was lodged under ss. 363, 363/109, Indian Penal Code, against four persons. The Magistrate examined the complainant and issued a bailable warrant for one accused only namely, Raja, who was said to be the principal offender. On the date fixed for hearing that warrant was found to have been returned with the report that the accused had disappeared with the girl. The Magistrate thereupon ordered warrants to issue for the other three accused.

The case has been referred by the District Magistrate of Gujrat on the ground that the second order appears to him to be arbitrary and inasmuch as no further note was recorded after the first order had been passed the procedure was not that contemplated in s. 204, Criminal Procedure Code, As I understand it the view taken by the District Magistrate is that it is irregular or illegal for a Magistrate to issue process piecemeal for the various accused persons in a complaint case unless he has taken some further evidence before issuing the second order. I do not think there is anything either irregular or improper in a Magistrate first issuing process for one and then changing his mind and issuing process for all the accused and here the Magistrate gives his reason, which may be good or bad, but anyhow is a reason. He thought the disappearance of principal accused pointed to the truth of the whole story as told by the complainant and without any further waste of time, he proceeded against all the accused.

I do not think any reason has been shown for interference, and I dismiss the application for revision.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application under s. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the transfer of a case which is now pending in the Court of Sardar Dilbagh Singh, Magistrate First Class at Rohtak.

As appears from the record of the case, the petitioners are charged with an offence punishable under s. 304, Indian Penal Code. They were produced before the said Magistrate for the first time on the 4th of October, 1927, which was a public holiday. He proceeded to record evidence because a Police Officer asked him to do so. After examining one witness he adjourned the case to the next day i.e., the 5th of October, which was also a public holiday being the Dushera day and he examined the remaining witnesses on that day.

It was highly objectionable on the part of the Magistrate to commence the trial on a gazetted public holiday and to examine all the prosecution witnesses on a public holiday. As he did so in compliance with the request of a Police Officer, it was sufficient to create an impression in the mind of the accused that they would not have a fair and impartial trial at his hands.

I, therefore, accept this application and direct the District Magistrate to send the case to some other Magistrate subordinate to him who may be competent to try it.

Where in a suit for possession the plaintiff alleges possession and dispossession the onus of proving that he has been in possession, within 12 years of the suit lies on him even though the defendants are entered in revenue papers as tenants.

Where a person is shown to have been in possession of land for a number of years, the mere fact that the land was not cultivated during certain harvests does not make him out of possession during that period.

The fact that a person is entered as a tenant in the jamabandi merely shows that he is not the owner and that he is in cultivating possession thereof. It does not necessarily show that he is in possession with the permission of the owner.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 16th June, 1927, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Mianwali, dated the 25th April, 1927.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit about 4 kanals in area was allotted to plaintiffs on a partition which was effected in 1910 and the jamabandi of 1911-12 shows that they were in cultivating possession thereof in that year. It appears, however, that they were dispossessed by the defendants in Rabi 1913. In the jamabandi of that year the defendants were entered as tenants under the plaintiffs, but it is nobody's case that the defendants occupied the land with the permission of the plaintiffs. In a jamabandi a person who is not the owner of the land but is in cultivating possession thereof is shown as a tenant-at-will because there is no column therein for describing him as a trespasser. There are columns for owners and tenants only. From Rabi 1913 the defendants have all along been in possession the present suit was instituted on the 6th October, 1926, that is more than 12 years after dispossession. The trial Court, therefore, dismissed the suit as barred by time. On appeal the learned District Judge decreed the suit holding that the defendants were tenants under the plaintiffs upto 19th March 1915 on which date the Patwari made a note in the crop-inspection register that they were in possession as trespassers, but the plaintiffs have now here stated that the defendants had been in occupation upto March, 1915, as tenants under them. Their case was that the defendants had taken unlawful possession of the land. As the plaintiffs allege possession and dispossession the question that was rightly put in issue was "whether the suit was within time". The onus of proving that they had been in possession within 12 years before suit lay upon the plaintiffs but they failed to discharge it. If the land remained uncultivated for two harvests, that is Rabi 1915 and Kharif 1916 it cannot be said that it was not in the possession of the defendants for that period. They continued to be in possession from 1913 though they omitted to cultivate the land for those harvests. The case is on all fours with that reported as Mian Muhammad v. Sharaf Shah, (1). I, therefore, accept the appeal and reversing the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the trial Court. The plaintiffs to pay the defendants' costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 5
—Appeal—Stay of execution—Decree-holder not possessed of property, whether ground for stay of execution.

The bare fact that the decree-holder is a woman possessed of no property is no ground for staying execution of the decree during the pendency of an appeal. Appellant's interest can be sufficiently safeguarded by the respondent furnishing security for restitution.

Petition, under O. XLI, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, for stay of execution proceedings in the lower Court pending the decision of the appeal case noted above by the High Court.

Original Suit No. 162-1 of 1925 decided by the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Lahore dated the 22nd February, 1927.

Mr. Ram Lal Anand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The plaintiff-respondent,

Musammam Jan Bibi, has obtained a money decree against the defendant-appellant, carrying future interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem. She having applied for execution of the decree the appellant has moved this Court to stay execution on the ground that the decree-holder is a woman possessed of no property. This, however is no ground for stay of execution. The appellant's interests can be amply safeguarded by taking security for restitution from the respondent.

Accordingly I direct that Musammam Jan Bibi, plaintiff-respondent, shall execute the decree under appeal only after she has furnished security to the satisfaction of the lower Court for the refund of the decretal amount together with interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem, in the event of the appeal being accepted.

There will be no order as to costs of to-day's hearing.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by father—Absence of legal necessity—Suit by son to set aside alienation—Alienee, whether entitled to refund of consideration.

A Hindu son is entitled to get a decree setting aside an alienation, by his father of joint family property, which has not been effected for legal necessity or for the payment of an antecedent debt, without any condition being imposed upon him to refund the consideration paid by the alienee to the father. Lala Moti Sagar, R S, Messrs. Mehr Chand Mahajan and Hargopal, for the Appellants. Messrs. Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Badri Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law to impeach a sale of the co-parcenary property made by his father. The District Judge, concurring with the Court of first instance, has held that the alienation was not for legal necessity or for payment of the antecedent debts of the father; and while finding that the whole of the consideration passed he has granted a decree setting aside the alienation.

The vendees have preferred a second appeal to this Court, and the question debated before us is whether the plaintiff should, before recovering the property, refund the purchase money unless he shows that the money was raised by the father for immoral or illegal purposes. The contention urged by the appellants is supported by the judgment of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das (1), but that ruling has not been followed by other High Courts. The rule laid down by this Court is to the effect that the decree in favour of the son should not be conditional on his refunding to the vendees the amount paid by them to the father, vide Badam v. Madho Ram (2). To the same effect is another judgment of a Division Bench of this Court, vide Kali Charn v. Jaggu (3). There are no doubt observations to the contrary in the judgment of Amir v. Kahan Chand (4) but it appears that the judgment in Badam v. Madho Ram (2), was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges who decided that case. The Madras High Court also has dissented from the doctrine laid down by the Calcutta High Court in Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das (1), and has affirmed the rule that a son is entitled to get a decree setting aside the alienation of the joint family property without any condition being imposed upon him to refund the consideration paid by the alienee to the father, vide Sreenivasa Aiyangar v. Kuppuswami Aiyangar (5).

The balance of the authorities is opposed to the contention raised by the appellants, and we are not prepared to dissent from the rule laid down by this Court in Badam

MUHAMMAD AYUB KHAN—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Execution of decree—Attachment—Objection disallowed—Suit by objector—Burden of proof.

Where an unsuccessful objector to attachment of property in execution of a decree institutes a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, the onus is upon him to prove that the order of the Executing Court is wrong, and that the property belongs to him.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 31st August, 1927, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Fourth Class, Rawalpindi.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Feroze-ud-Din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-appellant having obtained a money decree against one Abdul Aziz proceeded to attach certain goods in a shoe-maker's shop working under the name and style of Muhammad Ayub Khan and also certain money which was due by the Military Department to the said shop. The judgment-debtor's brother-in-law Muhammad Ayub objected to the attachment alleging that the judgment-debtor had no interest in the property attached and that he was the sole owner thereof. The Executing Court allowed the objection in part and held that one half of the attached property belonged to the objector, but that the other half belonged to the judgment-debtor.

Thereupon the objector Muhammad Ayub instituted the present suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, for a declaration that one half of the property, against which attachment was allowed to continue belonged to him and that the judgment-debtor Abdul Aziz had nothing to do with it. The suit was originally decreed by the trial Court, but was dismissed by the District Judge on appeal. In second appeal, Mr. Justice LeRossignol set aside the decree of the District Judge on the ground that it proceeded partly upon inadmissible evidence and remanded the case to the trial Court for a fresh decision after giving the defendant-decree-holder an opportunity to produce evidence in rebuttal of the plaintiff's case.

After remand fresh evidence was led and the trial Court dismissed Muhammad Ayub's suit holding that he had failed to discharge the onus which lay upon him to prove that he was the sole owner of the attached property. This judgment was set aside on appeal by the learned District Judge and the defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

In deciding the case the learned District Judge seems to have assumed that the onus of establishing that the judgment-debtor Abdul Aziz was a partner with Muhammad Ayub plaintiff in the shop of Muhammad Ayub Muhammad Khan lay upon the decree-holder defendant and he has decided the case on that basis. It is hardly necessary to point out that this view of the law is clearly erroneous. The objector Muhammad Ayub had failed in the Executing Court so far as his objection in respect of one half of the property which is now in dispute and it was he who had instituted the present suit under O. XXI, r. 63. Therefore, the onus lay upon him to prove that the order of the Executing Court was wrong. Further this suit had been dismissed by the trial Court and he had appealed to the District Judge and for this reason also the onus lay very heavily on him to show that the trial Court's judgment was wrong and his contention correct. As the question of onus is of vital importance in this case, especially in view of the fact that the learned District Judge has held that much value could not be attached to the oral evidence produced by either side, his finding cannot be sustained and must be set aside.

The learned Counsel for the respondent referred to the order of Mr. Justice LeRossignol dated the 4th of February, 1926 remanding the case and contended that after the remand it lay upon the defendant-appellant to disprove the plaintiff's contention. This, however, is a wholly erroneous reading of that judgment. The learned Judge could not and did not shift the onus when only a part of the evidence had been heard, and after remand the trial Court rightly dealt with the case as if the onus was on the plaintiff.

Both Counsel have brought to my notice certain documentary evidence which has not been referred to by the District Judge in his judgment and Mr. Shamair Chand prayed that this Court should go through the evidence and come to an independent finding. But I cannot accede to this request. The learned District Judge should re-hear the case and decide the case on the entire evidence on the record bearing in mind that the onus lies on the plaintiff to prove his contention.

I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the District Judge and remand the case to him for re-decision in accordance with law. Court-fee will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer, policy of law relating to—Expression of opinion on same facts in previous case, whether ground for transfer.

The policy of law relating to transfer of criminal cases is to inspire confidence in the minds of accused persons in the administration of justice and in the integrity of the Magistracy. The superior Courts are expected to have due regard to the susceptibilities of the accused persons and if they are satisfied that there are reasonable grounds, that is, grounds which a reasonable person placed in the position of an accused person considers to be sufficient, for entertaining an apprehension that the accused will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court of a Magistrate then an order for transfer should be made. [p. 784, col. 1.]

The mere fact that in a previous case against other accused under the same section and almost on identical facts the Magistrate convicted the accused then before him is no ground for transferring a case. [p. 784, col. 2.]

Petition, under s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, for transfer of the case from the Court of the Magistrate First Class, Lahore, to any other Court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Petitioner.

Diwan Ram Lal, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application under s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of a case under s. 477-A of the Indian Penal Code pending against the applicant in the Court of Lala Nand Lal Manchanda, Magistrate First Class, and is made on the ground that in a previous case against others under the same section and almost on identical facts the Magistrate convicted the accused then before him and sentenced them to various terms of imprisonment and, therefore, that the Magistrate having already expressed an opinion on the merits of the case the applicant does not expect an independent and unprejudiced expression of opinion in this case. This was the only ground urged before me, the other grounds of the application having been abandoned.

It appears that the applicant Amar Nath was a Director of the Amritsar National Bank Limited which has gone into liquidation. As a result of investigation held during the liquidation proceedings it was decided to prosecute the Directors and others connected with the management of the Bank under s. 477-A for preparing a false balance sheet and for making wrong entries in the statutory report. The applicant, it is alleged, absconded but the others were tried and convicted. He has now been apprehended and sent up for trial under s. 477-A for preparing a false balance sheet and for making wrong entries in the statutory report before the same Magistrate. The question that I have now to decide is whether by the mere fact that the Magistrate has in the case of other persons held on the evidence then produced before him that the balance sheet was false and that the entries in the statutory report were wrong debars him from trying the present applicant. It is not denied that evidence in this case will mainly be the same that was produced in the previous cases though it may be possible for the present accused to raise pleas in his defence which were not raised by the accused in the previous cases. My attention has not been drawn to any passage in which the Magistrate in his previous judgments directly dealt with the case of the applicant or expressed a definite opinion against him. It was at the same time inevitable that the name of Amar Nath should incidentally be mentioned in connection with certain entries which were to be dis-discussed in those cases. On the facts, therefore, I hold that the Magistrate has not expressed any definite opinion any where in the previous cases against Amar Nath directly, though there is no doubt that the facts of the previous cases and this case are practically identical and that this case will have to be decided mainly on the same prosecution evidence. A large number of authorities were cited on both sides. So far as the principles underlying the transfer of criminal cases from the Courts of Magistrates are concerned there appears to be no controversy. The policy of the law is to inspire confidence in the minds of the accused persons in the administration of justice and in the integrity of the Magistracy. The superior Courts are expected to have due regard to the susceptibilities of the accused persons and if they are satisfied that there are reasonable grounds, that is, grounds which a reasonable person placed in the position of an accused person considers to be sufficient, for entertaining an apprehension that the accused will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court of Magistrate then an order for transfer should be made. It is the application of this principle that is the subject of controversy in the case before me. Counsel for the applicant cited the case of Dhanra Lal v. Crown (Criminal Miscellaneous No. 146 of 1925) in which Zafar Ali, J., transferred a case from the Court of a Magistrate under almost identical circumstances. The full facts of that case are not mentioned in the judgment of the learned Judge in view of the fact that the Counsel for the Crown was unable to say that the apprehension on the part of the accused person was unreasonable. Moreover, in that case the Magistrate in his former judgment had expressed the opinion that there was ample evidence against the petitioner for transfer of the case. This by no means is the case in the present case. In Badan Singh v. Emperor (1) a case was transferred from the Court of the Magistrate as he had on a previous occasion expressed his opinion against the accused who was the petitioner for transfer and in Chandramani Sarma v. Kunja Rendi (2) the Magistrate had expressed an opinion on the defence evidence in another case and such evidence was prosecution evidence in the subsequent case between the same parties which was sought to be transferred from his Court. Order for transfer was made in this case also. The facts in both these cases are distinguishable from the present case.

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 257; 5 Lah. L. J. 520.

(2) 4 C. W. N. 824.

On the other hand Emperor v. Har-gobind (3), Jaharuddin Sarkar v. Emperor (4) and Rajani Kanta Dutta v. Emperor, (5), appear to be authorities against the applicant. The first of these judgments related to two cross-cases of riot, in which the Magistrate having disposed of one of the cases commenced the trial of the second. An application for transfer was made on the ground that in the first case the Magistrate having expressed an opinion unfavourable to the accused in the second case was not competent to try the latter case. The application for transfer was dismissed. In the second of the cases cited above the facts were identical with those of this case. It appears that some of the accused had already been convicted on the same evidence by the Sessions Judge before the remaining accused were placed before him for trial and convicted by him. An objection was taken before the Appellate Court that the Judge having expressed an opinion on the evidence in a previous case was not competent to try the second case. The objection was overruled. The only distinction that it may be possible to draw between that case and the case now before me is that in that case there was no application for transfer made to the High Court but an objection to the competency of the Sessions Judge to take cognizance of the case was taken on appeal. On page 719* of the report, however, the learned Judges held that an application for transfer under the circumstances mentioned would have been rejected. In the last of the cases cited above it was held that the mere expression of opinion against the accused on other evidence in another case does not debar a Magistrate from trying a criminal case against the same accused. In my opinion I would not be exercising a sound discretion, if I were to transfer the present case merely because the Magistrate has on a previous occasion tried other cases against other accused on similar evidence and convicted them.

I must, therefore, dismiss this application.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Madura, in A. S. No. 24 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Madura, in O. S. No. 82 of 1920.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit relates to an inam granted for the support of the piper of a temple at Madura. Defendant No. 12 held the office until 1892, when he was dismissed. Plaintiff No. 1 was then appointed by the trustee of the temple and held office until 1914. After him plaintiff No. 3 held office for about 2 years; and since 1916 plaintiff No. 2 has held the office. In 1916, about 3 months after plaintiff No. 2 came into office, the Government resumed the inam, granted pattas for the inam land to the persons in possession of it and ordered that the assessment collected on the land should be paid to the piper in office for the time being, so long as he did his work satisfactorily. In this suit plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 pray for a declaration that the transfer of the land by the Government from inam to ayan is illegal and invalid and for the recovery of the land from the defendants in possession. The suit was dismissed by the District Munsif. Plaintiff No. 1 died while the suit was before the District Munsif. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 appealed; but the Subordinate Judge confirmed the District Munsif's decree. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 again appeal.

The extract from the Inam Register of 1863 contained in Ex. XII shows that the inam was a permanent hereditary grant and that it was then confirmed under Rule III (1) of the Inam Rules (Rule III (2) appears to be a misprint) that is, it was to be continued so long as the service continued to be performed according to the conditions of the grant. It appears that defendant No. 12 alienated the whole of the inam land; and it has been found that plaintiff No. 1 was never in possession in any way during the 22 years he held the office, from 1892 to 1914, nor has either plaintiff No. 2 or plaintiff No. 3 ever been in possession. It is contended for the plaintiffs that the resumption of the inam by the Government in 1916 was illegal, because, though the office-holders were out of possession of the inam land, the piping service was being done. The argument is that it is no concern of the Government who gets the benefit of the inam or who does the piping service: so long as the service is done satisfactorily by anyone in the world, the Government cannot resume the inam. Two cases are quoted in support of this position viz., Shankarlal Tapidas v. Secretary of State for India (1), and Secretary of State for India v. Gulam Mahaboo Khan Sahib (2). The Bombay case is not similar to this case and turned on the construction of a Bombay Act and of the sanad concerned. In Secretary of State for India v. Ghulam Mahaboo Khan Sahib (2) it was found that the objects of the trust were being substantially carried out with the income of the trust property and that, therefore, the resumption of the inam on account of some alienation was unjustifiable. In the present case no part of the income of the inam land had been devoted to the object of the grant for at least 24 years before the resumption. Plaintiff No. 1 during the whole period he was piper got his remuneration, not from the inam land, but from a salary paid to him by the temple trustee, and so did plaintiff No. 3. Plaintiff No. 2, it appears, has received also the assessment on the inam land since its resumption by the Government, who acted in the matter not for their own benefit but in the interests of the office. The motive of the Government in making the resumption and their conduct after the resumption, however, do not affect the legality or illegality of their action. But I agree with the learned Government Pleader that, when the Government found that for a long period the inam land had been entirely dissociated from the office for the support of which it had been granted and that no part of the income of the land was going towards the remuneration of the office-holder, which had to be provided otherwise by the temple trustee, the service did not continue to be performed according to the conditions of the grant within the meaning of Rule III (1) of the Inam Rules. It is to that rule that the plaintiffs appeal, and it is unnecessary for me now to consider the force or validity of the Board's Standing Order No. 54. I agree with the finding of the lower Courts that the resumption of the inam was not illegal.

That is enough to dispose of this appeal. But I may mention that plaintiff No. 1, for whom no representative has been brought on record, appears to have had no right to maintain this suit as he was out of office long before the suit was instituted. Moreover it appears that, though he belonged to the inamdār family, he was not the next in succession to defendant No. 12 and did not succeed to the office but was appointed to it by the temple trustee; and apart from that it also appears that it was at his instance that the resumption proceedings were started. Plaintiff No. 3 was out of office before the suit was instituted, and it is not now suggested that he had any right to maintain it. The suit is now pressed only for plaintiff No. 2. He is connected with plaintiff No. 1 by having married plaintiff No. 1's brother's granddaughter but does not appear to belong in any way to the inamdār family. Exhibit N shows that he was appointed by the temple trustee on probation in August, 1916, and was confirmed in April, 1917. He has no claim to hold the office by hereditary right and for that reason alone cannot maintain this suit. Apart from that the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 professed to base their right on a "Will and settlement and other documents executed and left in their favour by the 1st plaintiff" which could have given them no such right. None of the plaintiffs, therefore, had any right to maintain the suit.

The appeal is dismissed with costs—2 sets, one for defendant No. 1 and one for the other contesting defendants.

Will—Construction—Provision for erecting choultry and carrying on worship—Balance of income to be utilised for family purposes—Properties, whether absolutely dedicated to trust or merely burdened with trust—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 4—Properties burdened with trust, whether vest in Official Receiver.

A Hindu, by his Will, enjoined his son to build a choultry to instal the Kula Deivam in it for the purpose of family worship, and to conduct a charity, meeting the expenses from the income of the properties. The patta for the properties was directed to be transferred in the name of the deity worshipped in the choultry. There was a further provision to the effect that the testator's son and his heirs "from generation to generation according to the rule of primogeniture should, without alienating the properties in any manner, enjoy them paying sircar kist therefor and conduct the charity and utilise the balance of the income for family purposes." The last sentence of the Will contained a provision that the testator's son was to inherit all his other properties. It did not appear there were any other properties given to the son, but it was found that the expenditure for the charities even on a lavish scale could not consume any considerable portion of the income and a very large part of it would be left intact for the enjoyment of the family :

Held, on a proper construction of the Will,

(1) that the dominating purpose and intention of the testator in executing the Will was to provide for the members of his family, the maintenance and conduct of the charity having only a subsidiary importance; [p. 789, col. 2.]

(2) that the properties covered by the Will were not properties absolutely dedicated to a trust but were only properties burdened with a trust; [ibid.]

(3) that on the adjudication of the son as insolvent, the properties vested in the Official Receiver for the benefit of the creditors. [ibid.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Negapatnam, dated the 31st March, 1926, in I. A. No. 661 of 1924, in I. P. No. 10 of 1924.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for K. S. Desikan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the District Judge of East Tanjore under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act declaring that the properties forming the subject-matter of this appeal would vest in the Official Receiver for the benefit of the creditors.

The dispute relates to about 68 acres and odd of property which belonged to one Chinna-swami Naidu. He died leaving a Will in favour of his son in which, generally speaking—we will refer to the contents of the Will in detail later—he called upon his son to maintain a choultry and carry on in it the worship of their family deity meeting the expenses from the income of the property, with liberty to utilise the balance of the income for family purposes. His son became an insolvent. The children of the insolvent, the appellants before us, maintain that these properties are trust properties, while the Official Receiver and the creditors contend that the properties belonged to the insolvent with a charge for carrying out the trust mentioned in the Will. If the properties are dedicated to a trust absolutely, it is clear that the Official Receiver cannot claim them; on the other hand, if the properties are only burdened with a trust, they would vest in the Official Receiver for the benefit of the creditors. The question, for our decision, is whether the properties covered by the Will, Ex A are trust properties or whether they are properties belonging to the insolvent with a charge for carrying out the trust mentioned in the Will.

The answer to this question depends upon the correct construction of the Will, Ex. A. It runs in the following terms: "On the site which is situate to the north of my shop and house and for which I have performed the manai muhurtham ceremony, my son Gopalakrishnan, shall with the stones, tiles and timber in my possession, construct a choultry spending an amount to the extent of Rs. 40) from and out of the outstandings set out in schedule A, and instal in the aforesaid choultry the picture of Sri Gopalakrishnan, now kept and worshipped by me in the house as Kula Deivam (family deity). The Monyam, the Karnam and the Tahsildar will be pleased to transfer the patta for the nunja, punja, etc, properties of the value of Rs. 8,300 set out in schedule A in the name of the said deity Gopalakrishnaswamiar, after my death, and my son Gopalakrishnan and his heirs from generation to generation according to the rule of primogeniture, shall, without alienating the properties in any manner enjoy them paying sircar kist therefor and conduct the charity mentioned in schedule C and untilise the balance of the income for family purposes. If there be several heirs to my son, the seniors shall enjoy the aforesaid properties and after deducting the amount for charity and sircar kist, distribute the balance of the income amongst the heirs according to their shares, and shall never divide the properties. No one except the heirs shall be entitled to ask for an account of the said income. My daughter Janaki and her husband Rangaswami Naidu shall after my death enjoy with all rights the immoveable property of the value of Rs. 800 set out in schedule B as stridhanam property. The balance of Rs. 500 remaining after deducting Rs. 400 for the construction of the choultry out of Rs. 900 the amount of outstandings set out in schedule A, shall be vested in the name of the said Gopalakrishnaswami and shall be augmented by my son and his heirs. If there be, by act of Providence, no income for the payment of sircar kist, the said sircar kist shall be paid from and out of the accretions of the aforesaid amount. In case my son or his heirs, owing to their negligence, fail to augment the income and pay the sircar kist, efforts shall be made for payment out of the above amount so as to prevent the land being brought to sale by the sircar. My son Gopalakrishnan shall inherit all my other properties." The nature of the charity mentioned in schedule C will be referred to later.

The property set out in the schedule consists of 61 acres 85 cents, of nunja lands, 2 acres 17 cents of punja lands, 3 acres and 40 cents of maniam lands, 6 houses about 12 tamarind trees, 18) coconut trees and 177 palm trees. Mr. Venkatachariar argues that the following feature of the Will conclusively shows that the properties referred to in it are trust properties: (1) The son is enjoined to build a choultry to instal the Kula Deivam in it for the purpose of family worship, and to conduct a charity meeting the expenses from the income of the properties, (2) the patta for the schedule properties are directed to be transferred in the name of the deity worshipped in the choultry, and (3) the last sentence in the Will makes a special provision that his son Gopalakrishnan shall inherit all his other properties. It will have been noticed that the Will contains an important provision regarding the enjoyment of the surplus income; it states that the testator's son and his heirs "from generation to generation according to the rule of primogeniture shall without alienating the properties in any manner enjoy them paying sircar kist therefor and conduct the charity mentioned in schedule C and utilise the balance of the income for family purposes;" and provision is also made for the management and distribution of this balance of income among the heirs. This feature is pointed out by the respondent as showing that the real intention of the testator in making the gift was to make a provision for his family, though he called upon his son to conduct the charity and the worship from out of the income of the properties. We have to construe all these clauses together and come to our conclusion as to whether the properties covered by the Will are properties dedicated to trust absolutely or whether they are only properties belonging to the insolvent burdened with a trust of carrying out the charity mentioned in the Will.

Various cases have been brought to our notice with reference to the construction of the Will. In all those cases, the decisions turned upon the construction of the terms of the document in each case. In Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (1) Lord Robertson said: "Their Lordships have, however, considered the question whether even assuming it to have been registered, the deed is, according to its terms, a valid deed of wagf. It will be so if the effect of the deed is to give the property in substance to charitable uses. It will not be so if the effect is to give the property in substance to the testator's family." This passage lays down the general test to be applied to cases of this description. Is the effect of the deed to give the properties in substance to charitable uses or is its effect to give the properties in substance to the testator's family. In Sonatun Rysack v. Sreemutty Juggut-soondree Dossee (2) a Hindu gave all his properties by a Will to his family idol with a direction that the properties should not be divided by his sons but that they should enjoy the surplus profits from generation to generation. Lord Turner, J., was of the opinion: "that although the Will purports to begin with an absolute gift in favour of the idol, it is plain that the testator contemplated that there was to be some distribution of the property according as events might turn out." In Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (3) a case of a gift by a lady of certain property for the support of the daily worship of an idol with a direction that the surplus if any should be utilised by the family, the Privy Council held that the property was only burdened with a trust and not absolutely dedicated although there was a provision in the Will that the heirs should have no powers of alienation over the properties bequeathed. In Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari (4) the Privy Council had to construe a Will which contained two directions (1) that the moveable and immoveable property of the testator shall be considered to be the property of a certain idol and (2) that the surplus after defraying the expenses of the temple and the pay of the servants shall be used by the heirs to meet their own expenses. Their Lordships' view was that by this Will the testator did not intend to give the property absolutely to the idol. In Jadu Nath Singh v. Thakur Sita Ramji (5) and Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (6) two cases strongly relied on by the appellant, the Privy Council held having reference to the terms of the deeds, that the dominating purpose and intention shown in the documents was to create a trust, though there were provisions in the deeds for the benefit of the heirs of the grantors.

Applying the principles of these decisions, we think that the learned Judge has construed the Will in this case correctly. It is obvious from the nature of the charity that its maintenance will not cost any considerable sum. The details of the charity to be carried on are thus stated in schedule O to the Will: "for presenting food and performing worship every day for my family deity Sri Gopalakrishnan installed in the choultry mentioned in this Will, a Brahmin should be made to reside therein. He should be given 39 kalams of paddy every year and the said worship must be carried on. On the dwadasi day of each of the two fortnights of the month not less than five Brahmins should be given food. As there is a chatra-mainiam a watershed must be maintained in the said choultry from 10 days before the chitrapurva to the end of the hot season and water must be served to all persons who come there. If the Brahmin appointed for doing these things fails to conduct himself properly, my son Gopalakrishnan and his heirs should dismiss the said Brahmin and appoint a substitute. The choultry should be retiled and repairs should be carried out every year." These are the various items on which expenditure had to be met from the income of the property already mentioned. It is obvious that the charity even if it is conducted on a lavish scale cannot consume any considerable portion of the income. We are satisfied that after meeting these expenses a very large amount of the income will be left intact for enjoyment by the family. Though the patta of the properties in schedule A has been transferred in the name of the deity, in our opinion, the effect of it is cut down by the provision relating to the enjoyment of the surplus by the members of the family. It was argued that the obvious intention of the testator inferable from the last sentence of the Will that "Gopalakrishnan shall inherit all my other properties" was to dedicate the properties in question to the deity the son having been provided for in another way. But it has not been shown satisfactorily what properties have been given to Gopalakrishnan. Having regard to all the circumstances, we take the view that the dominating purpose and intention of the testator in executing the Will was to provide for the members of his family. The maintenance and conduct of the charity was only of subsidiary importance. We are, therefore, of opinion that the properties covered by the Will are not properties absolutely dedicated to a trust but are only properties burdened with a trust.

It is then argued that even so, these properties cannot be sold by the Official Receiver as they are not properties of the insolvent, being free from liability to attachment in view of the decision in Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (7). Reading that judgment carefully we are not prepared to accept this argument. We think the properties, in that case were treated as absolute trust properties, which, as we have already pointed out cannot be said about the properties we are dealing with in this case. We are, therefore, of opinion that the appellants cannot succeed in excluding these properties from vesting in the Official Receiver for the benefit of the creditors.

This appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

—Representative suit on behalf of community—
Application for leave—Defendant, right of, to object to leave on the ground that plaintiffs do not possess confidence of community—"Numerous," meaning of—

Consultation of other members of community, whether necessary.

On an application for leave to sue in a representative capacity on behalf of a community under O. I. r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, it is not competent to the defendants to raise the contention that the plaintiffs do not possess the confidence of the community as regards the conduct of the suit. In a proper case, if necessary, the Court may under O. I. r. 11, give the conduct of the suit to such persons as it deems proper, and the Court could also add as parties any persons who wish to be on the record eo nomine, if proper grounds are made out for the course being taken. [p 791, col. 1]

Where the number of persons interested in a suit is 100, they are sufficiently "numerous" within the meaning of O. I. r. 8. [p 791, col. 2.]

It is not necessary that in a representative suit the plaintiffs should prove that they consulted the community or obtained the opinion of the majority in support of the suit. [ibid.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Koilpatti, dated the 27th September 1926, in I. A. No. 471 of 1926, in O. S. No. 165 of 1926.

Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. M. Ramaswami, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision petition filed by the plaintiffs in Suit No. 165 of 1926 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Koilpatti against an order passed by the learned District Munsif by which he declined to grant leave to the petitioners-plaintiffs to institute the suit on behalf of the village community under O. I. r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. The brother of the 1st defendant claiming title to certain properties under purchase from the alleged original owners—V. M. Brothers—instituted a suit against the present 2nd defendant as manager of the endowment and got a decree in his favour.

In the present plaint, the plaintiffs, three Muhammadans of the locality, alleged that the decree in the prior suit was not binding upon the trust, and the plaintiffs prayed to have the appropriate reliefs granted to them in respect of the matter. At the time of filing the plaint, the plaintiffs also put in an application under O. I. r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code for permission to be allowed to sue on behalf of the village community interested in the matter. Defendants Nos. 1 and 5 (Oshettias) are the main contesting defendants. They opposed the application. The learned District Munsif has upheld the objections of defendants Nos. 1 and 5 and he has dismissed the application filed under O. I. r. 8 by the plaintiffs.

The main arguments mentioned in the order of the lower Court may be noticed. The first argument is that the plaintiffs have not proved that the community concerned has got confidence in the plaintiffs. In fact the defendants contend that the community concerned has no confidence in the plaintiffs and that accordingly the plaintiffs are not entitled to be granted the permission prayed for. In answer to this, I may say that O. I. r. 8 has been enacted for the benefit of the defendants only to this extent, namely, to prevent multiplicity of suits against them. The question whether the community concerned has got confidence in the plaintiffs as regards the proper conduct of the suit, or not, is not a matter with which the contesting defendants Nos. 1 and 5 members of a totally different community, are concerned, and it is not a point for them to take. The law has provided sufficient safeguards in case the community concerned resolve to conduct the suit in any other manner, such as by taking the conduct of the suit from out of the hands of the plaintiffs or otherwise. I may in this connection refer to the decision of the Privy Council in the Kamudi case, Sanakaralinga Nadan v. Rajeswara Dorai (1). There a suit was instituted under s. 30 of the old Civil Procedure Code which corresponded to O. I. r. 8 of the present Code. After the first Court granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff, the plaintiff on record thought it proper to compromise with the contesting defendants. Then the cestui que trust and other persons who were also interested in the institution and consequently in the proper conduct of the suit—wanted to be allowed to be made themselves parties and also to have the further conduct of the litigation taken out of the hands of the original plaintiff, who by compromising with the defendants after obtaining a decree, showed himself to be no longer worthy of the confidence of the community concerned. The Privy Council at page 250 of I L. R. 31 Mad. make this observation :

"After the case had been decided in his favour by the Subordinate Judge, this person (the original plaintiff) thought fit to profess that he now saw that he and the Judge were wrong; and he asked that the judgment should be altered, so as to defeat his own action. A very sordid motive for this surrender was specifically asserted and has not been disproved. The Court, on being applied to, very properly re-inforced the cause of the worshippers of the temple by joining certain new plaintiffs to the original plaintiff" and allowed the persons to further conduct the litigation. The decision of the High Court on an application filed by such new people to be made parties and the reasons which generally guide the Court in granting such application will be found referred to in Narayanamasami Gurukkal v. Vellusamy Tever (2). Under the Code—under O. I, r. 11—the Court may give the conduct of the suit to such persons as it deems proper, and the Court also could add as parties any persons who wish to be on the record eo nomine, if proper grounds were made out for that course being taken. For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the learned District Munsif was not right in the first reason that he gave for not allowing permission asked for in this particular case.

The second reason given by the District Munsif is that he cannot say that the number of villagers concerned is "numerous" within the meaning of O. I, r. 8. What particular number would really constitute "numerous" within the meaning of O. I, r. 8 need not be definitely laid down in this particular case. There is evidence that about a hundred people are interested in this matter and the learned District Munsif himself says: "There are not over 100 Muhammadans even according to the petitioners." The Munsif evidently thinks that '100' is not a sufficient number to justify the appellation "numerous" within the meaning of this rule, I am not able to agree with him. If authority is necessary on such a point, fortunately in Mulla's Commentaries under O. I, r. 8, the learned commentator mentions a case decided by the English Courts, Andrews v. Salmon (3) where it seems to have been held that where the number of defendants was thirty, it was considered as "numerous" within the meaning of the corresponding English Rule, O. XVI, r. 9 of the Supreme Court Rules. Having regard to the facts before me, namely, that the number of persons interested in this suit would be about 100, I have no doubt that this is a case to which O. I, r. 8 should be held to be applicable.

Then it was argued that the plaintiffs have not adduced evidence that they consulted the community or that, they have got the opinion of the majority in their favour, before filing the suit. The extreme view held in Bombay [vide Harkisondas Shival v. Chhaganlal Narsidas (4)] has not been followed in Madras. See Katha Pillai v. Kanakasundaram Pillai (5) and Sivathal Periyava Nadar v. Nana, Chuna, Velmuruga Nadar (6). As has been remarked in these Madras cases, it is not possible to have the opinion of every member of the community as regards the advisability of instituting the suit, ascertained before filing such a suit. Usually, there are factions in communities, and even if otherwise, it often happens that there are very honest differences of opinion in the matter of filing such suits. In fact, the case of Sivathal Periyava Nadar v. Nana, Chuna, Velmuruga Nadar (6), specifically states that it is not necessary that the plaintiffs should prove that they consulted the community or obtained the opinion of the majority in support of the suit.

The learned District Munsif states finally that the granting of permission may inflict great hardship on the community. As at present advised, I am not able to appreciate this argument. Either the community is in favour of filing the suit or it is not. If it is in favour of filing the suit it could not have any cause for complaint. If, on the other hand, the community is not in favour of such a suit, then the only persons who would really suffer would be the plaintiffs whose suit would ultimately be dismissed and the plaintiff would have to pay costs of the defendants. As has been remarked by Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., in Hameed Labbai v. Mahamud Khatter Pillai (7) the object of filing such a petition and obtaining permission under it is to prevent the defendants from being vexed by further suits by other members of the community. Thus if the community be not in favour of such a suit all that the defendants have to care is to meet the present plaintiffs and succeed

(2) 12 M. L. J. 355.

(3) (1868 W.N. 102).

In this suit, I am not now concerned with the other rights, if any, of the community in respect of this matter. For these reasons, I am not able to appreciate this argument either of the learned District Munsif.

My attention was also drawn to an observation in the recent Full Bench decision of this Court in Sonachalam Pillai v. Kumaravela Chettiar (8), where the Court, after quoting a sentence from the decision in Market v. Knight Steamship Co. (9) remarks, that it is not necessary in cases of suits filed under O. I. R. 8, to obtain the permission or consent of the community concerned.

Finally it was argued by Mr. T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar, the learned Vakil for the respondent, that the more appropriate remedy that the plaintiffs would be entitled to is to file a suit, after obtaining the necessary sanction, under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. I will assume for the present that the plaintiffs would be entitled to that remedy also, but as remarked by Bacon, Vice-Chancellor in Bryant v. Bull (10):

"There may be other remedies, there may be 500 or 5,000 other remedies, but if this one remedy which the applicant has invoked be one of them, there is no reason why he should not have recourse to this one out of the 5,000." On principle one cannot agree that the defendants should be the judge to dictate the choice of the remedies on behalf of the plaintiffs.

For these reasons I think that the order passed by the learned District Munsif is erroneous and should be set aside as I think that he has failed to exercise his jurisdiction in the matter in accordance with legal principles applicable to the case. I think the petitioners are entitled to their costs in this Court. Costs of the petition in the lower Court will abide the result of the suit.

Decree—Forfeiture clause, whether can be relieved against in decrees which are not by consent.

A provision for forfeiture for non-payment in a decree cannot be relieved against unless the decree is a consent decree. [p. 793, col. 1.]

Where a decree in favour of a landlord directed the defendants-tenants to pay the arrears of rent within a particular time, and in default the defendants were to be evicted and the plaintiff put in possession, and the defendants defaulted to pay:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the clause for possession and the forfeiture could not be relieved against. [p. 793, col. 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the District Court, North Arcot, in Appeal Suits Nos. 210, 213 to 218, 222, 225, 229, 231 to 233, 235 239 and 245 of 1923 preferred respectively against those of the Court of the District Munsif, Ranipet.

Mr. A. C. Sampath Ayyanger, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Seshadri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge is in error in thinking that a provision for forfeiture for non-payment in a decree can be relieved against unless the decree is a consent decree. It will be found in all cases where relief has been granted, the decrees were consent decrees. On account of this error I am unable to accept the District Judge's judgment in these cases.

But before disposing of these cases finally, I must call for a finding by the lower Appellate Court in each of the appeals before me on the following points:—

Whether any moneys were due, if so, how much, by the tenant or tenants on 20th February, 1920, under cl. (4) of the decree (in A. S. No. 49 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vellore), and when, if at all, such sums were paid by the tenants into Court or to the landlords. Plaintiffs have filed a list, schedule A, with an affidavit setting forth this amount, the correctness of which will, however, have to be tested. In construing the words "arrears of rent" in cl. (4) of the decree, they will be taken to include rent for Faslis 1324 to 1326 with mesne profits or damages claimed in the shape of rent as cl. (1) of the decree puts it for any portion of these faslis.

Findings will be submitted in four weeks. Time allowed for objections is seven days.

After the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of applications filed by landholders for enforcing the terms of a decree fixing a certain time for payments and ordering eviction of the tenants from the land in default of payments within that time. The decree that is sought to be executed (decree in A. S. No. 49 of 1919) Temporary Sub-Court, Vellore, after directing the defendant to pay rent to the plaintiffs mesne profits and costs in para. 4 stated: "that if the defendants pay plaintiffs the arrears of rent together with interest at 6 per cent. per annum and costs in both Courts on or before 20th February, 1920, he be relieved as against forfeiture and in case of default the defendant be evicted and the plaintiffs be put in possession of the respective land." The respondents before us not having paid their dues under the decree before the 20th of February, 1920, the plaintiffs applied for enforcing the terms and getting possession of the property. It has now been found by the lower Courts that the payments made by the respondents were after the specified date, namely, 20th February, 1920. These payments were all accepted by the plaintiffs. The lower Courts construing the decree as a consent decree allowed relief against forfeiture and dismissed the plaintiffs' applications. It is now argued that since the decree is not a consent decree no relief against forfeiture can be granted. No decision has been brought to our notice where relief against forfeiture has been granted in connection with decrees other than consent-decrees. The case in Krishnarao Pandurang Barve v. Balvant Kashav Patil (1) must be treated as a decision on the special facts of that case.

The main argument on behalf of the respondents is that the plaintiffs have already received money due to them under the decree and that, therefore, it is not open to them to proceed with these applications. On a construction of the decree, we think it is open to the plaintiffs to enforce payment of the money even if the respondents did not pay, by resorting to Court. Therefore, the fact that they have received the amounts when paid by the respondents cannot be allowed to influence the decision of the case. It is undisputed that default has been made by the respondents. The plaintiffs are now asking that effect may be given to the forfeiture clause in consequence of this default. A good deal was said on behalf of the respondents to the effect that there was a delay in getting the decree from the Court and within the limited time left to them they could not possibly have made the payments in time. If they were pressed for time, the obvious course for them was to resort to the Court that passed the decree and get an extension of time. That they have not done. In the circumstances, the only conclusion we can arrive at is that inasmuch as the defendants had defaulted in making the payments, cl. 4 of the decree should be given effect to. Therefore, we would set aside the orders of the lower Courts and ask the first Court to take up the applications on file and dispose of them according to law. The respondents will pay the appellants' costs.

We fix the fee at Rs. 15 in each case.

It is not denied that in three of the appeals (Appeals Nos. 132, 135 and 137) payments were made before the 20th of February, 1920, they are, therefore, dismissed.

V. N. V.

Orders set aside.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEAL No. 58 OF 1926.
September 12, 1927.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam and Mr. Justice Cornish.

R. A. ARUNACHELA IYAH—APPELLANT
versus

LOUIS DREYFUS & Co.—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 251—Partnership for trading purposes—Dubash agreement with arbitration clause by one partner without consent of others, whether binding on firm—Arbitration—Arbitrator, right of, to decide binding nature of reference—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899)—Umpire, whether bound to state case to Court on questions of law—Obtaining legal opinion independently of parties, whether misconduct.

A partner in an ordinary trading concern has no power in the absence of authority to bind the firm by a Dubash agreement containing a clause for submission to arbitration. [P. 798, col. 1.]

Stead v. Salt (1), Ram Bharose v. Kallu Mal (3) and Datoobhoy v. Valtu (4), relied on.

A limited Tribunal such as that of an Arbitrator or Umpire has no jurisdiction to decide finally whether the reference to arbitration is itself valid and binding on all the parties before it. [p. 797, col. 1.]

Under the Arbitration Act, an Umpire is not bound at the instance of one of the parties to the reference to state a case to the Court on questions of law arising for decision. [p. 800, col. 2.]

It is legal misconduct on the part of an Umpire who is not a lawyer to take independent legal opinion without reference to the parties on a matter arising for decision before him. [p. 801, col. 1.]

[Case-law considered.]

Under the Arbitration Act unlike the Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary to convert an award into a decree of Court that there should be an order that it should be filed. Where a notice of motion to set aside an award is dismissed, the award becomes a decree and a right of appeal arises. [p. 801, col. 2.]

Per Cornish, J.—It is incumbent on an arbitrator who takes legal or other expert advice, which may influence his determination of the matter submitted to him for arbitration to inform the parties of his intention to do so and of the question upon which the advice is taken, since otherwise the parties have no assurance that the advice is material, or given on a correct statement of the case, or that the arbitrator has not, in effect, simply surrendered his responsibility for deciding the question in arbitration to the opinion of his legal or other adviser. [p. 804, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgments of Mr. Justice Waller, dated the 30th April, 1925, and 6th May, 1926 and the order dated the 5th May, 1926, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

In the matter of the Indian Arbitration Act IX of 1899 and in the matter of the Arbitration between Louis Dreyfus & Co., and R. K. Rajagopala Ayyar and Brothers and R. S. Arunachela Iyah.

Messrs. Nugent Grant and K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Vere Mockett for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—This is an appeal from an order of our brother Waller, J., sitting on the original side on a notice of motion taken up by the appellant in connection with an arbitration under the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899.

It will now be convenient to set forth the history of the transactions giving rise to the arbitration and the further proceedings in Court. There was a firm of merchants known as R. K. Rajagopala Ayyar and brothers consisting of R. K. Rajagopala Ayyar and his cousin (not strictly brother) R. A. Arunachela Iyah.

When exactly the partnership was formed is not clear. A firm of French merchants known as Louis Dreyfus & Co., who are the respondents before us, having their Head Office at Karachi in Sind (Bombay Presidency) have a branch at Madras managed through their agent Mr. Hartman. In 1918 Rajagopala Ayyar happened to go to Northern India on pilgrimage and he visited the Head Office of Messrs. Dreyfus & Co., and there entered into a Dubash agreement, dated 25th April, 1918. Under this agreement Messrs. Dreyfus & Co. were to make offers for the purchase of ground-nuts, castor seeds and any other article required by them to Rajagopala Ayyar and Brothers who were known as Dubashes and they were to be at liberty to accept such offers and they were to deliver the goods free on board at Madras or any one of three other ports, in performance of the contract. Clause 15 of the agreement provided that if any difference should arise between the parties the matter should be referred to arbitration which was to be governed by the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899. After he returned from Karachi certain contracts were completed by acceptance. Most of these were in August and a few in September. The present dispute before us relates to four of those contracts numbered as 15, 16, 18 and 19, dated 27th and 28th August, 1918. In the letters of acceptance relating to those contracts the last sentence is "Conditions as per agreement with you, dated the 25th April, 1918". But these letters are signed by R. K. Rajagopala Ayyar and Brothers, it not being clear who is the person who actually put the signature for the firm. About the end of September the other partner Arunachela Iyah proposed to the agent Mr. Hartman that another person should be appointed Dubash in the place of Rajagopala Iyah and another agreement should be drawn up accordingly as Rajagopala Ayyar was mismanaging the business. Mr. Hartman did not consent, but he produced the written agreement of 25th April, and asked Arunachela Iyah to sign it but the latter refused. Negotiations for a new arrangement went on for sometime; meanwhile Rajagopala Iyah fell dangerously ill and while he was in his death bed on 3rd November, a new agreement was prepared and signed. This agreement consists of seven clauses, the first four relating to the performance of the old contracts and the next three relating to new Dubashes. On 4th November Rajagopala Ayyar died. Sometime after a formal draft of a new Dubash agreement was prepared but it was never executed. In September, 1920, the agent of Messrs. Dreyfus & Co., after calling upon Arunachela Iyah to name an Arbitrator which he refused, nominated Mr. Goffe and Mr. Spencer as their arbitrators to settle the differences. They differed and referred the matter to an Umpire named Mr. Chettle on 6th February, 1921. Mr. Chettle then gave his award on 21st February, 1921.

On 10th August, 1921, Arunachela Iyah took out a notice of motion on the original side to set aside the award and all other proceedings therein. The matter came before Phillips, J., and he set aside the award by judgment, dated 6th September, 1921. He held that the Umpire's action was irregular as he sent no notice to Arunachela Iyah. There was an appeal against the judgment of Phillips, J. This was O. S. Appeal No. 96 of 1921*. The appeal came on before Sir Walter Schwabe, C. J., and Wallace, J., who remitted the award for further consideration and as the original Umpire Mr. Chettle was not available another Umpire Mr. Rae was appointed. Mr. Rae has given his award on 19th February, 1923. Again a notice of motion was taken by Arunachela Iyah to set aside the award on 23rd and 26th February, 1923. The matter came on before our brother Waller, J. He dismissed the application and Arunachela Iyah appeals.

Meanwhile, on 2nd February, 1922, Arunachela Iyah filed a suit for damages for breach of the fresh contract. This was C. S. No. 102 of 1922. This was tried by Coutts-Trotter, J., as he then was and was dismissed. There was an appeal by Arunachela Iyah. This appeal was O. S. A. No. 58 of 1923. It came up before Phillips and Odgers, JJ. It was also dismissed. The widow of Rajagopala Ayyar also filed a suit for refund of certain monies against the same company. This was C. S. No. 601 of 1922. Messrs. Dreyfus & Co. applied for stay of further proceedings on the ground that the matter was pending before the Umpire. This application came on before our brother Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., and he ordered that, as the matter involved important questions of law they should be reserved for consideration by the Court, and only then the arbitrator should proceed with the matter. The further history of this suit O. S. No. 601 of 1922 need not be stated here as it has no bearing on the appeal before us. I have set forth these proceedings in connection with O. S. A. No. 96 of 1921 and 58 of 1923 and a portion of C. S. No. 601 of 1922, because all the relevant documents connected with the matter before us are printed in one or other of these proceedings and evidence has also been adduced in them. No further evidence has been taken in the present proceeding and both before Waller, J., and in the appeal before us records of the appeals and the suit were freely referred to by either side without any objection by the opposite party. The documents in O. S. A. No. 96 of 1921 were not marked with any letters or numbers indicating the identity of the exhibit. In O. S. A. No. 58 of 1923 most of the documents were exhibited and there is also a good deal of oral evidence available.

The original Dubash agreement of 25th April, 1918, is Ex. A in that suit. The fresh agreement of 3rd November, 1918, is Ex. H. The draft of the new Dubash agreement is Ex. K. It also appears from the evidence of Arunachela Iyah in that suit that the original partnership between the Rajagopala Ayyar and Arunachela Iyah was formed for the purpose of carrying on business in connection with (1) salt and (2) military contracts (Vide deposition of Arunachela Iyah as P. W. No. 1).

Several objections were taken before Waller, J., to the validity of the award by the Umpire, but they were disallowed. In the appeal before us, Mr. Grant, the learned Counsel for the appellant, repeated all the objections. When analysed they fall into two categories. The first set relating to the jurisdiction of the Arbitrators and the Umpire and the second set relating to the alleged misconduct (legal not moral) of the Umpire. These objections will have now to be considered seriatim. On the question of the jurisdiction of the Arbitrators and the Umpire, four objections have been taken: (1) that one partner, in the absence of express authority, is not legally entitled to enter into a Dubash agreement of the kind we have in this case with a third party so as to bind his co-partners. It is, therefore, argued that the agreement of 25th

April, 1918, does not bind Arunachela Iyah and, therefore, there was no valid reference to arbitration. (2) It is said that the agreement of 25th April, 1918, was superseded by the agreement of 3rd November and as this new agreement did not contain a clause of arbitration there is no binding agreement between the parties entitling a reference to arbitration. (3) It is said that there is no dispute between the parties as all the contracts Nos. 15, 16, 18 and 19 have been performed in pursuance of the modified terms of the agreement of 3rd November, and this is alleged to have been conceded by Mr. Hartman. (4) It is said that when the order of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., in O. S. No. 601 reserved certain important questions of law for the Court, the Umpire ought not to have decided the same questions which were raised before him on the objections of Arunachela Iyah. This last point, it is said, affects the jurisdiction of the Umpire and also amounts to a misconduct on the part of the Umpire. Besides the above item of misconduct it is also argued that the Umpire is guilty of two other items of misconduct: (1) He took independent legal opinion without the knowledge and behind the back of Arunachela Iyah and (2) though he was asked to state a case to the Court on questions of law he refused to do so.

Coming now to the first of the objections above set forth, namely, that one partner cannot bind another partner by a Dubash agreement made without his consent and, therefore, there was no valid reference to arbitration, Waller, J., held that an arbitration clause is a necessary and usual part of the Dubash agreement and, therefore, that s. 251 of the Contract Act is satisfied. Arunachela Iyah filed a statement of objections on 15th January, 1923, before the Umpire. The third objection covers this point. There is a pencil note in the margin by Mr. Rae to the effect that Dubash agreements contain an arbitration clause. But there is no other formal decision on this matter in his award. The objection was taken by Arunachela Iyah not only in 1923 but from the very beginning. In the first notice of motion which he took out in August 1921 in paras. 5 and 6 of his affidavit he alleged that a written agreement was for the first time produced before him in September, 1918 and he refused to sign it and because he refused to be bound by it the fresh agreement of 3rd November, 1918, was executed. In the counter-affidavit of Mr. Hartman, para. 4 he refers to the objection of Arunachela Iyah and there is no denial of the allegation in Mr. Hartman's affidavit that Arunachela Iyah came to know of the agreement of 25th April, 1918, for the first time in September, 1918, and that he immediately refused to recognise it and sign it. One party alleged that the first agreement was dropped and, therefore, the fresh agreement of 3rd November was substituted for it, while Mr. Hartman stated in his affidavit that the first agreement was not superseded. Again in the notice of motion taken out in February, 1923, practically the same allegations were made by Arunachela Iyah in paras. 4 and 5 of his affidavit where he says that he found that the said Rajagopala Ayyar entered into contracts without his knowledge and consent and a new person should be taken as Dubash and a fresh Dubash agreement should be drawn up (para. 4 of the affidavit); that when Mr. Hartman produced in September, 1918, the agreement of 25th April, 1918, signed by Rajagopala Ayyar without his knowledge and consent he learnt of the agreement for the first time (para. 5); that he then repudiated the authority of Rajagopala Ayyar to bind him and disputed liability under the Dubash agreement (para. 6). In the counter-affidavit of Mr. Hartman the fact that Arunachela Iyah became aware of the agreement of 25th April, 1918, for the first time in September, 1918, was not denied and the fact that Arunachela Iyah demanded a fresh agreement to be drawn up in the place of the former was expressly admitted. As pointed out by my brother in his judgment, Mr. Hartman in his evidence also admitted that no enquiry was made as to the position of Arunachela Iyah when the agreement of 25th April was made. Phillips, J., when he considered the first notice of motion did not deal with this matter, but in appeal there are some expressions of opinion by Schwabe, O. J., and Wallace, J. Schwabe, O. J., said; "In my judgment the contract of November cannot supersede the old contract altogether for the simple reason that R. K. Rajagopala Ayyar was not a party to the new agreement at all. His partner Arunachela Iyah is a party but he is so on his own behalf and not on behalf of the firm. I cannot say that the old firm is a party to the new agreement and, therefore, the old agreement continues in force. Whether or not the claims made under the old contract are good claims is a matter which will be one of the chief questions which the Umpire will have to decide. All such points are open to the Umpire to decide and I want to say nothing which will in any way fetter his conduct. " As I understand this, his Lordship was of opinion that so far as Rajagopala Ayyar was concerned the agreement of 25th April, 1918, was never superseded, as Arunachela Iyah only was a party to the new agreement. He did not express any opinion on the question whether the agreement was binding on Arunachela Iyah. He left it in doubt whether the old agreement continues in force by leaving the question whether contracts under the old agreement were good claims, to the arbitrator. He has abstained from expressing any opinion on the question whether the old agreement is binding on Arunachela Iyah. In my view he has expressed no kind of final opinion on the matter now being argued. Wallace, J., also said the same thing. He said that whether the new agreement superseded the old agreement was a matter not for this Court at present to settle. Mr. Mockett for the respondent attempted to argue strenuously that Schwabe, C. J., and Wallace, J., left the matter to the Umpire. To a certain extent this is true, but they never said that the Umpire's decision is the final decision on the matter nor that it will not be open to the Court to consider it hereafter. In fact the use of the word "at present" by Wallace, J., shows that they were anxious not to consider the matter then. The point is whether a limited Tribunal such as that of an arbitrator or Umpire has any jurisdiction to decide a matter of this kind finally. That Tribunal, while it may express an opinion, cannot have the last word. If it were so, by a wrong decision it may be conferring on itself jurisdiction which it has not. It is for the Civil Court to find whether there was a proper reference to arbitration and whether the matters were validly before the Arbitrators and the Umpire. If there was no proper agreement binding on Arunachela Iyah then there was no valid reference, the reference being one sided. Section 14 of the Arbitration Act says that if the Court finds that an arbitration or award has been improperly procured the Court may set aside the award. If there is no agreement binding on Arunachela Iyah to submit to arbitration, then the arbitration procured by Messrs. Dreyfus & Co. was improperly procured. The section says that the Civil Court has to consider the matter. Mr. Mockett does not deny this, but he says that Schwabe, C. J. and Wallace, J., left it to the Umpire for his final decision. I do not find that they have done so. They left it to his temporary decision but never made him the final judge in the matter, nor could they do so. There was an appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decision of Schwabe, C. J., and Wallace, J. After the papers were printed and forwarded to England when the matter came up before the Board of the Judicial Committee none appeared for the appellant and the Board recommended to His Majesty in Council that the appeal ought to be dismissed. This was also the order of His Majesty in Council. I do not see how the dismissal of the appeal to His Majesty in Council improves or carries the matter further than the judgment of Schwabe, C. J., and Wallace, J. The result of the dismissal of the appeal was that the decision of Schwabe, C. J., and Wallace, J., remitting the award to the Umpire became final, and no question can be considered to be decided which they did not decide in their judgment. As I have already said they never decided the question whether there was an agreement binding on Arunachela Iyah and compelling him to submit to arbitration. Waller, J., for the first time considered it. Section 251 of the Contract Act says: "Each partner who does any act necessary for, or usually done in, carrying on the business of such a partnership as that of which he is a member binds his co-partners" This is practically the same as s. 5 of the Partnership Act (English Act of 1890) which says that "the acts of every partner who does any act for carrying on in the usual way business of the kind carried on by the firm of which he is a member." The test according to both the provisions is whether entering into a Dubash agreement with an arbitration clause is usual with partnerships of the kind entered into between Arunachela Iyah and Rajagopala Ayyar and not whether an arbitration clause is usual in Dubash agreements. The question is not what is usual with Dubash agreements but what is usual with partnerships like the one here. The Arbitrator, and also Waller, J., observed that an arbitration clause is usual with Dubash agreements. Though there is no evidence on the matter perhaps it is true, but this is not the test to be considered. Waller, J., has not considered whether entering into a Dubash agreement with an arbitration clause is usual with partnerships like that of Rajagopala Ayyar and brothers. There is no material on record to support the contention that it is so usual. The partnership of Rajagopala Ayyar and Brothers is like any other trading partnership of merchants in this country. I have already observed that the partnership was originally formed for salt and military contracts. It does not appear necessary to carry on this business that a Dubash agreement with an arbitration clause should be entered into, or even where the business of the partnership extended to dealing in castor seeds and groundnuts does it appear necessary to enter into Dubash agreement with an arbitration clause. This is the view taken in Russel on Arbitration 11th Edition, page 22, and Redmond on Arbitration, page 16. The leading case in England Stead v. Salt (1) was followed in Adams v. Bankhart (2). These cases have been followed in India in numerous decisions, vide Ram Bharose v. Kallu Mall (3), Datoobhoy v. Vallu (4), Mohamad Akbar v. Dwarka Nath Sarkar (5), Chandooru Punneyya v. Venu-gopala Rice Factory Co. Ltd. (6) and Venkatachellam Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty (7).

In my opinion the respondents have misunderstood the real construction of s. 251. I am unable to agree with the decision of Waller, J., as to the construction of s. 251 and on this ground I come to the conclusion that there was no agreement binding on Arunachela Iyah compelling him to submit to arbitration. But if for any reason my conclusion cannot be accepted, there is a further reason why Arunachela Iyah cannot be said to be bound to enter into an arbitration. When he mentioned in September, 1918, that he learnt of this agreement of April for the first time and refused to sign it and thereby repudiated it and suggested a fresh agreement, Messrs. Dreyfus & Co. far from saying that the old agreement bound him acted upon the suggestion and all the parties executed a fresh agreement, dated 3rd November, marked as Ex. H, in C. S. No. 102 of 1922. According to this agreement No. 1 of the old contracts was to be cancelled (cl. 4); the performance of all outstanding contracts should be extended up to February 1919 (cl. 2); two other merchants, Narayana Ayyar & Sons and Kuppaswami Ayyar should stand sureties for their fulfilment (cl. 3). No reference need be made to cl. 1. So far as the old contracts are concerned, this is as complete a new agreement as can be imagined. It was signed by Mr. Hartman on behalf of Messrs. Dreyfus & Co. by Arunachela Iyah and by the two sureties, namely, Kuppaswami Ayyar and Narayana Ayyar & Sons. It amounted to a complete dropping of the old agreement so far as Arunachela Iyah was concerned. I am not at all suggesting here that the old agreement may not continue to bind Rajagopala Ayyar and his heirs, executors and assigns. It certainly bound him and his widow but so far as Arunachela Iyah was concerned, the object of the new agreement was to enter into a new arrangement which Arunachela Iyah should not be able to repudiate. In fact, I think that entering into this agreement amounts to acceptance of Arunachela Iyah's repudiation of the agreement of 25th April, 1918. This is the view of Coutts-Trotter, J., in his judgment in C. S. No. 102 of 1922. There he said: "It is necessarily implied in this judgment that I regard the agreement of April as superseded by that of November". Then he held by reason of supersession that that suit was barred by limitation. This is a decision between the parties and, therefore, res judicata; but apart from any res judicata I agree with Coutts-Trotter, J.'s opinion that, so far as Arunachela Iyah was concerned the old agreement was dropped. His repudiation was accepted by Messrs. Dreyfus & Co., and a new agreement which he could not repudiate was brought into existence. This is of course not inconsistent with the decision of Schwabe, C. J., in the other case where he said that the old agreement was not superseded so far as Rajagopala Ayyar was concerned. The Judges in the two cases were looking at the supersession from different points of view. In my opinion so far as Arunachela Iyah is concerned, Messrs. Dreyfus & Co. found it worth while not to raise the question that the old agreement was binding on Arunachela Iyah and rather than go to litigation on the matter they accepted the repudiation and promptly entered into a new arrangement so far as he was concerned, of course they never dropped the old agreement so far as Rajagopala Ayyar and his wife were concerned and it is still kept in force. That being so, in that part of the new agreement relating to the old contracts, namely, cls. 1 to 4, there is absolutely no clause compelling Arunachela Iyah to go to arbitration. It is true that so far as the new Dubash agreement for future transaction dealt with by cls. 5 to 7 is concerned, a formal agreement was drafted and was intended to be executed (See Ex. K) and this contained an arbitration clause. But this related only to future transactions and not to past transactions. So far as past transactions are concerned it is not likely that Arunachela Iyah while complaining of the agreement of the 25th April, 1918, would have submitted to the arbitration clause. But it is not a question of likelihood. We do not find any agreement containing such a clause binding on him. The only agreement binding on him in respect of the old contracts is the agreement of 3rd November and there is no arbitration clause in it. For this reason also I think there is no agreement compelling Arunachela Iyah to submit to arbitration so as to make the proceedings before the Arbitrators and the Umpire valid proceedings. In this connection I am bound to mention one fact. After the appellant's arguments were closed, on the second day of the respondents' argument, the learned Counsel for the respondents sought to file in evidence two letters exactly like the four letters, dated 27th and 28th August relating to the four contracts now in dispute but differing from them in one respect, i. e., they were signed by Arunachela Iyah. They contained the same last sentence as in the other letters which I have already mentioned. No affidavit is filed along with this oral application. It is said that these letters are on the file of the suit C. S. No. 558 of 1924 (a suit for refund of certain monies by Rajagopala's widow) and is admitted that their existence was known for the last nine months. While I am of opinion that no case has been made out for the admission of further evidence in appeal, it also seems to me that they do not advance the case for the respondents. They only show that Arunachela Iyah knew by the date of these letters of an agreement of 25th April. These letters are dated 25th September and it is conceded on all hands that by 25th September he learnt of the existence of the agreement of 25th April. These two letters relate to the other contracts and not to the contracts now in question.

So far as the contracts now in dispute are concerned, it is impossible to spell out any ratification, assuming that Arunachela Iyah knew of the existence of the agreement of 25th April, which is not clear from the letters, nor was any ratification suggested before Waller, J. We, therefore, refuse to admit additional evidence at this stage. On the two grounds I have mentioned I am of opinion that there was no valid reference to arbitration and on this ground the appeal must succeed.

But it would be convenient to give our opinion on the further matters argued before us. The next matter argued is that there is no dispute as to whether all the contracts have been properly performed by Narayana Ayyar & Sons and Kuppewami Ayyar. Mr. Hartman in his deposition admitted that Kuppewami Ayyar has satisfied his share of the agreement but not Narayana Ayyar & Sons so far as their share was concerned. There is on the record of C. S. No. 102 of 1922 a document Ex. Y, a receipt executed by Narayana Ayyar & Sons in favour of Messrs. Dreyfus & Co. This is in final settlement of all claims on contracts between themselves and on contracts Nos. 21 and 23 (a) for 1000 tons each, or a total of 2,000 tons, relating to Rajagopala Ayyar & Sons. This document has nothing to do with the contracts now in dispute. The Counsel for the appellant wishes to infer that somehow a complete discharge was given to Narayana Ayyar & Sons even in respect of the suit contracts. Here I may observe that though cl. 3 of the agreement apportions the shares of Narayana Ayyar & Sons and Kuppewami Ayyar as half and half, it is not strictly half and half. Kuppewami Ayyar's contract related to 900 tons and Narayana Ayyar's related to about 1,220 tons. A portion of contract No. 15 (his portion) was performed leaving a small part relating to 27 tons unperformed, but the other three contracts remained totally unfulfilled. On this part of the case, therefore, I agree entirely with the contention of the respondents that there was no concession by Mr. Hartman that these contracts were duly fulfilled. This point must, therefore, be decided against the appellant.

The next question raised is that the Umpire had no jurisdiction to consider the questions of law arising in the case because in C. S. No. 60 of 1922 Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., passed an order reserving questions of law to be considered by the Court. In support of this contention the case of Doleman v. Ossett Corporation (8), was relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellant. In that case a suit was filed, though there was an outstanding agreement to refer to arbitration. The defendants did not apply for stay of proceedings. Subsequently an award was made purporting to decide matters which were the subject of the action and then the defendants pleaded that the award was a bar to the plaintiff's suit. Fletcher Moulton and Farwell, L. J.J., held that, after the suit was filed if the defendants failed to apply for stay the arbitrators became functus officio. Fletcher Moulton, L. J.'s reasons are given at length at page 269*. The whole reasoning is based on the ground that once the Court has seisin of the dispute the jurisdiction of the arbitrators to hear and decide matters of the action is ousted. At page 271* it was observed: "There is a complete breach of that (arbitration) clause so far as that particular dispute is concerned..... the Court has the sole and exclusive jurisdiction to decide the dispute". At page 272* also it was observed "there was a complete breach of the obligation of the contract so far as the disputes in question are concerned". The subject-matter of C. S. No. 60 of 1922 and the subject-matter of the arbitration are different. Therefore, I do not think that the jurisdiction of the arbitrator was ousted on this ground. This point also must, therefore, be decided against the appellant.

I now come to the items of misconduct. The first ground urged is practically identical with the point last considered. It is contended that even if the jurisdiction of the Arbitrators is not ousted, at any rate it is misconduct on the part of the Umpire to proceed to consider questions of law after the order of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J.. The order of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., was certainly brought to the notice of the Umpire. This was referred to in objections Nos. 15, 16 and 17 of Arunachela Iyah before Mr. Rao. However much it might have been prudent for the Umpire to have reserved such questions, I do not think it can be said to be a misconduct if he did not think fit to do so for the reasons I have already given, namely, that the subject-matters are different. This items of legal misconduct, therefore, fails.

The next item of misconduct relied on is that the Umpire ought to have stated a case to the Court on questions of law. This was raised in para. 18 of the objections of Arunachela Iyah. The appellant's Counsel relies on In re Palmer and Hosken (9). Section 10 of the Indian Act while giving power to the arbitrators to state a special case for the opinion of the Court differs in this respect from the English Act. Section 19 of the English Act makes it obligatory on the part of the arbitrator to state a special case if directed by the Court. It has been held that this section impliedly confers on a party to the arbitration the right to apply to the Court for such an order. See In re Palmer and Hosken (9). But this is wanting in the Indian Act. Mr. Krishanaswami Ayyangar replying on this part of the case strenuously contended that this is all the greater reason why it should be held that the Umpire's refusal to state a case should be held to be a misconduct, as it involves an erroneous exercise of his discretion. He contends that whereas in England there is an immediate remedy available to the party so that a perverse refusal may be corrected, in India there is no such remedy, and it ought, therefore, to be held to be a misconduct, a fortiori especially when a Judge of the High Court thought that the questions ought to be reserved for the consideration of the Court. There is some force in this argument. Still, on the language of the Indian Act I am unable to agree with the appellant's contention whatever hardship my conclusion may entail upon parties to arbitration. I, therefore, decide this point also against the appellant.

The next item of misconduct relied on is that the arbitrator has taken independent legal opinion. It is conceded before us by both sides that until the award of Mr. Rae was delivered which states "after taking independent legal opinion having decided that the alleged agreement, dated the 3rd November, 1918 at no time constituted a concluded contract....." it was not known to either party that such independent opinion was taken by Mr. Rae. The appellant's Counsel relied on Russel on Arbitration, 10th Edition, page 404. It is there pointed out that a lawyer Arbitrator may discuss a question of law with a legal friend, but in the case of layman, advice should not be obtained in the absence of the parties unless both parties agree that the arbitrator should so inform their mind. The respondents' Counsel relied on several English cases which it is unnecessary to refer to at length. His contention is that unless the arbitrator substitutes the opinion of another for his own, consulting another does not amount to a misconduct; for example see Ellison v. Bray (10). But on the other hand, Lord Denman, C. J., in Dobson v. Groves (11) observes at page 243*, "The proceeding is quite different from that of consulting a legal friend on the framing of the award; that is legitimate: but here the conference is on something to be done by the consulting party, as arbitrator, on the matters referred: it turns upon a point in the cause on which a bias may be given to his mind without the possibility of its being removed". At page 244* he again observes: "When once the case is brought within the general principle by a possibility that the arbitrator's mind may have been biased, there is a sufficient objection." The same view was taken by Sir John Edge in Daya Kishen v. Dharam Das (12). Relying on these cases, I hold that there has been legal misconduct on the part of the Umpire in taking independent opinion on the question whether the agreement of 3rd November was a concluded agreement or whether it superseded the earlier agreement so far as Arunachela Iyah is concerned. On this ground also I would set aside the award.

In the result I would allow the appeal reversing the decision of Waller, J., and set aside the award on the ground that the Umpire had no jurisdiction and is also guilty of misconduct (legal).

There is one other point to which I should now refer. The learned Counsel for the respondents argued that this appeal is not competent because Waller, J.'s order while dismissing the notice of motion does not direct that the award should be filed. Waller, J.'s order was passed on 6th May, 1926. The present appeal was filed on 19th July the re-opening day of the High Court after vacation. Sometime after the appeal was filed, an order was passed by Srinivasa Ayyangar, J., directing the award to be filed. The respondents contend that an appeal should have been filed against that order. I think the order of Srinivasa Ayyangar, J., was passed under some misconception. Section 15 of the Act says: "An award on a submission, on being filed in the Court in accordance with the foregoing provisions, shall (unless the Court remits it to the re-consideration of the Arbitrators or Umpire, or sets it aside) be enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court." No order directing that the award should be filed is necessary. Under the Civil Procedure Code the matter is different. The person who wants to convert an award into a decree of Court has to apply for an order that it should be filed, and after notice and hearing the objections of the opposite side such an order has to be made. Here no such order is necessary. Therefore, the moment Waller, J., disallowed the notice of motion of Arunachela Iyah the award became a decree of Court and he is perfectly justified in appealing. The objection, of course, is purely technical and it amounts to this, that the appeal is filed a little too soon and not a little too late. But, even if my view is not correct, the order of Waller, J., amounts to a preliminary order and the order of Srinivasa Ayyangar, J. amounts to a final order. It has always been held in this Court that an appeal against a preliminary order if allowed makes an appeal against the final order on the same grounds unnecessary, though another appeal may have to be filed if it has reference to what happened after the preliminary order was passed,

See Ramien v. Veerappudian (13). Either way there is no substance in this objection and it is overruled. The objection is in the nature of a preliminary objection but was not taken in that form; otherwise I ought to have dealt with it in the opening part of my judgment, but the matter is of no importance in the view I take. The appellant will have his costs. We certify for two Counsel taxed costs on both sides.

Cornish, J.—I agree that this appeal should be allowed. The question is whether the arbitration clause of the April 25th, 1918, agreement remained enforceable after the conclusion of the 3rd November, 1918. Memorandum of agreement must, in my opinion, be regarded as determined by the finding of Couts-Trotter, J., in O. S. No. 102 of 1922 between the parties to this appeal.

It was an issue in that suit, "was the agreement, dated the 25th April, 1918, superseded by an agreement dated 3rd November, 1918"? And the learned Judge found that the November agreement did supersede the April agreement. The word "supersede" is ambiguous, but it is clear from the judgment that what is meant is that the November agreement was substituted for the April agreement, and was not merely supplementary to the April agreement. Against this finding there are the opinions expressed by Phillips, J., and by Schwabe, O. J., and Wallace, J., in an earlier phase of the litigation which has sprung from this April agreement. In those proceedings, which were taken to set aside the award, Phillips, J., in setting aside the award on the ground of legal misconduct on the part of the Umpire, doubted if the April agreement was superseded by the November agreement; but he declined to decide the question as all the facts were not before him. On appeal Schwabe, O. J., and Wallace, J., set aside Phillips, J.'s order, and remitted the matter to the Umpire. But the learned Judges of the Appellate Court did not profess to decide the question whether the November agreement superseded the April agreement. Indeed Wallace, J., in his judgment says that the occasion had not then arisen for deciding it. And when Schwabe, O. J., expressed the opinion that the old agreement was not "altogether" superseded by the November agreement, it appears to me that he meant to indicate that the April agreement would be binding on the parties to it, notwithstanding that it might have been superseded by the November agreement so far as the appellant was concerned. There is no inconsistency between that opinion and the subsequent finding in O. S. No. 102 of 1922.

On the second question it has, in my view, been established that when Rajagopala Ayyar entered into the Dubash agreement of the 25th April, 1918, he had no authority to bind his partner, the appellant, by the arbitration clause, cl. 15 of the agreement. Admittedly, the agreement was signed by Rajagopala Ayyar alone at Karachi. And though the agreement was expressed as made on behalf of the Firm of Rajagopala Ayyar and Brother, consisting of Rajagopala Ayyar and the appellant, nobody in the respondent Company apparently made any enquiry whether Rajagopala Ayyar had authority to bind the firm. Mr. Hartman who was at Karachi when the agreement was signed, and who came down to Madras to manage the respondents' branch office there, brought the agreement with him, but in his evidence in O. S. No. 102 of 1922 he said that he did not make any enquiry into this matter.

The appellant's evidence in O. S. No. 102 of 1922 is that Rajagopala Ayyar entered into the agreement without his knowledge or consent, and that he did not know the terms of the agreement until he was shown it by Mr. Hartman on the 7th September, 1918, at Madras. This statement of the appellant, repeated in his grounds of objections to the arbitration, and in his affidavit in support of his motion to set aside the final award, has never, as far as I can discover, been contradicted; and I see no reason for disbelieving it.

Now, it is clear that a partner in a trading concern, such as the partnership between Rajagopala Ayyar and the appellant has been shown to be, has no power in the absence of authority to bind the firm by a submission to arbitration: see Stead v. Salt (1), Ram Bharose v. Kallu Mal (3), Datoobhoy v. Vallu (4). The Umpire, however, has apparently inferred an implied authority from the practice of including an arbitration clause in Dubash agreements. He has noted against para. 3 of the appellant's statement of objections (where the appellant objected that Rajagopala Ayyar had no authority to agree to refer my matter in dispute to arbitration), the following remark—"All Dubash agreements contain arbitration clause". It may be that it is usual in agreements between merchants and their Dubashes to include an arbitration clause. But assuming it to be so, that would not make Rajagopala Ayyar's act in agreeing to cl. 15" an act (to use the words of s. 251, Indian Contract Act) usually done in carrying on the business of such a partnership"—that is, the particular partnership which was existing between Rajagopala Ayyar and the appellant. But it has been contended for the respondents that the appellant's conduct shows that he had accepted and acquiesced in the terms of the agreement. Exhibits B and C show that the appellant was on August 24th and 25th taking a part in respect of certain contracts made by Rajagopala Ayyar in pursuance of the Dubash agreement. It is not disputed that the appellant provided the Rs. 20,000, the amount of the deposit required of the Dubashes by cl. 12 of the agreement. The appellant says he paid this money before he was shown the agreement by Mr. Hartman on the 7th September, 1918, though the payment was made after his first interview with Mr. Hartman at Pondicherry in August. The appellant has also stated that he knew nothing of the business relations between Rajagopala Ayyar and the respondents until August, 1918, when he was introduced to Mr. Hartman at Pondicherry. At the last moment of the hearing of this appeal, copies of two letters addressed to the respondents, and signed by the appellant, have been produced. These letters relate to the purchase of ground-nuts (Nos. 22 and 23 in the list of contracts furnished to us) and are dated 24th and 25th September, 1918, and they state "conditions as per agreement with you dated 25th April, 1918." It is by no means a necessary implication from the fact of the appellant having undertaken the liability of contracts made in pursuance of the April agreement, that he must be taken to have accepted the arbitration clause of that agreement. The appellant has sworn that when he first met Mr. Hartman at Pondicherry in August, 1918 he objected to the contracts which Rajagopala Ayyar had made with one V. T. Narayanaswami and warned

(13) 14 Ind. Cas. 294; 37 M. 455 at p. 458; 11 M. L. T. 69; 22 M. L. J. 217; (1912) M. W. N. 117 & 530.

Mr. Hartman that V. T. Narayanaswami was not a satisfactory customer; and that it was during his second interview with Mr. Hartman at Madras, when he again disputed the V. T. N. contracts, that Mr. Hartman showed him the terms of the agreement. The appellant has further sworn that Mr. Hartman when he showed him the agreement asked him to sign it, and that he told Mr. Hartman that he would not sign it because the terms were so hard and unworkable. Mr. Hartman admits that the appellant warned him that V. T. Narayanaswami was an unsatisfactory person, with whom to have dealings; further, he does not dispute that he showed the appellant the agreement at the interview in Madras, but he says that he does not think that he asked the appellant to sign it. Then we come to Ex. F, the appellant's letter to the respondents, dated 25th September, 1918, requesting some relief from the losses which had been incurred over the V. T. N. contracts and suggesting that Rajagopala Ayyar should be replaced by a more competent business man. This letter was the starting point for negotiations which terminated in the memorandum of agreement, dated 3rd November, 1918. It is remarkable that at no stage of these negotiations was there any suggestion by the respondents of invoking cl. 15 of the April agreement to decide the question of the appellant's liability or the extent of his liability for the contracts. Too much stress should not be laid on this point; but it does seem to me to support the position that the appellant's objections to the terms of the agreement had made it a matter of doubt for the respondents whether he has consented to be bound by the arbitration clause of the April agreement. The appellant's letter of the 25th September gave the respondents the opportunity of putting that question to the test. Instead, they proceeded as if the agreement had contained no such thing as any arbitration clause. In the circumstances I do not think, on the evidence before us that we should be justified in holding that the appellant had adopted or ratified cl. 15 of the agreement. Assuming, therefore, that we are wrong in holding that the April agreement has been rescinded by the November agreement, I am of opinion for the foregoing reasons, that cl. 15 of the April agreement was not enforceable against the appellant, and that the award must, so far as he is concerned, be set aside.

It is now necessary to consider the appellant's contention that the award should be set aside on account of the Umpire's alleged legal misconduct. This allegation is based on two principal grounds: first, that the Umpire refused to state a case for the opinion of the Court when required by the appellant so to do; and, second, that the Umpire (as admitted in his award) took "an independent legal opinion" on the questions submitted to his arbitration without notice to or the knowledge of the appellant. With regard to the first of these grounds reliance has been placed on s. 10, Indian Arbitration Act, 1899 which provides that an "Umpire acting under a submission shall, unless a different intention is expressed therein,—

(b) have power to state a special case for the opinion of the Court on any question of law involved."

This section is taken from s. 7 of the English Arbitration Act of 1889, and under that section the arbitrator's powers are permissive and not obligatory. (See Russell on Arbitration, 11th Edition, page 55). There is not in the Indian Act a provision corresponding to s. 19 of the English Arbitration Act of 1889 which enables the Court, at the instance of a party to direct the Umpire to state a case. But it has been argued that inasmuch as s. 10 gives the Umpire a discretionary power to state a case, he is under a duty to exercise that power judicially and reasonably, and that if he fails in this duty he is guilty of misconduct so as to attract the power of the Court under s. 14 of the Act to set aside the award. It so happens that in a suit O. S. No. 601 of 1922 brought by the widow of Rajagopala Ayyar against the respondents, Kumaraswami Sastriar, J. had directed that the questions of fact in that particular dispute should not be decided by the arbitrator until the questions of law, one of which was an issue on the binding character of the arbitration clause in the April agreement, had been decided by the Court. The appellant called the Umpire's attention to this direction. I certainly think that the Umpire would, in the circumstances, have been well-advised to have stated a case. But s. 10 left it to his discretion, and I do not think that because the Umpire refused to do what a more cautious person might have done, or because he failed to appreciate the relevance of the Court's direction in O. S. No. 601 to the matter before him, he can be held guilty of misconduct. On the second ground I think it must be held, on the authority of Dobson v. Groves (11), that the Umpire was guilty of legal misconduct in taking "an independent legal opinion", without the knowledge of the parties. In this case, as in that, the Umpire's honesty of purpose is beyond question. But he did something (to quote from Lord Denman's judgment) "upon the subject of the reference that may have improperly biased his mind, without a possibility of its being removed by any explanation which might have been afforded, if the other side had been called upon to take a part in the proceedings." The principle is, that it is incumbent on an arbitrator who takes legal or other expert advice, which may influence his determination of the matter submitted to him for arbitration, to inform the parties of his intention to do so and of the question upon which the advice is taken. Otherwise the parties have no assurance that the advice is material, or given on a correct statement of the case, or that the arbitrator has not, in effect, simply surrendered his responsibility for deciding the question in arbitration to the opinion of his legal or other adviser. For this reason, and assuming that the award is binding on the appellant, I hold that the award should be set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (20)—Civil Rules of Practice (Mad.), r. 4 (11)—"Signed" in reference to vakalats and affidavits, whether includes "stamped."

By virtue of s. 2 (20) of the Civil Procedure Code and r. 4 (11) of the Civil Rules of Practice (Mad.) in the case of affidavits and vakalats the use of a stamp bearing the name of the party is sufficient even where the party is able to sign. There is no difference in this respect between pleadings and affidavits, and vakalats.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Paramakudi, dated the 11th August, 1925, in S. C. S. No. 104 of 1922, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Manamadurai.

Mr. S. Sundaraja Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—Having regard to the definition of the word 'signed' in s. 2 (cl. 20) of the Civil Procedure Code and to the fact that under r. 4 (11) of the Civil Rules of Practice, the same definition has to be applied in the case of affidavits and vakalats, we think that the use of a stamp bearing the name of the party is sufficient even in cases where he is able to sign. Even under the old Code of Civil Procedure of 1877 it was held in the Maharaja of Benares v. Debi Dayal Noma (1) that inability to sign was not necessary in order to enable a person to use a stamp. The definition of 'signed' in the present Code is to the effect that except in cases of judgments or decrees 'signed' includes stamped. There is nothing to show that any difference can be drawn between vakalats and affidavits and pleadings. We set aside the order of the District Munsif and direct him to receive and file the papers returned if they are otherwise in order.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908). O. XXII, r. 3, O. XXXIV, r. 1—Suit on mortgage—Death of mortgagee—Some of several legal representatives not brought on record—Suit, whether abates in part—Decree for entire amount, legality of—Questions inter se between legal representatives of deceased mortgagee, whether can be gone into.

Where on the death of a plaintiff, no legal representative is brought on the record, the suit would abate; but where some only of several legal representatives come on the record and they contend that some other persons are not legal representatives, even though their contention may be found to be untrue, that would not make the whole or any portion of the suit abate in favour of the defendants. [p. 806, col. 1.]

Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (1), followed.

Where a mortgagee brings a suit on the mortgage for the whole amount due, the mere fact that on the death of the mortgagee one of the legal representatives of the mortgagee is not brought on the record within the time prescribed, would not entitle the mortgagors to contend that the suit abates as regards his share. The legal representatives who are on record would represent all who are entitled to share in the estate of the deceased and are entitled to a decree for the whole amount. [p. 806, col. 2.]

In a mortgage suit it is unnecessary to go into the question which may arise between the legal representatives of a deceased mortgagee as to whether some of them or all of them are entitled to the whole of the interest of the deceased mortgagee. [p. 806, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 109 of 1923.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Ayyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the appellants. The suit is on a mortgage against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the mortgagors and other defendants. The Subordinate Judge has given a decree for the full amount in favour of respondents Nos. 1 and 2. The mortgagee was the father of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 who died pending the suit. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 sought to be made legal representatives on the ground that they and their father were undivided and defendant No. 5 their brother was divided from his father. Notice of this was given to defendant No. 5 who was already a party to the suit as he had acquired some right under Ex. II. He did not contest the application though he appeared by a Vakil. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were made legal representatives of plaintiff No. 1 and they proceeded with the suit. The District Munsif gave a decree for two-thirds of the mortgage amount. On appeal the Subordinate Judge has given a decree for the full amount. Two points are raised before me by Mr. Bhashyam for the appellant. The first point is that the suit has abated as regards the defendant No. 5's share. It is difficult to appreciate this contention. Under O. XXII, r. 3, the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff or the sole surviving plaintiff should apply to be made parties to the action, and if they do not come in within the time allowed, the suit would abate. In this case plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 did make an application within the time as the legal representatives of plaintiff No. 1 and defendant No. 5 who was on the record, was given notice of the application. If one of the legal representatives does not choose to be brought on the record as the representative of a deceased plaintiff his share in the suit does not thereby abate. If no legal representative is brought on the record, no doubt, the suit would abate but where some legal representatives come on the record and they contend that some other persons are not legal representatives, even though their contention may be found to be untrue, that would not make the whole of the suit or any portion of the suit abate in favour of the defendants. This is very clear on principle and I may refer in this connection to Kadir Mohideen Marrakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (1), where this point was decided.

The next point raised is that the suit must be dismissed because plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 state that defendant No. 5 was not a legal representative and that the statement is found to be untrue. The Subordinate Judge very properly left the contest between plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 and defendant No. 5 to be brought out in a future proceeding. In a mortgage suit it is unnecessary to go into the question which may arise between the legal representatives of a deceased plaintiff as to whether some of them or all of them are entitled to the whole of the interest of the deceased plaintiff. Mr. Bhashyam's argument is that this should not have been done, but on the finding that defendant No. 5 is also interested in the decree amount, the suit should have been dismissed because he was not brought on the record as plaintiff in time. This argument overlooks the fact that defendant No. 5 was on record on the date of plaintiff No. 1's death and he was given notice by plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 when they made an application to be brought on the record as the legal representatives of their deceased father. The cases in Sunitabala Debi v.

Dara Sundari Debi (2) and Sakhiuddin Saha v. Sonaula Sarkar (3) have no application to the present case. Where there are two or more mortgagees who are tenants-in-common, one mortgagee cannot bring a suit without making the other mortgagees parties to the action. If they do not wish to join as plaintiffs, they should be made defendants but if any of the mortgagees have parted with their rights in favour of the mortgagors, a decree should be given only in respect of the portion outstanding against the mortgagors. But where as in this case the mortgagee himself brings a suit on the mortgage for the whole amount, the mere fact that one legal representative of the mortgagee is not brought on the record, let us say for argument's sake, within the time prescribed would not entitle the mortgagors to contend that the suit abates as regards his share and a decree should not be given for the whole of the amount in favour of persons who are brought on the record as legal representatives. This argument seems to me to be on the face of it untenable. The legal representatives who are on record represent all who are entitled to share in the estate of the deceased plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge is perfectly justified in making the order he made and the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Odgers, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Jackson, dated the 22nd February, 1927, refusing to transfer the suit of the plaintiff, Hajee Tar Mahomed Ayoob Sait from the City Civil Court to the Court of the District Munsif of Vellore. Hajee Tar Mahomed and the defendant in the City Civil Court suit, O. T. Narasa Reddi, did business together and the City Civil Court suit alleges that the defendant owes the plaintiff a sum of about Rs. 1,300. Subsequently O. T. Narasa Reddi filed a suit in the Vellore Court against Hajee Tar Mahomed Ayoob Sait alleging that, on the other hand, a sum of about Rs. 700 was due to himself. Narasa Reddi moved the High Court to transfer the City Civil Court suit to the Vellore Court. This was refused and the matter now comes before us on Letters Patent Appeal. Now the question is whether this is a matter within the purview of the Full Bench case in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1). This case has recently been considered and its meaning expressed by the present Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Ramesam in the Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramalingappa (2). The present learned Chief Justice recognised that the question is a difficult one and adopts the language of Sir Arnold White i. e., "If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the nature of the application in which it is made is, to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause". And later the learned Chief Justice observes that: "if the effect of the order is to allow the proceedings to go on, it is impossible to say that it satisfies the test laid down by Sir Arnold White in the Full Bench case." Now on the objection that no Letters Patent Appeal lies, it appears to me that applying this principle matters are left exactly as they were and that it is that which distinguishes this case from the case in Krishna Reddy v. Thanickachala Mudali (3) (Sir Walter Schwabe and Mr. Justice Ramesam) which is a case similar in this way, namely, that the order of a Judge is there said to be a judgment within cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and therefore appealable, and this is put on the ground that in that case the Judge by his order put an end to the case as it stood in Chingleput and conferred jurisdiction on this Court in respect of that particular case. It seems to me that the case before us is different and that the order of the learned Judge does not put an end to any of the rights of the parties and the effect of the order now appealed from is to allow the proceedings to go on. I, therefore, think that on this ground it must be held that the Letters Patent Appeal so far as the order refusing to transfer is concerned does not lie and the party has no right to have the case transferred. The Letters Patent Appeal is dismissed with costs.

The C. M. P. No. 1033 of 1927 is also dismissed but without costs.

Curgenvven, J.—I agree. It may be conceded that an order transferring a suit would amount to a judgment within cl. 15 of the Letters Patent on the ground explained by Sir Walter Schwabe, Chief Justice, in Krishna Reddy v. Thanickachala Mudali (3), namely, that it terminates the case in one Court and creates a jurisdiction in the other to try it. The learned Chief Justice's view was based primarily upon the construction put upon the word 'judgment' in the Full Bench case, Tulja- ram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (1), and applying that construction it seems to me that the nature of the order now under consideration was not put to an end to any right which the party enjoyed to have the suit transferred because in fact he had no such right, but that it was simply to leave matters as they were before the application was made. In Asher v. Gopalaratnam (4), Kumaraswami Sastri, J., considered the effect of certain orders refusing to grant various prayers, such as for the issue of a commission, the raising of an issue, or to amend the pleadings, and in the actual matter before him, which was a refusal of an application to grant inspection, he held that it would come within the same category and so would be unappealable, basing his judgment upon the test propounded in the Full Bench case. Similarly in Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramalingappa (2) the present learned Chief Justice applying the same definition, concluded that if the effect of the order in question is to allow the proceedings to go on as before it does not amount to a judgment within the clause. I think the order in this case answers to the same test and accordingly that it is not appealable. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. The civil miscellaneous petition also will be dismissed but without costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Mortgage-deed—Provision for cash payments to be endorsed—Lease by mortgagor to mortgagee—Varthamanam by mortgagee providing for appropriation of lease amount in partial discharge of mortgage—Varthamanam, admissibility of, in evidence, without registration—Variation of terms of mortgage-deed—Mortgage—Sub-mortgage—Sub-mortgage takes subject to state of accounts between mortgagee and mortgagor.

Properties held by a lessee were hypothecated by the lessor to the lessee under a deed which contained the following recital:—"Unless credit entry is made herein in respect of payments of amounts which may be made on account of this bond, a statement (plea) that they have been made otherwise is not sustainable." On the same day the lessee executed a varthamanam by which he undertook to pay out of the rents Rs. 200 to charity and to credit the balance towards the hypothecation bond. In a suit by the mortgagor for accounts:

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, dated the 7th October, 1926, in A. S. No. 41 of 1926. (A. S. No. 13 of 1926 on the file of the District Court, West Tanjore) preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvadi, in O. S. No. 238 of 1924.

Messrs. S. Varadachari and Rajagopalan, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Rangachari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in A. S. No. 13 of 1926 remanding O. S. No. 238 of 1924 to the District Munsif, Tiruvadi, for disposal according to law.

Fourth defendant is the appellant. The plaintiffs-respondents are the owners of properties described in schedules A and B of the plaint. On 19th October, 1917, they leased the properties in schedule A to the 1st defendant for seven years from 7th July, 1918, on a rent of Rs. 600 per annum (See Ex. D) and also executed a mortgage to him for Rs. 1,525 hypothecating the B schedule properties (See Ex. B, dated 21st November, 1918). Exhibit B contained the following recital:—"Unless credit entry is made here in respect of payments of amounts which may be made on account of this bond, a statement (plea) that they have been made otherwise is not sustainable. On the same date as Ex. B the 1st defendant executed a varthamanam (Ex. C) to the plaintiffs agreeing to pay Rs. 200 out of the rents for a certain charity, to pay also the cist and to credit the balance of the rents towards the hypothecation bond. The plaintiffs alleged that the 1st defendant failed to pay Rs. 200 for the conduct of the charity and the assessment due in respect of the lands and that by crediting the rents as provided for in Ex. C towards the mortgage-bond, the bond was fully discharged. On these grounds they instituted the O. S. No. 238 of 1924 for taking accounts in respect of the lease and the mortgage-bond, for the recovery of the bond duly cancelled as having been discharged and also for the balance of rent that may be found due by the 1st defendant after setting off the amount of the mortgage-bond towards the rent. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were added as parties as they had got a sub-mortgage over the properties. Without going into the merits of the case, the learned District Munsif held that the varthamanam Ex. C is inadmissible in evidence, that it is not binding on defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and that the suit as framed was not sustainable in law. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On all these points the learned Subordinate Judge differed from the District Munsif and in the result, remanded the suit for disposal according to law.

The points arising for decision are (1) whether the agreement Ex. C is inadmissible in evidence and (2) whether it is binding on defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

Point No. 1.—Exhibit C is an unregistered document and it provides for the payment of the mortgage-debt. The material portion of it is as follows:—“.....out of the lease amount of Rs. 600 payable by me to you every year I shall pay annually Rs. 200 for the charity and the cist due on the lands and the balance towards the discharge of the mortgage-debt.....” It is argued that Ex. C is inadmissible in evidence under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act and also under s. 17, cl. (b) of the Indian Registration Act. With reference to s. 92, the argument is that the provision made in Ex. C for the payment of the mortgage-debt is in variation of the express terms as regards payment contained in Ex. B, the mortgage-bond.

We cannot accept this argument. We do not think that this is a case to which s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act could apply. In the first place, Ex. C is not an oral agreement. It is a written agreement, and further, it cannot be said to be a variation of Ex. B at all. The recital in Ex. B, which we have already extracted, is to the effect that if actual cash payments towards the discharge of the mortgage-debt are made, only those payments endorsed on the bond will be accepted as true payments. This does not by any means prevent the parties from making provision for another method of discharging the mortgage-debt. The mortgage document Ex. B does not state that the discharge of the debt can be made only by making cash payments. If it did contain a statement to that effect, then the provision in Ex. C would be a variation of such a recital. Exhibit C was executed on the same date as Ex. B. If the parties had intended actual cash payments to be the only method of discharge as is now contended for on behalf of the appellants, then they would not have, with that provision in mind, executed on the same date the varthamanam which provides for a different method of discharge. Even apart from this consideration, construing the terms of Exs. B and C, we have no doubt that Ex. C cannot be said to be a variation of Ex. B. The argument that Ex. C is inadmissible under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act must, therefore, be rejected.

We should also reject the argument that Ex. C is inadmissible in evidence as it is unregistered and as it purports to extinguish the mortgage-bond Ex. B. There is nothing in the document to show that the mortgage was actually extinguished by it. As pointed out in Neelamani Patnaik Mussadi v. Sukaduva Behara (1): “There is a clear distinction between a discharge of a debt and the extinguishment of mortgage interest, though one may be the result of the other. Where a receipt, in terms, only discharges the debt, it cannot be brought under s. 17 (b) of the Registration Act.” In view of this reasoning, as Ex. C only provides for the discharge of the mortgage-debt, we think it need not be registered.

Point No. 2.—The next point for consideration is whether Ex. C is binding

upon defendants Nos. 2 to 4, the sub-mortgagees. The law is well-settled that "where a mortgage is transferred without the privity of the mortgagor the transferee takes subject to the state of account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the date of transfer." [See Dixon v. Winch (2)]. Dr. Ghose in his book on Mortgages, Vol. I, page 353, thus summarises the result of the English decisions on this point: "an assignee of a mortgage is bound to give credit for all moneys received by his assignor, and if he takes a transfer without enquiring from the mortgagor, he does so at his own risk as regards the state of account." [See Mathews Wallwyn (3), Parker v. Clarke (4) and Turner v. Smith (5)]. See also Neelamani Patnaik Mussadi v. Sukaduva Behara (1). The rule is the same whether the assignment is by way of transfer of the original mortgage or by way of sub-mortgage, see Ashburner on Mortgages, page 441, and the cases cited therein. In this case the plaintiffs, the mortgagors were not consulted by the sub-mortgagees before they accepted the sub-mortgage. If they had done so, they would have known about Ex. C and the arrangement contained in the discharge of the mortgage-debt in that document. "A transferee who does not inquire of the mortgagor as to the state of account between the mortgagor and the transferor cannot retain his security as against the mortgagor if in fact the mortgagor has paid off the transferor." Turner v. Smith (5). Whatever is equivalent to payment as between mortgagor and mortgagee is good as against the assignee. The decision in Dixon v. Winch (2) was relied on by the appellant in support of his argument that the sub-mortgagees in this case are not bound by Ex. C. In that case it was held that the payment of the mortgage-debt to the mortgagee was not effectual as against the transferee and that the mortgage must be treated as still subsisting in favour of transferee because the Court of Appeal found from the circumstances of the case which showed that the mortgagor and the mortgagee were parties to a deliberate fraud, that the mortgagor must be treated as having had notice of the transfer of the mortgage. That decision is, therefore, inapplicable to the facts of the present case. It is not suggested in this case that the mortgagor had any notice of the transfer by the 1st defendant of the sub-mortgage executed in favour of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. In these circumstances we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that Ex. C is binding on defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The case, therefore, must be tried on the merits.

The lower Court's decree reversing the decision of the District Munsif and remanding the suit for disposal according to law by the District Munsif is right and this civil miscellaneous appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Ayyar and P. S. Chandrasekara Ayyar, for the Respondents,

JUDGMENT.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—Plaintiff is the appellant. The plaintiff's father had dealings with defendants Nos. 1 to 4 who are Muhammadan merchants who carried on business in 1914 and 1915 in Colombo. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 by their agents and the 3rd defendant personally executed a bond in favour of the plaintiff's father for Rs. 75,000 on the 29th of September, 1914, and also created a sub-mortgage in respect of a mortgage document executed in their favour by third persons. The plaintiff's father filed Suit No. 41867 of 1915, in the District Court in Colombo on the 25th of May, 1915, and obtained an ex parte decree on the 18th of June, 1915, which is filed as Ex. A in this case. The decree states that the defendants did not appear either in person or by Proctor or by Counsel although duly served with summons. The property which was sub-mortgaged was sold in execution on the 10th of January, 1916, and was purchased by the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 100 and finding that he could not obtain anything more by execution in the Colombo Court, the plaintiff (his father having died) meanwhile filed a suit in the Sub-Court of Tanjore on the foreign judgment and prayed for a decree for Rs. 56,765-4-11 the balance due under the judgment and decree of the Colombo Court. Various pleas were raised but it is only necessary to consider the plea that no suit would lie on the judgment of the Colombo Court as that judgment was not on merits. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit.

It is argued by Mr. Raja Ayyar for the appellant that the proceedings of the Colombo Court show that the decree was not ex parte but was on the merits, that the decree though passed without examination of witnesses was really on the merits, that even if it were not so he was entitled in this suit to prove his claim and that it was on the defendants to show that the plaintiff's claim in respect of the amount which he sues to recover is unfounded. So far as the first point is concerned, it is clear that the suit was not decided on its merits. The procedure in the District Court of Colombo is that where no defence is entered, an affidavit of service is filed and judgment follows. In the present case the defendants though served did not enter appearance or file any written statement. Thereupon the plaintiff filed an affidavit of service and a decree followed as a matter of course. Reference was made to Ex. D a certified copy of processes and their returns in Suit No. 4186 of 1915, on the Colombo District Court but there is nothing there to show that any evidence was recorded or that the Court went into the merits though the defendants were ex parte. All that appears from Ex. D is that when the case came on on the 9th June, it was called and the defendants who were said to be served were absent and that an ex parte trial was fixed for the 18th of June. On the 18th of June, the case was called and an affidavit of service was filed. On the 16th of July, a decree nisi was passed and on the 20th of July, the case was called, the defendants were absent and a decree absolute was made. Under the rules an affidavit of service had to be filed and the affidavit filed on the 18th of June, was simply an affidavit of service. No evidence was recorded as regards the merits of the claim. In fact as was pointed out before, the decree which was passed states that the defendants did not appear. There can be little doubt that the decree was not on the merits but was an ex parte decree.

The next question is whether a decree could be passed on the foreign judgment. Section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code enacts that a foreign judgment shall be conclusive as to any matter thereby directly adjudicated upon between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title except in the cases mentioned in cls. (a) to (f) of the section. The clause which is material in the present case is cl. (b) which refers to judgments not given on the merits of the case. The argument of Mr. Rajah Ayyar is that if it was given on the merits, it would be conclusive and would operate as res judicata but that if it was not on the merits the parties would be at liberty to proceed as if the case was open, the plaintiff adducing evidence in support of his claim and the defendants raising defence that the trial should proceed as if it was an ordinary suit. I am unable to accede to this contention which is opposed to all the authorities. I think the matter is concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Keymer v. Viswanatham Reddiar (1). This was a case where a suit was filed in England by Keymer against Viswanatham Reddi claiming a sum of money due on certain bills drawn. Defence was entered. The plaintiff obtained leave to administer certain interrogatories to the defendant which the defendant omitted to answer. Thereupon an application was made to the Court in England to strike out the defence and enter judgment and a judgment was given. Upon that judgment a suit was filed in Madras and the defence was that as the judgment of the English Court had not been given on the merits of the action a suit could not be maintained on the foreign judgment under s. 13 sub-cl. (b) of the Civil Procedure Code. A decree was passed by Bakewell, J., but on appeal Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs. An appeal was preferred to the Privy Council and their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the decree of this High Court. The Lord Chancellor in giving judgment, after referring to the facts, observed:—

"It appears to their Lordships that no such decision as that can be regarded as a decision given on the merits of the case within the meaning of s. 13, sub-s. (b). It is quite plain that that sub-section must refer to some general class of cases and Sir Roberts Finlay was asked to explain to what class of cases in his view it did refer. In answer he pointed out to their Lordships that it would refer to a case where judgment had been given upon the question of the Statutes of Limitation, and he may be well-founded in that view. But there must be other matters to which the sub-section refers, and in their Lordships' view it refers to those cases where, for one reason or another, the controversy raised in the action has not in fact been the subject of direct adjudication by the Court."

In Oppenheim v. Mahomed Haneef (2) a judgment was passed on an award in England under O. LIV, r. 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, the defendant being ex parte, and an action was brought on the foreign judgment in this Court; Coates Trotter, J., held that the action on the judgment of the Court in England could not, having regard to the decision in Keymer v. Viswanatham Reddiar (1), be maintained as the judgment was entered in default of appearance and the action had not been tried on the merits. He, however, gave a decree for the amount specified in the award. So far as the view taken by the learned Judge as to the non-maintainability of the suit, no objection was taken before the Privy Council. The argument of Mr. Raja Ayyar that Keymer's case (1) can be distinguished on the ground that the defence was struck out for not answering the interrogatories and judgment entered whereas in the present case the decree was passed ex parte which argument seems to have been accepted in Janoothassan Sait v. Mahomed Ohuthu (3) cannot stand in view of the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court in Mahomed Kasim & Co. v. Seeni Pakir (4) decided on the 1st of September, 1926. The authorities on the subject have been referred to by the Referring Judges in their order of reference and it was held that the only test is whether the suit was disposed of on the merits. The learned Chief Justice in dealing with a similar argument observed:—

"As I understand Mr. Alladi Krishnaswami Ayyar's argument, he says that it is not like the case of the defendant's defence being struck out for not answering interrogatories or being out of time or anything of the kind; for that may be held not to be a defence on the merits because ex hypothesi the position is the defendant was precluded from going into the alleged merits which he had set up and he says it is quite different where the defendant does not appear at all because that is a clear intimation by him that he admits the validity of the plaintiff's claim and that is just as good as if the plaintiff has actually proved it by evidence. I think the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council impliedly excludes any such distinction and I regret to say that I cannot agree with the attempt made by two learned Judges of this Court to draw this distinction in Janoothassan Sait v. Mahomed Ohuthu (3) and I think that that case must be regarded as no longer law."

As was pointed out in this case the rules of the Supreme Court of Penang provide that where the defendant does not appear, judgment can be given without trial and without taking evidence if it is proved that the defendant was properly served with the notice of action. The Ceylon Oode which has been referred to in the course of the argument before us contains identical provisions and no distinction can be made on the ground that the provisions of the law are different. I think the decision of the Full Bench above referred to really concludes the matter so far as we are concerned.

I think s. 13 clearly limits the cases where a foreign judgment can be sued upon and that if the case falls within any of the exceptions, no suit would lie. There is no authority to support the argument of Mr. Raja Ayyar that a foreign judgment if it falls within cl. (b) of the exceptions imposes a prima facie liability and that the plaintiff will in the absence of the proof by the defendant of the unsustainability of the suit be entitled to a decree. His argument is that whereas in the case of the other clauses the suit would have to be dismissed, in the case of cl. (b) the suit would have to go on and be tried on the merits. This is not supported by any authority and is opposed to the decisions I have referred to above. I am of opinion that the judgment of the Colombo District Court which was obtained under the rules of that Court which enact that where the defendant is ex parte the plaintiff is entitled to a decree merely on proving that the defendant was properly served is not a judgment obtained on the merits of the case and that s. 13, cl. (b) bars a suit on that judgment.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Curgenvven, J.—The circumstances of this case are not, I think, distinguishable from those of the Full Bench case, Mahomed Kasim & Co. v. Seeni Pakir (4), to which I was a party, because it is clear from an examination of the records of the suit in the Colombo Court that the decree and judgment were not given 'on the merits of the case' in the sense that no evidence was taken in support of the averments in the plaint. Some attempt has been made to found an argument upon the word 'conclusive' in s. 13, and to contend that, although a judgment otherwise than upon the merits may not be conclusive, it yet shifts the onus on to the party against whom it was recorded. But in the first place we are precluded by the Full Bench decision from accepting any such doctrine, and, apart from that consideration, if the adjudication which the foreign judgment embodies is not conclusive it cannot be in any intelligible sense an adjudication at all for the purposes of the subsequent litigation. It can thus form no cause of action, and the parties are relegated for their cause of action, to the original obligation.

I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent (Mad.), cl. 15—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Interlocutory orders in revision petitions, appealability of.

Orders passed on applications in civil revision petitions are dealt with by the High Court in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction and are, therefore, not appealable under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the Madras High Court. [p. 814, col. 2.]

Letters Patent appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Curgenvven, dated the 23rd September, 1927, and passed in C. M. P. No. 2003 of 1927 praying for stay of execution of the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupathur, in O. S. No. 322 of 1923 pending disposal of C. R. P. No. 672 of 1927 presented to the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupathur, dated the 19th April, 1927, in I. A. No. 151 of 1927 in the said O. S. No. 322 of 1923 and petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing stay of execution of a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupathur, in O. S. No. 322 of 1923, pending disposal of L. P. A. No. 287 of 1927.

Mr. P. G. Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of Curgenven, J., refusing to stay execution in a civil revision petition filed under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and s. 107 of the Government of India Act.

The first question is whether a Letters Patent Appeal would lie against the order under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent which as it is now amended expressly states that there is no appeal against an order made in the exercise of the High Court's revisional jurisdiction. It is conceded that no appeal would lie against an order passed by the High Court in the revision petition itself. It seems to us then that there can be no appeal against any interlocutory orders passed in the revision petition. Where a civil revision petition is filed and interlocutory applications are made in the civil revision petition for reliefs, the High Court can only act in its exercise of revisional jurisdiction in dealing with those applications. It is difficult to see how an appeal would lie having regard to the express provisions of the Letters Patent which preclude appeals against orders passed in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction. There is no authority for the proposition that the orders, on applications filed in a civil revision petition filed under the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court are passed in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction and that it is only the final order passed in the revision petition that is passed in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. It is difficult to see how there can be any application apart from the civil revision petition filed in the High Court as a party could not, without filing a civil revision petition in the High Court ask for stay of execution of the decree in the lower Court. The authorities as regards the appealabil-ity of orders passed in revisional jurisdiction prior to the amendment of the Letters Patent offer us no help whatever. The very object of the amendment was to put an end to appeals from orders passed by the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction. We think it is clear that all orders passed in applications in civil revision petitions are dealt with by the High Court in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction and that orders passed in the exercise of that jurisdiction are not appealable under the Letters Patent.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The petition for stay (C. M. P. No. 3590 of 1927) also is dismissed with costs, one set.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to re-wise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge Sivaganga, in I. A. No. 341 of 1926, in O. S. No. 100 of 1925.

Mr. T. R. Srinivasa Rajagopala Aiyangar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. V. Ramasami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge Sivaganga refusing to raise an issue at the instance of the second defendant. The second defendant is the father of the first defendant. The suit is on a mortgage-bond executed by the first defendant in favour of the plaintiff. The second defendant raised several contentions, one of which was, that the property mortgaged was his own self-acquisition and that the first defendant had no right to the property. The Subordinate Judge framed several issues, the first was "Is the bond sued on, true, and duly attested, supported by consideration and binding on defendants Nos. 2 to 5." The issue that is sought to be raised now is whether the hypotheca is the self-acquired property of second defendant in which the first defendant has no interest. The learned Subordinate Judge relying upon a decision of this Court in Kalkantharam Rukmani Ammal v. Ka Ki Anakma Naidu (1) has disallowed the second defendant's application. In a mortgage suit it is not proper that the title of a person who claims adversely to the mortgagor should be gone into. But the present case is distinguishable on the facts from the case in Kalkantharam Rukmani Ammal v. Ka Ki Anakma Naidu (1). This is a case in which the members of a joint family are sued on a mortgage-bond on the ground that the amount of the mortgage was borrowed for family purposes and, therefore, the debt is binding on them. The second defendant is the father of the first defendant and they both according to the plaintiff's allegation are members of a joint-family. That being so, it cannot be said that the second defendant is a stranger to the transaction. If the debt was for the benefit of the joint family, or if the first defendant acted for the second defendant then it would be binding on the whole family and the hypotheca, whether it was self-acquisition of the second defendant or not, would become liable. Therefore the decision in Kalkantharam Rukmani Ammal v. Ka Ki Anakma Naidu (1) cannot apply to the facts of this case. Considering the circumstances of the case, I think it is but fair that this issue ought to be raised and determined in course of the suit and should not be left to be determined in execution. Issue No. 1 relates to the liability of the second defendant for the plaint debt. Inasmuch as the second defendant has not chosen to ask for the issue at the time when issues were settled but has waited for nearly ten months, I think he should be made to pay the costs of the plaintiff up to date. I, therefore, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to raise an issue with regard to the contention of the second defendant that the property is his self-acquisition in which the first defendant has no interest, on the petitioner paying the costs up to date of the plaintiff excepting the institution fee, which I assess at Rs. 450. If this is paid into Court within six weeks from the date of the receipt of this order, the Subordinate Judge will frame the issue asked for and if it is not paid within that time, he need not raise the issue and the order passed by him will stand. No order as to costs of this petition. If the issue asked for is framed, he may frame any consequential issue which may arise.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 29th June, 1926, of the Court of the District Munsif, Madura, in I. A. No. 351 of 1926, in O. S. No. 505 of 1925.

Mr. K. S. Narayana Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. E. Ramabhadrachariar, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—There are two points which require elucidation before this civil revision petition can be settled:—

1. Whether the application to set aside the ex parte decree is not out of time having been presented more than 30 days from the date of ex parte decree.

2. Whether the Pleader who reported no instructions in the suit filed a fresh vakalat before he appeared to put in the application to set aside the ex parte decree.

The lower Court will submit findings on these points. Evidence may be taken on the first point, if parties desire, as the point seems to have been overlooked until now.

Time for submission of findings is two weeks after re-opening of this Court after vacation, and for objections ten days.

In compliance with the above order the District Munsif of Madura submitted the following FINDINGS. The High Court has called for findings on the following two points:—

* * * * *

2. The plaintiff's Pleader was present and adduced no evidence. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 (respondents in O. R. P. No. 557 of 1926) and their Pleader were absent.

3. The decree was passed on 25th February, 1926. The petition to set aside the ex parte decree has been presented into Court on 22nd March, 1926, less than 30 days from the date of the decree. This petition was presented originally on 22nd March, 1926, but it was returned thrice for certain defects to be remedied. The last of the returns was made on 15th April, 1926, with a direction to give the full description of the parties in a separate sheet attached thereto

if there was no space in the petition itself. And in obedience to this direction, a fresh sheet with the full description of the parties was attached on 20th April, 1926. But the Vakil attached the additional sheet in the form of a petition and dating it on 20th April, 1926, has represented the same along with the original petition; the original petition alone having been stamped. The original petition has evidently not been printed in the High Court printed papers. I find on the first point that the petition to set aside the ex parte decree was presented within 30 days from the date and that it is in time.

4. A fresh vakalat has been filed along with the petition to set aside the ex parte decree by the Pleader who presented the same. The vakalat also is herewith submitted.

JUDGMENT.—The findings are that the application to set aside the ex parte decree was in time and that a fresh vakalat was put in with the application to set aside the ex parte decree. I accept them.

The finding on the 2nd point shows that the Pleader did not continue to act on his original vakalat after he reported no instructions in the suit.

On the facts, therefore, I must hold following the Full Bench cases in Prativadi Bhayankaram Pichamma v. Kamiseti Sreeramulu (1) and Manickam Pillai v. Mahudum Bathummal (2), that the party was absent and, therefore, the decree though on the merits was nevertheless an ex parte decree. A ruling of a Single Judge of this Court in Pazhaniandi v. Naku (3), subsequent to Manickam Pillai v. Mahudum Bathummal (2), seems to me, if I may say so with respect, contrary to the Full Bench rulings.

There is, therefore, no error of law in the proceedings of the lower Court and I dismiss the petition. Costs here to be costs in the cause.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898, as amended by Act XVIII of 1923), s. 162—Accused's right to copies of statement recorded by Police—Time for making application—Called; meaning of—Accused, whether bound to wait till opening of cross-examination.

Under the provisions of s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, when a witness for the prosecution is produced in Court the accused is entitled to apply for a copy of his statement recorded by Police, and if he makes an application at that stage, the Court is bound to refer to the writing and to direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, subject to the proviso that if the Court is of opinion that any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interest, then the Court shall record such opinion and exclude such part from the copy furnished to the accused. [p. 817, col. 2.]

The Court has no power to refuse the granting of the copy until the cross-examination has been opened and the accused has by his questions laid a foundation for holding that there is contradiction between the statements made in Court and those made before the Police. [p. 818, col. 2.]

Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (1) and In re Peramasami Ragudu (2), dissented from.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The words "the Court shall refer to such writing" in s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code are obviously for the purpose of enabling the Court to exercise discretion under the second proviso, and not for the purpose of restricting the right of the accused to obtain a copy, the discretion wherein was expressly taken away by the Legislature. The Government Advocate, for the Crown.
JUDGMENT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 751 OF 1927.

Ross, J.—This is an application to quash the commitment of the petitioners to the Court of Sessions on the ground that the Magistrate has not complied with the provisions of s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It appears that the petitioners applied for copies of the statements of the witnesses before the Police. The order-sheet is not clear as to the precise stage at which the application was made, but it was at all events before the cross-examination opened. The learned Magistrate following the decision in Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (1) held that before copy could be given some foundation must be laid in cross-examination for the suggestion that evidence given in Court is contradicted by the previous statement recorded under s. 161, Criminal Procedure Code, and refused the application.

The meaning of s. 162 seems plain: The witness has to be called for the prosecution, that is to say, he must be produced in Court; and if then the accused applies for a copy of his statement before the Police recorded in writing the Court is bound to refer to the writing and to direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, subject to the proviso that if the Court is of opinion that any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interest, then the Court shall record such opinion and exclude such part from the copy furnished to the accused. When this copy has been given, any part of the statement, if duly proved, can be used in the manners provided, by s. 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict the witness by the writing, i. e., his attention must be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him before the writing can be proved. So far as the decisions in Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (1) and In re Peramasami Ragudu (2) go beyond this interpretation of the section I respectfully dissent from them. There is nothing in the section which requires that the cross examination shall have been opened; nor do I see how the defence can be in a position to contradict the witness by his previous statement or to lay any foundation for the suggestion that there is a contradiction before it has seen the statement. Nor indeed is the Magistrate in a position to say whether there may not be a material contradiction between the two statements. All that the section requires is that the witness should be produced in Court, and the right conferred upon the accused by the section arises. The Magistrate was, therefore, in error in the procedure that he followed in this matter.

The further question remains as to what the consequence of the Magistrate's having failed to grant the copy applied for should be. The commitment has already taken place, and the learned Government Advocate states that the learned Sessions Judge has ordered that copy of all the statements of the witnesses should be granted to the accused. In these circumstances I think that no useful purpose would be served by quashing the commitment. I would, therefore, discharge the Rule.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 780 OF 1927.

For the reasons given in deciding Criminal Revision No. 751 of 1927 (Ramgulam Teli and others v. The King-Emperor), I hold that the accused are entitled to copy of the statements of the witnesses who have been called at the stage which the trial has now reached, subject to the operation of the second proviso to s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, and I would order accordingly.

Jwala Prasad, J.—I fully agree.

The question is at what stage an accused is entitled to a copy of the statement of a witness recorded by the Police during investigation. In other words, what is the true interpretation and scope of the proviso to cl. (1) of s. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the old Code the proviso stood as follows: "provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution whose statement has been taken down in writing as aforesaid, the Court shall, on the request of the accused, refer to such writing and may then, if the Court thinks it expedient in the interest of justice, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof." The words italicised in the aforesaid passage have been changed into "the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, etc." The discretion which vested in the Court formerly of granting such copies has now been taken away, and it has now become imperative upon the Court to grant copies to the accused at his request. The aforesaid words "if the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice" in the old section have been substituted by the second proviso to the new section under which the Court has a discretion to exclude from the copy any part of such statement which in the opinion of the Court "is not relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests"; otherwise the accused's right to obtain copy is absolute for the limited purpose of using the statement contained therein to contradict the witness in the manner provided by s. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act. The Court at the request of the accused is bound to "refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof." If these words are read along with the second proviso referred to above, the meaning becomes clear that at the request of the accused the Court shall refer to the writing and direct copies to be furnished provided that under the second proviso to s. 162 the Court may exclude any part of the statement if it is of opinion that the statement asked for is not essential in the interests of justice, or is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial, or that it is inexpedient in the public interests. Therefore, the words "the Court shall refer to such writing" are obviously for the purpose of enabling the Court to exercise discretion under the second proviso, and not for the purpose of restricting the right of the accused to obtain a copy the discretion wherein was expressly taken away by the Legislature, and hence the Court cannot refuse the granting of a copy till the accused has by his cross-examination showed that there is contradiction between the statement in Court and the statement referred to before the Police, which would assume that the accused has already got an insight into the Police record without having got a copy. It is impossible for the accused, without having got a copy of the statement and without knowing the contents thereof, to lay the foundation in cross-examination for showing that there is contradiction, and it will open a wide door for obtaining surreptitious copies. The words "refer to such writing," do not in any way restrict the right of the accused to obtain the copy, nor is the writing to be referred to for the purpose of seeing whether there is any contradiction or not between the statement made in Court and the statement recorded by the Police Officer. Again, the trial Court is not the sole tribunal for determining whether in substance and in fact there is a contradiction or not. It might be a contentious matter, and the accused has a right to have the opinion of a higher tribunal in the matter. There is nothing in the section to show that the accused should by his questions lay the foundation in cross examination for the granting of a copy as was held in Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (1), and In re Peramasami Ragudu (2) and by one of the Judges of a Division Bench of the Patna High Court in Saadat Mian v. Emperor (3). This is not to be found in the section itself, and I do not think we can add those words to it in order to restrict the right of the accused to obtain copy. The section has expressly provided the time when the accused would be entitled to apply for and obtain copy and that is "When any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial." The learned Government Advocate submitted that the word "when" should be read as "after" and the word "called" as "examined-in-chief." Even if this interpretation is accepted, it would simply mean that after the witness has been examined-in-chief; but it would not go further than that, namely, that the accused should have laid the foundation in cross-examination for showing that there was contradiction in the statement made in Court and that before the Police Officer in order to entitle him to apply for and obtain copy. The word "when" may mean "after" but that does not matter much. The sole question is what is the meaning of "called for the prosecution." The word "called" is not a word of art and is, therefore, used in its ordinary sense. It has various meanings to shout or cry out, to commend or request to come or be present to summon, cite; in law the expression "to call for the plaintiff" means to cry aloud his name in open Court, on his failure to answer to which the trial is at an end and he becomes non-suited: (vide The Imperial Dictionary, Webster's International Law Dictionary and Bouvier's Law Dictionary).

(3) 103 Ind. Cas. 597; 6 Pat. 329; A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 243; 28 Cr. L. J. 709; 8 A. I. Cr. R. 383; 8 P. L. T. 780.

The words "called for the prosecution" in the present section are the same as in the old s. 162. In Dadan Gazi v. Emperor (4) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court construed the aforesaid words to mean the time when the witness appears before the Court. As to the procedure for granting copy, their Lordships say: "The proper procedure is for the accused, at the time the witness, whose statement is so recorded, appears before the Court, to ask the Court to refer to such writing, and if necessary, furnish the accused with copies." That appears to be the plain meaning of the word "called", and we have no right to add to the word so as to restrict its meaning by holding that the witness for the prosecution should not only have been produced in Court, but that his examination-in-chief should have been finished and the accused should have commenced his cross-examination and by his questions laid the foundation for holding that the statements made by the witnesses are contradictory to those recorded by the Police.

I, therefore, respectfully dissent from the contrary view taken in the cases referred to above, and agree with the view expressed by Sen, J., in Chedi Prasad Singh v. Emperor (5).

I also agree with the order passed by my learned brother in all these cases.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The plaintiffs in this case sued for a declaration of their title to, and for possession of, two plots of land including a dwelling house and an orchard measuring together between 6 and 7 kathas of land. Their case was that they purchased the property from Babu Sri Narain, the defendant No. 1 in the suit, with whom his sons have also been impleaded as defendants, being members of a joint family. It appears that in the year 1915 Sri Narain was the proprietor of a four-annas share in Mauza Chak Sikandra Sayedpur otherwise known as Mian Chak, Touzi No. 3803 in the Collector's roll. Within that share was the land in question. The plaintiffs, after their purchase in 1915, took possession of the four-annas share as proprietors but they did not get actual possession of these two plots which are the subject of the present suit. Within 12 years, however, they have sued for possession and for a declaration of their title relying upon the sale of 1915.

Although various defences were raised in the suit all of which were decided against the defendants in both the lower Courts, the only question with which we are concerned in this second appeal is one of merger. It was contended by the defendants that the property in suit was subject to a leasehold interest held by them and that the right to direct possession had not passed to the plaintiffs in 1915 by the transfer of the proprietary interest. Their case was that the leasehold interest never became merged in the proprietary interest and remained with the vendor. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contended that although there had been originally a leasehold interest of this particular property, it had in fact become merged in the proprietary interest in the time of Sri Narain's father, Gopi Lal. This question is one which had to be considered both in the trial Court and in the lower Appellate Court and in both those Courts it was found that the leasehold interest of this house and orchard had become merged in the proprietary interest of Gopi Lal before the defendant Sri Narain acquired by partition his four-annas share in the estate. It appears that Gopi Lal during his lifetime, being the sixteen annas proprietor of the mauza in question, purchased from the then tenant his leasehold interest in the two plots in suit and subsequently upon Gopi's death these two plots fell to the share of Sri Narain upon partition between him and his brothers.

The point raised in the lower Courts was that Gopi Lal at the time of his purchase of the house and orchard from the tenant was not in fact the sixteen annas proprietor but had a share only, amounting to fourteen annas, and, therefore, if he acquired an interest as a co-sharer proprietor, then under s. 22, sub-s. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act the interest did not become entirely merged in the larger proprietary interest but continued alive, the proprietor having the use and occupation and paying rent to his co-sharers according to their proportion, and that after his death when his son acquired the four-annas share in his interest including these two plots the same state of affairs continued and, therefore, the transfer of the proprietary interest did not transfer the leasehold interest. That was the only point which was raised in the lower Courts with regard to this part of the case. Both the lower Courts found that in fact Gopi Lal was the sixteen annas proprietor when he purchased the interest in the orchard and the house, and, therefore, the case fell within sub-s. (1) and not sub-s. (2) of s. 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and hence the leasehold interest became merged in the proprietary interest.

On second appeal to this Court a new point has been raised which was not taken in either of the lower Courts. It is contended to-day for the first time that this orchard and house were not in fact agricultural land and were not governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act but by the Transfer of Property Act and, therefore, in considering the question of merger it is contended that we must apply the general doctrine of merger as it prevails according to the English Law as administered in this country and we must see whether at the time of the transaction whereby Gopi Lal acquired this interest, there was any intention on the part of the purchaser to keep alive the subordinate interest. In support of that proposition we have been referred to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Dulhin Lachhanbati Kumri v. Bodnath Tiwari (1). That case was one which dealt with the general law of merger in the mofussil before the Transfer of Property Act came into force in 1882 and has nothing whatever to do with the law as it now exists under that Act. The law that we have to apply if the case is not governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act is the law laid down in s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is interesting to notice that under that Act there are two sections which deal with matters of this sort. The first is s. 101 which provides for the case where the owner of a charge or other incumbrance on immoveable property is or becomes absolutely entitled to that property and the section provides that the charge or incumbrance shall be extinguished unless he declares, by express words or necessary implication, that it shall continue to subsist, or such continuance would be for his benefit. When we come, however, to the acquisition of a leasehold interest by the lessor s. 111 applies and it will be noticed that in that section there is no reference whatever to any declaration either express or by implication, or to the case where the continuance of the interest would be for the benefit of the person acquiring. By s. 111, cl. (d) it is provided that a lease of immoveable property determines in case the interests of the lessee and the lessor in the whole of the property become vested at the same time in one person in the same right. Now that to my mind is a very clear exposition of the law on the subject and applies absolutely to the present case where the proprietor purchases the inferior right of his lessee. In such a case the transaction comes directly within the four corners of s. 111, cl. (d). Therefore it does not make any difference whether the property is governed by s. 22, sub-s. (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act or by s. 111 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act. In either case it is clearly provided that the inferior interest shall merge in that of the superior interest.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where a rent-decree is obtained in a suit framed as a rent suit under the provisions of s. 148-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the decree-holder takes every step necessary to be taken under the Act to execute the decree as a rent-decree, the mere fact that the orders for attachment and sale were not issued simultaneously as required by s. 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not a ground for holding that the sale held under the decree is not a rent sale. [p. 823, col. 1.]

Dhannun Singh v. Lachmi Lal (1), followed.

Under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act once the Collector has issued notice of annulment, the incumbrance must be deemed to have been annulled. Though this does not mean that the validity of the notice and the consequent annulment of the incumbrance cannot afterwards be called in question, the section casts the burden of proof upon the person questioning the validity of the notice to establish that the notice under s. 167 was not served in accordance with law. (1) 66 Ind. Cas. 551; 26 O. W. N. 565; (1922) M. W. N. 58; 15 L. W. 343; 30 M. L. T. 216; 3 P. L. T. 383; 4 U. P. L. R. (P. C.) 42; A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 94; 48 I. A. 485 (P. C.).

suit instituted by the respondents for recovery of possession of certain lands specified in the plaint. The suit was resisted by the defendants second party who are the appellants in this Court on the ground that they as landlords have purchased the disputed lands in execution of a rent decree obtained by them as against the tenants, the defendants first party, and that the plaintiffs as usufructuary mortgagees have no title to put forward as against them.

It appears that two rent suits properly framed as such under the provisions of s. 148-A were instituted by the landlords in respect of two holdings as against the defendants first party some time prior to the 11th December, 1915. While these rent suits were actually pending, the defendants first party, on the 11th December, 1915, gave a usufructuary mortgage of the holdings in question which were the subject-matter of the rent suits to the plaintiffs. On the 6th January, 1916, the landlords recovered rent decrees as against the defendants first party. They proceeded to execute their decrees and on the 26th March, 1917, and on the 27th March, 1917, they purchased these holdings in question. They actually recovered possession of the holdings on the 15th December, 1917. As I have said the plaintiffs were in possession of the holdings under the usufructuary mortgage of the 11th December, 1915. They were, however, dispossessed by the landlords and they then instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arises for recovery of possession of those lands. One other fact has to be noticed. On the 14th June, 1918, the landlords applied to the Collector under the provisions of s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for service of notice upon the plaintiffs to annul their incumbrances and the defendants contend that having regard to all these circumstances the plaintiffs have no title to put forward as against them in this action. They also claim that there was an abandonment of the holdings in question by the tenants as a result of the execution of the usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs.

The trial Court held that there was no abandonment as contended by the defendants second party and that the decree obtained by them as against the defendants first party was not executed as a rent decree and that the sale held in pursuance of the decree was not a rent sale. In that view the trial Court gave the plaintiffs a decree substantially as claimed by them. The lower Appellate Court found that the sale was a rent sale, but that Court did not go into the other question, namely, whether the incumbrance had been annulled by the defendants second party in accordance with law. That Court also found that there was abandonment as insisted on by the defendants second party. The plaintiffs appealed to this Court. This Court decided the issue as to abandonment in favour of the plaintiffs and then proceeded to say as follows:

"The learned District Judge having decided the case in favour of the defendants upon the point which I have just mentioned", namely, the point as to abandonment, "did not proceed to consider the question of fact raised by issue No. 12, namely, whether the incumbrance had been duly annulled. It was the defendants' case that the provisions of s. 167 of the Act had been complied with. Whether they had or had not depended upon questions of fact. These facts were not considered by the learned District Judge. It will be necessary, therefore, before this case can be finally disposed of that a finding should be arrived at upon that question. The result will be that the decree of the learned District Judge dismissing the suit will be set aside and the case will be remanded to him to try that part of issue No. 12, upon the facts, which relates to the question of whether the incumbrance had been duly annulled or not. There may have been other issues which were material to the decision of the case which were not considered by the learned District Judge but they have not been brought to our attention. If there are any such issues then the parties will be entitled to raise them before the learned District Judge on remand".

It will be seen then that the question as to whether the sale was a rent sale was not raised before this Court by the plaintiffs. They accepted the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this question and in remanding the case this Court asked the Court below specifically to try that part of issue No. 12, upon the facts, which relates to the question of whether the incumbrance had been duly annulled or not. In my opinion, therefore, the question as to whether the sale was a rent sale or not was finally determined by the lower Appellate Court in the decision from which there was an appeal to this Court which appeal was finally disposed of on the 15th August, 1923.

When the case went back to the learned District Judge on appeal that learned Judge went into the question as to whether the sale was a rent sale or not. Having considered that question he came to the conclusion that it was not a rent sale. He proceeded to consider the other question which he was specifically asked to try and he found in favour of the plaintiffs. Having regard to those findings that learned Judge dismissed the appeal which had the effect of confirming the decision of the trial Court which was in favour of the plaintiffs. From the decision of the learned District Judge, dated the 6th March, 1924, the present appeal has been presented to this Court.

The first question is whether we ought to go into the question whether the sale was a rent sale or not. I have no doubt that the learned District Judge, having regard to the scope of the remand order, had no power to consider the question. But I do not desire to rest my decision on a point so technical as this; for I am satisfied that the decision of the learned District Judge on this point is erroneous. As I have stated, the suits were framed as rent suits under the provisions of s. 148-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is not disputed before us that the decrees obtained by the landlords were rent decrees. Now, what reason is there for holding that the sales were not rent sales within the meaning of that term as used in the Bengal Tenancy Act? The learned District Judge gives two reasons:—first he says that the orders for attachment and sale of the holding were not issued simultaneously as required by s. 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is nothing to show that the decree-holder did not apply for simultaneous issue of the order for attachment and sale of the holdings in question and I am satisfied that this is not a ground for holding that the sale was not a rent sale. I may refer to a decision of this Court in Dhunmun Singh v. Lachmi Lal (1). It was held in that case that provided the holder of a rent decree takes every step necessary to be taken under the Bengal Tenancy Act to execute the decree as a rent decree, the mere fact that the Court failed to issue simultaneously the order for attachment and the proclamation cannot make the decree anytheless a decree for rent. The second ground taken by the learned District Judge is equally untenable. He says that in the sale proclamation although the khata number of the holdings has been correctly given, various plot numbers are omitted from the holding and that the area is almost one acre less than the area of the holding. But the khata number of the holding having been given it would follow, in my opinion, that the decree-holder wanted to sell all the holdings comprised within that khata number; and it is worthy of note that the plaintiffs in this case did not dispute that the entire holdings were sold in this case. In any case, therefore, the decision of the learned District Judge on this point cannot be supported. I hold that the sales were rent sales and that the holdings in question passed to the landlord-purchasers and not merely the right title and interest of the judgment-debtors.

I now come to the second point. Sir Sultan Ahmed appearing on behalf of the defendants second party, the appellants in this Court, contends that the question whether the incumbrances were annulled by the landlords under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is irrelevant, for in any case the holdings being non-transferable holdings, the plaintiffs cannot succeed in a suit for possession as against the landlords who have purchased the holdings in question in execution of their rent decrees. He refers us to a recent decision of this Court in Badlu Pathak v. Sibram Singh (2) decided by this Court on the 14th November last. It is however, not necessary for us to decide this point, as we are satisfied that the plaintiffs' suit must fail, since they have not established in this case that the incumbrances were not annulled in accordance with law. Now, in dealing with this point the learned District Judge has proceeded as if the onus were on the landlords to establish that the incumbrances were annulled by them in accordance with law. It is conceded that the application for annulment of the incumbrances in question was not made within one year of the date of sale; but it appears on reference to the petition filed before the Collector under

(1) 57 Ind. Cas. 492.

(2) 107 Ind. Cas. 310.

s. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, that it was the case of the landlords that they had no information about the incumbrances in question until a period within one year of the date of the application. But the notice was in fact served upon the plaintiffs and to quote the language of s. 167 of the Act "the incumbrance shall be deemed to be annulled from the date on which it was so served." The question now arises whether in this suit it is for the landlords to establish that they had no information about the incumbrance until a period within one year of the date of the application or whether it is for the plaintiffs to establish that the landlords had the information of the incumbrance beyond one year of the date of their application. On this question the decisions of this Court are perfectly clear. It was held by this Court in Nand Kishore Chaudhuri v. Rameshwar Singh (3) that the onus is upon the person questioning the validity of the notice to establish that the notice under s. 167 was not served in accordance with law. It is sufficient for my purpose to quote the headnote of the case. It runs as follows:—

"Under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act once the Collector has issued notice of annulment, the incumbrance must be deemed to have been annulled. This does not, however, mean that the validity of the notice and the consequent annulment of the incumbrance cannot afterwards be called in question. The effect of the section is to cast the burden of proof upon the person questioning the validity of the notice."

I entirely agree with this decision and I hold that it was for the plaintiffs to establish that the notice was not served upon them within the period of limitation. The learned Judge did not decide this case on this footing and the question arises whether we should remand the case again to the District Judge to decide this point upon the evidence on the record, or whether we should decide it in this Court. We have power under the present Code to determine a question of fact of this nature in order to save a remand and we have gone into the evidence in order to find out whether the plaintiffs have established their case upon this point.

[His Lordship referred to the evidence and concluded as follows:—]

It follows from this that there is no evidence on the side of the plaintiffs to establish that the notice under s. 167 was served upon them beyond the period of limitation. The learned District Judge, however, says that there is no evidence on the side of the defendants. Sir Sultan Ahmed has referred us to the evidence of Kartick Chaudhuri, defendants' witness No. 5, who says definitely in his evidence that his malik came to know of the incumbrance when the notice was received in the cases for setting aside the sale. I do not, however, consider that this evidence is sufficient for the evidence would be at best hearsay and the malik should have been called to give evidence on this point. The result is that there is no evidence on either side on this point and this being so, it is impossible to say that the plaintiffs have discharged the onus which is upon them so far this point is concerned.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees passed by the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all the Courts.

It is settled law that O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only where the hearing of a suit has commenced and an application for an adjournment is then made by one of the parties. When before the hearing of a suit is commenced the plaintiff fails to appear on an adjourned date, the Court has to proceed under r. 2 and not r. 3.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This appeal is directed against the order of the learned District Judge of Gaya, dated the 6th August, 1925, by which he dismissed an application for grant of Probate under the provision of O. XVII, r. 3 with costs. Now, the order itself shows that the hearing of the suit had not commenced. It appears that the petitioner took time to produce his evidence from time to time. Ultimately the Court refused to grant him further time and dismissed the application; but it is to be observed that the hearing of the suit had not commenced before the learned District Judge. That being so, O. XVII, r. 3 does not apply. It is well established that O. XVII, r. 3 only applies where the hearing of a suit has commenced and an application for an adjournment is then made by one of the parties. It is also established that when, before the hearing of a suit is commenced, the plaintiff fails to appear on an adjourned date, the Court has to proceed under r. 2 and not 3; that is to say, it has power to dismiss the suit under O. IX, r. 8 so as to give the plaintiff an opportunity of having the dismissal set aside under O. IX, r. 9. As the matter stands, the plaintiff had no opportunity to have the order of dismissal set aside. This being so, the order of the learned District Judge must be set aside.

The result of this is that the Probate case must be taken to be pending, and the learned District Judge will fix a date and then proceed with the hearing of the suit. If the plaintiff refuses or fails to appear on that date, then it will be open to him to dismiss the suit under O. IX, r. 8 of the Code. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal: hearing-fee three gold mohurs.

ORDER.—The petitioner stamped his plaint with a Court-fee of Rs. 15 as in a declaratory suit, but he was ordered by the Subordinate Judge to pay an ad valorem Court-fee and thereupon he paid a Court-fee Rs. 877-8-0. On appeal to this Court the Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal was Rs. 15 and that was accepted as correct. We have referred to the pleadings in the suit and it seems clear that the suit was a declaratory suit and that the proper Court-fee was Rs. 15 only. The learned Advocate for the petitioner applies for a refund of the excess Court-fee paid under the orders of the Subordinate Judge. He refers to s. 13 of the Court Fees Act and contends that that section substantially applies, because, if he had not paid the ad valorem Court-fee as ordered by the Court, his plaint would have been rejected. Whether the section applies or not, the case is one in which the Court has jurisdiction to act under s. 151, as was held in this Court in Chaudra Hari Singh v. Tipan Prosad Singh (1). See also In re Grant (2) and Hari Har Guru v. Ananda Mahanty (3). Messrs. Kailaspati and Sarju Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The petitioner Jamuna Prasad was a peon at the Post Office at Gaya and was charged before the Deputy Magistrate of Gaya with having between the 8th December, 1926, and the 28th December, 1926, embezzled in the course of his employment three sums of Rs. 12, Rs. 22 and Rs. 25 respectively which should have been paid out on account of three money orders issued from Calcutta to certain payees at Gaya. He was also charged in respect of the same sums with having falsified his registers and he was convicted under s. 409 of the Indian Penal Code for criminal breach of trust as a public servant and sentenced to a consolidated term of rigorous imprisonment for nine months. In respect of the charges under s. 477-A of falsification of accounts he was also found guilty but no separate sentence was passed for these offences.

There was then an appeal to the Sessions Judge who affirmed the conviction and sentence and the present application is made to us in revision.

It is urged at the outset though somewhat faintly that there has been an error of law in regard to the charges. It is said that the trial Court was wrong in entering under one heading all the three items in respect of which the accused has been charged, and that there should have been, a separate heading in respect of each item. The complaint, therefore, amounts to this that instead of stating the substance of the charges against the accused in three separate sentences the Court set out the details in one comprehensive sentence. In my opinion there is no substance in this complaint and the accused had full notice of each particular item and of the offence with which he was charged in respect of it.

It is then suggested that s. 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure forbids the trial of the three offences in one trial and reliance is placed on Asghar Ali Biswas v. Emperor (1). It is quite clear, however, that the trial was perfectly legal. The three offences were offences of the same kind within the meaning of s. 234 of the Code and as the offences were committed within the space of one year the Magistrate was competent to hold only one trial. With regard to the authority quoted, it is clear that s. 234 of the Code was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges in that case which has been dissented from in this Court in Farzand Ali v. Emperor (2).

The same point is taken with respect to the charges under s. 477-A of the Indian Penal Code.

In my opinion there is no substance in either complaint.

The learned Sessions Judge appears to have thought that the framing of one charge containing the details of all three offences was irregular and he observes that the Magistrate would have been better advised to have put each charge under a separate heading. In my opinion there was no irregularity or illegality which required the aid of s. 531 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

[His Lordship then considered the merits of the case and concluded as follows:—]

A consolidated sentence of nine months has been passed in respect of the three offences under s. 409 of the Indian Penal Code and there was no irregularity in this. The result is that the conviction and sen-

JUDGMENT.—This is an application (1) for transfer of the case from the file of the Magistrate, (2) for giving an opportunity to the petitioner to cross-examine the Court witness named Ramnihora Singh and (3) for giving the petitioner permission to rebut the new evidence called by the Court.

No sufficient ground for transfer for the case has been made out, and hence this part of the prayer must be rejected.

It seems, however, that sufficient opportunity was not given to the petitioner to cross-examine the said witness. After the evidence on both sides and the arguments closed, the case was adjourned to 12th October, 1927, for judgment. It was again adjourned to 17th October, and then to 19th October. On the 19th October, the Magistrate passed an order for summoning three persons as Court witnesses for the next date, the 20th October, Ramnihora Singh being one of them. On the 20th October, the examination of this witness began at 4 P.M. and continued up to 6-30 P.M. when the petitioner was asked to cross-examine the witness. He wanted time as his Pleader was not then present. This was refused and the petitioner was called upon to cross-examine the witness himself. He tried to do so, but after putting some questions to the witness he could not continue his cross-examination being a layman and began to quarrel with the witness and put questions to him which naturally incensed the Magistrate who threatened to punish him for contempt of Court. The result was that the witness was not properly and fully cross-examined by the petitioner.

Now, the Magistrate after several adjournments suddenly made up his mind on the 19th of October that the evidence of three witnesses was necessary, inasmuch as he says that he found certain omissions on material points in the evidence already adduced in the case and parties who were waiting for judgment from the 12th of October were suddenly told by the Magistrate that he would examine these fresh witnesses the next day. The petitioner objected to the case being taken up on the 20th October, because his lawyers were not available. Not only that, he commenced the examination of the witness at the fall-end of the day, namely, at 4 P.M. and called upon the petitioner to cross examine the witness in question at 6.30 P.M. long after the Court hours prescribed by rules 1 and 2, Vol. I, Criminal, of the High Court's General Rules and Circular Orders. Rule 1 says: "The Court hours shall ordinarily be from 10-30 A.M. to 4-30 P.M. standard time," and r. 2 says "Every Sessions Judge and Magistrate shall sit daily and punctually at the hour appointed for the opening of his Court unless prevented by circumstances which are to be recorded in the Court's diary." The Magistrate says in his explanation that he took up the case so late in the day, because it was the custom of that Court to sit till late. The hours prescribed for the sitting of Courts are not only to suit the convenience of the Courts but also of the parties, and the Court in question had no right to take up any case after 4-30 P. M. without the consent of the parties. The Courts in the mofussil, no doubt, take it as their right and privilege to sit at any time they like regardless of the convenience of the parties concerned. The parties being suitors before them do not boldly object to the prolonging of Court hours or taking up of cases late in the day for fear of incurring the displeasure of the Presiding Officers of the Courts. The Courts should not take advantage of this weakness of the parties. I think the petitioner, when he was called at 6 30 P. M. by the Magistrate to cross-examine the witness in question, was within his right to have the case adjourned, and the Magistrate would have been well-advised if he had acceded to the prayer of the petitioner to enable him to fully and properly cross-examine the witness in question.

I, therefore, direct that full opportunity be given to the petitioner to further cross-examine the witness in question and he should also be given an opportunity to adduce evidence in rebuttal as already prayed for.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner further says that Ramanand Jha, nephew of the complainant, should be called as a Court witness. I do not think that the Court below can be forced to call that witness on behalf of the Court. If that witness is material, he may be called in rebuttal by the petitioner himself. Then learned Counsel says that the said witness being the nephew of the complainant will be hostile and he would, therefore, like to cross-examine him and hence he should be called as a Court witness. This is not a valid reason for forcing the Court to call him as a Court witness. The petitioner might lay foundation for cross-examining the witness if he proves to be hostile.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—On the whole, although I think this case is not altogether free from doubt, I consider that it falls within the provisions of s. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiff as proprietor sued to recover from the defendants a 4-annas share in Mauza Baghore. The defendants raised various defences and amongst other things contended that they had a mukarrari interest of the 4-annas share of which the plaintiff claimed possession. They further raised questions of limitation.

The trial Court appears to have found, as far as I can follow the judgment, that the defendants were not mukarraridars and that the suit was not barred by limitation. Upon the latter point, however, the findings of the trial Court are somewhat obscure. After saying that the suit was not barred by limitation, the learned Judge says: "The plaintiff is not anxious to evict the defendants and has conceded the long possession of the defendants and is quite willing to treat them as tenants. He has not shown that he is within time for the purpose of evicting the defendants as for that purpose he must bring himself within the special provisions of the law." Then again he says: "The plaintiff does not want sir possession and has not shown himself to be within time for that purpose, but he wants that a mukarrari jama be fixed permanently and claims that his suit is under s. 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act." In the result the Subordinate Judge assessed a rent of Rs. 583 as the fair mukarrari permanent rent for the 4 annas share in suit payable since 1326 Fasli.

When the case came on appeal to the High Court, the High Court also decided that the defendants had not proved their mukarrari interest and, in the circumstances, they set aside that part of the decisions which had assessed a fair rent to be paid by the defendants and awarded khas possession to the plaintiff.

From that decision the defendants now seek to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

It is said, in the first place, that the decision is not one of reversal but a decision of affirmance. It is quite true that in some respects the decision of the High Court affirmed the decision of the trial Court. Both judgments find that the defendants were not mukarraridars, and it is further contended on behalf of the respondents that both judgments find that the suit is not barred by limitation and, therefore, that the only question which can remain for further discussion over and above the points determined by the concurrent findings of fact, is the question whether any amount is to be paid, by the defendants. I do not, however, regard the matter in this light. From the somewhat obscure judgment of the trial Court it would appear that the learned Judge arrived at the conclusion that the claim of the plaintiff to get khas possession of the property was barred by some law of limitation and that could only be on the ground that the defendants, although not mukarraridars, had been in possession of the land for a number of years, over 12 years, before the institution of the suit and, indeed, that appears to me to be the ground of his judgment. If, on the other hand, there is no question about the matter and it was to be held that the suit was not barred by limitation, then clearly the plaintiff would be entitled to possession and the assessment of rent would be a matter outside the province of the trial Court. Therefore, the defendants in this case are entitled to say that the decision is in the result one reversing that of the trial Court. The defendants are entitled to seek the opinion of the higher tribunal without showing that there is any substantial question of law involved in the appeal.

Then comes the question of the value of the suit. The actual value of the land was assessed by the plaintiff in his plaint at the sum of Rs. 5,500. He also claimed mesne profits for three years prior to the institution of the suit amounting to Rs. 1,955. He further asked in cl. (1) of para. 15 of his plaint that he should be awarded in addition future mesne profits up to the date of recovery of possession from the defendants. This Court in the case of Imamuddin Khan v. Kishindeo Narain Mahatha (1), as well as in an earlier case [Mahabir Prasad Singh v. Anup Narayan Singh (2)], has held following the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State (3) that in arriving at the value of the suit for the purposes of s. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Court is entitled to take into account not merely the mesne profits claimed up to the date of the suit but also the future mesne profits and in any case up to the date of the decree of the trial Court. Now, following that principle it would appear that the future mesne profits amount to something approaching Rs. 4,000 up to the time of the appeal Court's decree and, in these circumstances, the total value of the subject-matter of the suit comes to over Rs. 10,000. It was argued that the value of the subject-matter in appeal to his Majesty in Council was not that amount but only that amount which could be assessed upon the difference between the rent which the trial Court had assessed and the right to khas possession. How this value is to be arrived at I am not very sure; but in any case I do not think that this is the proper method of calculation, for if the defendants are entitled to appeal at all they are entitled to appeal on the ground that the trial Court found that the plaintiff could not get khas possession whereas the High Court has held that he can. The value, therefore, seems to me to be the value of the property which is the subject-matter of the dispute plus mesne profits claimed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 27 (2), 43, 75—Order of adjudication—Duty of Court to fix time for applying for discharge—Power of Court to extend time even after expiry of period fixed—Expiry of time, whether ipso facto annuls adjudication—Notice to show cause against annulment, whether necessary—Order annulling adjudication for failure to apply for discharge—Appeal—Leave to appeal, whether necessary—Power of Appellate Court to grant leave—Admission by Division Bench, effect of—Inherent power of Courts to extend time.

An order of adjudication in insolvency is not ipso facto annulled by the expiry of the period fixed for applying for discharge, but has to be determined by an order of annulment, and until the adjudication is so annulled, the Court has seisin of the case and has power to extend the time for making an application for discharge under s. 27 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act regardless of the expiry of the period originally fixed. [p. 832, col. 1.]

Abraham v. Sookias (2), Arunagiri Mudaliar v. Kandaswami Mudaliar (3) and Lakhi v. Molar (4), followed.

In re Ram Krishna Misra (1), dissented from. Bhugwandas Bagla v. Haji Abu Ahmed (5) and other cases, referred to.

Section 27 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is imperative and a Court should, on making an order of adjudication, specify the time within which the debtor should make an application for discharge. [p. 831, col. 1.]

There is no provision of law for issuing a fresh notice upon an insolvent who has failed to apply for discharge within the prescribed period, to show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled. [p. 831, col. 2.]

An order annulling an adjudication on account of the failure of the debtor to apply for discharge within the time fixed by the Court falls within the purview of s. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and cannot, therefore, be appealed from except with the leave of the Court.

The admission of an appeal from such an order by a Division Bench of the High Court may, under proper circumstances, amount virtually to the granting of leave to appeal.

It is open to the Appellate Court to grant such leave even after hearing the case.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—A Court has inherent power to extend the period fixed by it for the doing of any act even though the period originally fixed by it may have expired.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Saran, dated the 25th September, 1926.

Mr. B. C. De, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Saran, dated the 25th of September, 1926, passed in an insolvency proceeding. The order runs as follows: "The application for discharge has been made after the date fixed by the Court. The order of adjudication be cancelled and this be published in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette."

A preliminary objection has been taken by the respondents that the appeal to this Court is incompetent, and the ground urged is that the appeal comes under s. 75, cl. (3) of the Act under which it was essential for the appellant to obtain leave of this Court to appeal. This would be so if the order of the Court came under s. 43 of the Act, which relates to an annulment of an order of adjudication. Mr. De on behalf of the appellant says that the order of the Court below virtually came under s. 41 of the Act, which relates to the discharge of an insolvent, and that consequently under Sch. I of the Act no leave of the Court was necessary for an appeal. This contention is based upon the fact that the insolvent's application, dated the 25th September, 1925, related to his discharge. The order of the Court, dated the 21st November, 1926, dealing with this application is a mixed order disallowing discharge of the appellant and cancelling the order of adjudication. True, the petition of appeal and the grounds set forth therein deal practically with the application for discharge and prays that the Court ought to have extended the time for an application to discharge by the insolvent and should have discharged him; but the order of adjudication cannot be ignored and this being the case, the appeal would come under s. 43 of the Act and hence the leave of the Court would be necessary. In that case Mr. De relies upon the order of this Court, dated the 8th December, 1926, and says that when the Bench presided over by Mullick, A. O. J. and Sen, J., admitted the appeal and directed notice to issue, the leave requisite was virtually granted for O. XLI, r. 11, had no application to the case. There is a good deal of force in this contention. The appeal so far has been treated as if leave was granted. I think in the circumstances of this case we should construe the order of this Court referred to above under O. XLI, r. 11 as granting leave. Even if that be not sufficient, I would, after having heard the entire case, consider that sufficient case has been made out by the appellant for obtaining leave to appeal and hereby grant the leave.

I would now come to the merits of the appeal. On the 6th of January, 1923, the Court passed an order adjudicating the appellant an insolvent. That order did not specify the time within which the insolvent was to apply for his discharge as is required by s. 27, cl. (1) of the Act. Such an order, however, was passed on the 21st of August, 1925, more than two years and a half from the date of the order of adjudication. By this order the Court fixed the 31st October, 1925, as the date before which the application for discharge should be made by the insolvent. From 31st October to 2nd November, 1925, were holidays, and the case was taken up on the 3rd November, 1925, when the Court passed the following order: "31st October to 2nd November, 1925, were holidays; taken up to day. Petition for discharge not yet filed. Issue notice for the 21st November, 1925, to show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled." On 21st November, 1925, the appellant filed a petition stating: "The petitioner begs to submit that he has been served with a notice requiring him to show cause why the insolvency proceedings should not be cancelled. He begs to submit that as he fell ill he could not file a petition for 'discharge' before. He, therefore, files this petition and prays that he may be 'discharged' under s. 74 (b)." Section 74 (b) mentioned in this application is obviously a mistake, and we fail to find out what section was really meant. It has already been observed that in the order of the 6th of January, 1923, the Court did not specify the time within which the debtor should have made an application for his discharge. Section 27 is imperative. The period within which the debtor should apply for his discharge must have been mentioned along with the order of adjudication. Under cl. (2) of that section the Court is empowered to extend the period fixed under cl. (1) of s. 27 within which the debtor shall apply for his discharge. The order of the 21st August, 1925, specifying for the first time the period within which the debtor was to apply for his discharge, was not passed along with, but more than two years after, the order of adjudication under cl. (1) of s. 27, and thus the Court contravened the provisions of law contained in that clause. On the 3rd of November, 1925, when this period expired the Court directed notice to issue upon the insolvent, fixing the 21st November, 1925, to show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled. There is no provision for issuing a fresh notice upon the insolvent calling upon him to show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled, and hence here again the order of the Court of the 3rd of November, 1925, has no sanction in the Act. Be that as it may, the Court did not, as a matter of fact, annul the adjudication under s. 43 read with s. 37 of the Act upon the expiry of the period fixed by it for the insolvent to make an application for his discharge, no application having been made for it. On the other hand, it virtually extended the time for the annulment till the 21st November, 1925, and gave an opportunity for the insolvent to obtain further extension of time under cl. (2) of s. 27 to apply for his discharge upon sufficient cause being shown in that behalf. I could not think of any other interpretation of the order of the Court calling upon the insolvent to show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled. The insolvent availed himself of the opportunity offered to him and showed cause by his application of the 21st November, 1925, stating in effect that not only that the order of adjudication should not be annulled but that he should be discharged, giving an explanation for not having made an application earlier. The Court treated it as an application for discharge and issued the usual notice upon such an application under s. 41 (1) for hearing the application and any objection thereto. On the 25th September, 1926, when the application for discharge was heard, the Court cancelled the order of adjudication, upon the ground that the application for discharge was made after the date fixed by the Court. It did not enter into the merits of the insolvent's application. Mr. De contends that the Court was bound to dispose of his application and, if it had found that the petitioner was prevented from making an application earlier for his discharge or extension of time on account of his illness the Court should have extended the time originally fixed by it for that purpose.

Mr. Shambhu Saran on behalf of the respondents repels this contention and urges that no application for extension of time having been made before the 3rd of November, 1925, fixed by the Court for making such an application for discharge, the application of the insolvent was incompetent and not fit to be entertained, inasmuch as the Court had no power to entertain such an application made after the period fixed by it had expired. This contention is based upon s. 43 of the Act, which says that the order of adjudication "shall be annulled" upon the failure of the insolvent to make an application for an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court. The contention would be perfectly sound if the Court had passed an order of annulment after the expiry of the period specified by the Court for an application to be made by the insolvent for his discharge. In other words, the application of the insolvent of the 21st of November, 1925, would not have been maintainable if before that date the Court had passed the order of annulment under s. 43. The Court, however, had not till then passed any order of annulment. The matter was, therefore, pending and the question of the annulment of the order of adjudication was not disposed of. The Court had seisin of the case and it had, to my mind, power to extend the time originally fixed by it for the insolvent to make an application for discharge in spite of the fact that the time originally fixed by the Court had expired and no application for discharge was made by that time.

Sub-section (2) of s. 27 gives to the Court power upon sufficient cause being shown "to extend the period within which the debtor shall apply for his discharge." It does not by any express words restrict the power of the Court to grant time for such an application to be made by reason of the fact that the period originally fixed had expired. The discretion to enlarge the time is large and unfettered, and we cannot read into the clause words restricting the power of the Court. That power can only be curtailed, or, as a matter of fact, withdrawn, when the Court's power to deal with the question of adjudication has come to an end by reason of its having passed the final order annulling the order of adjudication, and so long as that order is not passed by the Court it has the power vested in it by cl. (2) of s. 27 to extend the period originally fixed from time to time regardless of whether the extension is given after the time originally fixed had expired or not. The interpretation sought to be placed upon s. 43 of the Act by Mr. Shambhu Saran could only be accepted if the Court was not required to pass an order of annulment after the failure of the insolvent to make an application within the period specified by the Court. The annulment of adjudication would not ipso facto come into operation without an express order of the Court to that effect under s. 43 of the Act. This is clear from the section itself and it gains support from cl. (2) of s. 37 which says "Notice of every order annulling an adjudication shall be published in the Local Official Gazette and in such other manner as may be prescribed," so that an order annulling an adjudication has to be passed by the Court and so long as that order is not passed the question, as observed above, remains pending before the Court in spite of the expiry of the period fixed by the Court for the insolvent to make an application for his discharge. No doubt, the decision in In re Ram Krishna Misra (1) seems to support the contention of Mr. Shambhu Saran, but in that case cl. (2) of s. 27 does not seem to have been considered nor the other provisions of the Act such as contained in ss. 37 (2), 5(1) and 10 (2). The decision is based merely upon a consideration of s. 27 read with s. 47 of the Act. In this case the Court had not specified the time within which the insolvent was to make an application for his discharge in the order of adjudication, as is expressly required by cl. (1) of s. 27; so the right of the insolvent to make an application for his discharge is not barred by reason of his not complying with the order made by the Court under that clause, and the penalty prescribed by s. 43 of the Act of annulling the adjudication does not come into operation, for that section obviously refers to the expiry of the time fixed under cl. (1) of s. 27. Assuming that s. 43 did apply, it is to be read along with cl. (2) of s. 27 under which the Court has power to extend the period of limitation originally fixed by it. Though s. 43 says: "The order of adjudication shall be annulled upon the failure of the debtor to apply for his discharge within the time fixed by the Court", s. 27 (2) gives to the Court power to extend the time originally fixed. The power of the Court is not in any way hampered in extending the time by reason of the time originally fixed having expired. Such was the interpretation put upon it by the Calcutta High Court in Abraham v. Sookias (2) by Mr. Justice Krishnan of the Madras High Court in Arunagiri Mudaliar v. Kandaswami Mudaliar (3) and the Lahore High Court in Lakhi v. Molar (4). Mr. Justice Waller took a contrary view in the aforesaid Madras case. These decisions and particularly the decision of Mr. Justice Krishnan proceed upon the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Bhugwandas Bagla v. Haji Abu Ahmed (5), Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer (6), Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudarain Bhagwant Kuar (7) and Rajab Ali v. Amir Hossein (8). In Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudarain Bhagwant Kuar (7) their Lordships observed that an extension of time might be granted even after the period originally fixed had expired provided only that such extension was asked for and granted before the award was in fact made, and in Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer (6) as well as in Rajab Ali v. Amir Hossein (8) their Lordships re-affirmed the principle even where the word "shall" was used in ss. 54 and 41 of the then Code of Civil Procedure. By analogy reference may be made to s. 3 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure which says that the Court shall fix a time as it thinks reasonable for the making of an award and "shall specify such time in the order." The Court, undoubtedly, has power to extend the period originally fixed in the order of reference before the award is actually made even if an application for the extension of the time is made after the expiry of the time originally fixed. This is illustrated and made clear by an extreme case Nilmoni Dora v. Methi Sahu (M. A. No. 19 of 1925, decided by this Court on the 5th July, 1926, unreported). In that case the order of adjudication prescribed one year within which to apply for discharge. There was an appeal preferred to the High Court against the order of adjudication by a creditor of the insolvent which was ultimately dismissed. The respondent applied to the District Judge for his final discharge stating that he could not apply earlier as the appeal to the High Court by the creditor was pending. The creditor then applied under s. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for annulment of the order of adjudication on the ground that the insolvent had not applied for his discharge within the time prescribed by the Court. Two days later the insolvent made another application asking for extension of time under s. 27 (2) of the Act for making his application for discharge. The Court granted the prayer for extension holding that sufficient cause had been shown inasmuch as the insolvent had to wait for the result of the appeal preferred by the creditor against the order of adjudication. Against that order the creditor appealed to this Court urging that after the period prescribed for the application for discharge had expired the Court had no power to grant an extension of time. This Court upheld the order granting an extension of time. The insolvent in that case did not apply for his discharge within the time fixed by the Court, because the creditor had preferred an appeal against the order of adjudication of his insolvency. The adjudication was ultimately upheld by this Court and the appeal of the creditor was dismissed. If upon the interpretation sought to be put upon s. 27 the application for discharge, or for an extension of the period originally fixed for such an application, was incompetent and s. 43 ipso facto came into operation, the order of adjudication against the insolvent would necessarily have been annulled, although it was already affirmed in appeal by this Court. This would be an absurdity. If the appeal preferred against the order of adjudication was a sufficient cause for entitling the insolvent to obtain an extension of time after it had expired, there is no reason why any other cause, such as, illness, etc., should not entitle him to get such an extension. No doubt, it was argued in that case that the appeal against the order of adjudication re-opened the time fixed for an application for discharge. That would, of course, be a good ground for extending the period fixed and would rather show that the Court can grant an extension of time even after the expiry of the period originally fixed. In that case I went upon the larger question and that was that the Court's power to extend the time did not cease with the expiry of the time originally fixed until the final order cancelling the adjudication was passed. I would also refer to the inherent power of the Court to extend the period fixed even after its expiry, which always existed and was recognized by judicial decisions the effect of which was to give a statutory sanction to it in s. 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure which says "where any period is fixed or granted by the Court for the doing of any act prescribed or allowed by this Code, the Court may, in its discretion, from time to time, enlarge such period, even though the period originally fixed or granted may have expired." Again, although the words in s. 43 are "the order of adjudication shall be annulled," it adds "and the provisions of s. 37 shall apply accordingly." Therefore, as already observed, the order of adjudication does not ipso facto come into operation by the expiry of the period fixed but has to be determined, and until it is so determined the Court has the seisin of the case and has power to extend the time under s. 27 regardless of the expiry of the period originally fixed. With great respect to the learned Judges who decided the case of In re Ram Krishna Misra (1) I am afraid the aforesaid points were not brought to the notice of their Lordships.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Court's power to entertain an application for the extension of time originally fixed by it and for discharging the appellant had not spent itself by reason of the original time fixed having expired and no application having been made for extension thereof before its expiry. Upon a true construction of the application of the insolvent, dated the 21st November, 1925, he was entitled to a determination by the Court of his explanation as to why he did not make an application before either for extension of the period or for his discharge. That application could not mean anything else but an application for his discharge upon extending the period originally fixed by the Court for his making an application. The Court cancelled the order of adjudication simply because it thought that the time fixed had expired and no application for discharge was made before the expiry thereof. I have already shown that the view as to its power to extend the period for making an application for discharge is wrong, as it is not supported by the provisions in the Act or by the authorities on the subject.

The order of the learned District Judge of the 25th September, 1926, must, therefore, be set aside, and the case remanded to the Court below to dispose of the application of the insolvent, dated the 21st November, 1925, on merits. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the appellant has failed to substantiate the application made by him the Court would dismiss his application and would refuse to grant further time to make an application for his discharge. If, on the other hand, the Court thinks that there was sufficient reason for the petitioner not to have made an application before the 25th November, 1925, the Court would in its discretion fix another time within which the insolvent should make an application, failing which the Court will dispose of the case in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

Adami, J.—I agree. I would only like to observe that the difficulty which has been put before us in this case would never have arisen had the Court below exercised more care and paid due attention to the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act. In the first place, it omitted to specify in the order of adjudication the date or the period within which discharge was to be applied for by the debtor as required under s. 27, so that really the order of adjudication was altogether defective; and secondly, when on the 3rd of November, 1925, the Court found that no application for discharge had been made, according to the plain provisions of the law the Court was bound to annul the adjudication. The steps taken by the Court in calling upon the judgment-debtor to show cause were altogether unwarranted by the Act.

Macpherson, J.—I also agree. I add a few observations on the main point for determination.

That point is whether after the expiry of the period prescribed in s. 27 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Insolvency Court may still exercise the power conferred by s. 27 (2) of extending the period.

I was hitherto inclined to hold that the case in In re Ram Krishna Misra (1) had been rightly decided and that annulment under s. 43, which provision was clearly enacted to meet the special situation, was automatic, just as abatement is under the provisions of O. XXII, rr. 3 and 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But no order of the Court directing that the suit or appeal shall abate, is necessary, whereas s. 37 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act speaks of an order annulling the adjudication. If under s. 43 annulment of the adjudication followed automatically on the expiry of the period prescribed under s. 27 (1), the Legislature would not have employed in s. 37 (2) the expression "the order annulling the adjudication." In my judgment, therefore, an order of the Court is required under s. 43, annulling an adjudication.

Now, ordinarily the Court will after the expiry of the period prescribed pass, as it is entitled to do, forthwith and without any notice, an order of annulment though sometimes it is prudently directed when passing the order of adjudication that if the debtor does not apply in time, the case be put up, for order under s. 43 immediately after the period prescribed has expired. After an order of annulment, the debtor's only recourse, apart from an appeal under s. 75 (3), is to apply to the Court for leave under s. 10 (2) to file another insolvency petition. In such a case, therefore, the time cannot be extended under s. 27 (2). But it has occasionally occurred (generally owing to in-conversance with the new Act) that the order annulling the adjudication is delayed. In such circumstances, since there is no annulment till an order of annulment is passed, the order of adjudication stands and the proceeding remains pending on the file of the Insolvency Court with the result that s. 27 (2) is still applicable and enables the Court to enlarge the period within which the debtor may apply for his discharge.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

GOVERNMENT APPEAL No. 3 OF 1927.

May 19, 1927.

Present:—Sir B. K. Mullick, Kt., Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Wort.

EMPEROR—APPELLANT

versus

GHULAM NABI AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—

RESPONDENTS.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 19, 29—Institution of proceedings, meaning of—Sanction obtained after submission of charge sheet but before Magistrate takes it up for consideration—Legality of prosecution—Criminal trial—Appeal from acquittal—Presumptions in favour of accused—Magistrate having knowledge of case during investigation—Trial, propriety of—Evidence—Appreciation of evidence—Probabilities—Charge for substantive offence—Conviction for abetment—Legality of conviction.

In an appeal by Government against an acquittal the accused starts with a double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case and that until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt the accused must be presumed to be innocent and, secondly, that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from a Court, a Superior Court will not interfere until the Crown show conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible. [p. 839, col. 1.]

A Magistrate who has some knowledge of the case while it is under investigation should not try the case. But a conviction cannot be set aside or retrial ordered on this ground where the accused is not shown to have been prejudiced. [p. 840, col. 1.]

Inferences drawn from probabilities must give way to sworn testimony unless the inferences are irresistible and show that the sworn testimony must be false. [p. 840, col. 2.]

A proceeding is instituted within the meaning of ss. 29 and 30 of the Arms Act where for the first time the adjudication of a Court of competent jurisdiction is sought [p. 842, col. 1.]

'Proceedings' in s. 29 of the Arms Act mean legal proceedings in Court and not searches or arrests or investigations made by the Police in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them by the Criminal Procedure Code or any other law. [ibid.]

A complaint was made against A and B on the 30th of June, 1925. The Police continued to investigate and on the 13th of August the Police submitted a charge sheet against A, B and C. This application was considered by the Magistrate on the 17th August. Formal sanction for prosecuting C was obtained on the 17th of August and produced before the Magistrate on that date:

Held, that the prosecution of C was not bad for want of previous sanction inasmuch as no proceeding within the meaning of s. 29 of the Arms Act had been instituted against C till the 17th of August. [ibid.]

An accused can be convicted for abetment on a charge for the substantive offence. [p. 842, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decision of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 5th October, 1926, overruling that of the City Magistrate, Patna, dated the 20th August, 1926.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fazal Ali, Akbari and S. A. Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullik, A. C. J.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against the acquittal of Ghulam Husain, Ghulam Nabi and Muhammad Husain who were convicted by the City Magistrate of Patna for offences under ss. 19 (a) and 19 (f) of the Indian Arms Act but were acquitted in appeal by the Sessions Judge of Patna.

The history of the case is this :—In or about 1924, it was suspected at Patna that an illicit traffic in contraband arms was being carried on on an extensive scale and a number of officers of the Criminal Investigation Department were placed on duty to investigate. Sub-Inspector Brij Behari Lal a native of Meerut in the United Provinces joined the Criminal Investigation Department at Patna on the 24th March, 1924, and was deputed to take over the investigation on the 29th March of that year. Sub-Inspector Muhammad Taki also a native of the United Provinces joined the Department in April, 1924, and he says that he first made the acquaintance of the accused Ghulam Husain in or about that month and of Ghulam Nabi 10 or 12 days later and of the accused Muhammad Husain several months afterwards. Sub-Inspector Mathura Prasad also a native of the United Provinces did not take any part in the investigation till about February, 1925. It is the case of the prosecution that these three Police Officers soon obtained the confidence of the accused and of one Ghulam Rasul, the father of the accused Ghulam Nabi, and had some dealings in opium and cocaine with them. Brij Behari says that about June, 1924, he showed Ghulam Nabi a cake of opium obtained from the Criminal Investigation Department. He also says that between April, 1924, and June, 1925, he at various times sold both opium and cocaine to the accused. Evidence as to these transactions has been given to show the manner in which the Police Officers got into touch with the accused and put themselves on sufficiently confidential terms with them to induce them to sell to them the revolver which is the subject of the present charge on the 28th June, 1925. The first time Brij Behari Lal saw a revolver in the possession of the accused was on the 29th March, 1924.

He next saw another revolver (Ex. 1) which is the subject of the present case on the 21st May, 1924. In April, 1924, he took an advance from the Criminal Investigation Department of a sum of Rs. 180 and with this money on the 13th June, he purchased in the presence of Sub-Inspector Muhammad Taki a revolver from four persons, namely, Moghul, Ghulam Rasul, Ghulam Husain and a man called Wazir. It appears to have been the practice of the Police Officers to make a declaration before the City Magistrate every time they obtained an advance in notes from their Department. The object of this was to keep some record in the Office of the City Magistrate of the number of the notes so that they might be identified if subsequently passed to the vendors of an unlicensed weapon. In the case of the above advance of Rs. 180 no declaration was made but it appears that about a year later on the 25th June, 1925, a complaint was made by the Police Officers for the prosecution of the persons who had sold the revolver. The result of that case has not been disclosed.

Next it is alleged that in or about October, 1924, Brij Behari Lal went to the Punjab to carry on his investigations about the export of arms from there and there is evidence that he was assisted by Ghulam Husain and Ghulam Nabi for several months and that he obtained letters from Ghulam Husain introducing him to three persons in Calcutta who he says were interested in the sale of firearms. It is suggested by Brij Behari Lal that these letters were given in order to assist him in buying unlicensed revolvers but the letters themselves may equally well support the inference that they were given in order to assist him in carrying on an illicit trade in opium and cocaine. At this time Brij Behari was going under the name of Rambarat and Muhammad Taki was going under the name of Ghulam Murtaza. As will be seen later Mathura Prasad when he joined the inquiry took the name of Kesho Babu a rich banker of Benares. The letter Ex. (1) is dated the 12th August, 1924, and purports to have been addressed by Ghulam Husain to a lady. It begins "Dear Madam" and proceeds to state that the writer "is sending herewith Rambarat and requests the lady to kindly attend to him and do the needful for him without the least possible shrinking." The letter then proceeds as follows :— "As regards the price he will pay you in cash. My signatures that is with you are the same as in the present one. You can tally if you please. This letter I am giving him very gladly. Kindly see that the charges are reasonable." The next letter (Ex. 2) is addressed to a man called Zahur a tailor in Calcutta. In it the writer asks Zahur to introduce Rambarat to Nankhu a betel seller. The third letter (Ex. 3) is addressed to Nankhu and informs him that Rambarat is going to make purchases and that he should accept whatever Rambarat may give him as reward. The writer further asks that Nankhu is not to fail in introducing him to "Madam."

The learned City Magistrate has taken these letters to mean that Rambarat was to be assisted to carry on a trade in illicit arms but upon the letters as they stand it does not follow that this conclusion is the only one that can be drawn. It is equally possible that Rambarat was engaged in some other kind of illicit trade in which Ghulam Husain was trying to assist him. But what the letters do show beyond all question is that Brij Behari had within the space of something like six months completely gained the confidence of Ghulam Husain and that Ghulam Husain had no suspicion that Rambarat was not his real name or that he was a member of the Criminal Investigation Department.

Proceeding now to the next transaction in Patna we find that Brij Behari Lal returned from the Punjab sometime about February, 1925, for he says that on the 18th February of that year a second firearm was purchased by him in the presence of both the other Sub-Inspectors. This time the firearm was a pistol and the vendors were three men called Fazlu Rahman, Azizul Rahman and Jadu Sao and the price paid was Rs. 130. Brij Behari deposes that on that very day he took an advance of Rs. 130 from the Criminal Investigation Department and made a declaration in the City Magistrate's Office in which the numbers of the notes which comprised this amount were recited.

The next step taken by Brij Behari Lal was on the 21st February, 1925, when he took an advance of Rs. 500 from his Department. The evidence is that this money was never used and was refunded to the Department because the firearms which were intended to be purchased were not available.

The next proceeding is a most important one for the purposes of this case. It is alleged that on the night of the 24th March, Brij Behari went to the shop of Ghulam Nabi at Patna and entered into negotiations with Ghulam Rasul, the father of Ghulam Nabi, and with the accused Ghulam Husain for the purchase of a revolver. The evidence is that Ghulam Husain and Ghulam Rasul were both present at the shop. The learned City Magistrate has recorded Brij Behari's deposition in somewhat involved language where he speaks of the persons from whose possession the revolver was actually obtained on that day. He says that the revolver was obtained from Ghulam Rasul through Ghulam Husain. He probably means that it was delivered to Brij Behari by Ghulam Rasul with the consent of or in the presence of Ghulam Husain. The point does not, however, matter very much because it is established that Brij Behari did get possession of the revolver on that day. He says that he and Sub-Inspector Mathura Prasad who was then passing off under the assumed name of Kesho Babu were both present in the shop and that he (Brij Behari) said that the revolver must be shown to Ghulam Murtaza in order that his opinion might be taken on the condition of the weapon. After some demur the weapon was handed over to Brij Behari and he went away with it leaving as hostage Kesho Babu. There can be no doubt that the revolver was then taken to Mr. Bruce who was Brij Behari's superior officer.

Mr. Bruce handed the revolver to a photographer about 11 o'clock on the 25th and caused several photographs to be taken of it which are now before us. Brij Behari in the meantime came back and although it appears that Ghulam Rasul and Ghulam Husain were somewhat alarmed at the disappearance of the revolver he was able to calm their fears and to obtain permission for Kesho Babu to go away. He himself remained with these two accused till Inspector Muhammad Taki passing off as we have already seen as Ghulam Murtaza came with the revolver about 1 o'clock and returned it to Ghulam Rasul. That ended the transaction on that day.

Apparently no immediate step was taken to purchase it but it is said that Ghulam Husain assured Brij Behari that he could get delivery at any time he pleased.

Brij Behari says that he then had other business and went away to Calcutta and returned sometime in June to Patna. He went to Ghulam Nabi and asked for the revolver and Ghulam Nabi said that nothing could be done until Ghulam Husain had fixed the price and that he had already written to him to come to Patna. The City Magistrate has found as a fact that Ghulam Husain came to Patna somewhere between the 19th and the 23rd June, 1925. He has arrived at this finding, firstly, on the evidence of Brij Behari himself, and, secondly, upon the evidence of certain ticket collectors who proved the issue of a third class ticket on or about the 19th from Gidhour for Patna and the issue of a similar ticket on or about the 23rd from Patna to Gidhour.

The price of the revolver having been settled at Rs. 130 Brij Behari's next step was to take an advance of this sum from his Department and he says that on the 27th June he got 13 ten rupee notes and made a declaration in the Office of the City Magistrate of the numbers of these notes. He then arranged with the District Police to be in waiting at Khajekullan Police Station which is about 720 feet from the shop of Ghulam Nabi and with the other two Sub-Inspectors he proceeded that night to Ghulam Nabi's shop to take delivery. It is said that a constable named Abdul Razak belonging to the District Police also went with him but as it was raining Ghulam Nabi would not give delivery that day. Why rain should have prevented the delivery of the revolver on that day is explained by Brij Behari who says that it is the habit of those who deal in unlicensed firearms never to keep their engagements so that the chance of detection may be lessened. Brij Behari states that finding he could not get delivery that day he and his two companions returned home and the District Police were called off.

On the next night he repeated the visit by arrangement and Abdul Razak was again made to accompany him. Brij Behari says that when he and the other two Sub-Inspectors entered Ghulam Nabi's shop Ghulam Nabi and Muhammad Husain were present and the revolver and a packet containing 15 cartridges were shown to him. Ghulam Nabi, however, said that it would not be safe to deliver the weapon till the light in the Standard Medical Hall which is a druggist's shop on the other side of the road about 15 feet from Ghulam Nabi's shop was put out and the three Sub-Inspectors retired with a promise that they would come back later. About 11 o'clock the Sub-Inspectors returned and on entering the shop Ghulam Nabi brought from an inner room the revolver (Ex. 1) and the packet of cartridges and then Brij Behari Lal handed over to Ghulam Nabi the 13 ten rupee notes which he had received from his Department. Ghulam Nabi handed the notes to Muhammad Husain who put them in his pocket. The party then came out and sat on a charpai outside the verandah of the shop and Mathura Prasad slipped away saying that he was going to fetch an ekka. He took the opportunity to make a signal to Abdul Razak who was waiting at the corner of a road which is described as the ghat road about 100 feet off. Abdul Razak at once gave information to the District Police who were waiting at the thana and a force consisting of Sub-Inspector Muhammad Ishak, Sub-Inspector Jamuna Prasad and several constables appeared on the scene and found Brij Behari and Muhammad Taki seated with Ghulam Nabi on the charpai with Muhammad Husain standing up close by and on the charpai were lying the revolver (Ex. 1) and the cartridges. The persons of both Muhammad Husain and Ghulam Nabi were at once searched and in Muhammad Husain's pocket were found the 13 notes and on Ghulam Nabi's person were found two packets of a substance which looked like opium, a knife and some other things. On the charpai there were also two packets of cocaine (not two phials as has been stated by the learned Sessions Judge). Ghulam Nabi's explanation was that the two Sub-Inspectors had come to buy a shawl from him but Muhammad Ishak took Ghulam Nabi and Muhammad Husain into custody and also (apparently for the sake of appearances) the two Sub-Inspectors Brij Behari and Muhammad Taki. Mathura Prasad who was with the Inspector's party was not arrested.

The accused were then lodged in Jail and on the 30th June a formal complaint was made by Brij Behari for the prosecution of Ghulam Nabi and Muhammad Husain for offences under the Arms Act.

No mention was made in this complaint of Ghulam Husain's complicity but the Police proceeded to carry on an investigation and on the 13th August in submitting a final charge sheet against Ghulam Nabi and Muhammad Husain they also reported that there was a case against Ghulam Husain and applied for the District Magistrate's sanction which is necessary under s. 29 of the Indian Arms Act, for the prosecution of this man. That sanction was not given till the 17th August but the records of the City Magistrate's Court show that no evidence was recorded in the case against any of the accused until after that date.

The trial was protracted for many months and ended in the conviction of the three accused under ss. 19 (a) and 19 (f) of the Indian Arms Act, a consolidated sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 being passed on Ghulam Nabi, two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 on Ghulam Husain and six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 on Muhammad Husain.

The accused then appealed with the result that the learned Sessions Judge of Patna by his judgment dated the 25th October, 1926, acquitted the accused and expressed himself somewhat strongly regarding the behaviour of the three Police Officers. He found that there had been grave irregularities in the admission and exclusion of evidence in the trial Court and also that the evidence of the Police Officers was so contrary to all experience of human conduct that it could not be believed.

The question now is whether the learned Sessions Judge's findings are so clearly wrong that our interference is necessary in appeal.

In an appeal by Government from an acquittal the accused starts with a double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case and that until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt the accused must be presumed to be innocent and, secondly, that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from a Court a Superior Court will not interfere until the Crown show conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible.

We have been taken at great length through the evidence in this case and we think that having regard to the position which the Police Officers held at that time and their standing in the service and the punishment and disgrace which was bound to follow in the event of detection it is impossible to hold that they deliberately palmed off a revolver on two innocent men,

The trial Court appears to have been greatly influenced by the statements made by Brij Behari Lal of his successes in the Punjab and in Calcutta and the learned Magistrate appears to have assumed that Brij Behari with the assistance of Ghulam Nabi and Ghulam Husain actually bought other unlicensed firearms there but the evidence shows no such thing and is extremely vague and flimsy upon this point. The learned Magistrate thought that the evidence, such as it is, was admissible under ss. 14 and 15 of the Indian Evidence Act. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the learned Magistrate was under a total misconception of the law of evidence. There was no question here whether the firearm (Ex. 1) was found on the charpai of Ghulam Nabi by accident. There might have been a question whether Ghulam Nabi knew that the firearm was smuggled and whether he intentionally sold a smuggled firearm but that issue was not clearly raised. Therefore, to admit evidence of similar transactions if indeed there had been such evidence was altogether irregular and illegal. As a matter of fact there was no evidence at all of similar transactions and the question of admissibility does not really arise.

Then the learned Sessions Judge appears to have been strongly influenced by another obvious irregularity. The learned Magistrate allowed the officers of the Criminal Investigation Department to plead privilege in the matter of the alleged transactions in opium and cocaine between them on the one hand and the accused on the other from April 1924 up to March 1925. It is quite clear that as it was the intention of the prosecution to prove that the Police Officers had gained the confidence of the accused the defence were entitled to know what were the particular circumstances under which that relationship was established and if necessary to obtain details of the various alleged transactions in illicit cocaine and opium. There was a statement in the examination-in-chief of Brij Behari that the accused had purchased opium and cocaine from him but when the defence attempted to explore this allegation the Court immediately stopped further cross-examination on the ground of privilege. It is quite clear that there was no privilege at all, and the evidence was wrongly excluded. But fortunately in this case the exclusion has not made any appreciable difference. The purpose of the cross-examination was to show that the Police Officers were not on confidential terms with the accused but to pursue that line became useless as soon as it was proved that the letters Exs. 1, 2 and 3 were obtained by Brij Behari from Ghulam Husain in the winter of 1924.

It is also to be noticed that at no period was it the defence of the accused that the money which was found on Muhammad Husain's person was paid by the detectives as the price for a quantity of illicit cocaine. The learned Judge appears to have made a case in this respect which was not the case of the accused. The cross-examination with regard to previous sales would have been material if that had been the defence but in the circumstances the exclusion of the evidence did not prejudice the accused.

Finally the learned Sessions Judge has also been much influenced by the fact that the City Magistrate after having taken the declaration of the 27th June, 1925, regarding the notes proceeded to try the case himself. It does appear from the copy of the order sheet which has been produced before us that the City Magistrate had some knowledge of the case while it was under investigation and perhaps it would have been better if he had declined to try the case. But we do not think that there has been such prejudice to the accused that we must either acquit them or order a re-trial. It is obvious that the writing containing the numbers of the notes was not admissible by itself. The document cannot prove itself. But in this case evidence has been given by Brij Behari Lal that the notes which were found in Muhammad Hussain's pocket were the notes which he received from the Criminal Investigation Department and which he shewed to the City Magistrate on the 27th June and the numbers of which were taken down by the City Magistrate in the declaration which has been objected to. This evidence is quite sufficient if believed to prove that the notes found in Muhammad Husain's pocket at the arrest of the 28th June were the notes which the Sub-Inspector had obtained from the Department on the 27th.

The most important question, however, in this case is whether the incident of the 24th March has been established. If that evidence is believed there can be no doubt that Ghulam Husain and Ghulam Rasul the father of Ghulam Nabi were arranging to sell the revolver Ex. 1 to Brij Behari on that day.

[His Lordship referred to the evidence and proceeded :-]

With regard to the circumstances under which the revolver was found on the charpai it has been strenuously contended by the learned Counsel for the respondents that no sane man would deliver a revolver, especially an unlicensed revolver, in the manner alleged or allow it to remain on the charpai so that it might be discovered by any one who came. The object of the detectives being to catch Ghulam Nabi in possession of the revolver it is easy to see why they did not touch the revolver until the arrival of the raiding party. After all inferences drawn from probabilities must give way to sworn testimony unless the inferences are irresistible and show that the sworn testimony must be false and I certainly cannot agree with the learned Sessions Judge that upon the probabilities arising out of the acts of the Sub-Inspectors on the night of the 28th June it would be fair to brand them as liars and perjurers of the most dangerous type. Inferences from conduct require to be extremely strong to support adverse conclusions of this kind.

This practically concludes the case of possession and sale so far as Ghulam Nabi and Muhammad Husain are concerned.

It is clear that upon this evidence if believed the conviction of Ghulam Nabi for the possession of an unlicensed revolver and its sale is fully justified.

With regard to Muhammad Husain the question arises whether he was merely a servant. He appears to be only 14 years of age and to have been living in the house of Ghulam Nabi as a dependent member of the family. It is true that he took the notes and put them in his pocket and that he was standing close by when the Police arrested Ghulam Nabi but having regard to his age and the fact that he did not take part in any of the previous negotiations I think he should be given the benefit of the doubt and that he should be acquitted.

With regard to Ghulam Nabi there is one more fact which requires notice. Immediately on arrest he said that the two men, pointing to the detectives, had come to him to purchase a shawl. If it had been proved at the trial that there was some substance in this defence and that the two Sub-Inspectors either had had previous dealings in shawls with the accused or had arranged to buy a shawl on that night the possession of the 13 ten rupee notes by Muhammad Husain would have been explained. But unfortunately the accused have given no satisfactory evidence of any contract of this kind. They say that they are shawl merchants on a big scale in Patna. The learned trial Court says that they only sell shawls on commission but in any event they have account books and a certain number of account books were actually seized by the Police. A sum of Rs. 3,000 was also found in their cash box so that it is clear that they are men of business habits and that the sale of a shawl for Rs. 130 is not likely to escape entry in their account books. No such entry has been shown nor has any attempt been made to tender the account books. Instead of this a witness (defence witness No. 5) has been called to show that he was present on the 26th June, when two men whom he did not know arranged to buy a shawl from Ghulam Nabi and promised to come the next day. Another witness (No. 6) Muhammad Husain has been called to show that about a year earlier which would be sometime in May or June, 1925, he saw two men come and buy a shawl for Rs. 130 out of which Rs. 5 had already been paid as earnest money and Rs. 125 was paid in the witness's presence. The learned City Magistrate has examined this evidence very carefully and I agree with the reasons given by him for distrusting it. There is the fact that the best evidence, namely, that of the account books has not been produced and in the absence of that evidence oral evidence of this kind is of very little value.

Some notice must here be taken of the evidence of the search witness Hazari. This man attested the search list drawn up on the night of the 28th June, and says in his deposition that there was a man with a shawl. This is quite incorrect. The search list which he signed does not mention any shawl and Sub-Inspector Ishak is positive that there was no fifth man in or near the charpai with or without a shawl. The learned trial Magistrate has discussed this point and I agree with him that Hazari has either made a mistake or is intentionally giving false evidence.

Then there is the evidence of a quarrel between Brij Behari and Ghulam Nabi with regard to a woman named Raj Kumari. Evidence has been given by Raj Kumari, Naurangi Lal and Muhammad Husain on this point but I agree with the learned City Magistrate that it has not been proved that Brij Behari had any relations with the woman and that in any event the quarrel does not account for a false case.

Then Ghulam Nabi has also given evidence to show that his father was in Amritsar in March, 1925, and not in Patna as is alleged by Brij Behari. With regard to this the relevant evidence is that of two witnesses examined on commission at Amritsar on the 7th May, 1926. One is Ghulam Muhammad who says that about the 27th March, 1925, Ghulam Rasul purchased a large quantity of silk yarn from his shop but no books are produced and the witness's memory in the face of the evidence given for the prosecution cannot be relied upon. The other witness is a Muhammadan physician named Hakim Ali Muhammad who proves certain entries dated the 24th, 25th and 26th March, 1925, in his register and says that on those dates he treated Ghulam Rasul for cold and fever. The learned City Magistrate has shown that the books could easily have been written up to suit this case and that the witness admitted that two or three blank registers of this kind are always in his possession. It is also in evidence that although the register is supposed to be inspected by a certain Gazetted Officer no proof has been given of any such inspection in April, 1925.

In my opinion the story of the prosecution with regard to the presence of Ghulam Rasul in the shop in Patna on the 25th March, has not been shaken by the rebutting evidence given by the defence.

There remains the case of Ghulam Husain. The first objection taken with regard to it is that the sanction given by the District Magistrate on the 17th August, 1925, was bad. The facts are these:—The complaint of the 30th June, 1925, made by Brij Behari did not ask for any proceedings against Ghulam Husain. Ghulam Husain, however, was under arrest in connection with another case and the Police appear to have continued their investigations against him in the matter of the sale of the revolver (Ex. 1) along with the case against Ghulam Nabi and Muhammad Husain and on the 13th August they submitted a charge sheet in which they reported to the City Magistrate that the case was complete not only against Ghulam

Nabi, and Muhammad Husain but also against Ghulam Husain. They had no authority to prosecute Ghulam Husain without sanction but, in my opinion, no proceeding within the meaning of s. 29 of the Arms Act had been instituted against Ghulam Husain before the District Magistrate gave his sanction on the 17th August. On that date an application based upon the charge sheet of the 13th August was made by the Police to the District Magistrate and he accorded formal sanction for the prosecution of Ghulam Husain. Although Ghulam Husain had been in custody in connection with another case and although the Police had been investigating the case against him the first application by the Police for proceedings against him in Court was made on the 13th August and that application was not considered by the Magistrate until the 17th August on which date he assumed jurisdiction over Ghulam Husain and examined some evidence for the prosecution. In the meantime sanction had already been received from the District Magistrate, and I think that the provisions of s. 29 of the Indian Arms Act were complied with. No judicial or legal proceedings had been taken against Ghulam Husain before the 17th. It is true that the Police had been investigating the case against him but I think they were empowered to do this without the sanction of the District Magistrate. As in the case of a suit, a proceeding is instituted when for the first time the adjudication of a Court of competent jurisdiction is sought. "Proceedings" in s. 29 mean legal proceedings in Court and not searches or arrests or investigations made by the Police in exercise of the powers conferred upon them by the Criminal Procedure Code or any other law. In Kutroo v. Emperor (1) the opinion was expressed that "proceeding instituted" in ss. 29 and 30 of the Arms Act means legal proceedings taken in Court.

Then as regards the merits of the case against Ghulam Husain it is to be observed that he is charged with possession and sale on the 28th June. Having regard to the fact that it was he who was on the most intimate terms with Rambarat, that it was he who arranged for the delivery of the revolver on approval on the 25th March, and that it was he who settled the price between the 19th and the 23rd June the inference is irresistible that he had control over the revolver and was in joint possession of it on the 28th June. It is also quite clear that upon the evidence on the record a conviction for abetment under s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code read with s. 19 of the Indian Arms Act would be justifiable if by any chance the substantive charges failed.

In my opinion the evidence is quite sufficient to show that both Ghulam Nabi and Ghulam Husain were in possession of the revolver in March and in June 1925 and that they sold the same to Brij Behari Lal.

Therefore, the conviction of Ghulam Husain by the City Magistrate under s. 19 of the Arms Act was, in my opinion, correct.

The result is that agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge we affirm the acquittal of Muhammad Husain but disagreeing with him we set aside the acquittal of Ghulam Husain and Ghulam Nabi and restore the convictions entered by the City Magistrate and affirm the sentences passed by him.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the creditor against the order of the District Judge of Manbhum rejecting his application for adjudication of one Gauridutt Singh, a debtor of the firm, as an insolvent. Some of the other creditors opposed the application and the learned District Judge has dismissed the application on the ground that it was barred by res judicata.

The facts are shortly these: The debtor Gauridutt applied for insolvency on the 5th October, 1925. His application was dismissed for default on the 12th December, 1925. On the same date one Tejmal, another creditor, made an application for adjudicating the debtor an insolvent. This application was ultimately dismissed on the 20th February, 1926, on the ground that the applicant had failed to file process-fees as required by the Court. Before the application of Tejmal was dismissed on the 20th February, 1926, Chauthmal Bhagirath, the present appellant, had made an application on the 1st February, 1926, praying for permission to be joined hand as an applicant in the case and permission was granted on that date. But the application of Tejmal was dismissed on the 20th February on the ground of his failure to file certain process-fees which he was directed to file. The present appellant Chauthmal Bhagirath thereupon filed the present application on the 24th February, 1926, and the ground upon which he made this application was that (the debtor had with intent to defeat and delay his creditors departed from his dwelling-house and usual place of business and was deliberately absenting himself so as to deprive his creditors of the means of communication with him and that this was an act of insolvency within the meaning of s. 6 (d); Provincial Insolvency Act). Upon this application two of the creditors, namely, Khem Karan Das Jokhram and Gauridutt Ganesh Lall appeared and opposed the adjudication of the debtor as an insolvent.

It appears from the order of the learned District Judge that the application of the present appellant was opposed on three grounds: firstly, that the applicant's alleged dues were bogus, secondly that the application was time-barred, and thirdly, that it was barred by res judicata. The learned District Judge has found that the debt of the applicant was not a bogus debt and that the application was not time-barred, but he has dismissed the application on the ground of res judicata, because in the proceeding arising out of Tejmal's application the present appellant was also a party and that the application had been dismissed by the District Judge for default in payment of process-fees. In my opinion the dismissal of the application of Tejmal did not operate as res judicata in the present proceeding. It appears that the dismissal of Tejmal's application was under the provisions of O. IX, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, and dismissal of an application for insolvency under O. IX, r. 2, of the Code does not prevent the applicant from presenting a fresh application. This was the view expressed by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Aziz v Habid Mistri (1) and, in my opinion, this is the correct view.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents who are some of the opposing creditors that the dismissal was not under O. IX, r. 2, but one under O. IX, r. 8, and that a fresh application is barred under O. IX, r. 9, but in order to bring the case under O. IX, r. 8, it has to be established that the defendants did appear on the date the application was dismissed. There is nothing on the record to show it. Mr. A. B. Mukerji refers to the postal receipts or acknowledgments showing service of notice upon the creditors, but the application of Tejmal was dismissed for non-payment of process-fees and although notices might have been served there is nothing to show that the creditors did appear on the date on which the application was dismissed. I am, therefore, of opinion that the dismissal was one under O. IX, r. 2, and the present application is not barred by res judicata.

It is further pointed out on behalf of the appellant that the previous application of Tejmal was based on an act of insolvency different from the one alleged in the present application of the appellant and that is another reason for holding that the present application cannot be barred by res judicata. It has been contended on behalf of the respondent that the debtor cannot be adjudicated an insolvent inasmuch as it has not been proved that he departed from his dwelling-house or his usual place of business or otherwise absented himself with intent to defeat or delay his creditors as required by cl. (d), s. 6, Provincial Insolvency Act. In the first place this objection does not appear to have been taken before the learned District Judge. In the second place, I find that there is evidence of the fact that the insolvent had ceased to live in his usual dwelling-house and was absent for thirteen or fourteen months on the date the evidence was given, namely, the 14th February, 1927, and that his whereabouts were unknown.

It is contended that the evidence as required by law was evidence of the intention of the debtor and that positive evidence had to be given that he absented himself with intent to defeat or delay the creditors. It is impossible for any witness to come and swear as regards the intention of the debtor. The intention can be gathered only from the circumstances of the case and having regard to the fact that the debtor in the present case left his place of residence without paying his debts and that his whereabouts were unknown the Court could reasonably infer that he absented himself with the intention of defeating or delaying his creditors. I am, therefore, of opinion that the ground upon which the application was dismissed cannot be maintained.

The result is that the debtor Gauridutt must be and is hereby adjudicated an insolvent and it is directed that he do apply for his discharge before the District Judge within six months from this date. The appellant is entitled to his costs from the opposing creditors. Hearing-fees three gold mohurs.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for bhaoli rent—Plaintiff's evidence unreliable—Court, whether bound to act on defendant's admission—Duty of Court to arrive at an estimate on available materials.

In a suit for bhaoli rent an estimate as to the amount of rent payable has to be arrived at from the materials at the disposal of the Court, and the Court is not bound, therefore, to rely upon the admission of the defendant alone even though it has discarded the evidence of the plaintiff in its entirety. Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 30th of April, 1924.

Sir Sultan Ahmad, Kt., Messrs. Nawal Kishore Prasad II and Kedar Nath Verma, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Hasan Imam and Kailaspati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Wort, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Gaya in a suit brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant for nakdi and bhaoli rents for the years 1326 to 1329. In this appeal no question arises regarding nakdi rent, nor is there any question with regard to the bhaoli rent for the year 1326. The learned Subordinate Judge decided that in any event the plaintiffs were not entitled to bhaoli rent for the year 1326, by reason of the fact that the plaintiffs had already recovered from the defendant's predecessors-in-title (the former tenants, that is to say) for that year. The short point of the case relates to the amount of bhaoli rents for the years 1327 to 1329 only.

The allegation contained in the plaint was that as regards a portion of the lands in suit, that is to say, some, twenty-nine bighas, they had been deliberately left parti or fallow by the defendant, but in the written statement the defendant denies this allegation and states that although crops were raised, they were of a very poor quality by reason of the difficulties relating to irrigation. In the result, I think there is no real dispute as to the fact that crops were raised on the total area of land in relation to which bhaoli rent was to be paid, and there is no dispute as to that total area, being sixty bighas approximately.

The plaintiff in support of his case relied upon oral as well as documentary evidence and the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment sets out that evidence under five heads. As regards the first head that was evidence or admissions in a former suit by one Sheosaran Singh, the learned Judge rejects it as also he rejects the evidence under the fourth head. The fourth item was the report of the Commissioner appointed to make a cutting experiment in this case in the year 1923. The learned Subordinate Judge also rejects the fifth item of evidence. Now there are two items, namely, the second and third, upon which the Court placed reliance. The first of these was a consent judgment against the tenants of the defendant in a suit for rent for the years 1320 to 1323. This suit was brought against some sixty-four tenants of which forty-two apparently appealed and in the Appeal Court, as regards these forty-two tenants, the decrees were modified on the basis that for the year 1320 the defendant (she being the plaintiff in that suit) was entitled at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ maunds, for the year 1321, 10 maunds for the year 1322 $14\frac{1}{2}$ maunds and for the year 1323 at the rate $13\frac{1}{2}$ maunds of paddy.

The second item upon which the learned Subordinate Judge relies was a decision in a s. 69 proceeding in which it was found that forty-two bighas yielded some 607 maunds odd. But I do not think that he was right in so relying upon that decision for the reason that there is no distinct finding in this case that the land in relation to which s. 69 proceeding was brought was similar in any way to the land in suit. The respondents in this appeal rely upon the evidence of one of their own witnesses (P. W. No. 2) to show similarly in which he made a statement that these lands in respect of which s. 69 proceeding was taken, produced an outturn of 16-annas paddy in 1331 and 12-annas in 1326 the same was the outturn for the year 1327 as also for 1321, whereas in 1328 the outturn was 14-annas and in the year 1329, 15-annas. In my judgment that cannot be stated to be evidence of the similarity of the lands but rather, as it states in fact, the relation of the output of the respective years there mentioned as compared with the year 1331. In my judgment, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge in relying upon the s. 69 proceeding was clearly wrong.

It comes to this, therefore, that so far as the plaintiffs' evidence is concerned, the whole of it is rejected including the Commissioner's appraisal in this particular case. The only part of the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs upon which the learned Judge in the Court below relies is that of the decrees obtained by the defendant against her tenants for the years 1320 to 1323. I should have said that in the defendant's evidence there was an admission that in respect of the years in question there was an output of paddy from two to four maunds per bigha and respective rabi crops from two to two and a half maunds per bigha. Now the argument of Sir Sultan Ahmad appearing on behalf of the appellant is that in this state of affairs, the learned Subordinate Judge having rejected in its entirety the evidence of the plaintiffs, he has nothing to go upon but the admissions contained in the evidence of the defendant, and that the most that can be awarded to the plaintiffs in respect of the bhaoli rent is the amount or the quantity which is admitted by the defendant herself. In my judgment, it would be unsafe if not unjust in a case of this character, where it is clear that an estimate is to be arrived at from the materials at the disposal of the Court, to rely upon the admission of the defendant alone especially when we have some evidence in the case of what the land can produce although in earlier years. It is quite clear from this admission that it does not bear a strict relation to the actual facts of the case, that is to say, it is an under-estimate on the part of the defendant of what was actually produced on this land in the years in question. That being so it seems to me that this Court is thrown back upon the decision in the suit with regard to the years 1320 to 1323 to which I have just referred. I have already stated the quantity per bigha of produce for four years, and, working out an average of the four years, the crop is approximately ten maunds per bigha. In my opinion, this would be in the circumstances of the case a fair estimate of the crop on which basis the plaintiffs are entitled to recover in this case. As I understand the learned Counsel for the appellant is agreeable to accepting what I may describe as flat rate for the land which has been alleged by the plaintiffs to be deliberately allowed to remain parti as also for the lands which it is admitted on all hands are being cultivated. In the result, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover bhaoli rent at the rate of ten maunds per bigha in regard to paddy and half that rate in regard to rabi. In other respects the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judges should be affirmed.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed to the extent indicated, but there will be no costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 257—Re-calling of prosecution witnesses—Accused's right to cross-examine them—Applicability of s. 257 to summons cases.

The only object of re-calling a prosecution witness as a defence witness under s. 257, Criminal Procedure Code, is to secure an opportunity to the accused for further cross-examination. [p. 847, col. 2.]

Once a summons has been issued to a prosecution witness under s. 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the witness is before the Court, there is no jurisdiction in the Court to dictate to the accused the terms upon which the examination of the witness shall be conducted. If the accused wishes to put questions in cross-examination the Magistrate is bound to allow it. [ibid.]

The principle of s. 257 applies to summons cases also. [ibid.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Officiating Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, upholding that of the Deputy Commissioner, Ranchi, dated the 19th September, 1927, which in return upheld an order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Gumla, dated the 1st September, 1927.

Messrs. S. P. Varma, Anand Prasad and B. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was accused before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Ranchi of an offence under s. 447 of the Indian Penal Code. The relevant date for our purposes is the 4th July, 1927. On that date the complainant was examined and cross-examined and at 2.30 P. M. the trial Court stopped the case in order to take up some other cases which were urgent. At 5 o'clock he resumed the trial of the petitioner's case and the cross-examination of the complainant went on for about twenty minutes. Then the trial Court intimated to the Pleader for the petitioner that the cross-examination was getting irrelevant and should be curtailed. The petitioner's Pleader informed the Court that he intended to go on with the cross-examination for several hours more and finding the questions put by the Pleader after this to be irrelevant the trial Court stopped the cross-examination. He then called upon the petitioner to cross-examine the four remaining prosecution witnesses. The Pleader replied that unless he was allowed to cross-examine the complainant in his own way he would not cross-examine the other four witnesses. The trial Court thereupon discharged these four witnesses and examined the accused and adjourned the case until the 16th July for hearing the defence witnesses.

In the meantime the Deputy Commissioner was moved by the petitioner to transfer the case to some other Court but on the 19th July, after hearing the explanation of the trial Court the Deputy Commissioner declined to allow a transfer but suggested that the four prosecution witnesses who had not been cross-examined should be re-summoned if the petitioner so chose as defence witnesses and that such questions should be put to them as were admissible in examination-in-chief.

On the 29th August, the witnesses cited by the petitioner for his defence as well as the four prosecution witnesses who had not been cross-examined appeared in Court in answer to the Court's summons. The petitioner then asked permission to cross-examine these four witnesses but the trial Court refused the request and took the examination and cross-examination of five of the defence witnesses and adjourned the case to the 31st August. It appears that the petitioner declined to examine the prosecution witnesses as his defence witnesses and, therefore, they were discharged.

On the 31st August the case was adjourned till the 1st September when the petitioner was convicted under s. 447 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two weeks and a fine of Rs. 25.

An appeal was filed against this order to the Deputy Commissioner but was dismissed after a full hearing.

Thereupon an application was made in revision to the Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that although if this had been a warrant case the provisions of s. 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure would have compelled the trial Court to allow the cross-examination of the four prosecution witnesses the case being a summons case the procedure of s. 257 did not apply and that the trial Court had full liberty to cut down the cross-examination provided the general scheme for the trial of summons cases was not violated. The petitioner now comes before me in revision.

I think it is clear that the petitioner's Pleader adopted a wholly unjustifiable attitude on the 4th July. It is not now suggested before me that the time given for the cross-examination of the complainant was inadequate and instead of agreeing to cross-examine the four prosecution witnesses when called upon to do so he adopted a somewhat disrespectful attitude and declined to go on with the case if he was not allowed to cross-examine the complainant according to his own ideas and for as long as he liked. This was an altogether unjustifiable position and the trial Court was fully competent to discharge the witnesses when the petitioner's Pleader declined to cross-examine them. Therefore, when an application was made to the trial Court to re-summon these prosecution witnesses for cross-examination on the analogy of the provisions contained in s. 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure it would have been open to that Court to refuse to summon them on the ground that an opportunity for cross-examination had already been given. The same ground could also have been taken by the learned Deputy Commissioner when he dealt with the transfer matter. But, in my opinion, the learned Deputy Commissioner while allowing the prosecution witnesses to be re-called was wrong in limiting the scope of the examination. Obviously it was not to the interest of the petitioner to recall the prosecution witnesses and put to them such questions as would be only permissible in examination-in-chief. Such a course would have only made the case against him worse and the only object of re-calling prosecution witnesses as defence witnesses was to secure an opportunity for further cross-examination. Such an opportunity is not usually given but the provisions of s. 257 are exceptional and in exceptional cases the accused after a witness has been called for the prosecution and discharged is allowed a further opportunity of supplementing the cross-examination of that witness by again cross-examining him. Once a summons has been issued and the witness is before the Court it does not seem to me that there is any jurisdiction in the Court to dictate to the accused the terms upon which the examination of the witness shall be conducted. If the accused wishes to put questions in cross-examination the Magistrate is bound to allow it. I think, therefore, that the accused should have been allowed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses who were present on the 29th August. Though it was a summons case I think the principle of s. 257 applies.

It seems, therefore, to me that the proper course now is to set aside the order of the learned Deputy Commissioner and to direct that the cross-examination of Bania Oraon, Madho Oraon, Jakhua Oraon and Kaila Oraon be taken either by the learned Deputy Commissioner himself or by any other officer to whom the case may be remanded by him for that purpose and that after the evidence has been so taken the appeal be re-heard by the learned Deputy Commissioner according to law.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 90—Death of defendant before decree—Objection to validity of decree in execution, whether maintainable—Prayers under s. 47 and O. XXI, r. 90, whether can be joined together.

In execution proceedings the objection that the decree was a nullity since one of the judgment-debtors had died before the decree was passed, can be put forward.

A prayer under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, can be joined with a prayer under O. XXI, r. 90 in one application. It is only reasonable that the Executing Court should deal with every objection which the judgment-debtors put forward to an execution sale in one and the same proceeding.

Per Macpherson, J.—Even if it is necessary for the objectors to make an election in the first Court, that Court should put them to their election and should not itself choose at a late stage which of the two objections it should consider and which it should not consider.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Purnea, dated the 26th June, 1926, confirming that of the Munsif, Araria, dated the 6th June, 1925.

Mr. Hasan Jan, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. L. Nandkeolyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—A decree having been passed against the father of the appellants together with other judgment-debtors and the property of the appellants having been put up for sale in execution of the decree and sold to a third person, the appellants came forward with an application under s. 47 and under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure seeking to have the sale set aside. The objections put forward to the sale were firstly, that there had been irregularities in connection with the proclamation and the process leading to the sale, and, secondly, that the decree in execution of which the property was sold was in fact a nullity inasmuch as the father of the appellants had died before the decree in the suit was passed.

The Courts below have rejected the application of the appellants finding in the first place, that there was no such irregularity as would warrant setting aside the sale and, secondly, that the two grounds put forward in the petition could not form the subject of one and the same application. The Courts below have held that a prayer under s. 47 of the Code could not be joined in one application with a prayer under O. XXI, r. 90 and, therefore, they rejected the application to set aside the sale on the ground of the decree being a nullity.

It has been decided by a Bench of this Court that in execution proceedings the objection can be put forward that the decree was a nullity since one of the judgment-debtors had died before the decree was passed. Neither the Courts below nor the Advocate in this Court have put forward any decision to the effect that a prayer under s. 47 cannot be joined with a prayer under O. XXI, r. 90 in one application, and there seems to be no good reason for disallowing the joinder of the two applications. The application of the appellants was to have the sale set aside, and it would be unreasonable that, because there were two reasons for setting aside the sale, there must be two applications. It is only reasonable that the Executing Court should deal with every objection which the judgment-debtors put forward in one and the same proceeding.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed and the Executing Court, having disposed of the objection under O. XXI, r. 90, should now enquire into the objection under s. 47. Costs in the Courts below will follow the result.

Macpherson, J.—I agree. It is admitted that neither on principle nor on authority can the orders of the Courts below be supported. It may further be indicated that had it, in fact, been necessary for the objectors to make an election in the first Court, that Court ought to have put them to their election and not have itself chosen at a late stage which of the two objections it should consider and which it should not consider.

CIVIL REGULAR SUIT No. 565 of 1926.

April 29, 1927.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chari.

SURATEE BARA BAZAAR Co. LTD.—PLAINTIFFSversusMUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF*RANGOON—DEFENDANTS.

City of Rangoon Municipal Act (VI of 1922), ss. 25, 26, 113, 192, 203—Erection of urinals—Private person when entitled to injunction—Principles—Torts—Acts authorised by Legislature—Nuisance to private person—Remedies—Local bodies, duties of—Provision for compensation, whether bars suit for injunction—Likelihood of misuse by public, whether gives cause of action.

If the Legislature authorises a specific act to be done, and if the performance of that act and of every other subsidiary act necessary for, and incidental to, the performance of the main act, creates nuisance or causes damage, the local body authorised to perform the act cannot be restrained by injunction nor made liable for damage except on the ground of negligence, and not even on that ground, if the mode of performance is also prescribed and the act is performed in the prescribed manner. [p. 853, col. 1.]

If the act can be performed without creating a nuisance and without causing injury or damage then the local body performing the act would be liable if the act is performed in such a manner as to create nuisance or cause damage. [ibid.]

Where the Legislature in general terms gives powers to a local body to perform certain acts then it is a matter of construction of the Act, whether the Legislature intended (a) merely to confer permissive right on the local body, or (b) to enjoin the performance of an obligatory duty. The local body, when exercising powers in the performance of a permissive act is in no higher position than a private person and must perform the prescribed acts without creating a nuisance or infringing private rights. Different considerations arise in the performance of obligatory duties and it then becomes necessary to see whether the Legislature intended the act to be performed even if it does create nuisance. Where the Legislature is silent on this point, then the nature of the duty imposed must be considered to ascertain whether the inevitable consequence of the performance of the act is to create a nuisance or otherwise affect the rights of private persons. If it is, it may be presumed that the Legislature contemplated the creation of a nuisance or the causing of a certain amount of damage and injury to private persons, as a consequence of the performance of the duty imposed. [p. 853, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where, in the performance of an act, an option is given to the local body, e. g., in the selection of a site or in the deciding of the necessity for the performance of the act at a particular time, then the choice of the local body of either place or time cannot be questioned unless the choice has not been made bona fide. [p. 853, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Under the City of Rangoon Municipal Act a duty is imposed on the Corporation to erect urinals and water closets for public convenience on Municipal lands and the choice of the place where they are to be erected and the time when they become necessary are left to the Corporation. [p. 854, col. 2.]

The erection of structures is not merely a permissive act, and the principles applicable are those which apply to the carrying out of imperative duties imposed on a local body. [p. 855, col. 1.]

If the erection of a latrine does not necessarily give rise to a cause of action, the mere fact that the latrines may give rise to a nuisance on account of misuse by the public will not entitle a plaintiff to a cause of action in anticipation. The remedy of the plaintiff in such a case is to wait till the latrine is actually misused and has become a nuisance when he can ask the Court to grant relief. [ibid.]

Obiter.—Section 192 of the City of Rangoon Municipal Act does not deprive a private person of his Common Law right to an injunction and leave him merely a right to compensation. [p. 855, col. 2.]

It is a cardinal principle of the construction of Statutes that no legislative enactment should be so construed as to take away the Common Law rights of private persons. [ibid.]

Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the Soratee Bara Bazaar Company, Limited, against the Municipal Corporation of the City of Rangoon for an injunction to restrain the defendant Corporation from erecting or causing to be erected a latrine in Dalhousie Street on the site selected by it, which is the north-east corner of Dalhousie Street and the 24th Street. The allegations in the plaint are that the site chosen by the Corporation is not a proper or convenient site and that in the selection of this site the Corporation has not observed the provisions of the Act which enjoin it to cause the least practicable nuisance. The plaintiff Company claims that the Corporation acted negligently in erecting a latrine in a main thoroughfare particularly of the type proposed to be erected and in erecting it close to the shops owned by the plaintiff Company, thereby causing more nuisance than is necessary. The plaintiff also alleges that the latrine proposed to be erected will constitute a nuisance in that it will obscure the view from the street of the goods and stock-in-trade of the tenants of the plaintiff who occupy the shops opposite to the latrine, that it will obstruct the access of air and light to such shops, that as a large number of the customers of these shops are Burmese ladies they will not resort to the shops on account of the presence of the latrine, that the latrine itself will create an offensive smell and that the persons using the latrine will obstruct the foot-path in front of the shops. The plaintiff also complains that the rental value of the premises will be depreciated on account of the above facts. Three issues were raised and later an additional one as follows:—

(1) Is the erection of the latrine in question a nuisance and if so does it give rise to an actionable claim against the Corporation?

(2) Is the defendant-Corporation protected from liability by the provisions of the City of Rangoon Municipal Act and if so what is the extent and result of that exemption from liability?

(3) To what relief if any is the plaintiff entitled? Additional issue:—

Is the plaintiff entitled to the injunction claimed on the ground that the erection of the latrine interferes with the enjoyment of the plaintiffs' property by the tenants to whom it had been let?

Before dealing with the relevant provisions of the Rangoon Municipal Act and discussing the evidence I shall briefly state the principles deducible from the rulings on the subject. These are weighty rulings and there is no difficulty in arriving at the general principles applicable to this class of cases though the application of those principles to any particular case is a matter of some difficulty. The first case I shall refer to is the case of Hammersmith and City Ry. v. Brand (1). It is unnecessary to deal with this case at length as it merely reiterated a settled principle. According to Lord Blackburn in Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2), which will be considered later, Hammersmith Railway case (1) settled beyond controversy the principle that, where the Legislature directs that a thing shall at all events be done the doing of which if not authorised by the Legislature will entitle anyone to action, that right of action is taken away. Therefore, where the doing of an act is expressly authorised by the Legislature, then no liability of any kind attaches to the person performing that act, with the result that all the rights of the injured party, including the right of compensation, unless it is expressly reserved, are taken away. The next case to be considered is Vernon v. St. James West Minster Vestry (3). This was a case under s. 88 of the Metropolitan Local Management Act the wording of which is that "it shall be lawful for every Vestry and District Board to provide and maintain urinals . . . in situations where they deem such accommodation to be required." The Vestry purporting to act under the power given by this section erected a urinal in a mews which was a cul de sac. The result would have been that a large number of people would go into the mews who would not otherwise have done so. Vice-Chancellor Mellins granted the injunction asked for and I shall refer to one or two passages in his judgment which have a bearing on the present case. At page 458* the learned Vice-Chancellor says:—"Now if the question between the parties was merely whether one situation or another was the more fit, I should be clearly of opinion that it was a question to be decided by the Vestry, they being authorised by the Act to place urinals in situations where they deemed them necessary." The matter was taken up to the Court of Appeal and the following propositions can be deduced from the judgment of Lord Justice Cotton:—(1) Nobody is authorised to commit a nuisance or is to be held so authorised under an Act of Parliament unless it appears from express words or by necessary implication that the act was to be done or might be done notwithstanding its tending to the creation of a nuisance. (2) That there is no presumption that no water-closet or urinal can possibly be erected without being a nuisance and, therefore, the mere authorisation by Parliament of the erection of a urinal does not, by itself or by necessary implication, empower the local body to erect it if it is a nuisance. Lush, L. J., explains the wording of the section and draws attention to the fact that a Vestry had no power to obstruct any part of a public street way and the words "it shall be lawful" with which the section begins was intended to legalise such an erection on the part of the Vestry. If this be so, it follows that the provision of the Statute does not enjoin a statutory duty on the Vestry but was merely intended to legalise an act which would otherwise have been illegal. Sellers v. Matlock Bath Local Board (4) also related to the erection of a urinal which it was contended was authorised by s. 39 of the English Public Healths Act,

(4) (1885) 14 Q. B. D. 928; 52 L. T. 762.

1875. That section enacts that any urban authority may, if they think fit, provide and maintain in proper and convenient situations urinals . . . and other similar conveniences for public accommodation. In that case, it was found as a fact that the Local Board had erected the urinal on a portion of private ground. Mr. Justice Denman held on the evidence before him that the urinal was a nuisance and that the authority to erect a urinal did not authorise the creation of a nuisance and that s. 308 which empowered the Local Board to give compensation to any person who sustains damage under the Act did not take away the right by injunction since the Board had no power to erect urinals on private grounds.

It is assumed by Mr. Justice Denman that if there had been such a power the effect of that section, viz., 308 would be to relegate the party to the recovery of compensation. A similar argument had been adduced in the case before me and I draw attention to this particular passage for that reason. In the case of Biddulph v. St. George's Vestry (5) a urinal was erected by the Vestry of St. George purporting to act under powers conferred on them by s. 88 of the Act for the better local management of the Metropolis, the terms of which I have already given. In the trial Court, Stewart, Vice-Chancellor, granted an injunction. He was of opinion that a urinal could be constructed in such a manner and at such a spot as not to be a nuisance and as there were no compulsory powers in the Act and as, in his opinion, the construction of the urinal would have been an arbitrary exercise of power he granted the injunction. On appeal the injunction was dissolved; Lord Justice Knight-Bruce basing his decision on the ground that the evidence did not show that it would be certain or probable that the proposed urinal would be a nuisance. In answer to the argument that the powers given by the Act of Parliament were being exercised unnecessarily and injuriously to private property, the learned Lord Justice stated that the Courts will interfere in cases where there is not a bona fide exercise of the power given by Parliament, but if the power is being exercised bona fide, the Courts will not interfere in such exercise of the power. I shall now deal with the important case of Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2). In that case the Managers of the Metropolitan Asylum who were incorporated under the Metropolitan Poor Act for the purpose of providing hospitals for the sick poor of the Metropolis, proposed to erect a small-pox hospital in Hampstead. An injunction had been granted against them and on appeal to the House of Lords that body ordered the appeal to be dismissed. Lord Selborne was of opinion that there was nothing in the Act which could be construed as authorising the creation of a nuisance and that the powers under the Act, which were optional, were not intended by the Legislature to be exercised at the expense of or so as to interfere with any man's private right. Lord Blackburn expressed the opinion that the burden was on the Metropolitan Asylum to establish that the Legislature intended to take away the rights of individuals and that they had failed to show that, by express words or necessary implication, the Legislature intended to do so. Lord Watson after referring to the case of Hammersmith and City Ry. v. Brand (1) as laying down the proposition that where a specific act in a specific place and in a specific manner is directed to be done, the public body doing that act cannot be restrained by injunction from doing it though such act may be a nuisance, except in cases where the act is being done negligently, stated that if it is proved that the direction of the Act cannot be complied with at all without creating a nuisance, then no injunction could issue, but the justification in such cases depended on the imperative nature of the command imposed by the Legislature and the impossibility of obeying that command without infringing private rights. If, however, the order of the Legislature can be carried out without nuisance then the protection of the Statute cannot be claimed. In the case of acts which are permissive as distinguished from imperative duties, the performance of the act being left to the discretion of the local body empowered to do the act, it is a reasonable inference that the Legislature intended the discretion to be exercised in strict conformity with private rights and that the Legislature did not intend to confer a license to commit nuisance in any place selected by the local body. In the case of

L. B. & S. C. Ry. v. Truman (6) the Railway Company which was authorised to carry cattle was also empowered to purchase lands "in such places as should be deemed eligible for the purpose of making and providing additional stations ... warehouses and other buildings and conveniences for receiving, depositing, loading or keeping any cattle, or any goods....." The Railway Company erected some cattle pens and a yard and used them for the purpose of landing and unloading daily and nightly the cattle which they were carrying. The adjoining occupiers sought to restrain the Company by injunction. In the course of his judgment Lord Halsbury laid down as undoubted law the proposition that a Railway Company created for the purpose of carrying goods, or passengers or cattle is protected in the use of the functions with which Parliament has entrusted it, if such use necessarily involves the creation of what would otherwise be a nuisance. He was also of opinion that it was not necessary to enquire whether the sites were selected with due regard to public convenience because in his view as the Company was acting under its statutory authority the absolute discretion of selecting the site was in the Company. Lord Selborne in his judgment after laying down the general principle that if the use made by the Company of the land is authorised by the Act, there is no cause of action against it not even for negligence if the particular mode of performing the Act is authorised, dealt with the argument that the Company having option as to place was bound to exercise that option so that no adjoining land owner should suffer detriment from the subsequent use of the land for the authorised purpose. His Lordship showed the unsoundness of this argument, since no matter what site is selected the adjacent land owner was bound to be affected and even if a site without any building on the adjoining lands were selected the owner may afterwards think fit to build a house on his property, which will place the Company in the same difficulty. Lord Blackburn laid down the principle as follows:—"If on the true construction of a Statute it appears to be the intention of the Legislature that powers should be exercised, the proper exercise of which may occasion a nuisance to the owners of neighbouring land, and that this should be free from liability to an action for damages, or an injunction to prevent the continued proper exercise of these powers, effect must be given to the intention of the Legislature." Whether the Legislature had or had not such an intention is a matter of construction of the Statute. Later referring to the words "in such places as shall be deemed eligible," Lord Blackburn was of opinion that on a true construction of the Act the Legislature intended the Railway Company to be the judges of this and also that the Company did on very sufficient grounds bona fide judge it requisite that there should be further conveniences for carrying cattle and did bona fide think the spot eligible. Dealing with the Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (2) his Lordship pointed out that in that case in the words of Lord Justice Bowen there was no element of compulsion nor any indication of an intention to interfere with private rights. The next case cited before me is that of West v. Bristol Tramways Co. (7). In that case the Company which was under an obligation to pave certain portions of the road with wood paving used wood blocks coated with creosote which caused damage. Lord Alverstone pointed out that if the doing of a particular thing was authorised no action will lie in the absence of negligence and Sir Gorrell Barnes showed how on the true construction of the Statute the use of creosote wood was not authorised expressly or by necessary implication, i. e., either in express terms or by authorising work necessarily involving its use. In all such cases if the doing of an act is authorised and it can be done without causing injury, but is done so as to cause injury, the person doing that act will be liable. In the case of Prices Patent Candle Co. Ltd. v. London County Council (8) the Act specifically provided that the power conferred must be carried out without creating a nuisance. The exact decision, therefore, has no bearing upon the present case but Cozens Hardy, M. R., laid down certain general principles. (1) The presumption is that a public body is not authorised to create a nuisance or otherwise affect private rights unless compensation is provided, but (2) where the language is clear it overrides this presumption and a nuisance can be created even without compensation, (3) if the Statute when conferring a power provides that no nuisance must be created it affords no defence to say that the work cannot be done without creating a nuisance. I do not propose to deal with the Indian and Burma cases that have been cited before me. They lay down no new principle and are merely applications of the principles deducible from the authorities I have cited, to the particular facts of the cases with which the Courts were dealing. These principles so far as they are material for the consideration of the present case are :—

(1) If the Legislature authorises a specific act to be done, and if the performance of that act and of every other subsidiary act necessary for and incidental to the performance of the main act, creates nuisance or causes damage, the local body authorised to perform the act cannot be restrained by injunction nor made liable for damage except on the ground of negligence, and not even on that ground, if the mode of performance is also prescribed and the act is performed in the prescribed manner. This last is merely an application of the general principle involved in the first part of the rule. From this it follows—

(2) that if the act can be performed without creating a nuisance and without causing injury or damage then the local body performing the act would be liable if the act is performed in such a manner as to create nuisance or cause damage. The class of cases in which these principles were applied was mainly Railway cases but the principles themselves are of general application. The words "specific act" used by me must not be construed as meaning a single act. It not only includes such an act but also applies to the repeated performance of a series of acts of the same kind at different times or at different places. In such cases the Legislature contemplates a recurrent performance of the act.

(3) Where the Legislature in general terms gives powers to a local body to perform certain acts then it is a matter of construction of the Act, whether the Legislature intended (a) merely to confer permissive right on the local body or (b) to enjoin the performance of an obligatory duty. The examples of the first class of cases are where a private person or a local body is allowed to perform acts for profit. In such cases the presumption is that the performance of the act is not primarily intended for the public benefit and is, therefore, entirely optional. Even in cases of acts which are for the benefit of the public, the performance may be optional. The local body, when exercising powers in the performance of a permissive act is in no higher position than a private person and must perform the prescribed acts without creating a nuisance or infringing private rights. Different considerations arise in the performance of obligatory duties. It then becomes necessary to see whether the Legislature intended the act to be performed even if it does create nuisance. No difficulty, of course, can arise if the Legislature expressly says that the act must be performed without creating a nuisance but where the Legislature is silent on this point, then the nature of the duty imposed must be considered to ascertain whether the inevitable consequence of the performance of the act is to create a nuisance or otherwise affect the rights of private persons. If it is, it may be presumed that the Legislature contemplated the creation of a nuisance or the causing of a certain amount of damage and injury to private persons, as a consequence of the performance of the duty imposed.

(4) Where in the performance of an act an option is given to the local body, e. g., in the selection of a site or in the deciding of the necessity for the performance of the act at a particular time, then the choice of the local body of either place or time cannot be questioned unless the choice has not been made bona fide. These are all the principles which it is necessary to bear in mind in deciding the present case in the light of the evidence adduced.

The Act which confers powers and imposes duties on the Corporation of Rangoon is the Rangoon Municipal Act (Burma Act VI of 1922). Chapter III deals with the duties and powers of the Corporation of Rangoon; s. 25 of that Chapter provides that "the Corporation shall make adequate provisions by any means or measures which it is lawfully competent for it to use, for each of the following matters, namely:— (i)....., (ii) the erection in proper and convenient situations on Municipal land of water-closets, closet accommodation, urinals and other conveniences for the public, and the maintenance and cleansing of the same,....." It is instructive to refer-to the wording of the succeeding section which runs as follows:—"The Corporation may in its discretion provide either wholly or in part for all or any of the following matters, viz, ..." so that without reference to the other parts of the Act the scheme of this Chapter seems to be to lay down in s. 25 of the list of obligatory duties and in s. 26 a list of acts, the performance of which is permissive or optional. The next relevant section is s. 113 which runs as follows:—"In carrying out the duties imposed on the Corporation by cls. (i), (ii) and (iii) of s. 25 or exercising the powers conferred thereon by ss. 94, 95, 96, 97, 109, 111 and 112, the Corporation is responsible that the least practicable nuisance is created." I have already given above cl. (ii) of s. 25 in full. Clause (i) of s. 25 relates to the construction or laying out of drains and the maintenance, flushing and cleansing of the same, and cl. (iii) refers to the collections, removal, treatment and disposal of sewage, offensive matter and rubbish. The word "nuisance" is defined in s. 3, cl. (xxix) as follows:—" 'Nuisance' includes any act, omission, place or thing which causes or is likely to cause injury, danger, annoyance or offence to the sense of sight, smell or hearing, or which is or may be dangerous to life or injurious to health or property." Section 192 runs as follows:—"In any case not otherwise expressly provided for in this Act, the Corporation may pay compensation to any person who sustains damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers vested in the Corporation, or vested in or delegated to the Commissioner, or to any other Municipal Officer or servant under this Act." Section 203 enacts—"that no suit shall be maintainable against the Corporation.....in respect of anything in good faith and with due care and attention done or intended to be done under this Act." The first point for consideration is as to the intention of the Legislature so far as that intention can be gathered from the scheme and wording of the Act itself. Did the Legislature intend to enjoin an obligatory duty on the Corporation to erect water-closets and urinals or is such erection a permissive act, which it is open to the Municipality to perform or not to perform, the object of the Legislature being merely to authorise the performance of an act which without such provision would be ultra vires of the Corporation? I have already drawn attention to the difference in the wording between ss. 25 and 26 of the Act and it is noteworthy that in s. 113, in referring to the performance of the acts contained in cls. (i), (ii) and (iii) of s. 25, the Legislature uses the words "in carrying out the duties imposed on the Corporation", and the wording of this section (s. 113) and the difference in the wording of s. 25 and s. 26 give a clear indication of what the Legislature intended to be acts the performance of which was compulsory and acts the performance of which was optional. In the performance of the former s. 113 provides that the Corporation is responsible that the least practicable nuisance is created. It is argued by the learned Counsel for the defendant that this section shows that the Legislature contemplated the inevitable creation of a certain amount of nuisance in the performance of these obligatory duties and that the Corporation is responsible only to the extent of seeing that the least practicable nuisance is created. On the other hand, it is argued by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff that the plain meaning of that section is that if an act could be performed without creating any nuisance it should be so performed and that if it cannot be performed without inevitably creating a nuisance, but there are more than one mode of performance some of which create a larger amount of nuisance than the others, then the Municipality is bound to choose that mode which creates the least nuisance. It seems to me that the contention of the Advocate for the plaintiff is correct. The Legislature obviously intended that if the acts could be performed without creating a nuisance they should be so performed, but if some nuisance is inevitable, then the least practicable amount of nuisance must be created. The words of s. 113 of the Act do not, in my opinion, show that the Legislature contemplated, in the erection for public use of water-closets and urinals on Municipal lands, the inevitability of the creation of a nuisance. On a construction of the relevant provisions of the Rangoon Municipal Act I hold (a) that a duty is imposed on the Corporation to erect urinals and water-closets for public convenience on Municipal lands, (b) that the choice of the place where it is to be erected and the time when such water-closets and urinals at any particular place became necessary are left to the Corporation. In view of this finding, since the erection of such structures is not merely a permissive act which it is open to the Corporation to perform or not to perform, the principles applicable are those which apply to the carrying out of imperative duties imposed upon a local body.

[His Lordship was of opinion on the evidence that the proposed latrine would be a nuisance only if there was bad supervision or insufficient cleansing, and that as the Corporation had chosen the site bona fide mere amenities of property or depreciation of value owing to loss of amenities could not support a claim for an injunction.]

Having disposed of these points, I now turn to the main question of the tendency of these latrines to become a nuisance on account of the misuse to which they are likely to be put by the public. A threatened nuisance will undoubtedly give rise to a cause of action but in that case the act which is threatened must in itself be the nuisance. The fact that a latrine need not, as such, necessarily be a nuisance, puts the plaintiff at once out of Court. If the erection of the latrine does not give rise to a cause of action, then the obvious remedy of the plaintiff-Company is to wait till the latrine is actually misused and has become a nuisance when it can ask the Court to grant a relief on its behalf. There is no presumption that the latrine will be misused by the public at all times, and though this is probable, it cannot give rise to a cause of action by anticipation, nor is there any presumption that the employees of the Corporation will to the end of time remain inefficient. They may surprise the Rangoon public by their efficiency in keeping the latrine clean and free of smell so as not to give the plaintiff or the public any cause of complaint. I hold, therefore, that there is no certainty or even a high degree of probability that the latrine will be a nuisance later. If, however, on account of the misuse to which the latrine is put it becomes a nuisance then it is always open to the plaintiff to move the Court to restrain the defendant by injunction from allowing the public to use the latrine or to compel the Corporation to take such steps as may be necessary to abate the nuisance. The Court will then undoubtedly, if satisfied that the nuisance does exist take such action as may be necessary to give adequate relief to the plaintiff.

I have thus dealt with all the objections raised on behalf of the plaintiff and I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff-Company has at present no cause of action against the Corporation. The plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to an injunction. I, therefore, answer the first issue in the negative.

In the view I have taken above it is unnecessary to give any finding on the two other arguments raised by the learned Advocate for the defendant. I shall, however, briefly indicate my opinion on these points. The first point is that the effect of s. 192 of the Rangoon Municipal Act is to deprive the party injured of his right to an injunction and leave him merely with the right to claim and obtain compensation. There is a dictum in one of the cases cited above which lends support to this argument but a careful perusal of the preceding sections of the Act itself shows that it was not the intention of the Legislature to deprive a private person of his Common Law rights, leaving him solely the right to obtain compensation. Section 189 of the Act provides for the payment of compensation to an owner whose immovable property has deteriorated in value on account of the exercise by the Corporation of the powers conferred by certain sections of the Act. Section 190 enables the injured party to move the Local Government and prescribes the procedure to be followed by the Local Government. Section 191 saves the right of the injured party to recover damages, i. e., his right to have recourse to a Court of Law remains unaffected. Then follows s. 192 which provides generally that in cases not otherwise expressly provided for the Corporation may pay compensation to any person who sustains damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers vested in the Corporation. The use of the words "exercise of any of the powers" makes it doubtful whether the section was intended to apply to cases where the Corporation is carrying out its statutory duties, but even if construed as including such cases, the section does not support the contention of the learned Advocate for the defendant. It is a cardinal principle of the construction of Statutes that no legislative enactments should be so construed as to take away the Common Law rights of private persons and the intention of the Legislature to do so must be expressly stated or necessarily implied. The primary object of ss. 189 and 192 of the Act is to authorise certain payments which but for such authorisation will be ultra vires of the Corporation. It was clearly not the intention of the Legislature to deprive private persons of their ordinary rights or remedies. There is high authority for the proposition that the absence of a provision for compensation "affords reason though not a conclusive reason, for thinking that the intention of the Legislature was not that the thing should be done at all events, but that it should be done, if it could be done without injury to others," [per Lord Cairns in Hammersmith and City Ry. v. Brand (1)] and if the converse position is also true, then the presence of such a provision may be a reason though not a conclusive one for thinking that the Legislature intended that the thing should be done at all events. However that may be, such a provision by itself does not afford a reason for thinking that the Legislature intended to deprive the private citizen of all his other remedies. The second argument is that s. 203 of the Act bars a suit in respect of anything "in good faith and with due care and attention done or intended to be done under this Act." Similar words in a Madras Act were considered by Mr. Justice O'Farrel in the case of Haji Ismail Sait v. Trustees of the Harbour, Madras (9). It is unnecessary to dispose of this argument on the ground relied upon by that learned Judge because s. 203 requires that the thing should be done "with due care and attention." If the Legislature did not authorise the creation of a nuisance and if the Corporation knowingly creates it, the thing cannot be said to be done with due care and attention. I am, therefore, of opinion that neither s. 192 nor s. 203 of the Act is a bar to the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs. I grant special costs. Advocate's fee after the first day Rs. 340 per day.

RANGOON HIGH COURT.

SPECIAL SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 89
OF 1927.

July 5, 1927.

Present:—Mr. Justice Maung Ba.
MA SHWE MRA PRU AND ANOTHER
—APPELLANTS

MAUNG BA ON—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 58—Decree against legal representative—Attachment of property—Claim by judgment-debtor on his own account, whether falls within s. 47—Appeal.

An objection by a judgment-debtor against whom a decree has been passed as the legal representative of another, to an attachment of the property of the deceased on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment inasmuch as it belonged to him by virtue of a gift made to him by the deceased prior to the suit or decree, falls within the purview of s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and not within O. XXI, r. 58 of the Code. [p. 857, col. 2.]

Punchamun Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (1), referred to.

A wide and liberal construction has always been placed on s. 47 in order that all questions which can possibly be determined in execution proceedings should be so determined. [p. 857, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Sein Tun Aung, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. M. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of an execution case involving an important point of law whether the objection raised to an attachment of the deceased's property by the judgment-debtor, against whom a decree was passed as a legal representative, alleging that the property is not liable to be attached as it belongs to him by virtue of a gift made to him by the deceased prior to the suit or decree, is a matter which falls within the scope of s. 47 or within the purview of r. 58 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code.

The Sub-Divisional Judge of Kyauktaw treated the objection as an ordinary application for removal of attachment under O. XXI, r. 58. If that procedure were correct, no appeal would lie from an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Judge. The learned District Judge of Akyab was of opinion that the objection was a matter falling within the scope of s. 47, and that, therefore, an appeal lay.

It is now urged that that view of the learned District Judge is incorrect, and that s. 47 is not applicable. Maung Ba On was one of the defendants sued as legal representatives of the deceased U Kyaw Khine in the original suit. In execution of the decree passed against him, and the other legal representatives, certain property was attached as forming part of the deceased's estate. Maung Ba On preferred a claim to one-half of that property, alleging that the same had been gifted to him by a gift made about four years previously. The question to be decided, therefore, is whether that portion of the property has descended to him as the representative of the deceased and is liable to be attached in execution of the decree against him as such representative or whether it belongs to himself and not in such representative character. Surely this is a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed relating to the execution of the decree. That being so, the question is one falling within the scope and purview of s. 47.

The learned Advocate wishes to draw a very fine line between a case where a legal representative bases his claim upon a title acquired before the decree and that based upon a title acquired after the decree. He urged that s. 47 would be applicable only in the case of a claim based upon title acquired after the decree. I do not see any reason for drawing such a distinction. Ba On is, no doubt, a party to the suit, and the question whether the property attached is attachable as being part of the estate or not attachable as being his own property is a question relating to the execution of the decree passed against him as a legal representative. If he were to bring a regular suit to decide that dispute, it would have to be decided in that suit whether the property in dispute was liable to be attached as part of the deceased's estate or that it was not liable to be attached as it belonged to Ba On. The matter to be decided in the regular suit under O. XXI, r. 63, is, therefore, practically the same as that to be determined under s. 47. Since it is a matter that may as well be determined by the Court executing the decree, the Legislature has laid down that in such circumstances that matter should be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. The Judicial Committee has pointed out that it is of the utmost importance that all objections to executions should be disposed of as cheaply and as quickly as possible. Consequently in order to attain that object a wide and liberal construction has always been placed on s. 47 in order that all questions which can possibly be determined in execution proceedings should be so determined. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Punchann Bundopadhyaya v. Rabia Babi (1) has put the same construction upon s. 244 of the old Code (now s. 47 of the new Code). The Full Bench held that an objection taken by a person who has become the representative of the judgment-debtor in the course of the execution of a decree to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own property, and not held by him as such representative, is a matter cognizable only under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not the proper subject matter of a separate suit.

The learned District Judge in allowing the appeal has not expressly declared that the claim is to be allowed only in respect of half of the property.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, but I note that in the decree it should be clearly stated that the attachment is to be released only from half of the property.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF

RANGOON—RESPONDENTS.

City of Rangoon Municipal Act (VI of 1922), s. 80
—Assessment of bazaar property—Principles.

In assessing the value of bazaar property under the City of Rangoon Municipal Act on the basis of what a hypothetical tenant would pay, it is proper to deduct from the gross rents, license-fees, directors' commission and lighting charges, the proportionate cost of establishment, interest on the capital required by the hypothetical tenant, his reasonable profit and occupiers' taxes amounting to 16½ per cent. of the rental but not the general tax, 7 per cent. payable by the landlord. [p. 858, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Ormiston, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the then Officiating Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Rangoon affirming the assessment made by the Commissioner of the Corporation in respect of the Sooratee Bara Bazaar Blocks A, B, C, D and E.

The judgment appealed from affirms the order of the Commissioner for the reasons given by him; so we have to fall back upon that order to appreciate the several claims made by the appellants that the order is wrong.

On page 2 of his order the Commissioner sets out the principle on which he bases the assessment:—"The method of assessment adopted is to determine the amount of rent which would be paid by a 'hypothetical tenant', for the Sooratee Bara Bazaar Company's property. If we consider a 'hypothetical tenant' taking the bazaar on lease he would first of all, in making his offer for renting the property, calculate the total gross rent which he would receive. He would then make allowances for:—

(a) Stalls, which would become empty in the ordinary course of things and be vacant before being re-let, and also for bad debts and irrecoverable rents, such as constantly occur from time to time.

(b) He would then have to consider the necessary expenses which he would incur in the way of cleaning, protecting, etc., the bazaar, the cost of collecting rents and so on.

(c) He would then have to consider other necessary outgoings in the way of taxation.

(d) He would then have to consider how much actual profit he would expect to put into his own pockets to reward him for the trouble of managing the business and incurring the risk of loss, which is inseparable from all business transactions.

"The preceding paragraph is quoted verbatim from the judgment of the High Court in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 44 of 1923. I assume, therefore, that this method of valuation for assessment purposes has the approval of the High Court. In practice the method comes to a calculation of the gross rents recoverable from this property and of the amount which must be deducted from the gross rents in order to arrive at the valuation of the property for assessment purposes. My task has been much simplified by the fact that the Bazaar Company has placed all its books and records at the disposal of the Assessor and the figures of gross rents, etc., have been agreed upon. The only thing, therefore, left for me is to consider the principles involved and what deductions from the gross earnings should be allowed. I will first state those deductions which I am prepared to allow. These are:—

	Rs.
(1) License-fee paid to the Corporation	13,900 per annum
(2) Directors' commission	15,946 per annum
(3) Lighting	5,332 per annum."

In the argument of the case this part of the Commissioner's order was not attacked.

The first point on which the assessment is attacked is with regard to the allowance for the cost of establishment. The appellants claimed under this head a sum of Rs. 48,800. The Commissioner has found that the appellants are the largest individual owners of house property in Rangoon; that they paid about 1½ lakhs of rupees per annum Municipal taxes in respect of this house property as apart from the bazaar; that, of the appellants' staff, the Secretary, the Head Clerk, the Cashier, the Assistant Clerk, the Typist and two Accounts Clerks deal with the appellants' house property as well as the bazaar property, and that the Assessor's deduction of 25 per cent. from the gross cost of establishment on account of the house property was reasonable. He consequently allowed under the head of "Cost of Establishment" Rs. 45,350 instead of Rs. 48,800. Since admittedly the members of the staff mentioned by the Commissioner manage and deal with a very large estate of house property, some deduction from the cost of establishment is clearly indicated. The amount deducted has not been shown to be unreasonable; and, in any case, since a deduction ought to be made, the exact amount of that deduction is not a question of legal principle which this Court could go into in a second appeal.

The appellants claimed an allowance of Rs. 43,000, being interest at 10 per cent. on the paid up capital of the Company, viz., Rs. 4,30,000. The Commissioner held that this claim was inadmissible as, in making it, the Company confused its position as owner of the bazaar and the position of a 'hypothetical tenant'. We consider that he was correct in holding that an allowance was inadmissible on this basis. He goes on, however, to hold that the hypothetical tenant requires no capital. It is difficult to conceive of a person offering to take a tenancy of a vast business like the Sooratee Bara Bazar without any capital whatever. We quite agree that cases of Railways, docks and gas companies, where a tenant has to incur large expenditure on necessary stock-in-trade, tools, machinery and plant, form no guide whatever in a case like the present. It is urged that the hypothetical tenant takes over the large building with raised concrete platforms, which are let out to daily tenants at a daily rent, that these sub tenants provide themselves with whatever furniture or apparatus may be necessary for the purposes of their trade; that the hypothetical tenant consequently does not require to expend anything in the way of fixtures, plant, or furniture, and that, as the rents come in daily, he will be able from the first day of his tenancy to meet any liabilities which he may incur. Even though the tenant may not have to incur any expenditure on furniture or stock-in-trade, we think that it is unreasonable to suppose that he could take on the tenancy of the Sooratee Bara Bazar without any capital. If a tenant had no capital, the landlord would obviously insist on his rent being payable in advance. A small sum, in our opinion, ought to have been allowed sufficient to cover one month's rent payable in advance, and any other expenditure, such as a deposit in respect of electric light, which the tenant might have to incur; and we think that there will have to be a remand to ascertain the amount under this head.

Intimately connected with the last point is the further objection which the appellants take, to the assessment, in that the Commissioner has taken the Directors' commission, viz., Rs. 15,946 as a sufficient allowance for the profit which would be sufficient to induce a hypothetical tenant to incur the responsibility of the tenancy of the bazaar. Admittedly a hypothetical tenant, not being a philanthropist, would require a substantial inducement to make him incur a heavy responsibility. It has been pointed out that the Directors' remuneration might be taken as an equivalent of the tenant's remuneration for his personal management, and that in the Commissioner's calculation nothing has been allowed to the hypothetical tenant for his management beyond the amount allowed for cost of establishment. We think that there will have to be a remand for a finding of what, in the condition prevailing in Rangoon, would be a reasonable amount as tenant's profit to induce a hypothetical tenant to become tenant of the bazaar premises after taking into consideration reasonable remuneration for himself as manager.

The appellants claimed that an allowance of 10 per cent. should have been made on account of stalls which became empty and remained vacant for some time before being re-let, for bad debts, irrecoverable rents and such other contingencies. It is admitted that the Finance Committee, on the recommendation of the Commissioner, ordered that a deduction of 10 per cent. in regard to these contingencies shall be made on all property let in separate parts. The Commissioner has, in our opinion, quite rightly held that this order does not apply to the bazaar which is being valued on the principle of what rent would a hypothetical tenant be prepared to give for the bazaar as a going concern. The Commissioner had held that vacancies are very seldom to be found in the bazaar, and that the machinery for collecting rents works so well that the amount which has to be written off as "irrecoverable" is reduced to a minimum. It is objected on behalf of the appellants that exceptional good management should not be imputed to the hypothetical tenant, but only ordinarily reasonable management. There is no question of legal principle involved in this point. The Commissioner has made an allowance under this head; and nothing has been adduced before us to lead us to think that the amount allowed is unreasonably small.

Finally it is claimed that the deduction on account of Municipal taxation should be $23\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. instead of $16\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and that the method of calculation is wrong and results in a deduction of only a little more than 14 per cent. instead of $16\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Both of those questions were decided in Suratee Bara Bazaar Co. v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Rangoon (1) which was between the present parties. It is contended that those decisions were wrong.

We are of opinion that those decisions are correct, but think it desirable to attempt to make the reasons for them somewhat clearer.

The Commissioner's calculations up to this stage have determined the gross amount which a hypothetical tenant would be prepared to pay for the premises. In addition to the rent the tenant will be liable also for certain Municipal taxes. If we add taxes to the gross amount already calculated we shall ex-hypothesi arrive at a total greater than the tenant will pay. The rent must, therefore, be less than that gross amount by a sum equal to the amount of the Municipal taxes payable by the tenant. In this case the gross amount is Rs. 58,402. The taxes payable by the tenant amount to $16\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the rent. The problem before us, therefore, is—

(1) 84 Ind. Cas. 996; 3 Bur. L. J. 221; A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 115.

What is the sum which with $16\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of itself added will equal Rs. 58,402? In other words we have to solve the equation—

Rent plus $16\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of rent	=	Rs. 58,402
That is rent plus $\frac{33}{200}$ of rent	=	" 58,402
Or $\frac{233}{200}$ of rent	=	" 58,402
Therefore rent	=	$58,402 \times 200 \div 233$
	=	" 50,130.

This result agrees with that obtained by the Commissioner using the formula given in the former case.

Verifying this by working backward we find that $16\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of Rs. 50,130 is Rs. 8,271 and adding these two together we get Rs. 58,401. Fractions are, of course, neglected. On this it is clear that the method of calculation adopted is correct.

Coming now to the claim that the allowance should be $23\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. we find that this is made up of the $16\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. already dealt with and 7 per cent. which represents the general tax payable by the landlord. As this is not payable by the tenant there is no reason whatever why it should be taken into account in calculating the true rent from the gross amount that the hypothetical tenant would be able to pay.

In the result we remand the case with a direction that the Commissioner do proceed to determine the allowances which should be made on account of—

(i) interest on the capital required by a hypothetical tenant; and

(ii) reasonable profit of the hypothetical tenant.

The appeal thus succeeds only on two very minor points and fails on the more substantial questions. We direct, therefore, that the appellant do pay to the respondent ten gold mohurs as the costs of this appeal.

JUDGMENT.—These are a group of appeals from orders on the Original Side adjudicating Mr. Moolla an insolvent and winding-up M. E. Moolla and Sons, Ltd., a private Limited Company of which he is the Managing Director and in which he holds a vast majority of the shares. As the questions in each are intimately connected, we shall deal with them in the same judgment.

Mr. Moolla was possessed of a very large estate of immoveable property, and in about 1920 floated a Company called the Ally Moolla Industrial Corporation, to which he transferred inter alia 46 acres of land with a rice mill at Pazundaung, and in which he held a large number of shares both Preference and Ordinary.

Early in 1921 he promoted M. E. Moolla and Sons, Ltd., to which he transferred most of his immoveable property and in which he admittedly holds by far the greater number of shares.

The Ally Moolla Industrial Corporation by an order dated the 11th April, 1924, was compulsorily wound up and Mr. J. A. Robin, Chartered Accountant, appointed Official Liquidator. The winding-up has not yet been completed.

We shall now proceed to deal with the individual appeals.

First Civil Appeal No. 185 of 1927.—Respondent Bank advanced to the appellants a large sum of money and as security held a mortgage, dated the 19th January, 1923, over the premises known as No. 7, Merchant Street, Rangoon, and the western half of First Class Suburban Allotment No. 31, Rangoon. The Bank had a further security in that 9,900 Preference shares in the Ally Moolla Industrial Corporation were transferred to the names of the Agent and Sub-Agent of the Chartered Bank and the scrip lodged with the Bank. The Bank filed a mortgage suit being Civil Regular No. 360 of 1925 against the appellants and obtained a preliminary decree on the 24th August, 1925, for over Rs. 9,00,000. The Bank then applied for a personal decree against the appellants in respect of balance outstanding after the sale of the mortgage property. This was on 15th January, 1927. The appellants asked for time to file objections and time was given till 31st January, 1927. Objections were not filed by 31st January, 1927, but the appellants seem to have verbally pressed the objection that the Bank was not entitled to a personal decree until they had sold the 9,900 shares in the Ally Moolla Industrial Corporation. . . . Eventually, on the 3rd February, 1927, a personal decree for Rs. 3,22,862 9-4 with interest was passed with the consent of the defendants' attorney.

On the 24th February, 1927, the Bank filed an application for execution and on the 9th March, 1927, a prohibitory order was passed attaching 15,348 Ordinary shares belonging to the 1st appellant in the 2nd appellant Company, which were in the custody of the Bank's Advocates, Messrs. Ormiston and Leach, in respect of another creditor of the appellants. Then, on 6th April, 1927, the Bank applied to adjudicate the 1st appellant an insolvent and not until 25th April, 1927, did the appellants make the application before us, which is one under O. XXI, r. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure to record an alleged agreement between Mr. Ormiston, the Bank's Advocate, and Mr. Burjorjee, Advocate for the appellants. Mr. Burjorjee, in his affidavit in support, states that Mr. Ormiston promised that the Bank would never take any step to have M. E. Moolla adjudicated an insolvent, or to wind-up M. E. Moolla and Sons, Ltd., nor take any steps to enforce the personal decree unless for the purpose of obtaining the rateable share of the Bank of any assets realised by any Court belonging to either of the judgment debtors, and that on the strength of this promise the draft objections were not filed and that Keshavlal would attend before the Court and consent to the personal decree being passed.

We, therefore, agree with the learned Judge on the Original Side that the appellants have failed to prove any such agreement as that alleged and we are satisfied that the appellants' attorney, Keshavlal, was himself fully aware of what transpired on the 2nd February and was in no way induced to consent to the personal decree through thinking that Mr. Ormiston had made any such promise as Mr. Burjorjee alleges in his affidavit. The application was not, in our opinion, a bona fide one, but made with the object of gaining time. We have dealt with this matter on the facts because it was so dealt with by the learned Judge on the Original Side, and because the facts are of importance in relation to the other appeals on the question as to whether there was any bona fide dispute as to the fact of the debt being due to the Bank. But we are also of opinion that the application was not one that could be entertained under O. XXI r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code or could be dealt with by the Executing Court under s. 47 of the Code,

The case set up is similar to that of Mulla Ramzan v. Maung Po Kaing (1) and we agree with the decision in that case and with the reasoning on which it is based.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs, ten gold mohurs.

Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 112 of 1927.

—This is an appeal by Mr. Moolla against the order of 7th May, 1927, adjudicating him an insolvent, and a complaint is made that the learned Judge acted unreasonably in not granting time to the appellant and in not holding an enquiry to ascertain the value of the shares in the Ally Moolla Industrial Corporation, which the Bank held as security.

* * * *

An objection is urged that the Bank put a fictitious value, namely Re. 1, on the shares held by them as security. The law no doubt requires the decree-holder to value any security in his hands before applying to adjudicate. According to s. 12 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act: "If the petitioning creditor is a secured creditor, he shall in his petition either state that he is willing to relinquish his security for the benefit of the creditors in the event of the debtor being adjudged insolvent or give an estimate of the value of the security. In the latter case, he may be admitted as a petitioning creditor to the extent of the balance of the debt due to him after deducting the value so estimated in the same way as if he were an unsecured creditor." And Mr. Chamier (2nd Edition, page 30), states in his notes under this section: "Where, however, a creditor gives an estimate of his security, the Court will not enquire into its correctness if it is a genuine estimate." The Bank's Agent has, in fact, valued the shares at the nominal sum of Re. 1, stating that there is no market for the shares, and we are satisfied, for the reasons given, that the estimate was genuine. Mr. Rahman stated that the Official Assignee had lately sold 100 Ordinary shares for Re. 1 a share and 50 for Re. 1-1. In our opinion, these sales were not a genuine proof of the market value and were probably merely made in view of the present proceedings. The Court was entitled to accept the statement of the Bank's Agent without requiring any further proof and the accuracy of this valuation, as we have already seen in the previous case, is borne out by the Official Liquidator's evidence that the shares are worth nothing. He is corroborated in this by the affidavit of a partner in Messrs. Mahony & Co., a firm of Stock and Share Brokers of standing.

The main question argued in this case, however, was that there was no valid attachment on either Mr. Moolla or the Company. Service of notice was accepted by Mr. S. M. Rahman Chowdhury, referred to in the argument as "Rahman." The power-of-attorney is dated the 12th July, 1921, and is in favour of three persons, Keshavlal, Rahman and one Cassim Nacooda. It is not a full power, but, from a careful perusal, the intention was obviously to make it as full as possible with regard to suits, legal proceeding or any case of whatsoever nature in any Court or public office or tribunal "and generally to do all acts and things for the said Muhammad Ebrahim Moolla in relation to the premises aforesaid as the said M. E. Moolla could do if personally present." It was urged that although this power gave the three persons named power to take any action with regard to the institution, prosecution or defence of a suit, it did not empower them to accept notice for Mr. Moolla in an execution matter. In view of the words quoted, and the whole tenor of the instrument, we consider that this argument is unsound and we are of opinion that Mr. Rahman had full power to accept notice for Mr. Moolla. The question of his power to accept on behalf of the Company requires some further consideration. The attachment of the shares was by way of prohibitory order. According to O. XXI, r. 46, (1) "In the case of a share in the capital of a Corporation the attachment shall be made by written order prohibiting the person in whose name the share may be standing from transferring the same or receiving any dividend thereon (2) A copy of such order shall be affixed on some conspicuous part of the Court-house, and another copy shall be sent to the proper officer of the Corporation"

We may mention that Mr. Moolla as Managing Director gave the three persons above-named an almost identical power on behalf of Moolla and Sons, Ltd. The order was sent to the offices of the Company and was received by Mr. Rahman, the attorney of the appellant, who was Managing Director of the Company. A point is made that it was addressed to the Secretary of the Company. The Company, being a private one, had no Secretary. Obviously, in such circumstances, the Managing Director was the proper officer of the Company within the Rule, and, considering the powers entrusted to Mr. Rahman by his power-of-attorney, he was duly empowered to receive the notice on behalf of Mr. Moolla. If the notice had been sent by registered post to the offices of Company, the Rule would have been sufficiently complied with. We, therefore, agree with the learned trial Judge in holding that there had been an effective and valid attachment of the shares for twenty-one days and that the appellant had consequently committed an act of insolvency.

A further point has been urged that at the hearing on the Original Side, an offer was made to pay down Rs. 2,00,000 of the debt and give security with regard to the balance if the petition was withdrawn and the respondent Bank was willing to accept this offer if the Court approved. The offer has been renewed before us in a still more complete form, namely, to pay the whole amount, and the position taken up by the Bank is the same. The learned Judge declined to allow the petition to be withdrawn on these terms and his reasons, from his reference to another case, seem to be that to permit such a thing when there were other creditors might in fact result in the Court allowing a fraudulent preference in favour of one creditor to the serious detriment of other creditors. There is obviously great force in this argument. If there were no creditors other than the Bank we would have had no hesitation in adjourning the matter to give the appellant an opportunity of fulfilling his promise and then allowing the Bank to withdraw its petition. We are in the dark as to the extent of the appellant's indebtedness, for unfortunately, he has not chosen to file his schedule, but from the proceedings before us in this and the next appeal, we know that he has several other creditors for large amounts (whose consent had not been obtained).

We are consequently unable to accede now, as to do so would prima facie be to allow one creditor to be paid in full and so jeopardise the rights of the other creditors.

For these reasons the appeal must be dismissed with costs ten old mohurs.

Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 127 of 1927.—In disposing of this appeal, we shall at the same time dispose of Civil Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 128 and 129 of 1927, as they are on behalf of creditors who oppose the winding-up of the Company.

In this case the respondent Bank has entered a petition for the winding-up of the appellant Company. The learned Judge on the Original Side ordered the Company to be wound-up and appointed Mr. Hormasji, the Administrator-General and Official Assignee, as Official Liquidator of the Company. Hence this appeal.

The petition of the Bank was that they had obtained a personal decree against the Company on 3rd February, 1927, in Civil Regular No. 160 of 1925 for Rs. 3,22,862-4-9 and interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from 3rd January 1927, to date of payment or realisation; that by a demand dated 3rd March, 1927, the petitioner required the Company to pay the said sum, that the demand was served on the Company at its registered office on 4th March, 1927, and that the sum had not been paid. Section 163 of the Indian Companies Act (1913), states:—

"A Company shall be deemed to be unable to pay its debts—(1) if a creditor, by assignment or otherwise, to whom the Company is indebted in a sum exceeding Rs. 500 then due, has served on the Company, by leaving the same at its registered office, a demand under his hand requiring the Company to pay the sum so due and the Company has for three weeks thereafter neglected to pay the sum, or to secure or compound for it to the reasonable satisfaction of the creditor."

And s. 162 states:—

"A Company may be wound-up by the Court . . . (v) if the Company is unable to pay its debts."

It was urged that the learned Judge should have adjourned the matter under s. 170 (1) as there was an appeal pending in the matter of the adjustment of the personal decree, that is the matter which we have disposed of in the first of this series of appeals. The learned Judge had already decided this matter and held that there was no substance in it and in our judgment above we have upheld his decision. As there was no stay, he was under no obligation to question his own decision and adjourn the matter. It is then further urged that he disregarded the wishes of the majority of the creditors and did not carry out the spirit of s. 174 of the Companies Act, which states that the Court may, as to all matters relating to the winding-up, have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributors as proved to it by any sufficient evidence; and it is urged that he should have given time to the various creditors to put forward their objections to the winding-up, and to show that the Company was solvent, a number of affidavits have been filed (most of them dated 18th June 1927) all stating the amount of the appellants' indebtedness to them and most of them asking for time to formulate their objections. As the application was recorded to be advertised on 9th April, 1927, it would seem that they had ample time to instruct their Advocates as to what their objections were and from the proceedings it seems clear that their Advocates did state those objections.

* * * * *

There is a great preponderance of creditors in favour of the winding-up. We may here say that, for the reasons already given, we are of opinion that there was no bona fide dispute as to the amount of appellant's debt. Various English cases have been cited to show that where there was an offer of payment of a debt, the Court granted time, but we do not think that these cases are of much assistance in deciding a case like the present, though, no doubt, they might be of great assistance were this a public commercial Company. But here we have a case of a man with large estates, who has transferred these estates to a private Limited Company in which he holds, according to the learned trial Judge, admittedly 90 per cent. of the shares, over which as Managing Director up till the winding-up order he had complete control. He admittedly has great liabilities, as has the Company, and he has been adjudicated an insolvent. We take judicial notice of the fact, which has not been mentioned in argument, that there is a decree of this Court against him for about Rs. 17,00,000. It is on appeal to His Majesty in Council and if not reversed will go to swell appreciably his liabilities. Taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, we are of opinion that reading s. 163 (i) with s. 162 (v), the learned Judge was right in ordering the Company to be wound-up and in consideration of the peculiar facts of this case and of Mr. Moolla's great liabilities and his predominant holding of shares in the Company, whose assets consist of Mr. Moolla's estates transferred to the Company, it is also under s. 162 (vi) just and equitable that the Company should be wound-up.

Messrs. Keith and Campagnac complain of the appointment of the Administrator-General and Official Assignee as liquidator and suggest that there may be a conflict of interest between Mr. Moolla's creditors and the creditors of the Company and that the learned Judge ignored the wishes of the creditors, as the respondent Bank suggested as liquidator a gentleman with intimate knowledge of the real property market, in Rangoon. On this point, Mr. Leach on behalf of the Bank, states that though he did suggest this gentleman as liquidator to the trial Court, he is satisfied with the appointment made and leaves the matter entirely to the Court. Mr. Dhar, on the other hand, for his clients and on behalf of Mr. Clifton, strongly supports the appointment of the Official Assignee and asks that the discretion of the learned trial Judge should not be interfered with, and relies on a decision of a Bench of the late Chief Court in Noble v. Bank of Burma [(2)] where Sir Charles Fox held that the appointment of a liquidator was a matter purely in the discretion of the trial Court and that that decision should not be interfered with, except under very special circumstances.

We are in full agreement with the trial Judge that in the peculiar circumstances of the case, Mr. Hormasji is the most suitable person to be Official Liquidator of the Company. As Official Assignee, he is the representative of Mr. Moolla and consequently the great bulk of the shares in the Company are vested in him. He is an officer of great experience and with the highest reputation for integrity and we think that his appointment will eliminate opportunities of obstructing the proper and efficient liquidation of the Company's affairs. At any rate, we are satisfied that it will afford the several creditors an opportunity of having their debts discharged.

For these reasons, we confirm the order appealed against. The appeals are accordingly dismissed.

SECOND RENT APPEAL No. 33 OF 1927.

December 3, 1927.

Pandit LAKSHMI DHAR—PLAINTIFF

versus

DHOKHE LAL AND ANOTHER—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Co-sharer—Suit for profits—Calculation of rent of khudkasht land, basis of.

In a suit by a co-sharer for profits, the rent of khudkasht land in the possession of the defendants should not be calculated on the basis of actual collections or the circle rate but should be calculated on the basis of the boundary rate of lands of the village in which the land in dispute is situate.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 23rd May, 1927, modifying that of the Honorary Assistant Collector, First Class, Kheri, dated the 2nd August, 1926.

Mr. Moti Lal Saksena, for the Appellant.

Mr. Puttu Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for profits in respect of the Patti Dhokhe Lal, situate in village Birampur, Pargana Aurangabad, District Kheri. The said patti consists of 2 biswas, of which one-third is owned by Lakshmi Dhar, plaintiff-appellant; one-third by Dhokhe Lal, defendant-respondent No. 1; and one-third by Jagannath Prasad, defendant-respondent No. 2. The share of each of them, therefore, amounts to 13½ biswas.

The first Court decreed the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 119-12-6 against defendant No. 1 and for Rs. 1-14-4 against defendant No. 2. The calculation which was accepted by the trial Court was the calculation of the rent of the khudkasht land made on the basis of the circle rate. It considered it to be a fair and equitable rate for ascertaining the rent of the khudkasht land in the possession of the defendants. The figure had been arrived at after making a deduction of 30 per cent. from the actual rent, calculated according to circle rate.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned District Judge of Sitapur increased the amount decreed by the first Court to Rs. 157 by disallowing the deduction of 30 per cent. which amounted to Rs. 36.

The plaintiff-appellant has now come up to this Court in second appeal and the main contention urged on his behalf on the date of the hearing of the case before me was to the effect that the Courts below had erred in calculating the profits according to the circle rate. The argument was that either the plaintiff-appellant ought to have been given a decree for profits on the basis of the actual collections, according to which he would be entitled to Rs. 282-7-6 as shown in the statement prepared by the Patwari in the trial Court (Ex. 1), or in any case, according to the gross rental as calculated for the entire village Baikunwan as mentioned in Ex. 3. In my opinion the plaintiff-appellant should not be allowed profits according to any of these calculations; nor should he be allowed according to the circle rate; but he should be allowed according to the boundary rate of the lands of the hamlet of Birampur in which the land in dispute is situate. In order to find out these calculations I directed the plaintiff-appellant to summon the Patwari for this date.

The Patwari has appeared in Court and I have recorded his statement. He has also prepared a statement from which it appears that the average rate of rent of the lands which constitute the boundary of the lands in suit works out at Rs. 6 per acre; and according to that calculation the profits to which the plaintiff-appellant would be entitled for the years in suit, would be Rs. 189-10-8.

I, therefore, modify the decrees passed by the Courts below and in lieu thereof grant a decree for Rs. 189-10-8. Out of this amount a decree for Rs. 186-8-8 is passed against defendant-respondent No. 1, Dhokhe Lal, and a decree for Rs. 3-2 against defendant-respondent No. 2, Jagannath Prasad. The plaintiff will get his costs in the first Court on the amount which has now been decreed to him. In the lower Appellate Court and in this Court the parties will receive and pay costs in proportion to their success and failure in this appeal.

MANNULAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND SARJU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession—Enjoyment of property by one co-sharer to exclusion of another—Assertion of exclusive title to property—Ouster—Adverse possession.

Where a co-sharer in a patti has been in participation of the rents and profits for a long time to the exclusion of the others and has successfully asserted his right to the sole enjoyment of the property for more than 12 years, adverse possession may be held to have been clearly established, even if the property in question is a share in a defined patti.

Corea v. Appuhamy (1) and Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (2), referred to.

Second appeal against the judgment passed by the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, in Civil Appeal No. 78-180 of 1926, dated the 10th March, 1927, confirming that of the Munsif, Bilgram, in Suit No. 100 of 1926, dated the 7th September, 1926.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question to be determined in this second appeal is whether the decision of the Courts below to the effect that the plaintiffs-respondents have obtained title to the property in suit by adverse possession is a good decision in law. The decisions of fact which cannot be questioned in second appeal are as follows: The appellant's predecessor-in-interest undoubtedly obtained title to the property under a sale-deed, but subsequent to his having done so the plaintiff side have paid the land revenue on the property and made collections and enjoyed the sir and khudkasht and the appellant has not obtained any benefit of any kind from the property either by receipt of meane profits or in other manner. The case submitted by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that, inasmuch as the property in question is a share of about one-fifth in a defined patti, and inasmuch as the appellant is a co-sharer in that patti, it is impossible for the plaintiffs to assert adverse possession against him in view of the decision of the House of Lords in Corea v. Appuhamy (1).

(1) (1912) A. C. 230; 81 L. J. P. C. 151; 105 L. T. 336.

But the principle laid down by their Lordships in that decision does not assist him. In that case the person asserting adverse possession had a lawful title, and their Lordships approved of a previous decision to the effect that possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title. In that case also adverse possession was pleaded by one co-owner as against another co-owner, the co-owners in question being members of the same family. Apart from the fact that in a subsequent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (2) their Lordships refused to discuss whether the rule was applicable to sharers in an unpartitioned agricultural village in India holding their shares as members of a joint family, it was clearly laid down in Corea v. Appuhamy (1) that where an ouster or something equivalent to an ouster had been proved and the period of possession after an ouster had exceeded the statutory period provided by the law, the person ousted would have no redress. Here, in our opinion, there is a clear ouster. The case before us is in effect an ejectment. There has been an ouster. The appellant has not been in participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time and the plaintiffs have successfully asserted their right to the sole enjoyment of the property. In these circumstances the decision of the Courts below is correct. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Gift by husband to wife—Stridhan—Widow's power to transfer—Viramitrodaya, authority of—Transfer as special gift to be enjoyed from generation to generation—Construction—Full proprietary rights, whether conveyed.

When a husband who is governed by the Mitaka shara Law makes a gift in favour of his wife, the property transferred by gift becomes her stridhan, and if it is considered as self-acquired property she has ordinarily the power to transfer it and further such stridhan descends to her heirs and not to her husband's heirs. [p. 868, col. 2]

There are, however, peculiar restrictions, according to legal authority on the Mitakshara Law, to the widow's right to transfer landed property if the gift has been made in a particular fashion. [ibid.]

Where a husband transferred property to his wife as a special gift describing it as the property in his exclusive proprietary right and stating that he transferred all the rights held by him to her, that she was to hold it generation after generation, that neither himself nor his own heirs were ever to make a claim against her and that no one except her was to have any connection with the property:

Held, that the gift must be construed as a transfer of full proprietary rights with full rights of transfer. [p. 871, col. 1.]

First appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 29th January, 1927

Mr. Niamat Ullah, Dr. J. N. Misra and Mr. Balbhaddar Sahai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Ali Zaheer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Subedar Gainsd Singh obtained in 1859 a grant, which, it is agreed, consisted of ten and a half villages in the Fyzabad District as a reward for his loyal services in the disturbance of 1857. This grant received the name of Bhati Risalpur, and the name of Subedar Gainsd Singh is entered as the ninety-second name in List VI prepared under the provisions of Act I of 1869 as the name of the grantee of the Bhati Risalpur estate. As his name was entered in List VI the succession to his property, in event of his dying intestate, was regulated by the ordinary Hindu Law under the provisions of s. 23 of Act I of 1869. Subedar Gainsd Singh did die intestate, but it is an admitted fact that at the time of his death he was not in possession of any portion of the Bhati Risalpur estate, as he had parted with the whole of it during his lifetime. He died in October, 1880. We find that in 1876 he had disposed of the major part of the estate to outsiders, and had retained only a portion of the village of Mareman in which he resided, the whole of the village of Bhati, and the whole of the village of Fatehpur, and half of the village of Nau Sanda. His family then consisted of his wife Agand Kuar, his daughter Phuljhari who was a married woman, and his daughter Sughar Kuar who was married to Sheoambar Singh. He had no sons. On the 25th November, 1876, Gainsd Singh executed a registered deed in favour of his daughter Phuljhari, by which he transferred to her by gift with immediate possession the whole of his interests in Mareman, with the exception of certain sir and khudkasht land, the whole of one patti and the half of the other patti, which he retained in his possession for life. The deed gave Phuljhari title to this property also upon the death of her father. The deed in question transfers full proprietary rights. There can be no doubt as to that fact for in addition to words, which, in our opinion, convey an absolute proprietary right, the words are added that Phuljhari is to have the power of mortgage, sale, etc. This deed was executed on the 25th November, 1876, as a deed of gift, and on the 2nd December, 1876, he executed another deed by which he transferred by gift to Sheoambar Singh, his son-in-law, Sughar Kuar's husband, for the specific purposes of the maintenance and support of his family and children the whole of the village Bhati. The donee was to obtain immediate possession. He was to have no power of alienation during Gainsd Singh's lifetime, but was given full powers of alienation after the death of Gainsd Singh. This was the second deed. On the 7th of May, 1877, Gainsd Singh executed a third deed by which he disposed of the whole of the remainder of the property then in his ownership. This is the deed with the construction of the terms of which we are concerned in the present appeal. It is not questioned on either side that the two prior deeds gave full proprietary title to the persons in whose favour they were executed. There is considerable dispute as to the meaning of the third deed. Under the third deed Gainsd Singh transferred to his wife Agand Kuar the whole of the village of Fatehpur and half of the village of Nau Sanda, that is to say, the whole of the property which still remained undisposed of. We shall deal with the construction to be placed on the terms of the deed later. Here it is only necessary to say that possession over the property was clearly transferred to Musammam Agand Kuar from the date of the execution of the deed.

Subedar Gains Singh died in October, 1880. Musammam Agand Kuar transferred by sale the village of Fatehpur to Ohhedi Ram Misir on the 8th of September, 1881, by a registered deed of sale in consideration of Rs. 6,000. Musammam Agand Kuar died in 1886. Directly after her death a certain Badri Prasad, who alleged that he was the purchaser of the rights of a certain Bahadur Singh in the said village and that Bahadur Singh was the reversioner to Gains Singh, instituted a suit against Sri Nath and Sripat the sons of Ohhedi Ram for possession of the village of Fatehpur. This suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad. It sought to set aside the deed of sale in favour of Ohhedi Ram Misir on the ground that Agand Kuar had no right to execute it. That suit was dismissed. An appeal was filed in the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad. That appeal was dismissed. A further appeal was taken to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. That appeal was also dismissed. In 1904 another suit was filed by Jagmohan Singh, the present plaintiff-appellant, and his younger brother Jag Prasad Singh, now deceased, against Sri Nath, the son of Ohhedi Ram Misir in respect of the same property. This suit was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. Jagmohan Singh and Jag Prasad Singh were the sons of Sheoambar Singh. Their case was that, as Musammam Phuljhari had no children and had passed the age when she was likely to have children, and as they were sons of Sughar Kuar, the daughter of Agand Kuar, they were entitled to the possession of Fatehpur on the ground that Agand Kuar had no right to transfer the property except for her lifetime. They claimed in the alternative a declaration that they would be entitled to possession on the deaths of Phuljhari and their own mother. The learned Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad dismissed their claim for possession, but gave them a declaration that they were entitled to the possession of the village of Fatehpur on the deaths of Phuljhari and Sughar Kuar. Sri Nath appealed against this decree to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. A Bench of that Court decided on the 4th March, 1907, that no relief could be granted to the plaintiffs, as their suit was premature. They decided nothing upon the merits. Previous to the decision of this appeal Musammam Phuljhari had died. She died in 1906. Sughar Kuar died in 1921. In 1925 Jagmohan Singh joining Jang Bahadur Singh, the son of Jag Prasad Singh—Jag Prasad Singh had died—instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arises against Sri Nath and other descendants of Ohhedi Ram Misir. They asked for possession of Fatehpur setting up the following case. Their case was that the transfer of 1877 made by Gains Singh to Agand Kuar had given her the village of Fatehpur as stridhan, without power to alienate beyond her own life, that on the death of Agand Kuar a daughter's estate had come into existence in favour of Phuljhari and Sughar Kuar, that on Phuljhari's death Sughar Kuar had obtained this estate by survivorship, and that on Sughar Kuar's death in 1921 the estate devolved on them as daughter's sons. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed this suit holding that under the deed of gift of 1877 (Ex. 9) a complete proprietary estate had passed to Musammam Agand Kuar. He gave further reasons for this view. He dismissed the suit on this preliminary point without going into other matters. The plaintiffs appeal against this decision.

The first question which we have to decide is in respect of the limitations attaching to certain transfers made by gift by a husband in favour of his wife when the husband is governed by the Mitakshara Law. When a husband who is governed by the Mitakshara Law makes a gift in favour of his wife the property transferred by gift becomes her stridhan, and we have no doubt as to the fact that if the stridhan is considered to be her self-acquired property she would ordinarily have the power to transfer it. Further such stridhan would descend by intestate succession to her heirs and not to her husband's heirs. But, as the learned Counsel for the appellants has rightly pointed out, there are peculiar restrictions, according to legal authority on the Mitakshara Law, to the widow's right to transfer landed property if the gift has been made in a particular fashion. We go direct to the authority in question. It is the authority of the Viramirodaya. As to the weight to be attached to this authority it is only necessary to say that in Giridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (1) at page 466*

their Lordships of the Judicial Committee said:

"Adhering to the principles which this Board lately laid down in the case of Collector of Madura v. Mutu Ramalinga Sathupathy (2) their Lordships have no doubt that the Viramitrodaya, which by Mr. Colebrooke and others is stated to be a Treatise of high authority at Benares, is properly receivable as an exposition of what may have been left doubtful by the Mitakshara, and declaratory of the law of the Benares School."

The Mitakshara does not contain the qualification which we find in the Viramitrodaya but under this rule it is clear that we must consider the Viramitrodaya authoritative upon the point. In Chap. V of the Viramitrodaya, para. 5, page 441, of Setlur's Complete Collection of Hindu Law Books on Inheritance of 1911, the author says:—

"In the disposal of woman's property, however, females have not independence without the permission of their husband. This is declared by Manu thus:—

"Women shall not make any disbursement out of family property which is common to many, or even out of their own property without the permission of their husband." Disbursement (nirhara) means, expenditure, (Manu IX 199).

"But in the disposal of some kinds of woman's property females have independence; this Katyayana having described a kind of gift, declares thus:—'The independence of women who have received a kind gift, is admitted (in respect of it) for it was given by them out of kindness, for their maintenance. With respect to a kind gift, the independence, at all times, of women is proclaimed in making sale or gift according to pleasure, even when it consists of immoveable property' (II Cole. Dig. 594, CCCCCXXV).

"But as regards property given by the husband they have independence in dealing only with property other than immoveables. This is declared by Narada, thus:—'What has been given by an affectionate husband to his wife, she may, even when he is dead, consume it or give it away as she pleases, excepting immoveable property' (Narada, 128). The meaning is, that the wife can only enjoy the immoveable property given by the husband by dwelling on it, etc., but cannot make a gift, sale or the like. Some are of opinion that the text of Katyayana also, viz.—'Let the sonless wife, preserving unsullied the bed of her husband, etc.'—refers only to immoveable property given by the husband, since (if interpreted in this way) it embodies the same precept as the text of Narada. But what it refers to, has been discussed by us while explaining the text,—'The wife and the daughters also, etc.'"

Sir Gooroodass Banerjee in his Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan (Tagore Law Lectures for 1878) has, at page 370 of the 5th Edition, given the name of the property so gifted by the husband. The name is Saudayika. He translates the word 'Saudayika' as a gift from affectionate kindred. This translation appears to us the correct one. But our decision as to the Hindu Law on the subject does not conclude the matter. For the decision of this case we have to determine on the construction of Ex. 9 itself, whether Gaiind Singh transferred the village of Fatehpur to his wife as Saudayika, or as a full proprietary estate. We can undoubtedly accept as a conclusion that Gaiind Singh was an affectionate husband, but it does not follow that because he was an affectionate husband it must be determined that Fatehpur came to Musammatt Agand Kuar as Saudayika, and that she had no power to transfer it. If it were taken that all gifts or bequests from a husband were Saudayika it would not be possible in any circumstances for a widow to have the power of transfer over immoveable property so received from her husband. There is an abundance of authority to show that in certain circumstances a widow has the power to transfer immoveable property so acquired. We need only refer in this connection to decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. In Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (3) their Lordships found that wives had obtained a full proprietary estate in property transferred to them by gift by their husband. In Fateh Chand v. Rup

(2) 12 M. I. A. 397 at p. 438; 1 B. L. R. P. C. 1; 10 W. R. P. C. 17; 3 Mad. Jur. 298; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 135; Sar. P. C. J. 361; 20 E. R. 389; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 1.

Chand (4) their Lordships found that a widow had obtained a full proprietary estate in property devised to her by her husband. In Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (5) their Lordships arrived at a similar decision. In Sasiman Chowdhurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury (6) they arrived again at the same conclusion. Thus it appears clear that in order to ascertain whether Musammam Agand Kuar had or had not the right to transfer Fatehpur to Ohhedi Ram Misir we must look at Ex. 9 and place a construction upon it. If on the face of it Ex. 9 shows that a full proprietary estate was conferred on Agand Kuar there is an end of the matter. If it does not show that a full estate was conferred upon Agand Kuar, the gift must be considered as Saudayika, and it must be held that she had no power of transfer beyond her lifetime. We must in the first place remember the circumstances in which this deed was executed. Before 1876 Subedar Gaiind Singh had transferred some two-thirds of his whole estate to outsiders. In 1876 he transferred all that he had left in Mareman to one daughter and he transferred the whole of Bhiti to his other daughter's husband. He gives both the transferees full proprietary rights. All that he had then left out of the original estate was his interest in Fatehpur and half Nau Sanda, and these he proceeds in 1877, three years before his death, to transfer to his wife. He commences with a somewhat remarkable statement that he is afraid that the estate may be destroyed after his death, as he has no male issue. As by this time he had already disposed of more than five-sixths of it, it seems that this phrase was the work of the writer, and that it meant nothing in particular. He had described himself as the full proprietor of this property and he then proceeds to transfer the zemindari with all rights appurtenant to his wife as by special gift (hiba khas). He transfers the estate to her and her heirs naslan bad naslan (generation by generation). He transfers his rights to her and he lays down that after the execution of the deed neither he nor any one of his own heirs and co-sharers is to bring any sort of claim against the lady. His heirs were distant collaterals. The operative part of the deed concludes with the words that with the exception of Musammam Agand Kuar no one else is to have the power to interfere or intervene in respect of the property transferred. This can only mean that Musammam Agand Kuar is the only person who has the authority to interfere or intervene in respect of the property. She is to have 'ikhtiyar dastandazi wa madakhlat.' It is true that although in the prior deeds an express power of alienation is given to the donees, no express power of alienation is given to the donee here. The form of a deed, however, depends to a certain extent upon the draftsman. We do not know who drafted the deed in favour of Phuljhari, but the deed in favour of Sheoamber Singh was drafted by a man called Sita Ram, while the deed Ex. 9 was drafted by a man called Bans Gopal. One question which arises for our consideration in considering the intention of Gaiind Singh is what would have happened if he had not executed Ex. 9 in favour of his wife. If he had died intestate without executing this deed, Fatehpur and half of Nau Sanda, which she obtained under this deed, would have been obtained by her as a Hindu widow under the Mitakshara Law. In respect of her position she would have been in exactly the same position if the view of the appellants be accepted, whether this deed had or had not been executed. In respect of the inheritance to the estate, taking the view which we do, had Ex. 9 not been executed, the inheritance would have passed to her daughters and her daughters' sons. It is true that it is suggested by the learned Counsel for the appellants that there was a custom excluding daughters and daughters' sons from inheritance, but there is nothing upon the record to support the existence of any such custom, and in absence of such custom under the Mitakshara Law the daughters and daughters' sons would have succeeded. Thus if the view of the learned Counsel for the appellants be accepted, Gaiind Singh by executing Ex. 9 left the situation exactly as it was if he had not executed that deed. We think it is a reasonable presumption that he executed the deed for some specific purpose. The learned Counsel for the appellants argues that it is most unnatural that he should wish to exclude his own daughters and their children from inheritance and that it is only natural to suppose that he would have wished to keep the property intact. He can hardly be said to have excluded his daughters from inheritance in view of the fact that he had given valuable property absolutely to one daughter, and valuable property absolutely to the other daughter's husband and thereby had considerably diminished the interest which his widow would otherwise have obtained in the estate. As to keeping the property intact, in spite of the assertion that he wished to do this, the facts show that he had reduced his estate to practically nothing. Having made permanent provision for both his daughters there was nothing surprising in a wish to make an absolute provision for his wife with a full right of transfer; and when we find in these circumstances that he transfers this property to her as a special gift describing it as the property in his exclusive proprietary right, and says that he transfers all the rights held by him to her, that she is to hold it generation after generation, that neither himself nor his own heir is ever to make a claim against her, and that no one except her is to have any connection with the property, we consider that the only construction to be placed upon the deed is that it transferred full proprietary rights. We should not have been of opinion that if the deed had not transferred full proprietary rights the provisions of Act I of 1869 would have operated to transfer the property with full proprietary rights. But upon our construction of the deed we are in agreement with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868), s. 5—Decree of Settlement Court, finality of—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to go behind such decree.

Where a decree of a Settlement Court in Oudh has, from the necessity of the case, been unable to decide whether a man is or is not an under-proprietor, where a decree of a Settlement Court has left in doubt the fact whether he is or is not an under-proprietor, or where there is no decree of a Settlement Court deciding the point, then the question, as to whether a man has or has not under-proprietary rights, must be decided upon other evidence. But where the decree of the Settlement Court leaves no doubt as to the fact that certain persons are occupancy tenants and not under-proprietors, it is not open to the Civil Courts to go behind it. [p. 872, col. 2.]

Where a Settlement Court of Oudh has clearly decided that certain persons are only occupancy tenants within the meaning of s. 5 of Oudh Rent Act XIX of 1868, no subsequent statements that such tenants are under-proprietors, whether contained in the mouths of witnesses, in receipts for rent or in entries in the Revenue Registers, can avail to show that they are under-proprietors. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th February, 1927, upholding that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 14th September, 1926.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this second appeal is one of importance and of no little difficulty. We have derived great assistance in our decision from the careful and well thought out judgment of the learned District Judge of Fyzabad who was the Court of First Appeal. The facts as he found them, and we find them, may be stated as follows: The predecessors-in-interest of the present appellant applied in the Sultanpur Settlement of 1869 for a declaration that they should be given what they called sir rights. They clearly were not able to explain exactly what they wanted, but were ready to take anything which put them in a position better than that of ordinary tenants. They appear to have asked for a sub-settlement. If they did not get that, they were ready to take a decree for under-proprietary rights. If they did not get that they were ready to take the next best thing. The Settlement Officer stated that their family had held the land for generations on a service tenure and considered that they were entitled to no rights of any kind. The Settlement Commissioner stated that these persons were not zemindars, that they had not established an under-proprietary title, but that their position was something better than that of mere tenants-at-will. He accordingly directed that they should be declared to possess a right of occupancy in the lands held by them, taking a right of occupancy to be the right described in Chap. II of Act XIX of 1868. This right of occupancy is described particularly in s. 5 of that Act, and there can be no doubt that according to Mr. Capper's decision these persons were considered to be tenants, who, having lost all proprietary right, whether superior or subordinate, in the lands which they held or cultivated, were to have, so long as they paid the rent, a right of occupancy. It appears that after the occurrence of the large number of events which have been detailed carefully by the learned District Judge, the successors-in-interest eventually got their names recorded from 1892 to 1920 as under-proprietors. Recently, the superior proprietors of the village asked that the revenue papers should be corrected and that the appellant and his co-sharers should be recorded as occupancy tenants. The revenue papers having been corrected accordingly, the appellant and others brought the present suit for a declaration that they are under-proprietors. In support of the claim to be under-proprietors, he relies upon certain facts and upon certain facts only. The facts in question are that in a suit for arrears of rent which was brought in 1900 a witness Raghunath Singh, who is alleged to have been the ancestor of some of the defendants-respondents, stated that the predecessors of the appellant were under-proprietors. Further facts were that in certain rent-receipts those predecessors are described as under-proprietors and from 1892 to 1920 they are described in the revenue papers as under-proprietors. These are all the facts in his favour. The learned District Judge considers that, in view of the fact that Mr. Capper's judgment, which creates the rights, distinctly shows that the rights were only the rights of occupancy tenants within the meaning of s. 5, Act XIX of 1868, no subsequent statements that such tenants are under-proprietors whether contained in the mouths of witnesses, in receipts for rent or in entries in the Revenue Registers, can avail to show that they are under-proprietors. We arrive at the same conclusion as he arrives upon the facts and we arrive at the same finding. Where a decree of a Settlement Court in Oudh has, from the necessity of the case, been unable to decide whether a man is or is not an under-proprietor, where a decree of a Settlement Court has left in doubt the fact whether he is or is not an under-proprietor, or where there is no decree of a Settlement Court deciding the point, then undoubtedly the question, as to whether a man has or has not under-proprietary rights, must be decided upon other evidence. But where, as here, the decree of the Settlement Court can leave no doubt as to the fact that the parties are occupancy tenants and not under-proprietors, it is not open to us to go behind it. Even if it were open to us to go behind it, in our opinion, the evidence adduced by the appellant would not be sufficient to show that under-proprietary rights existed. For the above reasons we uphold the decision of the learned District Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Messrs. Kashi Prasad and M. M. Ansari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow in a suit where the plaintiff sought a declaration that he was an under-proprietor of three specific plots in the village of Tipnamau. The suit is a sequel to certain proceedings in the Revenue Courts. These plots were originally the muafi of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. These persons sold their muafi rights on the 16th of February, 1923, to the present plaintiff and their landlords brought a suit for resumption under s. 108, cl. (5) (a) of the Oudh Rent Act. In that suit the present plaintiff was made a party and he pleaded that he had purchased the right of the muafidars, and that he should be held to be an under-proprietor because the muafidars had held the land for more than 50 years and had, in other respects, complied with the requirements of s. 107-H of the Oudh Rent Act. The Revenue Courts held that the sale of muafi rights was void, that the muafidars did not become under-proprietors until they were declared to be such by an order of the Court and that accordingly the vendee was in a position analogous to that of a trespasser. The landlords thereupon brought a suit against the vendee for arrears of rent and the latter filed this suit in the Civil Court asking for a declaration that he was under-proprietor and, in the alternative, praying that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 be ordered to execute a fresh sale-deed in respect of the same plots. That is to say he pleaded first that he was an under-proprietor because the rights sold to him should be construed to be under-proprietary rights, and

secondly, if the Court found that the under-proprietary rights had not been transferred already the vendees should be required to make good the defect by a new sale-deed. In other words, the first sale was to be regarded as a contract to sell and the suit was to be regarded in some manner a suit for specific performance of contract. One of the issues raised in the first Court was that the suit was not cognisable by that Court. Unfortunately the learned Munsif has not decided this issue. He threw out the suit on his finding that the sale-deed of muafi land was void. The lower Appellate Court in its judgment, which although specious is unsound from beginning to end, set aside the decree of the lower Court and decreed the suit for declaration. In that Court also the question of jurisdiction was raised and was dealt with very briefly at the end of the judgment and regarded by the Court as a point of little or no interest. It appears to me that Civil Courts are too ready to take up and decide questions of Revenue Law which have already been decided in the Revenue Courts. There is no question that the same points were in issue in the Civil Courts as had already been determined by the Revenue Courts and primarily it is the Revenue Courts and not the Civil Courts who decide questions of under-proprietary rights. The finding of the Revenue Court was that the muafidars had attempted to sell muafi rights which cannot be sold and that consequently the vendee had no title and they also held that a muafidar only acquires under-proprietary title under s. 107-H of the Oudh Rent Act when he is declared by a Court to have done so. Unless these points could be decided over again in favour of the plaintiff he could not succeed in establishing the case which he has set up in the Civil Court, and as a decision on these points was within the powers of the Revenue Courts, the Civil Courts would, in my opinion, have been justified in declining to admit this case.

As, however, the learned Subordinate Judge has dealt at length with the questions in issue and given findings which are, in my opinion, entirely erroneous, I think it proper to deal with these findings. In the first place he has held that the case is governed by s. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act. He invokes that section to prove that a vendor having sold an unsaleable right should be bound by that sale when he subsequently obtains a saleable right in the same property. In order to maintain this decision he has found that a sale of muafi rights although void against the zemindar is not void ab initio and he refers to certain rulings which he believes to be in favour of his view and he differentiates those rulings which he believes to be against his view. As a matter of fact, the only ruling which would directly support him is Bhairon v. Balak (1) which has been dissented from by the Oudh Chief Court in Dasrath v. Sandala (2). It appears to me that muafi rights are rights held by a tenant against the zemindar and against no one else. Such rights cannot be sold because they are resumable by the zemindar and the fact that such a sale is void as against the zemindar makes the sale absolutely void because it can be immediately defeated by the zemindar. Section 43 has no application to a sale which is void. It applies to a case where a person erroneously represents that he is authorised to transfer certain property and subsequently becomes able to do so. A holder of muafi rights who sells those muafi rights can never be in this position because he can never become able to sell muafi rights. He is not selling the land because he is not the landlord. He is only selling certain rights in that land which are unsaleable and the sale is not made good if he subsequently becomes possessed of saleable rights in the same land.

But to make his case more sure the learned Subordinate Judge went on to dispute the finding of the Munsif and also of the Revenue Courts that a muafidar only becomes an under-proprietor under the terms of s. 107-H when he is declared by a Court to do so. Here too the case-law was against the lower Court but he has attempted to distinguish some of the authorities and lays down the law that a muafidar of more than two generations and 50 years standing shall be deemed to have become an under-proprietor in the eyes of the law whether a declaration has or has not been made under s. 107-H. It is not necessary to discuss this at length. I need only say that the learned Subordinate

Judge is wrong. In Murli v. Gajraj Singh (3) it was laid down that "it is well settled that under-proprietary right under s. 107-H only arises on a declaration being made by the Revenue Court under that section. Such a declaration changes the status of the muafidar into that of under-proprietor from the date on which it takes effect." More recently the Chief Court of Oudh in Umanath Bakhsh v. Ram Bakhsh Singh (4) has spoken of "such under-proprietary rights as can be created under s. 107-H of the Oudh Rent Act, in other words, where potential rights in the future and not actual rights in the present are set up". Thus when the sale was made the vendors were not under-proprietors and they could only transfer those rights which they then possessed. The rights which they possessed were the rights of a muafidar and those rights could not be sold. As soon as the landlords came forward to resume the muafi and the Courts declared that the muafi had ceased to exist and the muafidars had become under-proprietors, the vendee had nothing on which to rest a title. Neither of the Courts below have considered the question as to whether the plaintiff can obtain any relief from the vendors. Whether he can do so or not is a question which I have not got to decide but on this point at least I may express an opinion, namely, that he cannot obtain the satisfaction he has sought, that is, he cannot in these proceedings obtain an order directing the vendees to execute a new sale-deed of under-proprietary rights in his favour, because the first sale-deed of muafi rights has been found to be void. This is a relief which no Court can grant.

This appeal has been preferred by the vendors and another Appeal No. 297 of 1927 has been filed by the zemindars. Both of these appeals must succeed and are decreed with costs. I accordingly set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the order of the Munsif who dismissed the suit with costs.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE NO. 45 OF 1927.

December 1, 1927.

Present:—Sir Louis Stuart, Kt., Chief Judge.SURAJ BALI—ACCUSED—APPLICANT versusEMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 15, 350 (a)—Bench of Magistrates—Some Magistrates not sitting throughout trial—Validity of trial.

A Bench of Magistrates consisted of A, B and C. A and B began the trial and recorded a portion of the evidence. B and C sat at the next two hearings and all the three sat at the subsequent hearings and signed the judgment:

Held, that the trial was bad and liable to be set aside as it contravened the provisions of s. 350 (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code, even though the quorum required was only two.

Application for revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Unao, dated the 4th August, 1927.

FACTS appear from the following order of reference of the Sessions Judge:—

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

This is an application for revision against the order of the learned District Magistrate of Unao dismissing the applicant's appeal against the order of the Bench Magistrates convicting him under s. 456, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing him to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The ground pressed in revision is that the procedure adopted by the Bench Magistrates contravened the provisions of s. 350 (a), Criminal Procedure Code, and, therefore, the trial was bad in law. The facts about which there is no dispute are these: The case was sent for decision to the Bench Magistrates sitting at Unao. The Bench Magistrates sitting at Unao is composed of Khan Bahadur Quazi Nazir Ahmad, Major Kamta Singh and Pandit Shiam Sundarnath Kaul. On receiving the case, Khan Bahadur Quazi Nazir Ahmad and Major Kamta Singh began the trial on the 6th June and recorded a portion of the prosecution evidence which was taken down by Major Kamta Singh. On the next date of hearing, i.e., 18th June, 1927, Khan Bahadur Quazi Nazir Ahmad was absent whose place was taken by Shiam Sundarnath Kaul who sitting with Major Kamta Singh heard the case in part and adjourned it for the rest of the hearing to the 25th June, 1927. On the 25th June, 1927, also the same two members formed the Bench and heard the case in part and adjourned it to 2nd July, 1927. From the 2nd July down to the 23rd, all the three sat and the judgment was also signed by all of them. All the writing work, that is, of recording the evidence was done by Major Kamta Singh who, as has been seen, attended on all the dates and sat on the Bench.

In my opinion the proceedings should be quashed. The case of Banwari Lal v. Emperor (1) decided by the Lahore High Court on January 15, 1926, i.e., after the amended Criminal Procedure Code came into force, is on all fours with the present case. It was held in that case that where out of three Magistrates constituting the Bench only one is present on all hearings throughout the trial sitting some times with one, some times with the other and some times with both, the trial is bad as it contravenes the provisions of s. 350 (a), Criminal Procedure Code, even though the quorum consisted of two. The same view appears to have been taken by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Brij Bhukhan v. Ram Kirat (2) against the order of the District Magistrate of Gonda, dated the 4th December, 1922. In this case the trial was commenced before the Bench of two Honorary Magistrates. They heard the evidence for the prosecution and examined one of the witnesses for the defence. On a subsequent date one of the Magistrates was not present, and his place was taken by another who recorded the remaining evidence for the defence and heard the arguments and the case was eventually decided by all the three acting together and ended in the conviction of the accused. It was held that the trial was bad and was rightly set aside by the District Magistrate although the District Magistrate was not justified in passing an order of acquittal of the accused but what he ought to have done was to have set aside the conviction and direct a re-trial if the case was a fit one for the taking of that step. The learned Pleader for the opposite party relied on the case of Mathura v. Emperor (3).

(2) 76 Ind. Cas. 566; A. I. R. 1923 Oudh 163; 25 Cr. L. J. 198; 10 O. L. J. 614.

(3) 48 Ind. Cas. 344; 41 A. L. J. 116; 16 A. L. J. 884; 19 Cr. L. J. 1004.

This case was decided before the passing of the amended Criminal Procedure Code. The rules which were framed by the Government for the conduct of business by Benches of Honorary Magistrates before the amended Act are to be found in the Manual of Government Orders VI Judicial (Criminal) Department, Chap. XXXIII, para. 814. The amendment in the law necessitated the substitution of the words "provided that the provisions of s. 350 (a), Criminal Procedure Code are carefully observed," for the proviso to r. 3 under para. 814 referred to above (correction slip No. 528). Section 350 (a) requires that the Bench should be duly constituted under s. 15 and that the Magistrates constituting the same have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings. Reading the above with s. 15, it would appear that at least two Magistrates ought to have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings. In the present case only one Magistrate was present on the Bench throughout the proceedings, namely, Major Kamta Singh. I find, therefore, that in this case s. 350 (a) was not carefully observed. The next argument was that the Court should not interfere because no party has been prejudiced. I think this argument cannot prevail. When the law prescribed at least two Magistrates for a proper constitution of the tribunal, it did so intentionally and for a certain object. That object has been explained by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh in Criminal Reference No. 7 of 1922, Sultan v. Shamsheer (4) "the object of constituting a Bench is that the Magistrates concerned should individually and collectively give their attention and apply their minds to the hearing of the evidence and the determination of the points at issue and arrive at an independent judgment in regard to the merits of the charge."

I, therefore, send up this case to the Hon'ble Court with the recommendation that the trial including the judgment and order of the learned District Magistrate in appeal be set aside and the orders as to re-trial or otherwise may be passed as the Hon'ble Court think fit. The papers will be submitted to the Hon'ble Court with such explanations as the learned District Magistrate and the learned Bench Magistrates might submit.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—I direct that trial including the judgment and order of the learned District Magistrate in appeal be set aside. As the accused has already been imprisoned for a considerable time I direct that he stand acquitted and be not tried again.

Jury trial—Statement of approver—Charge to Jury—Duty of Judge—Legality of conviction.

A conviction based upon the uncorroborated evidence of an approver would ordinarily not be sustainable unless the Judge had explained carefully to the Jury that they were taking a grave risk in convicting upon uncorroborated evidence. But a conviction cannot be upset on this ground where the evidence of the approver is corroborated and the Judge explains to the Jury in his charge the nature of the corroboration and directs the Jury to arrive at their verdict after considering the evidence of the approver and the evidence of the corroboration together.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 23rd September, 1927.

Mr. R. D. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Only two points have been argued in appeal. The first is that the conviction is vitiated by the failure of the Judge to explain to the Jury the law as to the necessity of corroboration of an approver's statement. The second is that the sentence is too severe. In regard to the first point it is sufficient to say that I find that the learned Judge did explain sufficiently to the Jury the law on the subject. A conviction based upon an uncorroborated evidence of an approver should ordinarily not be sustainable unless the Judge had explained carefully to the Jury that they were taking a grave risk in convicting upon such uncorroborated evidence. Here the case is perfectly different. The evidence of the approver was corroborated and strongly corroborated. It was corroborated against the present appellant. The Judge in his charge explained the nature of the corroboration and directed the Jury to arrive at their verdict after considering the evidence of the approver and the evidence of corroboration together. This portion of the charge is open to no objection. On the second point I find that the sentence passed upon the appellant was a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment only. He was convicted for having participated in the commission of a serious dacoity. He is, it is true, only a young man. The learned Sessions Judge has taken his youth into consideration and has passed on him a sentence which I consider a light sentence. In view of the nature of the offence, I do not interfere on the question of sentence and dismiss the appeal.

Application for revision of a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, in Second Rent Appeal No. 14/18 of 1927, dated the 19th May, 1927, reversing that of the Collector, Barabanki, dated the 29th September, 1926, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Second Class, District Barabanki, in Suit No. 73 of 1926, dated the 17th August, 1926.

The Chief Judge before whom the case came on for hearing made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE.—In view of the conflict of opinion in Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Bhagwan Das (1) and Jagannath Pershad v. Bechu (2), I refer the decision of this revision to a Bench of two Judges.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Applicants.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in which we are asked to interfere in revision under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure with an order of the Additional District Judge of Lucknow reversing a decree passed by an Honorary Assistant Collector, Second Class, which was upheld on appeal by the Collector. A preliminary objection has been taken to the effect that, as the Courts in question, in exercise of the jurisdiction which they exercised, are not subordinate to this Court, this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in revision.

In order to understand the nature of this objection, it is necessary to examine the provisions of Local Act XXII of 1886 as amended by Act IV of 1901 and Act I of 1923 in respect of jurisdiction. The Chapter in question is Chap. VIII. Under the provisions of s. 105, Courts, other than Courts of Revenue, are prohibited from taking cognizance of a certain description of suits. The five grades of Courts of Revenue are given in s. 109. They are the Courts of the Board of Revenue, the Commissioner, the Collector, the Assistant Collector of the First Class, and the Assistant Collector of the Second Class. Assistant Collectors of the Second Class have jurisdiction to try only certain specified suits the value of which does not exceed Rs. 100. Assistant Collectors of the First Class can try and determine suits of every description which are cognizable only by a Revenue Court. A Collector has, in addition to the powers of a Collector, the powers of an Assistant

Collector of the First Class. We thus have it that all original suits, which are cognizable only by Revenue Courts, are heard by the Courts of Collectors and Assistant Collectors and by no other Courts. So far this is simple. We now come to appeals. Section 119 classifies for appeal purposes certain specified classes of suits. It is not necessary to enumerate these suits. It is sufficient to say that the main suits so classified are suits for arrears of rent and suits for profits. After those suits are excluded, an appeal lies in all the remaining suits from the original Court to the Collector (or to the Commissioner, if the Collector was the Court of original trial), Assistant Collectors of the First Class being permitted to hear, when specially empowered, appeals from Assistant Collectors of the Second Class. From the Appellate Court of a Collector or of a specially empowered Assistant Collector of the First Class, appeals lie to the Commissioner and from the Commissioner appeals lie to the Board. The law here has not been materially altered. When we come, however, to appeals in the class of cases which we have noted as specially classified we find that there has been a very considerable change effected by the recent law. Formerly, when the final Court of Appeal was not the Board of Revenue, the final Court of Appeal was the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, but now a third final Court of Appeal has been added in certain cases. In these classified suits of which suits for arrears of rent and profits may be taken as the outstanding class, where the decree is the decree of an Assistant Collector of the Second Class, an appeal lies to the Collector or to a specially empowered Assistant Collector. The next appeal, however, does not lie to the Commissioner, but, where the value of the original suit does not exceed Rs. 5,000, it lies to the District Judge and, where the value of the suit exceeds Rs. 5,000, it lies direct to the Chief Court. Section 119 (b) lays down particularly that there shall not be an appeal from the decision in appeal of a District Judge except in decrees passed in appeal from the appellate decrees or orders of Collectors or Assistant Collectors of the First Class. We thus have it that in a suit, such as the suit we are now considering, the Chief Court has no jurisdiction whatever in appeal. The first decree was passed by an Assistant Collector of the Second Class. The appeal lay to the Court of the Collector. A second appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge and there the matter ended. Can it then be said that these Courts are in any way subordinate to the Chief Court in respect of this particular matter. We are of opinion that it cannot so be said. This decision of ours is in agreement with the decision arrived at by Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, Judicial Commissioner in Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Bhagwan Das (1). This decision was passed on the 12th of March, 1923. It is true that in a subsequent decision passed by Mr. Dalal, who was then Judicial Commissioner, on the 30th of August, 1923—Jagannath Prasad v. Bechu (2)—(in which he does not refer to Pandit Kanhaiya Lal's decision) the contrary view is taken. But with due respect to Mr. Dalal we are unable to accept his view. He based his view upon a decision of a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, dated the 14th September, 1922 in Chauharja Bakhsh v. Kalka Pande (3). He omitted, however, to notice that this decision referred to the law as it was before the alterations which had taken place at the time when Pandit Kanhaiya Lal gave his decision. In 1922 there were only two final Courts of Appeal: the Court of the Board of Revenue in certain cases and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in other cases. All that the decision in Chauharja Bakhsh v. Kalka Pande (3) lays down is that, where a Court is the Court of final appeal, the Courts whose decisions are subject to final appeal are Courts subordinate to that Court of final appeal, and that such Court of final appeal has revisional powers. That is a perfectly correct statement of the law as it then was with which we agree, but it does not follow that, where, as here, this Court is not the Court of final appeal, the Courts concerned are subordinate to it and that this Court has revisional powers. The whole situation has been altered by the change in the law which has made the Court of the District Judge the Court of final appeal in such cases. The view taken by Pandit Kanhaiya Lal was that, where the original decree was a decree of an Assistant Collector of the Second Class, this Court had no powers in revision. We accept that view. According to that view the preliminary objection must succeed. We, therefore, dismiss this application with costs.

Section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act applies to a case where the vendee and the pre-emptor stand in the same position with regard to their right of pre-emption.

Wali-ul-Haq v. Mohammad Ghani-ul-Haq (1), referred to.

Appeal against a judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 16th May, 1927, confirming that of the Munsif, Haveli, Fyzabad, dated the 30th October, 1925.

*Messrs. R. D. Sinha and G. C. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Raj Bahadur, for Mr. Rajeshri Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad in an appeal arising from a suit for pre-emption. The findings which are not challenged are that the plaintiff and the vendee have an equal right of pre-emption in respect of this property. The Court below, acting on this finding, drew lots under s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1876, the Oudh Laws Act, and the plaintiff, being successful in the lots, the appeal was dismissed. The decision is now challenged on the ground that the lower Court erred in law by deciding the case by drawing of lots and this is the only ground of appeal which has been argued. The appellant's contention is that where the vendee and the pre-emptor stand in the same position with regard to their right of pre-emption, s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act does not apply, because neither of them can be said to have a right of pre-emption against the other, but, under s. 9, the word pre-emption is not used and the rule that where two or more persons are equally entitled to such right "the person to exercise the same shall be determined by lot" applies to the right to buy or redeem such property and not to the right to pre-empt such property. It is also argued that pre-emption can only be sought by a person who is entitled by law to receive notice from the vendor of the property proposed for sale, and as the vendee in this case had the same right as the pre-emptor no such notice was due to the pre-emptor under s. 10. But here again the learned Counsel for the appellant would have me add certain words to the section. The section rules that any person proposing to sell any property in respect of which any person has a right to pre-empt shall give notice to the person concerned of the price at which he is willing to sell such property. The section does not say "where any person has entered into a contract to sell any property" but only "where any person proposes to sell any property" and the meaning of the section is not that after the vendor has agreed to sell the property to some person he should issue a notice to those persons who have a right of pre-emption as against the vendee, but that a person who intends to sell property which is subject to the right of pre-emption, shall issue a notice to all persons who have under the law of pre-emption a right to buy. This question was decided by the authority of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and I have to cover the same ground as the Judicial Commissioners in their decision reported as Wali-ul-Haq v. Mohammad Ghani-ul-Haq (1) which has formed the basis of the decisions in numerous subsequent cases. I have no doubt that s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act was correctly interpreted by the Judicial Commissioners and that a Court in a case of this kind is bound to have recourse to lots. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Loss of proprietary or under-proprietary right—Presumption of acquisition of occupancy right.

There is no presumption that a person in occupation of land who has lost his proprietary or under-proprietary right is a mere trespasser. The presumption is just the other way and the very fact that he has lost his proprietary or under-proprietary right, of itself, would lead to an inference that he has acquired occupancy rights. [p. 881, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 30th March, 1927, setting aside the decree of the Assistant Collector of First Class, Gonda, dated the 22nd September, 1925.

ORDER.

Pullan, J.—(August 1, 1927).—This suit was filed along with another suit for arrears of rent under the Oudh Rent Act. The defendants were admittedly, up to the year 1835, under-proprietors. The plaintiff admitted that in one portion of the property the defendants had become tenants by means of a lease and in the suit relating to that portion of the property a decree was passed for arrears of rent. As to the other portion of the property, which is the subject-matter of this appeal, the plaintiff stated that after losing the under-proprietary title the defendants became occupancy tenants, but parted with half of their occupancy rights, and she went on to say that in this portion of the property the defendants were trespassers and, she sued, therefore, for an equitable rent coupled with ejectment under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. Now the plaintiff has never shown how the defendants surrendered their occupancy rights and in what portion of the holding, but the mere fact that the plaintiff has sued at the same time for rent in the other suit on the basis of a lease indicates very clearly that that is the portion of the property in which the defendants surrendered their occupancy rights, and it would follow, unless there is some proof to the contrary, that it is the property in suit before me in which the occupancy rights may still subsist. The Assistant Collector had this issue before him and he recorded a finding which is erroneous. He said that in a Civil Court decision it has been held that the defendants have no proprietary or under-proprietary rights in the plots "that means that they have no qabzadari rights, especially as it was proved in that Civil Court case that the qabzadari rights of defendants' ancestors were sold in arrears of rent." Now the very fact that these persons had lost their proprietary or under-proprietary rights would, of itself, prove that they had acquired qabzadari or occupancy rights and not the reverse, and the statement that their ancestors had sold the qabzadari rights is not borne out by the judgment of the Civil Court to which the Assistant Collector referred. When the case went in appeal to the learned District Judge he appears to have been of opinion that the plaintiff had not proved that the defendants were trespassers, but he himself was unable to decide what rights they held and he, therefore, dismissed the suit. In this I consider that the learned District Judge was wrong. The suit was one in the Court of an Assistant Collector who was the authority to decide the right of the defendants, if any, to be regarded as occupancy tenants. As the finding of the first Court on this point was clearly erroneous the learned District Judge should have pointed out this fact in his judgment and remanded the suit for determination as to the rights of the defendants, if any, as tenants. All that is proved is that they are no longer proprietors or under-proprietors and that they are still in occupation of the land. It is impossible to assume that they are trespassers. In fact the presumption is all the other way. I, therefore, remand the suit now to the Court of first instance for a clear finding, first as to what is the position of the defendants in regard to the plots in suit, namely, whether they are occupancy tenants and, if not, whether they have any other legal position and secondly what is the amount of rent to which they are liable. The finding on these issues should be returned to this Court through the Court of the learned District Judge within three months. Parties to be allowed to produce further evidence both oral and documentary before the Assistant Collector. Costs will follow the final result.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Aditya Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was remanded by this Court's order, dated 1st of August, 1927, for determination of two points. First, whether the defendants are occupancy tenants or not and, if not, whether they have any other legal position, and secondly, what is the amount of rent to which they are liable. The lower Court has returned a finding that the defendants are occupancy tenants and no objection has been taken to this finding. On the second point the reply is, that the rent according to the roster rates after deducting two annas in the rupee for their under-proprietary rights is Rs. 12-15 a year, but at the same time it is stated that according to the sale certificate by which this property passed to the plaintiffs the accepted rents on these plots was Rs. 21-7-6. In the objection raised by the plaintiffs they have accepted the second rate but protested against being awarded the roster rates. It is now argued before me that the figure Rs. 21-7-6 is not strictly correct, but in view of the plaintiffs' own admission in their objection to accepting the sum of Rs. 12-15, I am not prepared to go into the details of the rates assessed on each separate plot. It appears to me that this Rs. 21-7-6 is approximately correct after deducting the two annas in the rupee to which the defendants would be entitled as ex-proprietors and, in my opinion, it is proper to decree the suit on this basis. It is hardly fair to go back to the roster rates when it is proved satisfactorily that the land was actually paying these rents at the time of the sale. According to this calculation the amount due for a year and a half would be Rs. 32-3-3. I, therefore, allow this appeal with costs and order that the decree of the first Court be restored but that the principal sum be reduced from the amount decreed to Rs. 32-3-3.

A Court has full discretion in the matter of awarding costs, but that discretion must be exercised on judicial principles. If that discretion has been so exercised an Appellate Court is not entitled to interfere and if an Appellate Court interferes where it has no right to do so, a second appeal will lie. If, on the other hand, the order of the trial Court is not based on judicial principles, the Appellate Court can interfere and a second appeal will not lie if the Appellate Court has exercised its discretion judicially. [p. 882, col. 1.]

The question whether an appeal or second appeal lies from an order as to costs is largely academic as it is always necessary to examine the merits before the question is decided. [p. 882, col. 2.]

Mr. Harish Chandra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Naim Ullah for Mr. H. Husain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this second appeal arises are as follows:—

The plaintiff-appellant instituted a suit against Dilasa Ram, vendor, and Mazarul Haq, vendee, to enforce an alleged right of pre-emption. He stated that the property in suit had been sold by the vendor to the vendee for Rs. 1,500 but that the consideration had been falsely stated in the deed of sale to be Rs. 2,000. He had a right of pre-emption. This was admitted by the vendee. The vendee, however, asserted that the plaintiff had lost his right by refusing to purchase the property. Upon the facts there was a finding, which is accepted as correct by the parties, that the amount of consideration was actually Rs. 2,000 and that the plaintiff had not refused to purchase the property. A decree was given on payment of Rs. 2,000. The plaintiff, therefore, failed on a very important point. The order as to costs gave no reasons of any kind. It merely said that if the plaintiff paid the amount due from him within two months he would receive his costs from the vendee. The order as to costs was appealed against.

The lower Appellate Court in a careful reasoned judgment has decided that in the circumstances of the case neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was entitled to costs as each had failed in respect of a portion of his claim. He, therefore, directed that the parties should bear their own costs. An appeal has been filed against this appellate decree.

As there has been some doubt in the past as to the question whether a second appeal does or does not lie in such cases, the decision of this appeal was referred to a Bench. We state our findings upon it. A second appeal can only lie under the provisions of s. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The provisions of that section must be complied with absolutely. In this particular case a second appeal can only be justified if it be found that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is contrary to law. We, therefore, have to decide what is the law on the subject.

The authority of a Court to award costs is regulated in the main by the provisions of s. 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is in the absolute discretion of the Court, as to how costs are to be awarded but where they do not follow the event the Court must give its reasons for departure from the practice of directing costs to follow the event and those reasons must be in writing. It is well-settled law that although the Court has full discretion in the matter of awarding costs, that discretion must be exercised on judicial principles. But if that discretion has been exercised upon judicial principles, an Appellate Court is not justified in interfering with the order passed. This rule has been laid down in more than one decision. It was laid down by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in the case of Ram Bharos v. Rampal Singh (1) and it was laid down in Allahabad in the case of Radhey Shyam v. Bihari Lal (2). If the lower Appellate Court had no right to interfere with the order of the trial Court in the matter of awarding costs the decision of the lower Appellate Court is contrary to law and is a proper subject for second appeal. But if the order of the trial Court was of such a nature as to be appealable to the lower Appellate Court and the lower Appellate Court's order is based upon a judicial discretion properly exercised, there can be no appeal to this Court. We consider that the order of the trial Court was open to the objection that the Judge has not judicially exercised his discretion. In the circumstances the lower Appellate Court had a right to modify it. In its order of modification the lower Appellate Court judicially exercised its discretion, and, therefore, no second appeal lies. The question as to whether a second appeal lies or does not lie is largely academic, for it is always necessary to examine the merits before the question is decided. If the Court below has decided the matter correctly and legally, an appeal would obviously fail even if it lay. Thus the question as to whether an appeal lies is not in practice of importance. It is of interest to note that the view enunciated in the above decisions are views which were approved in a recent judgment of the House of Lords in the case of Donald Campbell and Company v. Pollak (3). The procedure in the Courts in England differs in material particulars from the procedure in the Courts of India but the principle as laid down by their Lordships is the same as the principle in India. Where the discretion has been exercised judicially there should be no interference, but the discretion must be exercised judicially.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. Ali Jawad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Murli Manohar and G. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued for possession of a house which was formerly owned by one Musammāt Bahauti. The plaintiff based his claim on the fact that Bahauti was his legally married wife and that he was her heir under Muhammadan Law. The lower Courts have found that Bahauti, who was formerly a Hindu, was converted to Islam and married by nikah to the plaintiff and this finding cannot be challenged in second appeal. The case has, however, come before me because the appellant has raised the question whether the marriage between the plaintiff and this woman was invalid under Muhammadan Law and whether, therefore, the plaintiff had no right of inheritance. This plea is based on the plaintiff's own statement that he married Bahauti three or four months after the death of her first husband. If this statement is to be taken as accurate, the period of iddat which is 4 months and 10 days had not expired. This question was raised for the first time in the lower Appellate Court, and no definite finding was passed as to whether the marriage took place within the period of iddat, but the lower Appellate Court has held that, even if the marriage took place within that period, the plaintiff is entitled to inherit under Muhammadan Law. Marriages under Muhammadan Law are of three kinds. First, there are valid marriages, secondly, there are marriages which are void (batil) and thirdly, there are marriages which are fasid, a word which has been translated as vitiated. I have been asked to find that there is no essential difference between marriages which are batil and marriages which are fasid on the authority of certain commentators on Muhammadan Law, but the texts to which I have been referred, namely, that in the Jamaa'r-Rumuz, Vol. II, page 264, and that in the Rudd-ul-Muhtar,

Vol. II, page 444, which will be found in Aizunnissa Khatoon v. Karimunnissa Khatoon (1), have not been accepted by the leading commentators as being a correct statement of Muhammadan Law. Both these authorities are based on the Dur-ul-Muhtar and that commentary undoubtedly admits a distinction between batil and fasid, and lays down definitely that in the case of a fasid marriage the custom of dower is obligatory. If the dower is obligatory, the marriage cannot be altogether void, and the general opinion of the commentators is, that a fasid marriage, which is vitiated only by some temporary defect can become valid when the defect is removed. There is no question that a marriage contracted within the period of iddat is a fasid marriage. In a case of this kind the only objection to the marriage is that a certain period has not elapsed since the death of the first husband and this is a defect which can be removed by mere lapse of time. Mr. Amir Ali in his book on Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, Vol. II, pages 397 and 398, has given a detailed statement showing the differences between a marriage that is batil and a marriage which is fasid. He says: "Connections which are unlawful in themselves are null and void ab initio (batil) and create no civil rights and obligations between the parties. The wife has no right of dower against the husband, and neither of them is entitled to inherit from the other." As to invalid or fasid marriages he says, "Marriages which are not vitiated and rendered illegal by a radical defect of the character above described, stand on a different footing. In such cases also the children are legitimate." Mr. Tyabji in his Principles of Muhammadan Law, 2nd Edition, page 162, says, the prohibition by iddat is a mere temporary prohibition, (according to the view taken by the Hanafi School) for the marriage would be valid if it were celebrated a few months later; it is, therefore, considered more favourably by the law than a marriage that can never be valid. Mr. Abdur Rahim in his book on Muhammadan Jurisprudence at page 330 says that "a fasid marriage, although it may be annulled by the Court when the fact is brought to its notice, is treated as capable of giving rise to certain legal effect." These views of the commentators are accepted in a decision of the Bombay High Court of the year 1917, Tajbi. Abalal v. Mowla Khan-Alikhan (2), where their Lordships held at page 496* that "marriage with a temporarily prohibited woman, if consummated, may have legal consequences." They mention four principal consequences: Right to dower, obligation to perform iddat; legitimacy of issue; the establishment of nasab or paternity. At page 499* they say that "an examination of the text-book writers, old and relatively modern, puts it beyond all doubt that in numerous instances of temporary prohibition, all the legal consequences of marriage may follow, if in fact there has been consummation". It is true that I have been referred to no case in which a husband has claimed to inherit from a wife whom he married within the period of iddat but, in view of the authorities which have been cited, I am prepared to hold that such a marriage being only fasid or vitiated by a temporary defect can give rise to a right of inheritance between the two parties. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. Muhammad Ayub, for the Appellants.
Mr. Moti Lal Saksena, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the First Subordinate Judge of Bahraich confirming the decree of the Court of the Munsif allowing plaintiffs to recover a sum of Rs. 139-3 as price of certain goods which were attached and sold in execution of a decree. The decree was for a simple money debt and it was passed against the father of the plaintiff. It is proved that the plaintiff separated from his father in the year 1318 fasli, that is A. D. 1911. It has been proved to the satisfaction of the Court below that the property sold consisted of certain articles of furniture which were the personal property of the plaintiff. I am asked in second appeal to find that the plaintiff was liable to pay his father's debt because under Hindu Law it was his pious obligation to do so, that is, the proposition before me is that a Hindu son who has been separated from his father has the pious obligation to pay the personal debt of the father during the father's lifetime. I find that this proposition was not argued before the learned Hindu Judge who heard the appeal in the Court below and I have been asked to hold that this is the effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, reported as Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (1). It is true that in that judgment their Lordships have approved of the decision of the Bombay High Court in Govind Krishna Gujar v. Sakharan Narayan (2) in which it is laid down that "the law is now well-established that under the Hindu Law, the pious obligation of a son to pay his father's debt exists whether the father is alive or dead." I have referred to that ruling. I observe that it deals entirely with the case of a joint Hindu family where it is sought to execute a decree by selling the son's interest in the family property. The ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council is intended to lay down certain rules as to the powers, rights and duties of members of a joint Hindu family property in the matter of alienating or burdening the estate. It has no application to the case of a separated Hindu. As far as I am aware, there is no authority for the proposition that a Hindu son can be required to pay his father's debt out of his separated property either in his father's lifetime or after his father's death. I would refer to a ruling of the Madras High Court reported as Taduri Ramachandra Jagannatha Rao v. Vadrevu Viswesani (3) in which it was held that after partition the creditor could sue the son to recover the debt which was in existence before the partition from the joint family properties allotted to the son in partition. This proposition could only affect the present case if it were shown, firstly, that this debt was in existence before the partition and, secondly, that the property attached was part of the joint family property which came into the possession of the son. Neither of these pleas were raised at any time by the present appellant. It is too late for him to raise them now. I have no doubt that the suit has been decided correctly by the Courts below and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

HASAN BANDI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

BARATI LAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Agreement—Agreement to divide property on condition of financing litigation to recover property—Transfer of vested interest—Suit by person financing, maintainability of.

A who had no money to fight out a litigation for recovery of certain property, entered into an agreement with B that B should finance him and whatever property was acquired should be divided half and half between them, and that the litigation should be brought by B though the names of both were to appear. B brought a suit for possession without joining A's name:

Held, that the agreement did not effect a transfer of any vested interest in the property to B but was a mere contract and that the suit by B alone was not, therefore, maintainable. [p. 886, col. 1.]

Indar Singh v. Kesri Singh (1) and Qasim Ali Khan v. Ahmad Shah (2), referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, in Civil Appeal No. 66 of 1926, dated the 30th April, 1927, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 31st of March, 1926.

JUDGMENT.—On the 18th of December, 1908, Nawab Qasim Ali Khan executed a registered agreement on a ten-rupee stamped paper with a certain Damodar Das. On the strength of this agreement Barati Lal son of Damodar Das, instituted a suit for redemption of a 2-annas share in the village of Belahia on the ground that Nawab Qasim Ali Khan had the right to redeem 4-annas in that village. The mortgage, which it was sought to redeem, is held by Musammam Hasan Bandi. The trial Court decided that Barati Lal had no right to redeem and dismissed his suit. The lower Appellate Court decided in his favour. Musammam Hasan Bandi appeals here. The point for our decision is plain. Does this deed of the 18th December, 1908, transfer to Damodar Das a right of equity of redemption in this village? Nawab Qasim Ali Khan was claiming certain rights in the Qutubnagar estate. He had no money with which to prosecute his claim. He, therefore, entered, under this agreement, into an arrangement with Damodar Das, who undertook to finance his litigation and to recoup himself by retaining half of anything that the Courts awarded. The arrangement was an arrangement which is not prohibited by law in India. We have to see though exactly what it was. We have read the deed carefully. It is worded in a rather peculiar way. It commences by stating that Nawab Qasim Ali Khan has got no money and that Damodar Das has consented to help him. It then goes on to state that out of whatever property shall be acquired in litigation Damodar Das is to get half. It continues that Damodar Das shall have the right to take possession of immoveable property, and that he shall have the right to redeem the village of Belahia. So far every condition is in favour of Damodar Das. No condition is in favour of Nawab Qasim Ali Khan. Then follows the only condition in favour of Qasim Ali Khan which is that Damodar Das is to pay the whole of the Court expenses. Qasim Ali Khan in the rest of the deed continues to place restrictions upon himself. Can this deed be construed as transferring any vested interest in anything? We are of opinion that it transfers no vested interest of any kind in property. It is a contract that if Damodar Das pays all the expenses of litigation he shall take, in consideration of his agreeing to do so, one-half of the property which the Courts may award; but the litigation is clearly to be the litigation brought by Qasim Ali Khan, although there is a clause in the deed, that, whenever Nawab Qasim Ali Khan appears as a litigant, the name of Damodar Das is to be joined with his name. We consider that the arrangement made here was very similar to the arrangement which was made in a case which was decided on appeal in the late Judicial Commissioner's Court in 1911. That was the case of Indar Singh v. Kesri Singh (1). There a man called Inderjit Singh, after certain rights in property had become vested in him, agreed with a man called Kesri Singh that if Kesri Singh paid the whole expenses of litigation he would hand over half the property, which he acquired in favour of Kesri Singh. The Additional Judicial Commissioner decided that the transaction was not a sale, that it did not create a transfer, and that it was a contract which gave no vested rights. We consider that he approached the subject in the correct way. Approaching the subject here in the same manner we find that there is no transfer and no sale, only a contract. The right to obtain redemption remained with Nawab Qasim Ali Khan and passed after his death to his heirs. If they brought a suit to redeem they would have under the terms of the agreement to join Damodar Das and after his death his heirs with them, and whatever they obtained they would have to divide in equal moieties. But it is not the case here that the heirs of Nawab Qasim Ali Khan and the heirs of Damodar Das have instituted the suit for redemption jointly. The amount of the share to be redeemed was 4-annas. Barati Lal did not come in asking for a redemption of a 4-annas share, and joining with him the heirs of Nawab Qasim Ali Khan, or citing them as defendants because they had refused to join with him. He instituted this suit to redeem a 2-annas share for his sole benefit giving the heirs of Nawab Qasim Ali Khan nothing. This he obviously was not entitled to do. The learned Counsel for the respondent Barati Lal has pointed out to us that in a previous litigation a Bench of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court decided that Qasim Ali Khan and Damodar Das held half of the equity of redemption in the 8-annas share in Belahia. The learned Counsel has stated the facts correctly. The decision in question will be found in Qasim Ali Khan v. Ahmed Shah (2). But this circumstance does not affect the present case. We have sent for the record of that appeal and we find that what happened there was that Nawab Qasim Ali Khan and Damodar Das sued jointly on an allegation that Damodar Das was a joint partner with Nawab Qasim Ali Khan in his rights. This statement was incorrect. But it was not challenged on the other side, and the Judicial Commissioner's Court naturally accepted a statement, which had not been challenged. The fact that they did accept the statement can in no way prejudice Musammam Hasan Bandi, who was not a party to those proceedings. But apart from that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court does not help Barati Lal. The part of the decision which affects this matter is a declaration that Qasim Ali Khan and Damodar Das hold a half share in the equity of redemption of 8-annas in Belahia. There is nothing in that decision which states that Damodar Das alone can come into Court to redeem a quarter share. For the above reasons we consider that the trial Court was right and that the lower Appellate Court has not construed the agreement in question correctly. The suit as framed was bound to fail and the dismissal of it should have been upheld. We accordingly allow this appeal and direct that Barati Lal's suit be dismissed. Barati Lal will pay his own costs and those of Musammam Hasan Bandi in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, 1—“Other sufficient grounds”, meaning of—Ejusdem generis—Absence of formal defect or ground ejusdem generis—Permission to withdraw suit with liberty to bring fresh suit—Material irregularity—Revision—Omission to produce material document, whether ‘sufficient ground’.

‘Other sufficient grounds’ referred to in cl. (b) of O. XXIII, r. 1 (2), Civil Procedure Code, must be grounds ejusdem generis with the ground mentioned in cl. (a). [p. 889, col. 1.]

Chhajju Ram v. Neki (5) and Muhammad Ejaz Rasul Khan v. Mubarak Husain (2), relied on.

Where the trial Court allows withdrawal of a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit under O. XXIII, r. 1, when there is no formal defect nor any other grounds ejusdem generis, it commits a material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by utilizing its jurisdiction so as to give it authority which the law does not give, and its order is open to revision under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 889, cols 1 & 2.]

Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (1), explained.

Balkrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Ayyar (3) and Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (4), referred to.

Failure of the plaintiff to produce some of his important documents in time is not a ground for permitting the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. [p. 889, col. 2.]

Appication for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 15th August, 1927.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—These are applications in revision under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure which have arisen in the following circumstances. A firm called Sheodayal-Ramjidas, which carries on business in Calcutta and is also engaged in commercial activities in Oudh, instituted a suit on the 27th November, 1926, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda against the Secretary of State for India in Council and Tikai Chobay on the following allegations. The firm asserted that it was a lessee from the Nepal State under a lease dated approximately September, 1925 of the right of cutting and removing Bankas grass for commercial purposes over a certain tract in Nepal. The plaint continued that a Calcutta firm called Heilgers & Company held a similar contract on the British side for collecting such grass as grew in the Government Forest and that Heilgers & Company had assigned their rights under their contract to the plaintiff firm. It is not clear what connection this latter allegation had with the subject-matter of the suit. The actual allegations of importance in the plaint were allegations that the plaintiff firm had cut and stacked some thirteen hundred maunds of Bankas grass in the Nepal Territory over which they held the contract, and that the Forest Ranger of the Sohelwa Circle had, without any shadow of right, removed this grass to British Territory and sold it in collusion with Tikai Chobay. Therefore, the plaintiff firm claimed Rs. 4,000 damages. The hearing of the suit was transferred to the Subordinate Judge at Bahraich. Written statements were filed by the defendants, in which they stated that they had no knowledge as to whether the plaintiff firm had or had not a contract to collect Bankas grass in Nepal. They absolutely denied that they had ever removed any Bankas grass in the possession of the plaintiff at any time or any place. The 22nd April, 1927, was fixed for the framing of issues, but the issues were not actually framed until the 12th of May, 1927. Before the issues were framed it was within the knowledge of the plaintiff firm that it was necessary for them to produce their contract with the Nepal Government if they wished to rely on it, and under O. VII, r. 14, Part 2 as it then stood if they relied upon this lease they should have noted its existence in a list filed with the plaint. They did not do so. Further under O. XIII, r. 1, as it then stood, it was their duty at the first hearing of the suit to produce all the documentary evidence in their possession. They did produce certain documents but we find that they did not produce others. The 4th of August, 1927, was fixed for hearing of evidence, and on that date the plaintiff firm applied for permission to produce a large number of documents in evidence. The trial Judge under the provisions of O. XIII, r. 2 refused to receive this evidence as no good cause had been shown for its non-production previously. The plaintiff firm then proceeded to produce oral evidence on the 4th of August, 1927. The hearing was then adjourned to the 15th of August, 1927. On that date the plaintiff firm put up an application of which the following is the translation:—

"It is submitted that in the above noted case, certain important documents had been rejected by the Court from being made part of the evidence, that as the documents are the basis of the suit and consequently a legal defect has arisen in the case, and as it is apprehended that in future this would be a defect on the merits of the case; hence it is prayed that permission to withdraw the present suit and to bring a fresh one be granted under O. XXIII, r. 1."

Both the defendants opposed this application but the learned trial Judge allowed it in the following words:—

"I allow the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to the plaintiff firm to bring a fresh suit. In view of the fact that the case has not advanced far after the framing of the issues, I think it proper to allow only half the costs to the defendants barring the costs of summoning witnesses which they will get in full."

It is against this order that the present applications in revision have been filed. Notice has been served upon the plaintiff firm. They have not, however, appeared. We have satisfied ourselves that the notice has reached them, and proceed with the matter ex parte. The first question which we have to decide is, whether an application in revision under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure does or does not lie. There is a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (1) which might be read as showing that in no circumstances can a decision under O. XXIII, r. 1 be questioned in revision. As we shall point out later, we do not consider that the decision really lays down such a proposition. There is a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Muhammad Ejaz Rasul Khan v. Mubarak Husain (2) which we consider is of great assistance. But before we approach that decision we consider it advisable to refer to the remarks of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Balkrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Ayyar (3) where they lay down the limitations within which a right of revision under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure can be exercised. They say there:—

"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. And if the appellant's contention be correct, then if the Civil Court should absolutely and whimsically decline to exercise its jurisdiction and refuse to make any orders as to the filling up of vacancies, no matter how many existed there would not, in a case such as the present, by any remedy available under this section and no appeal would lie."

We consider that the words of the greatest importance here are "that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it." Unless it can be established that the Court has acted without jurisdiction, has failed to exercise its jurisdiction vested in it or acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity s. 115 has no application. But in each particular instance we have to look at the fact as to whether the necessary conditions have been satisfied. In our opinion in Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (1) the Bench laid down no more than that the particular application before them must be rejected because it did not raise any ground which came under s. 115. We agree absolutely with the decision to that effect, but this decision in no way lays down as a general proposition that no order under O. XXIII, r. 1 can be challenged under s. 115. What we have to look at is whether the particular circumstances bring or do not bring an order under s. 115, and it is in considering this latter question that we find the decision in Muhammad Ejaz Rasul Khan v. Mubarak Husain (2) of great value. This decision is authority for the proposition that, before a Court can grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter, the Court must be satisfied that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect or that there are other sufficient grounds ejusdem generis for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit. We consider that the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of

Zillah Rajshahye (4) is of assistance in deciding the point, and we further consider that the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (5) is of great assistance. There their Lordships laid down that in construing the meaning of the words "for any other sufficient reason" where they occur in O. XLVII, r. 1 the only proper construction to be placed upon these words was that the other sufficient reason must be ejusdem generis. The words used in O. XXIII, r. 1 are "other sufficient grounds" but the same process of reasoning must, in our opinion, be applied and we are in complete accord with the views taken in Muhammad Ejaz Rasul Khan v. Mubarak Husain (2). We approach this particular case then with the preliminary remarks that before the trial Court could grant the plaintiff firm permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit it was necessary for it to be satisfied that it must fail by reason of some formal defect or that there were other sufficient grounds ejusdem generis for permitting them to institute a fresh suit. What are the facts? The facts are that the plaintiff firm came into Court asserting the existence of a certain contract. As far as we can see the success or failure of the suit in no way required that assertion to be proved. The plaintiff, however, preferred to assert it. The other side had put him to proof. He then failed to prove the point as required by law. Now even had the matter rested there, there would have been no harm done to the plaintiff firm for if the plaintiff firm had been able to establish that this grass had been cut and stacked by them, that it was in their possession in the place in which it was alleged that it was in their possession that it was removed by the Forest Subordinate Official as alleged from their possession, that it had then been disposed of by that official and Tikai as joint tortfeasors and that the damages had amounted to a certain figure, the plaintiff firm could undoubtedly have succeeded without the production of any documents at all. What the plaintiff firm did at that stage was to produce one witness. They then refused to continue with the case. There was nothing to show that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect. There was no formal defect. It could not be suggested seriously that there was any formal defect. There were certainly not sufficient grounds, in our opinion, of any sort or kind for permitting the withdrawal with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and there can, in our opinion, be no possible doubt as to the fact that there were no grounds ejusdem generis. The case put forward by the plaintiff firm was this alone. They said "Our firm has in contravention of the law upon the subject endeavoured to produce documentary evidence at a period when it cannot be admitted. Our firm does not want to go on and produce any further evidence. It would prefer to withdraw its suit and bring it again and then when the suit is brought again to produce the evidence which it omitted to produce at the right time before." The Court allowed this. In our opinion in so doing the Court committed a material irregularity in exercise of its jurisdiction by utilising its jurisdiction so as to give it authority which the law had not given it, and for these reasons we accept the revision on the main point. It is unfortunate that the plaintiff firm is not represented. It has, however, had every opportunity of being represented. We set aside the order by which the plaintiff firm is permitted to bring a fresh suit upon the same cause of action. One further point remains. The learned trial Judge had for a reason which we do not quite understand awarded the successful defendants only half costs. He has not, in our opinion, exercised his discretion judicially. We allow these applications each with costs against the plaintiff firm and direct that the plaintiff firm pay each of the applicants separately his full costs in the Court below.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), s. 1, scope and application of—Conversion of Hindu to Muhammadanism—Right of Hindu collaterals to succeed to estate of convert—Applicability of Act to Oudh.

The rule that in questions of succession and inheritance the Hindu Law should be applied to Hindus and the Muhammadan Law to Muhammadans refers to Hindus and Muhammadans, not by birth merely, but by religion also. [p. 891, col. 2.]

Abraham v. Abraham (2), referred to.

The Caste Disabilities Removal Act can be held applicable to the Province of Oudh only from the date of its annexation and it is open to serious doubt whether that enactment will have the effect of restoring rights lost and of divesting persons of their status acquired, before the date of the annexation. [ibid.]

The Caste Disabilities Removal Act does not lay down any Code of inheritance prescribing the line of succession to the estate of a convert, nor does it create new rights. It merely removes obstacles arising by reason of the claimant renouncing his religion or losing his caste. The Act has no application to a case where the claimant of rights has neither renounced nor has been excluded from the communion of any religion or has been deprived of his caste. [p. 892, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Muhammadan, whose father had become a convert to Muhammadanism from Hinduism, died leaving him surviving only children by a predeceased daughter. His father's uncle's great-grandson who was a Hindu claimed title to his estate by right of inheritance as reversioner pleading that, by custom, daughters and their issue had no right to inherit:

Held, that The Caste Disabilities Removal Act had no application to the case and could not confer on the claimant any right to the estate. [p. 892, col. 2.]

Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna Narain (3) and Vaithilinga Odayar v. Ayyathorai Odayar (5), followed.

Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (4) and Rupa v. Sardar Mirza (6), distinguished and dissented from.

First appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 14th February, 1927.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji, Jaijai Ram Radha Krishna and H. D. Chandra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Bisheshwar Nath, Ali Zaheer and Ali Mohammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, dated the 14th of February, 1927. By the decree under appeal the appellant's suit for the recovery of certain moveable and immoveable property described in the two schedules A and B attached to the plaint has been dismissed.

The property in suit was last held in full ownership by one Hasan Khan, who died on the 11th of October, 1921. Agha Hasan Khan had a daughter, Musammât Sajjadi Begam. The daughter predeceased her father. The daughter's children Maqbul Hasan Khan, son, defendant No. 1, Musammât Amatul Kubra, defendant No. 2 and Musammât Amatul Sughra, [defendant No. 3, daughters, are now in possession of the estate of their grandfather, Agha Hasan Khan. Agha Hasan Khan's widow, Musammât Kaniz Zainab, also died on the 5th of November, 1922.

The plaintiff, Babu Mitâr Sen Singh, claims title to the estate in suit by right of inheritance as the nearest reversioner and pleads family custom of the exclusion of daughters and their issue in defeasance of the natural rights of the defendants in the estate of their grandfather, Agha Hasan Khan. This is the plaintiff's case as set forth in the plaint.

The custom pleaded by the plaintiff was denied by the defendants and the issue relating to it has not been tried so far. Besides the daughter's issue, who are the defendants in the suit, it also appears that Agha Hasan Khan had a sister, Musammât Askari Khanam, who survived him and that Musammât Askari Khanam on her death has left children as heirs-at-law. The defendants denied the plaintiff's right of succession to the estate of Agha Hasan Khan and this is the issue which has been tried and found in favour of the defendants by the Court below.

The facts are as follows:—

Agha Hasan Khan's father, Ali Hasan Khan, embraced the religion of Islam in the year 1843 A. D. It is admitted that the sect to which he attached himself on conversion was the Shia sect. Ali Hasan Khan's name before his conversion was Jagardeo Singh. It is agreed that his father, Sarabdawan Singh, was a Hindu as were his ancestors from the earliest times. Sarabdawan Singh had a brother, Ranjit Singh, and the plaintiff, Mitter Sen Singh, is the great-grandson of Ranjit Singh. It is also agreed that the plaintiff's father, his grand-father and his great-grandfather were all born and died in Hindu faith and that the plaintiff is a Sanatan Dharam Hindu both by birth and conviction.

Before proceeding further we desire to state at the outset that at some stage of the proceedings in the trial Court the plaintiff seems to have set up the case of his right to succeed to the estate in suit upon some general custom of the family whereby a Hindu is permitted to succeed to the inheritance of a Moslem blood relation. This was the subject-matter of issue No. 2. At the hearing of the appeal however, this case was expressly abandoned by the learned Advocate, who appeared before us on behalf of the plaintiff. He rested his client's right to succeed on law alone subject, of course, to the proof of the custom of exclusion of daughters. For the purposes of the decision of the case in the trial Court and the appeal before us it was assumed that the last mentioned custom exists. During the progress of the arguments at the Bar there was some confusion as to the precise nature and extent of the custom pleaded by the plaintiff but we are quite clear in our minds that a plea of custom may be entertained in modification of the personal law; Hindu Law or Muhammadan Law, but not in entire abrogation of such law. This conclusion is fully borne out by s. 3, sub-s. (b), cl. (2), of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876. The plaintiff's case as to the modification of the personal law by custom is set forth in para. 4 of the plaint. It may be mentioned here that it was agreed by the parties in the Court below, and the agreement was adhered to before us, that the property now in suit is not the property which Ali Hasan Khan might have acquired from or after the death of his brother, Amresh Singh. It was also stated on behalf of the plaintiff that Ali Hasan Khan on his conversion ceased to be a member of the joint Hindu family.

The first question which, on the premises stated above, arises for determination is, what law of inheritance governs the succession to the estate of Agha Hasan Khan? The answer to this question does not appear to us to be involved in any doubt. We think that in determining the heir or heirs to the estate of such a person recourse must be had to the Shia Law of inheritance which was the personal law of the propositus. As observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jawala Buksh v.

Dharum Singh (1), "the written law of India has prescribed broadly that in questions of succession and inheritance the Hindu Law is to be applied to Hindus, and the Muhammadan Law to Muhammadans; and in the judgment delivered by Lord Kingsdown in Abraham v. Abraham (2), it is said that 'this rule must be understood to refer to Hindus and Muhammadans, not by birth merely, but by religion also.' " It is quite clear that the plaintiff is not an heir-at-law according to that law even if the children of the daughter of the propositus are also not his heirs by virtue of the family custom. This conclusion was not seriously disputed by the learned Advocate for the appellant. It was argued, however, that though the plaintiff has no right of inheritance according to the Muhammadan Shia Law to the estate in suit yet he has such a right under the provisions of Act XXI of 1850 and this was the only point argued at the Bar.

We think it necessary to note that the annexation of the Province of Oudh to the British territories took place on the 13th of February, 1856. Previous to that day it must be presumed that the law regulating rights to property was the Hindu Law in case of Hindu and the Muhammadan Law in case of Muhammadans and that conversion from one religion to another entailed all the consequences and penalties provided by those laws. Therefore, when Jagerdeo Singh (afterwards Ali Hasan Khan) renounced the Hindu religion and embraced the faith of Islam he forfeited his rights to property under the Hindu Law and acquired rights under the Muhammadan Law. One of such rights was the "status" with all its consequences with which he came to be endowed on his conversion by the Muhammadan Law. Regulation VII of 1832 or Act XXI of 1850 can be held to be applicable to the Province of Oudh from the date of annexation at the earliest. This being so, we seriously doubt that those enactments will have the effect of restoring rights lost and of divesting persons of their 'status' acquired before the date of the annexation. This will not be so in the Province of Agra which was a part of the Presidency of Bengal on the date of the Regulation and part of the British territories in India on the date of the Act. It was assumed in the Court below and in the arguments before us that the Act of 1850 will apply if it is applicable in terms thereof to the facts of this case.

The trial Court is of opinion that the provisions of Act XXI of 1850 have no application to the facts of this case and we agree with that opinion. Before interpreting those provisions certain preliminary observations fall to be made. Act XXI of 1850 neither professes to nor does in fact create a new class of heirs constituted of persons who are not heirs under the personal law of the propositus. The Act does not lay down any Code of inheritance prescribing the line of succession to the estate of a convert. It does not create new rights. It only removes obstacles to the enforcement of existing rights. The obstacles intended to be removed are clearly obstacles arising by reason of the claimant renouncing his religion, having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste. We think that the substantive enactment may be interpreted in no other sense and we think that this interpretation is supported by the preamble. The substantive enactment is as follows:—

"1. So much of any law or usage now in force within the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company, as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property, or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance, by reason of his or her renouncing, or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as law in the Courts of the East India Company, and in the Courts established by Royal Charter within the said territories." The interpretation which we place on it can best be brought on surface by analysing s. 1 as follows:—

So much of any law or usage as.....

(1) inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property	By reason of his or her or	(a) renouncing	any or	religion
(2) may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance.	(b) having been excluded from the communion of or
	(c) being deprived of caste.

shall cease to be enforced as law.....

We are of opinion that both class of cases covered by cls. 1 and 2 as given above are controlled by the condition precedent of conversion or exclusion or deprivation from caste of the person whose rights are questioned in a given case, such rights being rights which such a person has under the law which was applicable to him immediately preceding the change of religion or deprivation of caste.

Clause (1) deals with one class of rights while cl. (2) deals with another class of rights. Under the former fall rights which have come to be vested prior to conversion in the person who has changed his religion and under the latter fall inchoate rights of the nature of spes successionis. The former class of rights may be illustrated by the right of a member of a joint Hindu family who has acquired his right in the family property from the moment of his birth, by the right of a legatee in the subject-matter of bequest after the death of the testator and generally by the right which a person has acquired by right of inheritance after the death of the propositus. Clause (1) provides for the protection of such vested rights as against the effect of the rule of personal law entailing the destruction of such rights by reason of conversion. Clause (2) contemplates protection of rights of a person who has changed his religion prior to the vesting of such rights: in other words, if an heir has changed his religion before the opening of succession that fact will not stop the devolution of inheritance on him whenever it comes to happen. In each case it seems to us rights, whether vested or inchoate, are protected by the Statute but only of the person whose rights are forfeited in one case or affected in the other by reason of that person renouncing or having been excluded from the communion of any religion or being deprived of caste. We are of opinion that the Act has no application to a case where the claimant of rights either of one class or of the other has neither renounced nor has been excluded from the communion of any religion or been deprived of caste as the present case is. The words "forfeiture" and "impair or affect any right" in the first part of the section and the words "by reason of his or her" in the second part of the section are important words. In short, we are unable to read the section in any wider sense than that it removes the personal disability of the person who has changed his religion from enforcing his rights which he possessed prior to the change. Further, even if the Act be assumed to be applicable to a case where the person whose inheritance is in question has changed his religion the present case is not of that nature and, therefore, it is not necessary to give reasons against the soundness of the assumption. But surely it cannot be contended that if any ancestor of the propositus in any degree of ascent has changed his religion the Act would apply in determining the status of an heir to such a propositus. If it were so the results would be startling, if not revolutionary. In families of more than half the population of Moslems of British India and similarly in Indian Christian families conversion from Hinduism may well be traced to some near or remote ancestor and when the inheritance comes to fall on collaterals the Hindu relations of the Moslem or the Christian convert must be held to displace if nearer in degree the rights of the Moslem collaterals more remote. Not only that, the females who have succeeded in the past must be held to possess only such rights of property as they would have possessed if their ancestor had remained a Hindu.

The interpretation which we have placed on the substantive enactment contained in Act XXI of 1850, is, it appears to us, supported by the preamble as well. The important words of the preamble are "the laws of those religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, they would have been entitled". This language clearly means the recognition and subsistence of pre-existing rights either under the Muhammadan or the Hindu Law and it does not create new rights. It, however, removes the penalty of losing existing rights which the personal law imposes on the party or parties by reason of difference in religion. The removal of penalty is clearly intended for the benefit of the party who has incurred the penalty and not for others.

We think that the interpretation which we have placed on Act XXI of 1850 is also supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna

Narain (3). A few facts of that case may first be stated. A joint Hindu family possessing of considerable property within the British territories consisted of two persons Ratan Singh, and his son, Daulat Singh. Each of these two persons was thus entitled in joint tenancy to a moiety of the family property. In 1845, Ratan Singh abandoned Hinduism and adopted the Muhammadan faith. Change of religion, however, made no change in the status of the family until the death of Daulat Singh in January, 1851. Daulat Singh left him surviving a widow named Sen Kuar and two daughters, Ohhattar Kuar and Mewa Kuar. Ratan Singh died in September, 1851. Thereafter the name of his widow, Raj Kuar, was recorded in the revenue register in place of her deceased husband in respect of the entire family property. After the death of Sen Kuar and also of Raj Kuar a settlement was arrived between the daughters of Daulat Singh and one Khairati Lal, who was the son of a daughter of Ratan Singh. According to this settlement Ohhattar Kuar and Mewa Kuar obtained an 8½-annas share while Khairati Lal received the remaining 7½-annas share. Possession followed in accordance with the allotment. Ohhattar Kuar died first and then died Mewa Kuar in 1899. The plaintiffs in that case were the sons of Mewa Kuar. The defendants were transferees from Khairati Lal. The case of the plaintiffs was that on the abandonment of Hinduism by Ratan Singh he forfeited his half share in the joint property which vested in Daulat Singh. They claim the entire 16-annas in the character of heirs of Daulat Singh, challenging the validity of the compromise under which Khairati Lal had acquired the 7½-annas share. On the question of the effect of the abandonment of Hinduism by Ratan Singh on his rights in the joint property their Lordships of the Judicial Committee interpreted s. 9 of Regulation VII of 1832, and the provisions of Act XXI of 1850. After having quoted these enactments their Lordships said as follows:—

"The intention in both enactments is perfectly clear; by declaring that the Hindu or Muhammadan Law shall not be permitted to deprive any party not belonging to either of those persuasions of a right to property, or that any law or usage which inflicts forfeiture of rights or property by reason of any person renouncing his or her religion, shall not be enforced, the Legislature virtually set aside the provisions of the Hindu Law which penalizes renunciation of religion or exclusion from caste. The effect of the legislation of 1832 and 1850 was that on Ratan Singh's abandonment of Hinduism Daulat Singh did not acquire any enforceable right to his father's share in the joint family property which he could either assert himself or transmit to his heirs for enforcement in a British Court of Justice." This pronouncement clearly means that Daulat Singh by reason of conversion of his father did not come to possess any new right in the family estate which he did not otherwise possess. It further means that Ratan Singh's rights in the family property were not forfeited by the conversion. The enactments simply removed the penalty of forfeiture of rights imposed by the personal law on conversion.

The learned Advocate for the appellant strenuously pressed on us the decision in the case of Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (4) and contended that it afforded complete support to his client's case. One of the two learned Judges who formed the Bench was Sir John Edge and he delivered the judgment. The other learned Judge simply recorded his concurrence. We feel that out of respect to so eminent a Judge as Sir John Edge we must examine the decision with great care. We have done so and have come to the conclusion that the decision in the first instance is inapplicable to the facts of this case and in the second instance we find ourselves, with utmost respect, in disagreement with grounds of the decision. The facts were these. In that case the grand-father of the plaintiff, Hari Singh, had three sons, Mohan Singh, Bacha Singh, and Mahipat Singh. Mahipat who was the father of the plaintiff, was converted to Muhammadanism. The property in suit had belonged to Bacha Singh. The plaintiff was a Muhammadan as was his father, Mahipat. Bacha Singh on his death was succeeded by his widow, Banño, who had alienated the property which had devolved on her by right of inheritance. The alienees were the defendants. The plaintiff Kallu in support of his title to the estate of Bacha Singh relied upon the provisions of Act XXI of 1850. This was upheld by the High Court at Allahabad.

It will be seen that on the fact the case before us is materially different from the case under consideration. In that case the claimant's title was sought to be defeated on the ground that his father had embraced Islam and, therefore, the right of inheritance which would have devolved upon the plaintiff in the estate of his uncle, Bacha Singh, was killed by reason of the conversion. This defence was sought to be supported by the only argument that Act XXI of 1850 would have saved the situation only if the plaintiff had renounced his religion. The argument was repelled on two grounds. It was observed that the argument, if sound, would have the effect of cutting down or curtailing the principle of s. 9 of Regulation VII of 1832. This could not be allowed for the reason that "no one can read s. 9 of Regulation VII without seeing that if Mr. Bajpai's argument is correct the operative portion of the Act, instead of extending the principle to the rest of the Company's provinces, would have limited the relief it was intended to extend." With great respect the preamble nowhere expresses the intention of extending the scope of the principle. The extension intended is only of the territorial limits and not of the principle. The second ground was that "if the latter part of the section was restricted to the protection of the right of inheritance of the persons renouncing their religion or being excluded from caste, their case was covered by the words of the early part of the section." With great respect again we do not agree with this view. As we have already shown, the first portion of the section relates to the forfeiture of rights, that is vested rights, by reason of change in religion of the person in whom those rights reside and prevents forfeiture of such rights. The latter portion of the section relates to rights of inheritance before the opening of succession and protects the loss of such rights of the person who has renounced his religion or been excluded from caste while he occupies the status of an heir simpliciter. We are clearly of opinion that the words "renouncing his or her religion" apply to both classes of cases, that is the law affords against the forfeiture of vested rights and protection against the loss of status as an heir and in both cases of the person who renounces his or her religion. The Act of 1851 was recently interpreted in the sense in which we have interpreted it by the High Court of Madras in Vaithilinga Odayar v. Ayyathorai Odayar (5) and the Allahabad case was dissented from. The decision of the High Court at Lahore in the case of Rupa v. Sardar Mirza (6) was also quoted on behalf of the appellant. In that case the learned Judges simply followed the decision in the Allahabad case and advanced no fresh arguments in support of the conclusion. There are other decisions for the opinion which we have formed and they are noted in the judgment of the trial Court. It will serve no usual purpose to recapitulate them in this judgment.

The result is that we uphold the decree of the trial Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit is an under-proprietor who has brought a suit for a nankar allowance of Rs. 50 against the zemindars. The lower Courts have decreed the claim and an appeal has been filed on many grounds. It is now, however, admitted that most of those grounds are ineffective, because it cannot be contended in view of the terms of the Oudh Rent Act that a suit for nankar cannot be brought in a Civil Court. The learned Counsel for the appellant after conceding this point urges that certain decisions of the Revenue Courts should be held to operate as res judicata. It appears that the zemindar sued for arrears of rent and the defendant in that suit, who is the present plaintiff, pleaded that he was entitled to a sum of Rs. 50 as a set-off on account of nankar. The Revenue Courts have found that, as a suit for nankar does not lie in the Civil Court, such a set-off cannot be awarded, but they also went out of their way to hold that the present plaintiff had no claim for nankar, because no such right was contained in the settlement decree. I have been asked to find on the authority of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mindnapur Zemindry Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan Roy (1) that this finding of the Revenue Courts is binding, because it is an issue raised by the present plaintiff herself, but I am not prepared to find that that ruling is in any way applicable to a case where a decision has been passed by a Court on an issue which it was not competent to decide. In my opinion such a finding must be regarded as an obiter dictum, and it cannot operate as res judicata in the present suit. When the plea of res judicata is disposed of it only remains to be seen whether the plaintiff had valid claim for nankar as against the zemindar. The lower Appellate Court has shown that, although the settlement decree was silent as to the right of nankar, the decree was itself based upon a report of the Assistant Commissioner which clearly asserted this right and in appeal the Commissioner passed an order showing that, as a matter of fact, the payment of nankar was confirmed by the Settlement Officer. It is also proved that this sum has continued to be recorded as due to the plaintiff in the revenue papers. There is, therefore, no ground to interfere with the decrees of the Courts below. The plaintiff has been proved to be entitled to this nankar and she can bring her case for it in the Civil Court. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Lease by thekadar—Lessee's right to possession as against landlord.

A tenant who has come into possession of land under a thekadar without having any reason to believe that the thekadar was acting contrary to law in leasing the properties to him is entitled to hold the land as against the landlord until he is ejected according to law.

Second appeal from a decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 9th May, 1927, modifying that of the Munsif, Bahraich, dated the 6th December, 1926.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Radha Krishna, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from an order of the First Subordinate Judge of Bahraich who allowed an appeal from a decision of the Munsif of Bahraich. The facts of the case are as follows. This village belongs to the Nanpara Estate which was at that time under the Court of Wards. The village was on theka till the end of the year 1331 Fasli, corresponding to the 30th June, 1924. The thekadar had leased certain land to the defendants in this case for three years from 1329 Fasli. Shortly before the expiry of the year 1331, that is in March, 1924, the Special Manager of the Nanpara Estate gave a lease of the land in suit to the plaintiffs. It has now been found that the land for which the lease was given to the plaintiffs includes certain land which was in the cultivation of the defendants. The plaintiffs have been unable to obtain possession and they have brought this suit for damages against defendants. The first Court decreed the suit but the lower Appellate Court allowed the appeal mainly on the ground that defendants were entitled to hold the land until they were legally ejected and, as no such ejection according to law had ever taken place the plaintiffs could not claim possession in virtue of their lease. The main argument in appeal is that the thekadar had, under the terms of his theka, no right to let land out to the defendants and that, therefore, these persons have no right, and the plaintiffs must be held entitled to the land in virtue of their lease from the landlord. It certainly appears that the terms of the theka do not contemplate that the thekadar should create new tenancies, and there is a clause in the theka prescribing the penalty in case he should do so. But a tenant who cultivates the land direct from a thekadar has his rights, and this was held by the Board of Revenue in Lal v. Raja Udey Partap Udaya Dutta Singh (1), where it is laid down that in such a case it is for the land owner to show as against the tenants who have been admitted to tenancy by the thekadar (a) that he restricted his thekadar's ordinary powers as a landlord and made restriction known to the tenants and (b) that the transactions between the thekadar and the tenants were not made in good faith in the ordinary course of village business and management. In the present case I would lay stress particularly on the second portion of the first clause and the whole of the second clause. When these defendants came into possession they had no reason to suppose that the thekadar, who put them in possession, was acting contrary to the terms of the theka and no step was taken by the landlord to interfere with their tenancy. As the landlord made enquires before giving the land to the plaintiffs, he should have ascertained that these defendants were in possession and he should have taken steps to secure their ejection according to law. Not only did he not do so but he disregarded his own lease in favour of the plaintiffs and accepted rents from these very defendants. In my opinion the decision of the Court below is correct, and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

I, Art. 44—Void transfer of minor's property by guardian—Art. 44, whether applicable—Suit for setting aside transfer barred—Defence of invalidity, whether barred.

The interest of a reversioner expectant on the death of a Hindu female is a mere spes successionis, which is neither property nor clothed with the attribute of alienability incident thereto, and cannot, therefore, be validly transferred. [p. 898, col. 1.]

A transfer of such an interest is void ab initio and cannot be validated by recourse to the doctrine of estoppel. [p. 893, cols. 1 & 2.]

Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (1), and other cases referred to.

Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to such a transaction as the Transfer of Property Act does not regard spes successionis as property for purposes of transfer. [p. 898, col. 2.]

Where an alienation by a guardian is absolutely void, Art. 41 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act does not apply and the ward can bring a suit for possession against the alienee within 12 years of the date of sale. [p. 899, col. 1.]

The fact that the remedy of a suit to set aside a transfer is barred, does not necessarily bar the defence of invalidity of the transfer. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants in this case. They base their title on a sale-deed executed on 11th January 1915 by one Bablaji, the husband of Musammatt Jani defendant No. 6, who was then a minor. The plaintiffs' case is that they were put in possession, of the property purchased by them, in November, 1919, but were unlawfully dispossessed by the defendants in July, 1920. Hence this suit was instituted on 28th June, 1924, for recovery of possession of the property from the defendants. Plaint is silent as to how the property became the property of Musammatt Jani.

The defendant No. 1 contended that the property in suit was originally the property of Ganpat who died in 1911 leaving widow Musammatt Soni, mother Gopi and sister Jani. On his death his widow Soni inherited it, that as she was alive and Jani had only a contingent reversionary interest at the date of sale there could be no transfer in view of s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act in plaintiffs' favour, and that plaintiffs acquired no title under the sale-deed. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 purchased one-fourth share of the field in suit from Ganpat's widow Soni and she gifted another one fourth share to Maroti's temple defendant No. 4 the same day and the remaining half share was sold by her to defendant No. 3 on 14th April, 1919, and that ever since their purchase defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had been in peaceful and uninterrupted possession of their respective shares. On 17th April, 1924 defendant No. 1 sold 8 acres of the land purchased by him and his brother defendant No. 2 to Jani defendant No. 6, and that ever since she had been in possession thereof. Defendant No. 5 had purchased one-eighth share in the field in suit under a sale-deed dated 11th February, 1915, from defendant No. 1.

There were several oral pleadings, the gist whereof is that the property in suit originally belonged to one Baliram, that on his death it came to Ganpat who died in 1911 and that on his death without issue his widow Soni inherited it, but that she re-married in 1919 and that Jani the sister of Ganpat had, therefore, only spes successionis in 1915, when the property was sold by her guardian. Defendants denied that plaintiffs had ever any possession over the property and that they were dispossessed. Defendants also pleaded an oral Will in favour of Ganpat. The plaintiffs denied the alleged Will in favour of Ganpat; but asserted that according to the oral Will of Baliram the property had become the property of Gopi. On behalf of Jani, who was joined as a party, a defence was raised that the transaction of sale in favour of plaintiffs was not real or for consideration and was not binding on her in the absence of any legal necessity or benefit. To this the plaintiffs replied that this defence of Jani was barred inasmuch as she did not sue to set aside the sale within three years of her attaining majority. There were several other pleadings but with them I am not concerned for the purposes of second appeal. The pleadings reproduced above sufficiently cover the points actually argued before me.

As regards the question of oral Will of Baliram being in favour of Ganpat or Gopi, the Courts below have come to the conclusion that Baliram willed away the fields in suit to Ganpat and not to Gopi. It may here be mentioned that Gopi admittedly died in 1913 when Soni, the widow of Ganpat, had not re-married. If the alleged Will in favour of Gopi had been proved then Gopi would have been fresh stock of descent and her daughter Jani would have succeeded on her death in 1913 to the field as her stridhan. But in view of the finding that Baliram's oral Will was in favour of Ganpat and, that he died in 1911, Ganpat was the last male owner and as such succession had to be traced to him, and, Jani being only his sister, his widow Soni had a more preferential claim to the property which devolved on her in preference to Ganpat's mother Gopi or sister Jani; Soni thus continued to be the owner of the property so long as she had not either sold it away or got herself re-married. As Ganpat's mother died before Son's re-marriage, succession could open out in favour of Jani in case she chanced to be alive at Soni's civil death which she brought about in 1919. So the position is clear that at no time prior to 1919, much less on 11th January, 1915, when her guardian sold the property on her behalf, Jani had any transferable interest in the property in suit.

The Courts below have held, and I think rightly, that the interest of Jani was of Hindu reversioner expectant upon the death of a Hindu female and could not be validly transferred by her. It is no more than a mere spes successionis which is neither property nor clothed with the attribute of alienability incident thereto. It was not, therefore, open to her or her guardian, when she was a minor, to bargain with it, or bind herself by an agreement in respect thereto. Such a dealing with estate was void and not binding on her, even by estoppel or otherwise when the succession opened out to her on her (Soni's) re-marriage in 1919. The transfer being void, it could not be validated by recourse to the ordinary doctrine of estoppel. This position is established beyond doubt by the series of decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council: Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (1), Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (2), Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (3), Ananda Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick (4), Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (5) and Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (6).

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that Jani's guardian erroneously represented that Jani was authorised to transfer the property in suit in 1915 and, that as Jani actually acquired interest in 1919, she is under the provisions of s. 43, Transfer of Property Act, bound to make good the transfer out of her subsequently acquired interest; to which the respondents reply, and I think rightly, that s. 43 has no application, for the simple reason that the Transfer of Property Act does not regard spes successionis as "property" for purposes of transfer. I, therefore, uphold the decision of the lower Appellate Court that the sale by Jani's guardian was void and inoperative, and gave no title to the property in suit to plaintiffs. The necessary consequence of this is that plaintiffs had no right to sue and, therefore, their present suit was rightly dismissed.

The next point which the plaintiffs urged was that the defence as to the invalidity of the sale, dated 11th January, 1915, was not open to Jani, as she had not sued within three years of her attaining majority to set aside the sale made by her husband, who was her lawful guardian. I think that the finding that at the date of the sale (viz., 11th January, 1915) the property in suit was not the property of Jani is fatal to this contention. Article 41, Limitation Act, applies to a suit by a ward to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian; this must necessarily relate to property in which the minor is interested or of which the minor is the owner. The sale being void, Art. 41 was inapplicable and a suit could be brought by the minor to recover possession from the plaintiffs within a period of 12 years. It may be observed that even though the remedy of a suit may be barred, the defence of invalidity of the transfer is not necessarily barred: cf. Lakshmi Doss v. Roop Lalul (7), Rameswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Reddiar (8), Rangnath Sakharam v. Govind Narasiva (9) and Mineral Shadiram v. Kharsetji Jivaji (10).

Here the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are claiming under transfers by Musammam Soni, and Jani herself as stated above claims to possess 8 acres under a title derived from Soni's alienor. Thus none of the defendants including Jani can be said to be precluded from urging his or her defence merely because Jani may have failed to set aside the so-called transfer effected by her husband in 1915 during her minority of property which was not then hers, but which was yet to come to her and actually devolved on her in 1919.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 12th July, 1926, in Civil Appeal No. 15 of 1926.

Sir B. K. Bose, Kt., and Mr. A. D. Pande, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent, Sitaram Dajiba Pande, brought the present suit in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Nagpur, as wahiwatdar of the Shri Jagriteshwar Deosthan at Nagpur. His claim was for three instalments of the years 1922, 1923 and 1924 of Rs. 23-4 each, which he claimed, were due him in respect of his services as wahiwatdar of the temple. The present defendant-appellants are admittedly the trustees who formed a committee of the temple. The preliminary objections were raised in the first Court, which need be mentioned here. One of these was that the consent of the Advocate-General under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code was necessary to the institution of the suit. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred, such consent having not been obtained, and the lower Appellate Court held, on the contrary, that s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply. This point was not pressed for the defendant-appellants on the present appeal coming on for hearing.

I am, therefore, solely concerned in the present appeal with the question of whether or not the present suit is maintainable without a certificate from the Collector, having regard to the provisions contained in ss. 5 and 6 of the Pensions Act of 1871. The Judge of the first Court held that the real plaintiff was, in reality the deity itself and that, as the deity claims the amount from the trust fund, which has been set apart by the British Government and placed under the control of the defendant-trustees, [vide the indenture, dated 24th October, 1866 (D. 1)] the payment in essence remained one of the nature which would fall under the Pensions Act quoted above. In those circumstances, he held that the suit was barred for want of a certificate from the Collector.

The Additional District Judge, on the plaintiff appealing to his Court, took the view that the plaintiff has described himself as the wahiwatdar of the temple but that, in reality, the gist of his claim is on the basis of his being a hereditary servant of the temple and that, on this basis, the provisions of the Pensions Act do not apply to the case. As a result of the remand of the case for further trial by the Additional District Judge, the defendants have now come up to this Court on appeal.

The present case raises a somewhat interesting point of law with regard to the construction to be placed upon the provisions of Act XXIII (Pensions Act) of 1871. It is perfectly clear that what the plaintiff claims is a part of a sum of Rs. 1,200 which under the indenture already referred to (D. 1), is annually payable for the support of the said temple. In this connection, it is apposite to refer to the history of the relations of Government with such religious institutions. Up to 1863, it may be said that Government was in direct charge of such institutions. The preamble of Act XX of 1863 shows the reasons why Government then decided to have itself relieved of this duty. This Act did not apply to the Central Provinces and apparently here another device was adopted for the purpose, arriving at the same end. Government had recourse to the expedient of executive orders in the matter, and apparently it was as a result of such executive orders that the indenture (D. 1) was executed in the year 1866. Under the said indenture, Government Promissory Notes of a value of Rs. 29,300 two hundred and ninety three thousands were made over to the Bhonsla Raja and the income to be derived from these promissory notes was to be devoted to the upkeep of the institutions shown in the schedule to the indenture institutions, of which the present temple admittedly forms one. Under the indenture, the Bhonsla Raja, after receiving the Government Promissory Notes, was to endorse the same for the payment of the interest thereof to three of his officials who may be taken as equivalent to the present defendants. These officials were, in turn, to be responsible for allocating the income to the institutions covered by the indenture, and it was expressly provided in the deed that, if the institutions should cease to exist, the securities and the interest thereof should revert and belong to the Government of India. The case for the defendant-appellants, therefore, is that, in these circumstances, as the money formed part of a grant made by the former Government as well as by the British Government, the provisions of the Pensions Act, having regard to s. 4 thereof, apply proprio vigore and the suit was not cognizable without the sanction of the Collector. It is admitted that, under the arrangement made in the indenture, the interest for the upkeep of the institutions, is not directly paid by the British Government but is distributed through a non-official agency. It has, however, been urged that the mere circumstance that this is so does not take the case out of the purview of the Act cf. Miya Vali Ulla v. Sayed Bava Saheb (1) and Satraji Dongerchand Firm v. Mahdo Singh. In the latter case, it was held that a pension payable to a political prisoner by the Government of India by a statutory obligation to maintain that person does not cease to be a political pension because the Government of India, under a special arrangement, has the money remitted by a Foreign State to the Government Treasury for payment.

On behalf of the respondent it has been urged so far quite correctly that the Pensions Act, which is one, which tends to restrict the ordinary legal rights of the subject to have recourse to the Court for remedy of grievances, is one to be strictly construed cf. Ravjinarayan Mandlik v. Dadaji Bapuji Desai (3) as well as Gurushidgavda v. Rudragavdati (4). I have also been referred to the decision of Banerji and Tudball, J.J., in Amna Bibi v. Najmunnissa Bibi (5) but the facts of that case do not seem to me to be peculiarly helpful for the decision of the question of principle I am concerned with. Therein, certain immovable property had been granted in lieu of a pension and the sanad provided that, upon the death of the original grantee, the estate would be continued in perpetuity as an hereditary holding. Moreover, at the desire of the grantee, revenue was assessed thereon and the members of the family had treated it as ordinary zemin-dari property subject only to the payment of Government Revenue. In those very special circumstances, the learned Justices held that the zemin-dari in question was not a pension within the meaning of s. 11 of the Pensions Act. It has been urged, in short, on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that what was meant to be covered by the Pensions Act were payments by Government which are at its disposal and which it can discontinue at any time.

After full consideration, however, of the question, which is by no means free of difficulty, I am of opinion that this ex gratia grant by Government without consideration cannot be looked on or regarded as one of which Government has divested itself of all responsibility. The indenture provides for the money being properly applied and it further provides that the money will revert to Government if the institutions cease to exist. What it has, in reality, done is to hand over the management of the disbursements to the defendant-appellants whether they be regarded as agents or as trustees. It is perhaps, a moot point, but, as present advised, I am of opinion that Government could at any moment, by an act of State, recall the indenture and discontinue the payment. In essence, the payment in question is, in reality, one made by Government and it seems to me to be immaterial whether that payment is made direct or through the instrumentality of the present defendants and whether they be designated trustees or agents. The grant is, in reality, a purely voluntary and charitable one and not contractual. Whatever contract exists in the matter, only exists between the Bhonsla Raja and the three persons appointed under the indenture to carry out the arrangement and make the disbursements. The object of the Pensions Act, as stated in the Legislative Council when the Bill was introduced, was to reserve to the Government the determination of all questions affecting grants of money, the bestowal of which was an act of grace or State policy on the part of the Ruling Powers. In those circumstances, I am of opinion that the present suit required the certificate of the Collector before it could be instituted.

It has also been suggested, on the strength of the decision in Venkateswara Aiyar v. Secretary of State for India (6) that a suit like the present one relating to an endowment for religious or pious purposes does not fall within the purview of s. 4 of the Pensions Act. For my own part, with all deference, I am unable to accept the various decisions of the Madras High Court on this matter, and I prefer to follow the view taken in Miya Vali Ulla v. Sayed Bava Sabeel (1) quoted above as well as many other decisions of that Court. I can see no reason why s. 3 of the Pensions Act should be arbitrarily limited in the manner suggested. Under the said provision, "grant of money or land-revenue includes anything payable on the part of Government in respect of any right, privilege, perquisite or office." The phraseology is perfectly general and I am unable to see any reason for excluding therefrom a grant for pious or religious purposes: cf Harnam Das v. Faiyazi Begam (7) and Vyankaji v. Sarjarao Apajirao (8). I am, therefore, of opinion that the present suit was not maintainable without a certificate from the Collector.

I do not think, however, that the Judge of the first Court was correct in summarily dismissing the suit as he did on this ground. The suit as such was not bad ab initio owing to the plaintiff's failure to produce the Collector's certificate. What the Subordinate Judge should have done was to give a reasonable adjournment to the plaintiff to enable him to obtain the required certificate. If the certificate was then obtained, the suit could proceed, but if it was refused the suit was bound to fail. The judgments and decrees passed by both Courts are, therefore, set aside and the case will go back to the first Court for disposal of Civil Suit No. 131 of 1925 according to law and in conformity with the above remarks. Costs hitherto incurred in all Courts will follow the event.

A cross-objection has also been filed by the plaintiff-respondent to the effect that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that Musammam Parbati was a necessary party to the suit. I agree, however, with the Judge of the lower Appellate Court that, if the position be that Musammam Parbati claims or may claim against the present plaintiff a right to perform all or some of the services which formed the basis of his claim, it is desirable in the interests of all parties that Musammam Parbati be joined either as a plaintiff or as a defendant as the case may be. If she does put forward any claim of the kind alleged and if she were not joined and subsequent litigation ensued between her and the plaintiff-respondent, needless trouble and confusion would arise. The cross-objection, therefore, fails and is dismissed. I allow no separate costs as regards the cross-objection. The parties will bear their own costs therein.

CIVIL REVISION No. 262 OF 1927.

December 12, 1927.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

Seth KASTURCHAND—APPLICANT

versus

SECRETARY MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, BETUAL—NON-APPLICANT.

C. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1922), s. 66 (1) (n) —“Circumstances within Municipal limits”, meaning of—Haisiyat Tax—Circumstances arising from agricultural property within the District, whether can be considered.

Under s. 66 (1) (n) of the C. P. Municipalities Act “the circumstances within certain limits” mean circumstances within those limits and not property giving rise to them and circumstances arising out of agricultural property situated in the same District (as the limits mentioned or elsewhere) are in that respect not different from circumstances arising out of other kinds of property.

Reference made by the Deputy Commissioner, Betual, dated the 3rd August, 1927.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—Under s. 83 (2) of the Municipalities Act the Deputy Commissioner of Betul has referred to this Court a question concerning the principles of the assessment of Haisiyat Tax on Seth Kasturchand under s. 66 of the Act. The same question is submitted in respect of the assessment on Seth Misrilal (Civil Reference No. 265 of 1927). Each of them lives in the Betul Municipality and owns villages outside the Municipality but in the Betul District from which he derives an income.

The question on which the Deputy Commissioner says he has reasonable doubt is no where formulated, but it is in respect of the words of cl. (n) of s. 66 (1), which says that a Haisiyat Tax can be imposed on residents within the limits of a Municipality “according to their circumstances and property within those limits.” It is stated in the reference that the assessee in each case “says that his malguzari villages are not property within the Municipal limits of Betul, nor can they be called circumstances within those limits” and that “the Municipal Committee on the other hand says that they constitute his circumstances within those limits.” The opinion expressed in the reference is that in the phrase under consideration, the words “within those limits” do not qualify the word “circumstances,” but only the word “property” and also that “the word ‘circumstances’ includes land revenue paid by the assessee.”

The mention of land-revenue in this last phrase and in other parts of the letter of reference is only a minor instance of the laxity of thought displayed all through the case. In the assessment it was found that the annual income from the villages was a certain sum of money, and that finding has been accepted by everybody. That sum happens to be the same as the land revenue payable on the villages, and indeed that fact was the basis of the finding, but we are in no way concerned with that.

But the cases themselves and the references in them have arisen out of such deplorably careless and distorted thinking that it can hardly be called thought at all. It has been assumed by everybody, even in the argument of the matter in this Court, that in one particular case, which is not very clearly defined, the word “circumstances” does not mean circumstances at all, but the source of the income which creates those circumstances and is the proper measure of them. The case so excepted seems to be the case of income derived from agriculture in the same District as that in which the Municipality is situated (or perhaps the same Province). It is not considered apparently that money received by the assessee in Betul is not a part of his "circumstances" if it is derived from agriculture in the Punjab or in England or from shares in a Mill in Manchester or even in another town of the Betul District.

It is always hard to explain the obvious, and I cannot see that the meaning of the words under discussion could possibly have been put more clearly, but perhaps the mistake that has been made can be explained in this way. The contention of the assessee, that his malguzari villages outside the limits of the Municipality cannot be called circumstances within those limits, is obviously correct, and that of the Municipality, that they constitute circumstances within those limits, obviously incorrect, villages cannot possibly be called circumstances nor can they constitute circumstances. But ownership of them can give rise to circumstances, which may exist in them or elsewhere, and we are concerned with the place where the circumstances exist not with the place where the property out of which they arise is situated. It is of course equally incorrect to say that the words "within those limits" do not qualify the circumstances, or that the circumstances include land-revenue payable.

If any further or more specific answer to the reference is required it may be stated as follows. When the Act speaks of circumstances within certain limits it means circumstances within those limits, and not property giving rise to them, and circumstances arising out of agricultural property (situated in the same District as the limits mentioned or elsewhere) are in this respect not different from circumstances arising out of other kinds of property.

It cannot be said that either party is more to blame than the other for the deplorable waste of time and money that has occurred in these futile proceedings. There will, therefore, be no order in respect of the payment of costs.

First appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Khandwa, dated the 22nd November, 1926, in Civil Suit No. 33 of 1925.

Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-respondents instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises on the basis of a registered mortgage-deed, dated 6th January, 1914, executed in the name of plaintiff No. 2 by Govindrao Reshimwale the deceased father of appellants Nos. 2 and 3 and cousin (by adoption) of appellant No. 1 in consideration of Rs. 5,000 advanced by the late Mr. Pyarelal Gangoli, Pleader of Khandwa, on the security of Govindrao's 8 annas share of certain property mentioned in the deed, with a condition of sale thereof in case of non-payment. The mortgage contains a stipulation for payment of simple interest annually and for compounding the interest in case of default. The principal sum was to fall due on the expiry of 10 years from the date of the mortgage. The first Court overruled the several defences taken and decreed the full claim except as to a small portion which was disallowed on the ground of mistakes in the calculation of interest.

The defendants are the appellants before me. Their main contention is that the mortgage is void and against public policy on the ground that the late Mr. Pyarelal, Pleader, was the real mortgagee, but that he could not carry on money-lending under rules framed by the High Court under the Legal Practitioners Act. They also urged absence of legal necessity or benefit and took up a new plea in the shape of an additional ground that the plaintiffs-respondents were not entitled to compound interest under the terms of the mortgage on the principal sum of Rs. 5,000 before it fell due.

As to the additional ground of appeal, I think, the plaintiffs have expressly alleged in the plaint that they were entitled to charge compound interest on the whole debt and also framed their account on that basis. The only defence the defendants took as to this claim for interest was that there were mistakes in the calculation. They never challenged the operation of the stipulations as to payment of interest and compound interest. I do not think, I can entertain this plea for the first time here as the question of how the stipulation as to compound interest was to work, is a question of fact and the defendants were bound to take it as a specific plea in answer to the claim as laid. I, therefore, disallow the plea raised in the additional ground.

The plea of legal necessity or benefit would have been material had the property mortgaged been the joint property of defendants and the mortgagor. It is conceded before me that the finding of the lower Court that the 8-annas share mortgaged formed the separate and self-acquisition of Govindrao, the mortgagor; no question of benefit or legal necessity, therefore, strictly arises in the case. Even assuming that the property was treated by Govindrao as joint property of himself and his sons which, however, is not a fact, the mortgagee is sufficiently protected by the representations made and the reasonable enquiry by which the mortgagee had satisfied himself as to the need for the transaction of the mortgage in suit.

The lower Court has held that the mortgage was operative only against Govindrao's 8 annas share, and also observed that the remaining 8-annas share owned by appellant No. 1 remained unaffected by the mortgage; the learned Advocate for the appellants, therefore, did not press the question of the mortgage not being binding against appellant No. 1.

Having disposed of minor points raised in this appeal, I now turn to the main defence repeated in the appeal, viz., of the mortgage being void and against public policy. The learned Advocate for the appellant was asked whether he would point out the particular rules by which he thought the mortgage transaction was governed, as different rules were framed by this Court from time to time. In short, he was asked to argue the case with reference to the specific rules applicable, as there was material difference in the rules in force at the date of the mortgage and the earlier rules. There is nothing on record to show when the enrolment of Mr. Pyarelal Gangoli as a Pleader of this Court took place, and whether any rules were then framed prohibiting legal practitioners from having any concern with money-lending business. The defendants have not at all framed their pleadings with reference to any particular rules framed by this Court. The result was that the learned Advocate found it difficult to bring the case under the rules now in force, or even under those in force at the date of the mortgage, as they would not apply to a practitioner already enrolled prior to the date of their publication in the Local Official Gazette which gave them the force of law.

If a contracting party alleges that an agreement is opposed to public policy, it is for him to set out and prove those special circumstances which will invalidate the contract: Bakshi Das v. Nadu Das (1), cf. Sonba v. Ganesha (2) where this Court laid down that the burden of proving at the date of the transfer challenged as invalid under s. 325-A of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, (r. 11 of Sch. III, Civil Procedure Code, 1908), the Collector was exercising any of the powers conferred on him by the Statute, was on the party challenging. Similarly here, it was the defendants' duty to set out and prove the invalidating circumstances which rendered the mortgage void on the ground of public policy. They have laid no proper basis in their pleadings for the defence of public policy and cannot catch at random at this or that rule of the rules framed by this Court to justify the stand taken up by them. I am, therefore, of opinion that there is no allegation, much less is there any proof, before me in this case on which a finding that the mortgage in question was void and opposed to public policy could be based. I do not, therefore, feel myself called upon to decide the point sought to be argued in appeal for want of proper material.

The respondents were, however, asked whether they could state the approximate year of the enrolment of their father as a Pleader of this Court. They gave out that it was sometime about 1879. The appellants thereupon argued the case as if the rules published in 1880 were applicable to Mr. Gangoli. Reliance is placed on r. 16 of the rules. Suffice it to say that that rule speaks of the state of things obtaining at the date of the application for admission as a Pleader, and is not made applicable to the Pleaders enrolled prior to that date, as it casts on the applicant for enrolment the duty of stating the fact of his carrying on any trade or other business, in his application, and it also provides for the giving of a notice to the Judicial Commissioner if he subsequently enters into any trade or other business, and gives power to the Judicial Commissioner to pass such orders as he shall think fit. That rule nowhere lays down what the consequences of the failure to give notice shall be, and whether that will entail forfeiture of the right to enforce the transfer or mortgage or to realise the debt from the debtor.

The said Pleader having died, the files relating to his enrolment, etc., have been eliminated and there is, therefore, no means of knowing anything one way or the other as to any compliance or failure of compliance on his part with the requirements of the said rule. Even assuming that the rules of 1880 applied to this case there is nothing to show that the Pleader concerned did not comply with the requirements of the rules.

Without expressing any opinion as to the rules framed by this Court, it is sufficient for the purposes of this appeal to say that in the absence of any statutory bar positively prohibiting a legal practitioner from being engaged in trade or business, the mortgage in suit is valid and enforceable, and the plaintiffs' claim was rightly decreed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A contract for sale of immoveable property made by a Hindu father can be specifically enforced against his sons if the father dies intestate and if the prospective vendee has obtained possession in pursuance of this agreement he can successfully resist a suit for ejectment by the sons.

Bansi Seth v. Pandoba (1), Bapu. Apaji v. Kashinath Sadoba (2) and Venkatesh Damodar v. Mallappa Bhimappa (3), followed.

The doctrine of part performance is applicable to such cases and the heir of the person who has benefited by the part performance of the contract will be estopped from taking advantage of the breach thereof.

Appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 25th August, 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 15 of 1923.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. Y. Sharif and K. V. Deoskar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case was last before me as Second Appeal No. 18-B of 1924 when I remanded it to the lower Appellate Court. That Court has again decreed the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs sued for joint possession of their 7/8th share in Survey No. 5/1 of Dawalpur in the Balapur Taluq. This field has been sold by their mother to defendant after their father's death in 1911 when they were minors. The first Court had dismissed the plaintiffs' suit but in appeal it was successful. The defence was that Umraokhan, the father, entered into an agreement to the sale and was paid Rs. 200, and after his death his widow took another Rs. 300 and executed the sale-deed. There was a further plea that by an oral Will Umraokhan had directed his widow to dispose of the field to the defendant. The findings as they now stand are that the contract for sale was made by the plaintiffs' father and part of the consideration was received and the property was sold by the plaintiffs' mother in pursuance of the contract of the father. The lower Appellate Court finds that even so, the sale is not binding on the plaintiffs, and quotes cases to show that a de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor cannot convey to another any interest in the minor's property. The Court finds that the mother was not appointed an executrix and that the mother is an heir and cannot validly sell the property in discharge of the debts of her deceased husband. The Judge finds that the plaintiffs' claim cannot, therefore, be resisted. On the finding that Umraokhan himself entered into a contract for sale, it seems to me, that the conclusion come to by the lower Appellate Court is wrong. The defendant is in possession under a valid contract made by the father in his favour and inheritance would be subject to the contract. Illustration to s. 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act says:—

"A contracts to convey certain land to B by a particular date. A dies intestate before that date without having conveyed the land. B may compel A's heir or other representative-in-interest to perform the contract specifically."

Bansi Seth v. Pandoba (1) is a similar case, in which it was held "the sale was complete by the transfer of possession and payment of consideration". In Bapu Apaji v. Kashinath Sadoba (2) it was held that "where the plaintiff being the owner of certain immoveable property seeks to recover possession of that property and there are no facts operating to his prejudice it is a valid defence to the suit that the plaintiff has agreed to sell the property to the defendant, the agreement being at the date of suit still capable of specific enforcement, but there being no registered conveyance passing the property to the defendant, who has taken possession under the agreement for sale", and in Venkatesh. Damodar v. Mallappa Bhimappa (3) a similar case, it was held that even if defendant's right to obtain specific performance had become time-barred, the defendant was entitled to remain in possession against the plaintiffs.

Under Art. 113 of the Limitation Act the date for commencement of limitation against the defendant would be when he learnt that performance of the contract was refused and, therefore, there is no question here of defendant's right of specific performance being barred by time. The doctrine of part performance also seems to be applicable to the present case: see Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (4) Lakshmi Venkayamma Rao v. Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao (5) and Kunti v. Gajraj Tewari (6) and to these cases may be added Sandu Valaji v. Bhikchand Surajmal (7).

In the present case, the mother gave the defendant possession under the contract entered into by her husband and though the deed of sale does not mention that she executed that document also on behalf of her minor sons, the present plaintiffs, it is clear, that she did so in pursuance of her husband's agreement. The alienation is made not on the woman's own account but in discharge of an obligation made by her husband and as regards the present plaintiffs in pursuance of a contract made by their ancestor. Under these conditions, it seems to me, the defendant's possession cannot be disturbed: Hasan Ali v. Mehdi Husain (8).

It seems to me clear if the mother had not put the defendant in possession and conveyed the field to him, a suit by the defendant for specific performance of his contract with Umraokhan against the widow and her minor sons would have been bound to be decreed. It is here argued for the respondents that one co-heir cannot dispose of the whole property, i. e., the property of herself and her co-heirs. That contention I will not deny. But in the present case the conveyance was made in fulfilment of an agreement entered into by the husband and father. It is true that a guardian cannot increase the liabilities of minors but in this case the mother only did what she and her minor sons could have been forced to do.

In my view of the case the lower Appellate Court's decision is erroneous. I, therefore, set it aside and restore the decision of the trial Court, dismissing the plaintiffs' claim with costs. The respondents here will pay the appellants' costs in all three Courts.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Evidence not discussed—Reasons for decision not given—Order, legality of—Evidence—Roznamcha reports, whether evidence of facts mentioned.

An order under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which only contains a very brief statement of some of the facts of the case, does not discuss the evidence adduced by the parties and states no reasons is not a decision as required by law.

Roznamcha reports are not evidence of the facts mentioned in the reports which must be proved like other facts.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Raipur, under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on the application by Bori against an order of the First Class Magistrate, Bilaspur under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code in Criminal Case No. 27 of 1927, dated the 20th June, 1927.

ORDER.—The order dated 20th June, 1927, passed by Mr. Purshottam Lal, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bilaspur, in Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 27 of 1927 gives no reasons for the decision he has arrived at. The order only contains a very brief statement of some of the facts of the case, does not discuss the evidence adduced by the parties and states no reasons as to why the claim of actual possession by the said Raghunath Singh is true. Such an order is not a decision as required by the law and must be set aside.

The preliminary order dated 31st March, 1927, does not contain a proper description giving dimensions and boundaries of the land in dispute. This must be done now. The sale-deed dated 13th March, 1927 filed by Bori is about a plot 120 cubits by 20 cubits, while Bhaorao Prasad says that he had given a plot 60 cubits by 14 cubits to Raghunath Singh, it is thus clear that the parties are not agreed about the dimensions of the plot in dispute.

Bori in his written statement dated 16th May, 1927, para. 4, stated as follows. "Hence there is no fear of the breach of the peace" Raghunath Singh did not say anything about the likelihood of the breach of the peace. The witnesses also do not say much about it. It seems that they have not been properly examined on that point in this case.

The reports filed by the Station House Officer Kota have not been proved. They are only Roznamcha reports and even if proved will not be evidence of the facts mentioned in the reports which must be proved like other facts.

The preliminary order and the final order are, therefore, set aside, and it is ordered that the case be re-opened at the point reached on 31st March, 1927, and that after recording a proper preliminary order, hearing the parties afresh, recording further evidence if necessary and recording a statement of his reasons for the decision, the learned Magistrate do dispose of the matter in accordance with law.

The mere fact that a judgment contains a wrong exposition of law is no ground under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, for allowing a review, Chhajju Ram v. Neki (4), followed.

Application for review of the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner in Second Appeal No. 543 of 1925, dated the 4th August, 1927.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—I have heard Counsel for applicants in this application for review. It has been suggested that the view of Mittra, A. J. C., in Raghunath v. Sheolal (1) was overruled in Jogeshwar v. Moti. (2) decided on 9th July, 1921, but that was not so, as the remarks of Hallifax, A. J. C., at the conclusion of his Reference Order and of Hallifax and Kotwall, A. J. Cs., in their opinions show. The decision in Rangasamy Naiken v. Komarammal (3) was also quoted in support of the view that the present applicants' rights remained unaffected, even if they failed to join Andhare in the earlier suit. Even if this proposition be accepted, that would afford no ground for review, because even if the view I have taken of the law applicable be incorrect, that would be no ground under O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, for allowing review.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (4) have laid down the limits of a Court's jurisdiction in a review application like the present and the mere fact, if we assume for the moment that this is so, that there was a wrong exposition of law in my judgment is no ground for allowing review. The error supposed to have occurred is very far from being apparent on the face of the record or anything analogous thereto and the present application, therefore, practically amounts to an attempt to have the appeal re-argued on the merits. This I cannot allow for the reasons just stated. The application is dismissed without notice to non-applicants.

application for a temporary injunction, has dealt with the case in detail on the merits.

In this Court it has, first of all, been urged on behalf of the non-applicants that no revision lies against an interlocutory order of the kind in question. In this connection, the decisions in Amolaksao v. Govind-rao (1) and Achalsingh v. Seth Jiwandas (2) as well as the majority decision in the Full Bench case of Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Ram (3) have been relied on on behalf of the applicants, while the applicant, in urging that revision lies, has quoted Abdullah Khan v. Banke Lal (4) and Israil v. Shamset Rahman (5) in favour of the opposite view, but, from the principles laid down in the latter Nagpur case quoted, it is perfectly obvious that there is no true analogy between an application for revision of an order rejecting an application to sue as a pauper and an order refusing a temporary injunction like the present one.

It is utterly impossible to postulate of the present case that the interlocutory order in question goes to the root of the case; it relates merely to an incidental matter connected with the trial of the connected suit. It seems unnecessary, in the circumstances of the present case, to go into the vexed question of what is to be termed the decision of a case within s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. That question is the subject of a great diversity of decisions, particularly as between the Allahabad and the Lahore High Courts and the remaining High Courts of India. Even, in the case of the latter High Courts, however, it has again and again been laid down that the High Court will not interfere in revision with interlocutory orders unless its non-interference will cause an irreparable injury or lead to a failure of justice. It is impossible to postulate any such premises of the present case. At the most, if the non-applicant No. 2 is allowed to remain in possession, the applicant may have to alter the nature of his relief and pay some additional Court-fees. Apart from this, however, even if I were of opinion that it was open to this Court to interfere in the case of an order like the present refusing a temporary injunction, I am satisfied on the merits that here there would be no cause for doing so. It is utterly impossible to postulate of the careful and reasoned order of the District Judge that either of the conditions A, B or C laid down in s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code has been fulfilled. It would appear that the real object underlying the wish of the applicant to obtain a temporary injunction is to avoid having to sue for possession and having to pay Court-fees accordingly. As the case at present stands, the present applicant is, under the order passed under O. XXI, r. 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, under an obligation to deliver possession and, until that order is upset in the Civil Court, the equities seem to me to be largely in favour of the non-applicants being allowed to hold possession.

Considering the time of the day at which the sale-deed was taken, the explanation offered for the delay, viz., applicant's absence from Nagpur, does not seem to me a satisfactory or an adequate one. The applicant's position is, in my opinion, both from the legal and equitable points of view, a peculiarly weak one in striving to obtain a temporary injunction. Even, therefore, if, on the merits, I had deemed it to be open to this Court to interfere, it would be quite impossible for me to hold that the learned District Judge has not exercised his discretion in a reasonable and equitable manner in refusing to grant a temporary injunction.

I decline, therefore, to interfere and dismiss the application. The applicant must bear the non-applicants' costs irrespective of the result of the connected litigation. I fix Rs. 20 as Pleader's fees.

A plea of res judicata cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal where it involves questions of law and fact. [p. 910, col. 1.]

The word 'thereupon' in s. 159 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act does not mean that the right to recover land revenue from co-sharers does come into existence and has effect only as from the date of the Deputy Commissioner's order, from the beginning of the next agricultural year or the like. Such a right arises independently of the provisions of s. 159 of the Act which merely provides the instrument or weapon, by which to recover the land revenue for any of the years which do not fall under the ban of limitation. [p. 910, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 22nd October, 1926, in Civil Appeal No. 65 of 1926.

Messrs. M. R. Pathak and A. D. Pande, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. N. Padhay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit has succeeded in both the lower Courts, and the defendant has now come up here on second appeal against the decree of land revenue for five years from 1920 to 1925 in respect of the sir plot No. 23 leased by the defendant to the plaintiff.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and only three points have been raised on appeal. For the first time in this Court it has been urged that the present suit was barred by res judicata in view of the decisions in the previous Suits No. 32 of 1923 and No. 273 of 1920. It seems to me that this contention has been raised far too late and cannot properly be considered now. Questions of fact and of law are both involved, and I do not think it would be proper to allow the contention, even it had any merits to succeed now. On the materials before me I feel bound to and that, in my opinion, there is no force whatever in the present plea of res judicata. The parties were suing and being sued in a different capacity in the previous suit; the causes of action were different, and the whole nature of the suits was different.

The second point is whether the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of s. 14 of the Limitation Act in respect of his claim for the years 1920 to 1923. For my own part, I entertain not the slightest doubt but that the decision of the lower Courts on this point was correct. Before the new Land Revenue Act came into force, the Civil Court had power to make apportionment in a case like the present: cf. Chaturbhuj v. Chandirmool (1). There is not the slightest reason to suppose that the plaintiff would have indulged in unnecessary litigation for the recovery of what was, if not a legal, undoubtedly an equitable claim. The point involved in the suit, which led to the decision of Baker, J. C. in Laxmanrao v. Sadasheo (2) was a moot one, and the case has been deemed of sufficient importance to be published in the Official Reports. The present case is one which most obviously falls both within the letter and spirit of s. 14 of the Limitation Act, and I am in full agreement with the finding of the two lower Courts on this point.

The third contention offered on behalf of the defendant-appellant is an equally futile one. It is urged that the word "thereupon" in s. 159, sub-s. (3) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act, 1917, means that revenue shall only be payable on the land concerned from the date of the Deputy Commissioner's order, or even from the beginning of the agricultural year next following thereon. I can see no substance whatever in this contention. The right to reimburse the land revenue concerned was already in existence. The procedure laid down in s. 159 merely gives the proprietor the actual weapon or instrument by which to recover the land revenue in question, and it ipso facto follows that, subject to the limitation applicable, such land revenue can be recovered for any of the years which do not fall under the ban of limitation. All that the provision in question does, in short, is to change an inchoate right into a choate one. Had the Legislature intended to lay down that the right to recover land revenue was only to come into existence and to have effect as from the date of the Deputy Commissioner's order or as from any other date, e. g., the beginning of the next agricultural year or the like, it is inconceivable that the Legislature would not have framed their intention in language precisely indicating this. Very obviously, once the liability of the defendant to contribute his quotum of land revenue has been affirmed by the Revenue Court, the present plaintiff can claim such land revenue for any years which do not fall under the ban of limitation applicable. Holding, as I do, that the time spent by the plaintiff-respondent in pursuing his remedy in the wrong Court must be excluded, the whole of the present plaintiff's claim is within time.

These findings govern the present appeal which is dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondent's costs. Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

Joshipana income, suit for, whether maintainable in C. P.—Right to hereditary Joshipana, whether question of fact—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100.

A suit for Joshipana income is maintainable in Central Provinces proper.

Balwant v. Tulsibai (1), followed.

The question whether a particular person is a hereditary Joshi of a village, entitled to do the duties of the village Joshi and to exclude anybody else from doing so, is a question of fact and not of law.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Ohanda, dated the 19th August, 1926, in Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1926.

Mr. G. G. Hatwalne, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case stated that they are watandar Joshis of Mauza Ekarjuna and entitled as such to perform the religious ceremonies of the villagers. The defendant was said to have officiated at certain religious ceremonies which the plaintiffs should have been called upon to perform, and they, therefore, sued to recover Rs. 8 by way of damages. The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the first Court, which has been confirmed in appeal, directing the defendant to pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 8 as damages; the decree also restrains the defendant perpetually from acting as Joshi and interfering with the plaintiffs' right. Against the lower Appellate Court's decision the present appeal has been filed.

There was a previous litigation between the parties in Suit No. 304 of 1922 in the Court of the Munsif, Warora, and one of the issues framed in that case was: "Whether the plaintiffs are watandar Joshis of Mauza Ekarjuna?" That issue was found in the affirmative; and both the lower Courts in the present case find that that decision acts as res judicata and prevents the defendant from re-agitating the matter. It is here argued in second appeal that the finding as regards the Joshipana of the village is one of law, not of fact, and that the defendant is entitled to re-open the matter and to obtain another finding on it. It seems to me that the question whether a particular person is a hereditary Joshi of a village, entitled to do the Joshi's duties of the village and to exclude anybody else from doing so, is a question of fact, not of law; and I have no hesitation in upholding the finding of the Courts below on this point. It is then contended that the office of hereditary Joshipana does not exist in these Provinces as separate from Berar, and that no watandar Joshi in the Central Provinces proper can sue for his dues. But this is not so. Balwant v. Tulsibai (1) decided by the Judicial Commissioner on the 11th of April, 1918, shows that a suit for Joshipana income is maintainable in the Central Provinces proper.

(1) 46 Ind. Cas. 782.

The decision of these two points decides the appeal as argued: it fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondents' costs.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 211-B OF 1927.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 561—Sentence, enhancement of—High Court, powers of, how to be exercised—Order expunging remarks—Notice to lower Court, whether necessary.

A High Court will not ordinarily exercise its power of enhancing a sentence except on the motion of the Local Government.

A High Court has inherent jurisdiction under s. 561 of the Criminal Procedure Code to act suo motu and order expunging of objectionable remarks in the judgment of a subordinate Court without issuing the notice to the District Magistrate or to the trying Magistrate to show cause as to why the deletion should not be made.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akola, dated the 16th August, 1927, in Criminal Case No. 20 of 1927.

Mr. G. G. Hatwalne, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The object of this revision application was three-fold, (a) to obtain an enhancement of the sentence, (b) to alter the charge from s. 355 to s. 353, Indian Penal Code, and (c) to expunge certain remarks from the judgment of the trying Magistrate against the complainant, on the ground that they are objectionable.

As to the first object it is conceded that on the authorities, the High Court would not ordinarily exercise its power of enhancement except on the motion of the Local Government, so I need not discuss that point. As to object (b) I fail to see the propriety of it unless it be to enhance the sentence, which I decline to do at the instance of a private complainant. As to object (c) a very long argument was addressed to me, with a view to show that the accused inserted some words in the endorsement in the visitors' book underneath the remarks passed by the complainant as precedent imputing theft of registers to him. Suffice it to say that the Sessions Judge has rightly held that the whole of the endorsement was there, and the story told by the complainant that he forgot to draw the attention of the Deputy Inspector pointed to its existence long before the time, he now says it was inserted in it. The trying Magistrate had no specific need to indulge in those remarks and use the strong language unless it was intended to show that there were extenuating circumstances which showed that the sentence must be very light. The sentence imposed by him was one of imprisonment which, however, was altered to one offence only by the Appellate Court. This shows that the case did not deserve any serious condemnation of the complainant in order to lessen the magnitude of the guilt of the accused. In the exercise of my jurisdiction under s. 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code, I order that the following remarks do stand deleted from the trial Magistrate's judgment para. 12.

Paragraph 12:—

"The several matters disclosed by the evidence on record do not become the complainant as a President of the School committee.....Several mischievous and misleading statements which he was not able to prove.....he does not deserve that respect which a gentleman acting as President of a Committee.....can claim." As I exercise the inherent jurisdiction vested in the High Court, I have not thought fit to issue any notice to the trying Magistrate or the District Magistrate to show cause why the objectionable remarks should not be deleted. I have done so suo motu as it were as the record has come up before me.

G. R. D.

Order accordingly.

Before the passing of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, an administrator acting under the Hindu Wills Act had the same authority as an executor under s. 269 of the Succession Act, which was made applicable to Hindus by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act.

An executor or administrator has no absolute power to dispose of property of the deceased for purposes not necessary for the administration of the estate.

Where a Hindu widow who had taken out Letters of Administration of the estate of her deceased husband granted a permanent lease of property belonging to the estate describing herself as the widow of the deceased, without legal necessity, and for purposes unconnected with the administration of the estate, and the lessee was not even aware of the fact that Letters of Administration had been granted to the widow:

Held, that the lease was not binding on the estate and that the reversioners were entitled to recover possession of the property after the death of the widow. C ANNADA BANDHU DAS v. AMBICA CHARAN BHATTACHARJEE, 47 C. L. J. 569; A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 412

Where a co-sharer in a patti has been in participation of the rents and profits for a long time to the exclusion of the others and has successfully asserted his right to the sole enjoyment of the property for more than 12 years, adverse possession may be held to have been clearly established, even if the property in question is a share in a defined patti. — Joint family—Exclusive possession by one member—Possession for and on behalf of family—Acquisition of title under Statute of Limitation.

Where under the substantive law governing the parties, there is no individual ownership in land, the title to which is vested in the family, and the head of the family for the time being is a quasi-trustee for the members thereof, no title to the land can be acquired under the Statute of Limitation by mere length of possession. The party in possession (that is, the head of the family) is, in contemplation of law, holding for and on behalf of the family, and not on his own sole account. On his death, if one of his sons gets into possession, he too must be deemed to have got in consistently with a rightful title, that is to say, on behalf of his brothers and sisters and the family generally. Exclusive possession by him does not, therefore, confer on him a — Trespass over land in possession of mortgagee—Possession, whether adverse to mortgagor—Practice—Revenue records—Trespasser, entries as to, in Revenue papers—'Cultivation' and 'kaifiat' columns to be read together.

Although as a general rule adverse possession against a mortgagee is ineffectual against the mortgagor, especially when it began at a time when the mortgagee was in possession, yet, when a trespasser takes possession of the mortgaged property and asserts a title which is hostile not only to the mortgagee but which also assails the title of the mortgagor, and the mortgagor allows 12 years to elapse, the title of the trespasser will become indefeasible not only against the mortgagee but also against the mortgagor.

Persons who take possession, without any title are shown in Revenue papers in the 'cultivation' column as non-occupancy tenants as long as changes in the proprietary columns are not made by mutation. Entries in the 'cultivation' column, therefore, are always to be read along with those in the 'kaifiat' column. L HANSA v. RAM LOK, A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 147

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), ss. 3, 7, 12—Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act (II of 1903), ss. 3, 16-A as amended by Act (IV of 1915)—Sanction of Collector to pre-empt, effect of—Pre-emptor, whether becomes person entitled to purchase—Pre-existing rights to pre-emption, whether enforceable.

In view of the provisions of s. 3 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, there can be no right of pre-emption in areas where the Act applies except in accordance with the provisions of the Act or under the Muhammadan Law.

Section 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act expressly prevents the Act from conferring any benefit on persons who are, under the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act not entitled to purchase the property in dispute.

A person who has merely obtained sanction, under s. 16-A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, to pre-empt a property does not thereby become a person 'entitled to purchase' the property under that Act within the meaning of s. 7 of the Agra Pre-emption Act, and s. 7 of the latter Act does not, therefore, confer on him a right of pre-emption.

Section 16-A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act has not been repealed by the Agra Pre-emption Act. A PHOOL CHAND v. RAM NATH, 26 A. L. J. 142; A. I. R. 1928 All. 186

Where a wajib-ul-arz records the prevalence of a custom of pre-emption in a mauza, the custom must be taken to apply to all the tolas of the mauza.

The word 'tola' does not ordinarily mean a subdivision of a mauza in the language of the Revenue Law but denotes a portion of a village or town which is inhabited by a particular class.

The term "arazi" means plots of land which, though included within the area of mauzas and mahals, are held on a distinct tenure from, and convey no title to rights or interests in other parts of the mauzas and mahals. Arazidari lands do not constitute a separate revenue unit by themselves. A RAM RAOHHA TEWARI v. Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 154, 193—Order remanding case for assessment of revenue and otherwise dismissing suit—Second appeal, whether lies—Order of remand, nature of.

In a suit under s. 154 of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901, the Assistant Collector held that the defendants were rent-free grantees and liable to resumption and accordingly assessed the rent. On appeal by the defendants the District Judge held that the defendants had been in adverse proprietary possession and declared them to be proprietors under s. 158 of the Act. He accordingly made an order to the following effect: "I would remand the case to the Assistant Collector with instructions to assess revenue on the land; 'otherwise' the plaintiffs' suit stands dismissed with costs".

Held, that the order of the District Judge, in spite of the order dismissing the suit, was one of remand and that consequently no second appeal lay from it.

Even though all the important points in a case have been disposed of and the case has practically been decided on the merits, if something is still left to be done by the Court of first instance before the suit is finally disposed of, the order can only be an order of remand and not a final decree. A PHULBANS KUAR v. Dispute as to construction of Will—Reference to arbitration—empowering arbitrators to decide in contravention of Will—Award contrary to Will, validity of—Award dealing with rights of strangers, effect of.

Where certain persons who had been appointed as executors under a Will without acting in any way in defiance of its terms put forward the Will and relied on its contents, but, being unable to agree as to its construction, referred the matters in dispute between themselves and the legatees to arbitrators to settle the matters in the best way they could either in accordance with or in contravention of its terms, and the arbitrators made an award in violation of the terms of the Will:

Held, (1) that the reference amounted to acceptance of the office on the part of the executors;

(2) that the reference and the award were illegal inasmuch as the object of the agreement of reference was to attain something which the law did not permit, namely, to allow the parties to acquire title to property in contravention of the terms of a Will in a case where the title was claimed under the Will itself, to allow the executors to have the Will construed by a Tribunal of their own choice without proving the Will and evading the duty fixed by law, and to allow the executors and some of the legatees to join together and make an arrangement for the distribution of the properties contrary to the testator's intention and to the prejudice and detriment of the remaining legatee or legatees under the Will.

An award is not invalid as between the parties to the reference merely because it purports to determine the rights of strangers. C. JNANENDRA NATH MUKHERJEE v. JITENDRA NATH MUKHERJEE, 32 O. W. N. 106; A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 275 70

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899)—Umpire, whether bound to state case to Court on questions of law—Obtaining legal opinion independently of parties, whether misconduct.

Under the Arbitration Act, an Umpire is not bound at the instance of one of the parties to the reference to state a case to the Court on questions of law arising for decision.

It is legal misconduct on the part of an Umpire who is not a lawyer to take independent legal opinion without reference to the parties on a matter arising for decision before him.

Under the Arbitration Act, unlike the Civil Procedure Code, it is not necessary to convert an award into a decree of Court that there should be an order that it should be filed. Where a notice of motion to set aside an award is dismissed, the award becomes a decree and a right of appeal arises.

Per Cornish, J.—It is incumbent on an arbitrator who takes legal or other expert advice, which may influence his determination of the matter submitted to him for arbitration to inform the parties of his intention to do so and of the question upon which the advice is taken, since otherwise the parties have no assurance that the advice is material, or given on a correct statement of the case, or that the arbitrator has not, in effect, simply surrendered his responsibility for deciding the question in arbitration to the opinion of his legal or other adviser. M ARUNACHALA IYAH v. On a refusal or neglect of the sole arbitrator appointed by one of the parties to a submission under s. 9, cl. (b) of the Act, the machinery provided in the section may be invoked over again and the whole procedure gone through from the beginning to the end.

Per Bilaram, A. J. C.—In the case of an ordinary submission clause contained in a commercial contract which provides for a reference to arbitration of disputes arising out of the contract and does not purport to bar the right of a party to enforce his claim in Court before he has obtained an award in respect thereof, there can be no valid reference to arbitration, if at the time of the reference, the claim which is the subject-matter of dispute is time-barred, although different considerations arise in respect of an agreement falling within the four corners of Exception 1 to s. 28 of the Contract Act.

All that an applicant for stay of a suit under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act is required to show is that he was ready and willing to go to arbitration at the time of the commencement of the proceedings. A complaint was made against A and B on the 30th of June, 1925. The Police continued to investigate and on the 13th of August the Police submitted a charge sheet against A, B and C. The fact that a person is concealing a weapon in his loin cloth while he is on a Railway platform indicates an intention to conceal that weapon from, inter alia, Railway officials within the meaning of s. 20, Arms Act.

Section 20 of the Arms Act is not confined to cases where the import or export of arms is attempted. 'In the absence of any aggravating circumstance a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment for an offence under s. 20, Arms Act, is too severe.

Award—Direction by arbitrators that plaintiff should execute mortgage in favour of defendant for a certain sum and declaring cancellation of gift—Award, whether vague or indefinite—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 16 (2)—Trial Court setting aside award and deciding case on merits—Appellate Court passing decree in accordance with award—Second appeal, maintainability of.

A suit for cancellation of a deed of gift and for recovery of possession of the property conveyed was referred to arbitration and the arbitrators gave an award as follows: "We decide the case in this way that by declaring the deed of gift cancelled and non-existent we award Rs. 680 due to the defendant from plaintiff for which the plaintiff shall execute within one month a deed of possessory mortgage in favour of the defendant. In the event of default the defendant shall be entitled to obtain execution of the possessory mortgage from the plaintiff through Court".

Held, by the Full Bench, that the portion of the award by which the arbitrators directed that the defendant should remain in possession of the property transferred until the plaintiff paid Rs. 680, was not objectionable either under the provisions of para. 12 or para. 14 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, and that it could not be set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in para. 15.

Per Hasan and Misra, JJ.—The provision in cl. (2) of para. 16 of Sch. II of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only where a decree has been passed by the trial Court in accordance with the terms of the award. Where, however, the Court of first instance sets aside the award and passes a decree on the merits and the lower Appellate Court sets aside that decree and passes a decree in accordance with the award, a second appeal is maintainable.

Per Misra, J.—The arbitrators are Judges of law as well of facts and their error in law will not vitiate the award.

An award cannot be set aside merely upon the ground that the decree passed by the arbitrators is not one which would have ordinarily been passed by the Court in which that suit was instituted. O. GANESH SINGH v. BHIKHAM SINGH, 4 O. W. N. 1085; A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 1; 3 Luck. 1 545

Messrs. Sassoon and Co. entered into a contract with Messrs. Knowles and Co. for the sale of 25 bales of gunnies by certain shipments. After the first purchase and sale had been concluded Messrs. Knowles and Co. entered into an agreement with the Eastern Bank by which the latter undertook to make advances against negotiable bills drawn by Messrs. Sassoon and Co. on Messrs. Knowles and Co. provided the Bills of Lading were presented to the Bank in complete sets. The Bank further agreed with Messrs. Sassoon and Co. to give confirmed credit. Messrs. Sassoon and Co. made a contract with the International Banking Corporation for the discounting of approved Bills of Exchange drawn at three months' sight D/A (delivery against acceptance). In pursuance of this agreement Messrs. Sassoon and Co. forwarded to the Banking Corporation drafts drawn by them on Messrs. Knowles and Co. against shipment with the shipping documents and the letter of advice of confirmed credit from the Eastern Bank, with a requisition for discounting the drafts and passing the amounts to their credit. The drafts were presented for acceptance to Messrs. Knowles and Co. and the documents of title were handed over to them on acceptance. Messrs. Knowles and Co. became bankrupts and the bills were dishonoured at maturity. International Banking Corporation sued Messrs. Sassoon and Co. as drawers for the amounts covered by the bills. The latter contended that in view of the confirmed credit from the Eastern Bank, the Banking Corporation ought to have delivered the Bills of Lading to the Bank and not to Messrs. Knowles and Co., that owing to the misdelivery of the documents they (Messrs. Sassoon and Co.) were deprived of their right to proceed against the Eastern Bank and that consequently they were not liable to the International Banking Corporation:

Held, (1) that as discounters the primary duty of the International Banking Corporation, both to Messrs. Sassoon and Co. and to themselves was so to present the drafts for acceptance as either to get them accepted or to get them dishonoured for lack of acceptance and that the Bank was entitled and bound to follow this instruction:

(2) that as the drafts were for the acceptance of Messrs. Knowles and Co., D/A, the Bank was entitled to deliver the Bills of Lading to them on acceptance;

(3) that the primary liability of Messrs. Sassoon and Co., to the Banking Corporation as drawers was not in any way discharged by the conduct of the latter and that the plaintiff was, consequently entitled to recover the amounts due under the bills: P C M. s. 78—Land comprised in several estates—Right of co-sharer landlord to recover his share of rent—s. 78, whether applicable—Entry in Collector's register, effect of—Apportionment of rent—Principles—Long payment of rent—Inference.

Section 78 of the Bengal Land Registration Act has no application to a case where the land in the possession of the tenant is comprised in more than one estate.

The plaintiffs whose names were registered in the Collectorate for a share of 4-annas 8-gandas in three touzis and of a 19½ gandas in another touzi, and who were receiving their share of rent at the rate of Rs 49-4-8 gandas for over thirty years from the defendants, sued the defendants for arrears of rent at that rate alleging that they were entitled to a share of 4-annas 12-gandas in all the four touzis. The defendants contended that in view of the entry in the Collector's register and s. 78 of the Bengal Land Registration Act the plaintiffs' claim could not be decreed in full:

Held, (1) that s. 78 of the Bengal Land Registration Act had no application to the case as the lands were comprised in more than one estate;

(2) that the rent could not be apportioned upon the assumption that each of the touzis was of equal value;

(3) that the rent which was being paid by the defendants, must under the circumstance be held to be correct amount of rent due to the plaintiffs on account of their share in the touzis, and that the plaintiffs' claim must be decreed. C NARIPENDRA NATH MUKHERJI v. Bengal Tenancy Act—contd.

Under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act once the Collector has issued notice of annulment, the incumbrance must be deemed to have been annulled. In order to bring a case within the exception to s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is not necessary that there should be a declaration in the order or decree as to the amount of rent annually payable in respect of the jama. It is sufficient if a question as to the amount of rent annually payable has been decided in the decree or order.

The plaintiff claimed rent in respect of a tenancy alleging that it comprised an area of 41 acres and bore a rental of Rs. 3 per year. His case was that originally the jama consisted of 53 acres on a rental of Rs. 4 but that afterwards 12 or 13 acres were taken out of the jama and the rent reduced to Rs. 3. The defendant contended that the area of the jama was 53 acres and the rent was Rs. 4, and that there ought to be a total suspension of rent inasmuch as he had been dispossessed of a portion of the lands of the jama. The suit was decreed by the District Munsif:

Held, that there was a decision by the District Munsif on the question of the amount of rent annually payable and that his decision was, consequently, appealable under s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C DALILUDDI v. MATAHAR ALI, A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 254 470

The failure to serve notice under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not necessarily relegate the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a rent-decree to the position of an ordinary purchaser under a money-decree. The obligation to serve notice upon the co-sharer landlord is enacted to protect his interest and it is open to him at his option, to waive the necessity for such notice.

A mortgagee of an occupancy holding though he has obtained a decree on his mortgage and purchased the property in execution has no right to hold the land as a raiyat against the will of the landlord, who has purchased the holding in execution of a rent-decree, and his incumbrance, although never formally annulled under s. 167 of the Act and although still subsisting for what it is worth, is a barren right against the landlord when he seeks to enforce it by taking possession of the property. Pat BADLU PATHAK v. Section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply where a portion only of a tenure is attached in execution of a decree for arrears due in respect of the whole tenure.

A person who has purchased the interest of a patni tenant prior to a decree for rent obtained by the landlord against the tenant is bound by the decree, and is a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. He cannot, therefore, prefer a claim under O. XXI, r. 58 of the Code to an attachment of the tenure in execution of such a decree.

Where a patni tenure is transferred, until the transferee's name has been registered, the transfer does not affect the zemindar's right and, in spite of the transfer, the landlord may ignore the transferee and may continue to hold the recorded tenant responsible for the rent and other obligations imposed on the tenure. C KRISHNA CHANDRA DUTTA v. Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), s. 1, scope and application of—Conversion of Hindu to Muhammadanism—Right of Hindu collaterals to succeed to estate of convert—Applicability of Act to Oudh.

The rule that in questions of succession and inheritance the Hindu Law should be applied to Hindus and the Muhammadan Law to Muhammadans refers to Hindus and Muhammadans, not by birth merely, but by religion also.

The Caste Disabilities Removal Act can be held applicable to the Province of Oudh only from the date of its annexation and it is open to serious doubt whether that enactment will have the effect of restoring rights lost and of divesting persons of their status acquired, before the date of the annexation.

The Caste Disabilities Removal Act does not lay down any Code of inheritance prescribing the line of succession to the estate of a convert, nor does it create new rights. It merely removes obstacles arising by reason of the claimant renouncing his religion or losing his caste. The Act has no application to a case where the claimant of rights has neither renounced nor has been excluded from the communion of any religion or has been deprived of his caste.

A Muhammadan, whose father had become a convert to Muhammadanism from Hinduism, died leaving him surviving only children by a pre-deceased daughter. His father's uncle's great-grandson who was a Hindu claimed title to his estate by right of inheritance as reversioner pleading that, by custom, daughters and their issue had no right to inherit:

Held, that the Caste Disabilities Removal Act had no application to the case and could not confer on the claimant any right to the estate. O MITAR SEN SINGH v. MAQBUL HASAN, 4 O. W. N. 1243; A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 138; 3 Luck. 154 890.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908 B. C.), s. 47—Raiyati holding—Exemption from sale—Mortgage decree directing sale, effect of—Executing Court, whether can go behind decree—Public policy.

The right of a *raiya*t in his holding cannot be sold in execution even though the decree under execution is a mortgage-decree directing the sale of the land in question.

Although the general rule is that a Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree and examine the correctness or legality thereof, yet it is bound to give effect to a provision of law, such as s. 47 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, which goes clearly to show that even if there is a decree such a decree cannot be executed.

Once it is found that the lands sought to be sold form a *raiya*t holding, whether the judgment-debtor took the objection or not, the sale of such a holding cannot take place in the face of the clear provisions of s. 47 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.

Per Macpherson, J.—The provision prohibiting the sale of the right of a *raiya*t in his holding in execution of a decree or order is eminently one of public policy, and it has consistently been held not only that the objection that land sought to be sold was a *raiya*t holding, or part thereof, could be taken in execution proceedings, but that the provision imposed upon the Executing Court itself the duty of seeing that no sale contravening it takes place. *PAT RUP NATH MANDAL v. If the Legislature authorises a specific act to be done, and if the performance of that act and of every other subsidiary act necessary for, and incidental to, the performance of the main act, creates nuisance or causes damage, the local body authorised to perform the act cannot be restrained by injunction nor made liable for damage except on the ground of negligence, and not even on that ground, if the mode of performance is also prescribed and the act is performed in the prescribed manner.

If the act can be performed without creating a nuisance and without causing injury or damage then the local body performing the act would be liable if the act is performed in such a manner as to create nuisance or cause damage.

Where the Legislature in general terms gives powers to a local body to perform certain acts then it is a matter of construction of the Act, whether the Legislature intended (a) merely to confer permissive right on the local body, or (b) to enjoin the performance of an obligatory duty. The local body, when exercising powers in the performance of a permissive act is in no higher position than a private person and must perform the prescribed acts without creating a nuisance or infringing private rights. Different considerations arise in the performance of obligatory duties and it then becomes necessary to see whether the Legislature intended the act to be performed even if it does create nuisance. Where the Legislature is silent on this point, then the nature of the duty imposed must be considered to ascertain whether the inevitable consequence of the performance of the act is to create a nuisance or otherwise affect the rights of private persons. If it is, it may be presumed that the Legislature contemplated the creation of a nuisance or the causing of a certain amount of damage and injury to private persons, as a consequence of the performance of the duty imposed.

Where, in the performance of an act, an option is given to the local body, e. g., in the selection of a site or in the deciding of the necessity for the performance of the act at a particular time, then the choice of the local body of either place or time cannot be questioned unless the choice has not been made bona fide.

Under the City of Rangoon Municipal Act a duty is imposed on the Corporation to erect urinals and water closets for public convenience on Municipal lands and the choice of the place where they are to be erected and the time when they become necessary are left to the Corporation.

The erection of structures is not merely a permissive act, and the principles applicable are those which apply to the carrying out of imperative duties imposed on a local body.

If the erection of a latrine does not necessarily give rise to a cause of action, the mere fact that the latrines may give rise to a nuisance on account of misuse by the public will not entitle a plaintiff to a cause of action in anticipation. The remedy of the plaintiff in such a case is to wait till the latrine is actually misused and has become a nuisance when he can ask the Court to grant relief.

Obiter.—Section 192 of the City of Rangoon Municipal Act does not deprive a private person of his Common Law right to an injunction and leave him merely a right to compensation.

It is a cardinal principle of the construction of Statutes that no legislative enactment should be so construed as to take away the Common Law rights of private persons R SURATEE BAZA BAZAR CO. LTD. v. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, RANGOON, 5 R. 722; A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 87 849

Per Mukerji, J.—Although where only one particular issue is identical in two different suits, one filed after the other, a question would arise whether the decision on the issue arrived at in the former suit would operate or not as res judicata, yet, where the two suits are identical, the failure of the first suit must bar the trial of the second suit even if no issues were raised in the former suit, under the general principle that no man can be vexed twice over the same cause of action.

Where the two suits are based on the same cause of action and against the same party, the mere addition of new reliefs in the second suit will not remove the bar of res judicata. A MAJIDAN v. SABIR ALI, A. I. R. 1928 All. 62 674

— ss. 65, 66—Benami purchase in execution sale—Sale held before passing of new Code but confirmed after new Code—Suit by real owner against transferee of benamidar, whether maintainable—Difference between old and new Codes.

A benami purchase in a Court sale held before the passing of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 but confirmed after the passing of that Code is governed by the provisions of s. 66 of the Code of 1908 and not by those of s. 317 of the Code of 1882, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 65 of the Code of 1908 under which, on confirmation of a sale, the title of the auction-purchaser vests back with retrospective effect from the date of sale.

The chief difference between s. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and s. 317 of the Code of 1882 is that whereas under the old Code a suit would lie against the heirs or assignees of a benamidar though not against the benamidar, under s. 66 of the new Code no suit would lie against anyone claiming a title under the certificated purchaser. C FAZLUR RAHAMAN v. — s. 73—'Same judgment-debtor', meaning of—Decrees against several persons—Decree-holders with common judgment-debtors, whether entitled to share—Application for execution to Court holding assets, necessity of—Mere forwarding of application for execution by Court passing decree, effect of.*

Where property belonging to several persons has been sold in execution of a decree against all of them, persons holding decrees against some of them alone are entitled to participate rateably in the distribution of the assets according to the interest of their respective judgment-debtors in the property sold provided they have otherwise complied with the provisions of s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The words 'same judgment-debtor' in s. 73 of the Code do not mean, in the case of decrees against several persons, that all the judgment-debtors of all the decrees should be the same.

A decree-holder who has not obtained a transfer of his decree to the Court holding the assets and applied to that Court for execution of his decree but whose application for execution to the Court which passed his decree has merely been forwarded for rateable distribution to the Court holding the assets is not entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code. R C. R. M. A. CHETTYAR FIRM v. K. R. S. V. CHETTYAR FIRM, 5 R. 757; A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 96 169

— s. 73, O. XXI, r. 11—Rateable distribution—'Application for execution', requisites of—Application for attachment of fund in Court to credit of judgment-debtor, whether one in execution or merely interlocutory—Informal applications, effect of.

All that s. 73 requires in order to enable a person to get rateable distribution is that he should make an application for the execution of the decree before the receipt of the assets by the Court.

An application purporting to be under O. XXI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code, contained the names of parties and prayed that the amount belonging to the defendant and in deposit in the Court in another suit may be attached immediately on condition of producing the copy of the decree, later on. But the petition contained neither verification, the date of the decree, nor the particulars required by the subcls. (d), (e), (f), (g) and (h) of the Rule. The Court, however, acted upon the petition and ordered an attachment of the fund:

Held, Per Jackson, (Devadoss, J., dissenting), that the application was merely an interlocutory one and not an application for execution within the meaning of s. 73, Civil Procedure Code.

Per Devadoss, J.—Where a Court overlooks certain small informalities and grants the relief asked for, it is not open to the party against whom the relief is granted to question the correctness or the legality of the Court's order on the ground that the application on which the relief is granted is not in the proper form.

Per Jackson, J.—A Court cannot take up a mere application for rateable distribution and fill in the particulars necessary in order to make it a regular application for execution. Nor can it do so with a mere application for attachment. M ABDUL SALAM SAHEB v. BATCHU VEERABHADRA RAJU, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 129 490

Although the object of s. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code is merely to inform the defendant substantially of the ground of complaint and the words 'cause of action' in the said section should not be construed in a narrow sense, yet it is necessary to state the cause of action with some precision.

Where a notice under s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, in respect of a contract for sale of goods alleged to have been entered into by a Government servant stated that no instructions had been given for the delivery of the goods and that unless the requisite orders for delivery were given legal proceedings would be adopted:

Held, that the notice was invalid inasmuch as it was in respect of a cause of action which had not already arisen. C KESSORAM PODDAR & Co. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, 64 C. 969; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 74 360

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Where an order granting sanction to institute a suit under s. 93, Civil Procedure Code, purporting to be passed by a Collector was signed by the sheristadar for the Collector and above the signature of the sheristadar the words "by order" appeared:

Held, that there was nothing illegal in the Collector delegating his power to sign to his sheristadar, that the official act of the sheristadar must be presumed to have been done properly until the contrary was proved, and that the order granting sanction was not invalid.

In dealing with cases where there is an omission as regards certain reliefs which are sanctioned by the Collector or Advocate-General the test is whether such omission is a material omission, one from which it can be said that it so alters the scope or character of the suit that if this matter was before the Collector or Advocate-General when the sanction was given, he would in all probability not have sanctioned the suit in the form in which it is ultimately brought. An omission which is immaterial and which would not affect the interests of the trust is not sufficient to vitiate the proceedings and the plaint filed in pursuance of the sanction.

The addition of a claim must be treated as a claim made without sanction and as such it is liable to be dismissed.

But the mere addition of a claim will not render the whole suit liable to be dismissed. M PARUCHURU SUDARASANACHARYULU v. KOLLIMARLA SURYANARAYANA, 33 M. L. T. 628; 27 L. W. 42; A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 130 522 appeal—Security bond not properly executed—Authority of appellant's representative to sign bond—Appellate Court's duty to afford proper opportunity to appellant to cure defect—Adherence to mere technicalities—Defeat of substantial justice.

An Appellate Court made an order on the appellant for furnishing security for costs of the appeal within a specified time, and the appellant in compliance therewith gave security and executed the necessary bond, which was duly accepted by the Registrar of the Court. After various intermediate proceedings, the case finally came on for hearing before the Appellate Court, when the respondent took the preliminary objection that the security furnished by the appellant was not in strict compliance with the order of the Court, inasmuch as it had not been proved that the party executing the security bond on behalf of the appellant had authority so to do. The Appellate Court gave effect to this contention and forthwith dismissed the appeal without going into the merits of the case:

Held, that the refusal to hear the appeal merely on the ground of what might have been a mere technicality about the bond led to a failure of justice and that the Appellate Court should have afforded a proper opportunity to the appellant, by adjourning the appeal, if necessary, to remedy the defect, if any, in the security bond.

Where it appeared that the security bond was signed, not by the appellant himself, but by a person purporting to act as his representative, and the question arose whether such person had the requisite authority on behalf of the appellant to execute the bond:

Held, that the appellant was entitled to an opportunity to prove by affidavit or otherwise that the bond was properly executed and that the party executing it had authority in that behalf. P G KOJO PON v. ATTA FUA, 47 O. L. J. 328; A. I. R. 1927 P. O. 264

On an application for leave to sue in a representative capacity on behalf of a community under O. Where the number of persons interested in a suit is 100, they are sufficiently “numerous” within the meaning of O. I, r. 8.

Interest was not paid and the mortgagee brought a suit within two years for interest alone. In a subsequent suit for principal and the balance of interest it was contended that the suit was barred inasmuch as he had not sued for principal also in the prior suit:

In proceedings to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that the defendant was not served, the burden of proof of non-service lies on the defendant, if the report of the process-server is according to law. But, under O. — O. IX, r. 13 — Preliminary decree—Contemplating appeal from preliminary decree, whether sufficient cause for non-appearance in proceedings for passing of final decree—Appeal from preliminary decree, after passing of final decree, effect of.

The mere fact that a party is contemplating an appeal from a preliminary decree is not a sufficient cause for his non-appearance in proceedings relating to the passing of the final decree.

The filing of an appeal from a preliminary decree subsequent to the passing of the final decree cannot have the effect of nullifying the final decree. A CHHANGA v. TIRHI, 26 A. L. J. 37; A. I. R. 1928 All. 192 581

It is settled law that O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only where the hearing of a suit has commenced and an application for an adjournment is then made by one of the parties. When before the hearing of a suit is commenced the plaintiff fails to appear on an adjourned date, the Court has to proceed under r. 2 and not r. 3. PAT MAHABIE PRASAD DUBEY v. SHRODAYAL PATHAK, A. Parties should not be made to suffer by reason of the failure of the Court to check the correctness of the entries in their execution petition.

An application for execution was presented against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor. A subsequent application was presented against the deceased judgment-debtor by oversight. The Court failed to detect the mistake and notice was issued in the name of the dead man. The attention of the Court was drawn to the defect later on by an application for amendment which was, however, granted after the expiry of the period of limitation:

Held, that the amendment fell within the scope of O. XXI, r. 17, sub-r. (1) of the Civil Procedure Code and that, therefore, by virtue of sub-r. (2) the application as amended must be deemed to have been one in accordance with law presented on the date when

An order of remand made under O. XLI, r. 25, Code of Civil Procedure, decides nothing, and the reasons that the Court gives for its support are given merely for its own convenience for the purpose of the determination of the appeal under O. XLI, r. 26, Code of Civil Procedure, and for helping the lower Court to proceed rightly in carrying out the order. The Court, either the same or differently constituted, when determining the appeal finally, has ample jurisdiction to go back on the views as expressed in the order of remand passed under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Code, and it would fail in its duty if, in deference to those views, which, no doubt, are entitled to the highest respect, it persists in them, although it is satisfied that they are erroneous. *C UPENDRA LAL GUPTA v. No prohibitory order for attachment of money can be made under O. XXI, r. 46 of the Civil Procedure Code unless the Judge issuing such order has jurisdiction over the place where the attachment is to be made.

Payments to be made to a Railway contractor for work done by him are not attachable under the rule as it is neither the salary nor the allowance of a servant of the Railway Company. O. XXI, r. 90—Court sale—Property consisting of numerous plots in various villages—Sale in one lot, whether proper—Gross inadequacy of price, meaning of—Sale subject to prior mortgage—Order fixing upset price for decree-holder in reference to value of both mortgages, effect of—Sale, whether void.

The fact that property consisting of various parcels of land situated in several villages was sold in one lot does not by itself constitute a gross irregularity in conducting the sale.

A Court sale cannot be set aside under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, where it is not possible to infer that the price which was realised by the sale was substantially less than the real market value or that such inadequacy of price, if any, was the result of an irregularity.

In execution of a decree on a puisne mortgage, the mortgaged properties were proclaimed for sale subject to the first mortgage. The Court subsequently gave permission to the decree-holder "to bid for Rs. 3,20,000 which will be the upset price so far as he is concerned." At the sale the only bid by an outsider was for a sum which if added to the amount of the first mortgage was less than the decree-holder's bid of Rs. 3,20,500. The sale was concluded in favour of the decree-holder. On an application being made to set aside the sale:

Held, that the order giving permission to bid did not amount to an order to sell free of the encumbrance in variation of the sale proclamation but only directed that the decree-holder could bid only for such a sum which if added to the first mortgage amount would come up to Rs. 3,20,000 and that what was sold was not, therefore, different from what was advertised for sale, so as to make the sale a nullity. *M RAMASWAMI AYYANGAR v. The auction-purchaser is not a necessary party to an application for setting aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, although under O. XXI, r. 92 of the Code no final order affecting the auction-purchaser can be passed unless notice of the application to set aside the sale is given to him. The proviso to the said rule does not fix any period for giving such notice to the auction-purchaser and there is no period of limitation for issuing such notice. L KIRPA RAM v. NAND LAL, A. I. An order setting aside a Court sale cannot be treated as a nullity merely because notice on the application for setting aside the sale was not issued to a party who was affected by the order. The party to whom notice was not issued on the application cannot, therefore, be allowed to impugn the validity of the order in an application which is not directed against that order, but against a subsequent order which has been passed directing him to refund the purchase-money withdrawn by him. C UMESH OHANDRA v. Where on the death of a plaintiff, no legal representative is brought on the record, the suit would abate; but where some only of several legal representatives come on the record and they contend that some other persons are not legal representatives, even though their contention may be found to be untrue, that would not make the whole or any portion of the suit abate in favour of the defendants.

Where a mortgagee brings a suit on the mortgage for the whole amount due, the mere fact that on the death of the mortgagee, one of the legal representatives of the mortgagee is not brought on the record within the time prescribed, would not entitle the mortgagors, to contend that the suit abates as regards his share. The legal representatives who are on record would represent all who are entitled to share in the estate of the deceased and are entitled to a decree for the whole amount.

In a mortgage suit it is unnecessary to go into the question which may arise between the legal representatives of a deceased mortgagee as to whether some of them or all of them are entitled to the whole of the interest of the deceased mortgagee. M GOVINDASWAMI v. Order XLI, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be applied to the case of an appellant whose appeal has abated by his death.

Per Mallik, J.—For the determination of the question whether an appeal is competent after partial abatement, the true test is whether the appeal can be heard in the absence of the appellant who is dead and the question whether the appeal can be heard in his absence will depend upon the nature of the suit and the decree made.

O. XXIII, r. 1—“Other sufficient grounds,” meaning of—Ejusdem generis—Absence of formal, defect or ground ejusdem generis—Permission to withdraw suit with liberty to bring fresh suit—Material irregularity—Revision—Omission to produce material document, whether “sufficient ground”.

“Other sufficient grounds” referred to in cl. (b) of O. XXIII, r. 1 (2), Civil Procedure Code, must be grounds ejusdem generis with the ground mentioned in cl. (a).

Where the trial Court allows withdrawal of a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit under O. XXIII, r. 1, when there is no formal defect nor any other grounds ejusdem generis, it commits a material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by utilizing its jurisdiction so as to give it authority which the law does not give, and its order is open to revision under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Failure of the plaintiff to produce some of his important documents in time is not a ground for permitting the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. O TIKAI CHOPRA v. SHEO DAYAL-RAMJI DAS, 5 O. W. N. 61 887

During the course of a suit by two brothers, one an adult, and the other a minor represented by the adult as next friend, to set aside an alienation by their father, the defendant set up a compromise between the adult plaintiff and himself under which it was agreed between them that the suit should be dismissed on the defendant paying Rs. 100 to the plaintiff:

Held, (1) that the compromise was not binding on the minor plaintiff;

(2) that no portion of the joint estate was bound by it inasmuch as the compromise could not be split up into two different compromises.

Under O. XXIII, r. 1, cl. (4), Civil Procedure Code, one plaintiff cannot withdraw from a suit without the consent of his co-plaintiff especially in a case where such other plaintiff is a minor represented by the adult plaintiff as next friend. M UPPUTURI PUNNAYYA v. Where an agreement or compromise entered into pending a suit comprises matters relating to the suit as well as other matters, the proper method of carrying out of the terms of O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relating to that part that was the subject of the suit. The decree taken as a whole should include the agreement but the operative part of the decree should be confined to the subject-matter of the pending litigation. R U PO NYUN v. O. XXIII, r. 3, Sch. II, para. 20—Arbitration without intervention of Court during pendency of suit—Award—Adjustment of suit—Declaratory suit—Award embodying executable orders—Decree in terms of such award, legality of.

Where a reference to arbitration is made during the pendency of a suit without the intervention of the Court the award made by the arbitrators can be given effect to as if it was an adjustment, by common consent, of the matter in dispute in the pending suit. Paragraph 20 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code cannot override the general power given to parties under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, to adjust their dispute by a lawful compromise at any time after the institution of the suit.

In a suit for a mere declaration it is open to the parties by adjustment or compromise to go beyond the scope of the suit and the Court is competent to pass a decree in terms of the award even though it requires one of the parties to pay a sum of money to the other and to embody such a direction in the operative portion of the decree. N NARAIN DAS BHAGWANDAS & Co. v. If a reference to arbitration is made by the next friend of a minor during his minority, it is open to the minor on attaining majority to make his own election either to go on with the suit and accept the award, or to repudiate the same wholly or partially.

On such election being made, the title of the suit has to be corrected and thereafter, the proceedings for filing the award and passing a decree in terms thereof or for superseding the reference or remitting the award, etc., has to be commenced. The Court is not entitled to call upon the major plaintiff to file objection to the award unless he is examined to show his willingness to carry on the litigation to a termination in his name.

A Judge is bound to give notice to the parties of the fact of the filing of the award by the arbitrator. He is also bound to see that with the award is filed the depositions and documents, which have been taken and proved before him. Want of such notice is a material irregularity, which makes the judgment and decree liable to be set aside.

Until the notice prescribed by para. 10 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code, is given, there is no obligation on the parties to file objections.

Unless and until an award is engrossed on a stamp paper, it has no validity and cannot operate as an award, as the Court will not be justified in looking at it and acting upon it.

The executant of an award being the arbitrator, it is his duty primarily under s. 29 (g) of the Stamp Act, to direct any of the parties to provide him with the necessary stamp and see that he does not deliver or publish his award on a plain paper. N RAMKUMAR v. In accordance with s. 247 of the Contract Decree, applicable in Zanzibar (corresponding to s. 247 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872), where a minor is admitted to the benefit of the partnership, the result of that admission is, that, while he cannot, before he comes of age, be made personally liable for the obligations of the firm, yet his share in the partnership property is liable to the obligations of the firm.

Where partners are jointly entitled to property, and the question arises whether that property has been thrown into the assets of a partnership, that is a pure question of fact.

—ss. 253, 256—Partnership business continued after expiry of term agreed upon—Partnership at will—Presumption of continuance of old terms—Share of nett annual profits payable to the executors of deceased partner—Ascertainment of profits—Surviving partner's claim for salary.

Where a partnership is entered into for a fixed term, and the term expires but the partners continue the business as partners at will without fresh articles, the business is deemed to be continued upon the old terms so far as they are applicable to a partnership at will.

Where under partnership articles it was provided that in the event of a partner dying or becoming insane, and during the term of the partnership, the surviving or remaining partner would pay to the representatives of the partner so dying etc, a share of the "nett annual profits" of the partnership business:

Held, that the nett annual profits, by which the amount of the sum to be paid by the surviving partner was to be measured, should be ascertained by deducting from the receipts and earnings of the business such outgoings and ordinary business expenses as were under the partnership articles or by the practice of the partners so deducted during the partnership, the business being for this purpose treated as a continuation of the partnership business. A payment, however, which under the partnership articles ceased with the dissolution of the partnership could not be properly deducted.

Where a partnership is dissolved by death of a partner the business, if carried on by the surviving partner, is so carried on by him on his own sole account and for his own benefit, the annual sum payable (under the partnership articles) to his deceased partner's executors being, in substance, purchase-money for his interest in the assets of the business.

Upon the construction of the partnership articles in this case, their Lordships held that, without an express provision to that effect, the surviving partner was not entitled to a salary. *P C JOHN LACHLAN MC GILLIVRAY v. When a Statute grants powers on any definite number of persons in respect to a public, as opposed to a private, trust and contains no indication to the contrary, it is necessary that a majority of that number should act together and should attend every meeting when any corporate act is done or purported to be done.

The election of a Chairman of corporate body is a corporate act which has to be performed as a preliminary to further corporate acts being performed by the corporation. S LALOCHAND v. ISSERSINGH, A. I. R. 1928 Sind 126 446

Although as a general proposition one co-sharer has no right to take exclusive possession of a joint property, yet the question whether such exclusive possession amounts to an ouster or not depends on the circumstances of each case, and where the Court is unable to hold that there was an ouster, it would not be right to refuse defendant who is in possession the benefit of the equitable principle that the mere fact of sole occupation by one co-sharer does not necessarily constitute an ouster of the other co-sharers, and does not entitle the latter to a decree for joint possession. *G ATMANA KHATUN v. Under the provisions of s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, when a witness for the prosecution is produced in Court the accused is entitled to apply for a copy of his statement recorded by Police, and if he makes an application at that stage, the Court is bound to refer to the writing and to direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, subject to the proviso that if the Court is of opinion that any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interest, then the Court shall record such opinion and exclude such part from the copy furnished to the accused.

The Court has no power to refuse the granting of the copy until the cross-examination has been opened and the accused has by his questions laid a foundation for holding that there is contradiction between the statements made in Court and those made before the Police.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The words "the Court shall refer to such writing" in s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code are obviously for the purpose of enabling the Court to exercise discretion under the second proviso, and not for the purpose of restricting the right of the accused to obtain a copy, the discretion wherein was expressly taken away by the Legislature. *PAT RAMGULAM TELI v. Subsequently he made a similar complaint to a Magistrate and contended that the committal proceedings should be quashed as there was no complaint in writing by the Magistrate within the meaning of s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code :

The accused was charged under s. 413 of the Penal Code of being a habitual receiver of stolen property. Some ten or eleven instances of receipt of stolen property were put forward by the prosecution. At the trial the Sessions Judge thought it proper to add charges of three separate offences under s. 411. The three incidents which formed the subject of these charges were three of the incidents relied on by the prosecution to establish the habit of receiving stolen property. The charges under s. 411, though proved, were found by the Judge not a sufficient basis for the finding of habit necessary to a conviction under s. 413, and the accused was convicted of the offences under s. 411 :—

Criminal Procedure Code—concl'd.

The policy of law relating to transfer of criminal cases is to inspire confidence in the minds of accused persons in the administration of justice and in the integrity of the Magistracy. The superior Courts are expected to have due regard to the susceptibilities of the accused persons and if they are satisfied that there are reasonable grounds, that is, grounds which a reasonable person placed in the position of an accused person considers to be sufficient, for entertaining an apprehension that the accused will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court of a Magistrate then an order for transfer should be made.

The mere fact that in a previous case against other accused under the same section and almost on identical facts the Magistrate convicted the accused then before him is no ground for transferring a case. L. AMAR NATH v. EMPEROR, 29 Cr. L. J. 295; A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 460 783

Criminal trial—Appeal from acquittal—Presumptions in favour of accused.

In an appeal by Government against an acquittal the accused starts with a double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case and that until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt the accused must be presumed to be innocent and, secondly, that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from a Court, a Superior Court will not interfere until the Crown show conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible. *PAT EMPEROR v. The boys were released after admonition under s. 562A of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that the conviction was wrong inasmuch as the burden of proving that the area from which the ghalasi was cut was not within the area of 345 bighas in the possession of the petitioners was on the prosecution and the prosecution had failed to discharge that burden;

Duty of Magistrates—Private conference with Prosecuting Officer—Invoking intervention of superior Executive Officers—Putting accused to inconvenience—Improper conduct.

It is an elementary principle of justice that a person cannot simultaneously perform the functions of a prosecutor and those of a Judge in a criminal case. A Magistrate ceases to be an Executive Officer when he is sitting in a Court to try a criminal case.

A District Magistrate as such is directly subordinate to the High Court and he cannot be allowed to invoke the intervention of his superior Executive Officers in a matter concerning the discharge of his judicial duties for which he owes responsibility only to the High Court.

It is improper on the part of a Judicial Officer to hold private conferences with the Prosecuting Officers in respect of a criminal case upon which he has to adjudicate.

One of the most important duties of a Court of Law is to create and maintain confidence in the administration of justice and to conduct itself in such a manner as to produce in the minds of the parties an impression that nothing but absolute justice would be done to them. *L. Custom—Alienation—Female heir—Right of alienation—Succession—Daughters exclude collaterals—Special custom excluding daughters—Burden of proof.

Under the general Customary Law of the Punjab collaterals in the sixth degree of the deceased male holder are not entitled to inherit his estate in preference to his daughters especially when the estate has not been proved to be ancestral. The onus of proving a special custom in favour of their right of succession to the exclusion of daughters rests on the collaterals.

The rule of Customary Law is firmly established that a female inheriting landed estate from a male holds the property on life-tenure and it is immaterial whether the female is a widow, a daughter or a mother.

A female is not competent to alienate property inherited by her except for necessity and the reversionary heirs of the last male holder are entitled to contest an alienation made by her even if the property is not proved to be ancestral. L AHMAD DIN v. distinction between—Customary right, proof of—Continued use for 20 years—Presumption of acquisition by grant—Sufficiency of user, whether question of law—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Custom resulting in loss of right of enjoyment of property, validity of—License to excavate earth for making pots, whether irrevocable.

There is a distinction between a customary right and a customary easement; for the acquisition of the former no particular period of enjoyment need be proved.

In order to establish a customary right to do on the land of another acts, which, in the absence of any custom, would be acts of trespass, the enjoyment must have been so acquiesced in, by the owner, as to give rise to the inference, that originally by agreement or otherwise, the usage had become a Customary Law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned.

Whether from the proved or continued user over 20 years, such an acquiescence on the part of the owner, as would give rise to a presumed grant, could be inferred is a question of law on which a second appeal would lie.

A user for a period of 20 years is sufficiently long to enable the Court, in the absence of a protest from the person concerned, to draw the legal inference that the exercise of the right must have had a lawful origin in a grant.

A custom may be good even though its exercise may have the effect of depriving the owner of the soil, of the whole use and enjoyment of his property.

The right to excavate the earth and carry it away for the purpose of making pots is a license coupled with a grant and is in the nature of a benefit to arise out of land or an interest in land, and as such is irrevocable at the option of the owner of the land. N RUSHI v. Divorce—Grounds for divorce—'Cruelty'—Isolated acts of violence, whether sufficient—Adultery of wife—Condonation—Revival—Mere familiarity with co-respondent, effect of—Dissolution of marriage—Policy of law.

In order to establish a case of cruelty against her husband, a wife must prove more than mere isolated acts of violence. The degree of violence necessary varies in accordance with the status of the parties.

The law as regards revival of a condoned offence is that if such a subsequent offence should arise, the forgiveness is cancelled and the old cause of complaint is revived even if the offence is not ejusdem generis with the original offence.

But there is no authority for the view that an offence by a wife less than adultery with another person revives an adultery committed by her previously and which has been condoned by her husband. At least the second offence, if it is not adultery, must be one of which a Court can take cognisance.

Mere familiarity with another person, does not revive a condoned offence of adultery so as to justify a decree for divorce.

A decree for dissolution of marriage should not be granted merely because the husband has shown himself to be suspicious, jealous or even occasionally violent. It is not the object of the law to make such separations easy. O FOSTER v. FOSTER, 1 Luck. Cas. 685; A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 114 184

The mere fact that the petitioner has suspicions against two persons and, in spite of efforts and inquiry, has been unable to obtain substantial proof against either of them and that he is, therefore, reluctant to take the risk of making them co-respondents is not a sufficient ground for dispensing with the naming of the co-respondents under s. 11 (2) of the Divorce Act. N CHARLES HENRY v. Family arrangement—Existence of claims believed to be true, whether necessary—'Bona fide dispute,' meaning of.

The only requisite required to make a family arrangement valid is that it should be a transaction between members of the same family which is for the benefit of the family generally, as, for example, one which tends to the preservation of the family property, to the peace or security of the family and the avoiding of family disputes and litigation, or to the saving of the honour of the family.

It is not necessary that the claim by each party to the settlement must be a claim which that party believes to be justified upon facts and law.

The expression 'bona fide dispute' used in this connection means nothing more than that each party must intend to press his claim to the property by litigation or otherwise. A. SIDH GOPAL v. BHARI LAL, 25 A. L. J. 978; A. I. R. 1928 All. 65; 50 A. 284 247

The test really is whether the contract was a Sovereign act or was one which a private individual could have entered upon in his ordinary business pursuits. If it is the former, the Secretary of State is not liable, but if it is the latter he can be sued in the same way that the East India Company could have been sued for acts done in their capacity as traders and not as the Sovereign power.

The plaintiff sued to set aside two sale-deeds executed in favour of the third and fourth defendants and a gift deed executed in favour of the fifth defendant and for recovery of possession of the properties covered by the deed. The first sale-deed was executed by the plaintiff's grandfather and the second by the plaintiff's grandfather and the plaintiff's father jointly, and the deed of gift was executed by the plaintiff's father alone. The Subordinate Judge found that the sale-deeds were invalid as against the plaintiff and his share, and that the gift deed was wholly invalid. On appeal by the third and fourth defendants the District Judge held that the sale-deeds were not bona fide ones and made a decree that the plaintiff should recover the properties covered by the sale-deeds on payment to the fourth defendant of a certain sum of money which was found to have been used for defraying family debts. On second appeal, the High Court remanded the case for a formal decision on the question whether the sale-deeds effected a real alienation. The District Judge submitted a finding that no consideration really passed and that the transactions were not genuine, and the High Court declared that the sale-deeds and the gift deeds were null and void and decreed possession of the properties covered by the deeds. On Letters Patent appeal the Judges accepted the finding that the transactions were purely sham, but made the decree for possession of the properties dependent upon payment by the plaintiff of the amount specified by the District Judge. On appeal by the plaintiff to the Privy Council:

Held, (1) that the decree made in Letters Patent appeal was erroneous in so far as it made the recovery of the properties covered by the gift deed also conditional on payment of the sum specified inasmuch as the fifth defendant had not preferred any appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and the decree so far as he was concerned had become final;

(2) that the Division Bench of the High Court did not act wrongly in calling for a definite finding on the question whether the sale-deeds effected real transfers;

(3) that the finding of the District Judge that the transfers were sham and that there was no consideration for them must be considered to have eradicated his previous finding that the fourth defendant had discharged certain family debts, and that the decree of the Letters Patent Bench was, consequently, wrong in so far as it made recovery of possession conditional on payment of the amounts specified in the decree of the District Judge;

(4) that in view of the finding of the District Judge that no real transfers were intended or effected between the parties, it was not necessary to consider the question whether the third and fourth defendants were entitled to the share of the transferors. P C KRISHNA REDDI v. her sole and separate use and after her death in trust for the male heirs of the said Krishnabai share and share alike". On July 14th, 1894, the settlor died, Krishnabai survived the settlor and died in 1897, leaving six sons, all of whom were living at the date of the settlement. The question arose as to the true meaning of the gift in favour of Krishnabai and her male heirs. The heirs of the settlor contended that the limitations in favour of her (Krishnabai's) male heirs after her death were contrary to Hindu Law and void, and that in consequence there was a resulting trust in favour of the settlor:

Held, (overruling this contention) that the gift in favour of Krishnabai's male heirs was a valid gift under the Hindu Law, inasmuch as they did not take by inheritance from her and it was by virtue of a wholly independent gift that they were beneficiaries under the deed.

Held, also, that the gift, though in the form of a gift of income, carried the whole estate.

—Debts of father—Liability of son—Illegal and immoral debts—Burden of proof—Direct connection between debt and immorality, proof of, whether necessary—Open reckless life—Duty of creditors—Want of inquiry, effect of—Constructive notice.

Although in the case of a joint Hindu family the sons are ordinarily liable for their father's debts even if the debts are contracted by the father for his own benefit without any legal necessity so long as the debts are not incurred for an unlawful or immoral purpose, yet where a youngman who has just attained majority and who has inherited valuable property which would yield an income more than sufficient to keep him in comfort having regard to the position of the family and its requirements, leads an openly reckless and immoral life and borrows large sums of moneys, which will not in the ordinary circumstances be necessary for any lawful purpose, and the lenders make no enquiries and are merely satisfied with the fact that there were antecedent debts or with the statement of the borrower that he wants money for family expenses, the lenders cannot as against the minor sons of such borrower get the protection which is usually given to bona fide lenders, unless they prove that they made reasonable enquiries.

It is not necessary in such a case that direct connection should be shown between the debt and the purpose for which it was borrowed. Constructive notice or the absence of any enquiry would be sufficient.

It is not the law that in order to absolve themselves from liability, the sons must prove not merely the purpose for which such loans were contracted but also that the lenders knew of the immoral purpose of the loan. It would be quite sufficient to prove that the borrower was at that time leading a licentious life beyond his means, indulging in drink, riot, prostitution and debauchery, and that at the same time he was without any business or occupation upon which the money might legitimately have been spent without showing on which particular act of immorality the money was spent. If it is proved clearly that at the time the borrower was notoriously wasting his substance on riotous living and spending large sums beyond his income and above his station in life in this way only, a loan contracted in the midst of such living and spent upon it would be a loan contracted for immoral purposes. *M GURUMOORTHY IYER v. Debts—Mortgage-decree against father—Suit by sons to set aside decree—Sons whether bound to prove illegality of debt—Absence of necessity, effect of—Suit against karta and junior members—Decree, effect of—Presumption as to nature of suit.

Per Walsh, J.—When the karta of a joint Hindu family together with the other members of the joint family is sued, it must be taken that he enjoys the dual capacity which he enjoys in the family, that is to say, he is sued both as the karta representing the family and managing the family, and as a member of it, having an undivided interest.

The proposition laid down by the Judicial Committee in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (2) that if the managing co-parcener is the father and the reversioners are the sons, he may, by incurring debts so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt, is applicable to decrees on mortgages as well as simple money-decrees.

Per Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The answer to the question whether a Hindu son is entitled to challenge a decree obtained against his father for sale of the joint family property without asserting and proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes must depend upon the question whether or not the father was sued as karta and manager of the joint family. If he was, the answer must be in the negative. If he was not, the answer must be in the affirmative.

The proposition that once the joint ancestral property has passed out of the joint family in execution of a decree for the father's debt his sons cannot recover that property unless they show that the debt in respect of which the decree was obtained was a debt incurred for illegal and immoral purposes has reference only to simple money debts which the father is under a personal obligation to pay and simple money-decrees obtained against the father for recovery of such debts. In the case of a debt incurred on the security of the family property by the father, when the mortgagee has not sued for recovery of the debt within six years of the date of accrual of the cause of action, and has thus allowed his right to a simple money-decree against the father to become time-barred, the personal obligation of the father disappears, and the mortgagee is then only entitled to recover the debt by sale of the mortgaged property, and in such case the sons labour under no pious obligation to discharge that debt for the simple reason that the debt is not due from their father. Consequently, if the mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the joint family property without impleading the sons or without suing the father in his representative capacity, the sons are entitled to challenge the validity of that decree on the ground that they being no parties to that decree are not bound by the same, and in such a suit, unless the mortgagee succeeds in proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was for legal necessity, the sons will be entitled to avoid the decree.

When the manager of a joint Hindu family is impleaded as a defendant to the suit, the presumption is that he is sued in that capacity. But if, along with the manager, certain other members of the family are joined as defendants to the suit, the presumption must be the other way. *A LAL SINGH v. JAGEAJ SINGH, A. I. A person purporting to affiliate a son executed in his favour a document which provided: "further you, becoming a son to me, will be such an owner of all my properties as a son is," and there were no other words of disposition to make a deed of gift or Will. A reversioner sued after the death of the executant for a declaration that the said affiliated son was not entitled to the rights of an adopted son and that alienations made by him were not binding beyond the lifetime of the widow:

Held, (1) that the document, not being a Will or gift, did not operate to transfer any interest in favour of the affiliated son;

(2) that having regard to the frame of the suit and the relief prayed for, no directions could be given to the plaintiff to pay the binding portion of the considerations for the alienations since it was impossible to determine in the suit what the equities were between the parties. *M SURAPPA v. Gift by husband to wife—Stridhan—Widow's power to transfer—Viramitrodaya, authority of—Transfer as special gift to be enjoyed from generation to generation—Construction—Full proprietary rights, whether conveyed.

When a husband who is governed by the Mitakshara Law makes a gift in favour of his wife, the property transferred by gift becomes her stridhan and if it is considered as self-acquired property she has ordinarily the power to transfer it and further such stridhan descends to her heirs and not to her husband's heirs.

There are, however, peculiar restrictions, according to legal authority on the Mitakshara Law, to the widow's right to transfer landed property if the gift has been made in a particular fashion.

Where a husband transferred property to his wife as a special gift describing it as the property in

In order to make an alienation by the manager of a joint Hindu family, binding on the members, it is not necessary in every case to prove actual enquiry by the creditor as to whether there was legal necessity for it; it would be sufficient if it is proved that the creditor had the belief that there was such necessity provided that it was based on information that could reasonably give rise to such belief, whether that information was obtained by direct or indirect enquiries or in any other way. The question of enquiry into the necessity, or of reason to believe in its existence, can only arise when there is no proof of its existence or proof that it did not exist; then the lender is covered by proof, that he believed it to exist even if it did not. But when the lender is familiar with all the circumstances of the family to which the money was lent, the only way in which the family could be made liable in such a case would be by proof that the necessity did exist.

Even in the absence of proof of actual existence of necessity the family would be liable to re-pay the loan, if it is proved that the loan was taken for the family and spent for it, irrespective of the question whether the person borrowing the loan had or had not the authority to borrow it. N RAMBHAU v. Where the manager of a Hindu family having joint family funds in his hands, spends on the maintenance of his family not only the joint family funds but also a considerable part of his self-acquired property, the reasonable inference is that he means to treat that part of his self-acquired property as joint family property and even the accumulations and the remainder of his earnings which have not been kept distinct and separate become joint family property. M KRISHNAMACHARIAR v. The members of a joint Hindu family are entitled to question an alienation by the manager of the family where the consideration is grossly inadequate, even though necessity for the alienation is proved. A BANKY LAL v. NATTHA RAM 576

Joint family—Sale for family necessity—Part of consideration not applied for purposes of necessity—Sale, whether liable to be set aside.

A sale of joint family property will not be set aside merely because a part of the proceeds is not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity. The real question that has to be considered is whether the sale itself was justified by necessity. If the purchaser has acted honestly if the existence of a family necessity for the sale is made out, and the price is not unreasonably low, he (the purchaser) is not bound to account for the application of the price.

The practice under which, although it be completely established that by far the most substantial part of the consideration was for family necessity, yet if a certain balance of the price remains unaccounted for, or insufficiently proved, then by that result the parties' interests are judged, and the sale is set aside, conditionally upon the re-payment by the vendor or his representatives of the substantial part referred to is erroneous.

Transactions of sale of family property which in their real essence and substance, are sales made for family necessity, will not be narrowly scrutinized, especially when such transactions have stood unchallenged for a considerable length of time and go back beyond the stage at which direct evidence could possibly be expected from the vendees.

Where a sale of family property for the sum of Rs. 4,000 was justified by necessity to the extent of Rs. 3,500 and there was an unaccounted balance of Rs. 500 and the High Court held the sale invalid, subject to the condition of payment to the vendees of the items proved (namely), the said sum of Rs. 3,500:

Otherwise the debts would be binding upon him.

In such a suit, the son cannot escape liability for a debt which is not illegal or immoral by the mere fact that he has filed a suit for partition, and a mortgagee-creditor who is able to obtain a personal decree against the father, after exhausting his remedy against the father's share, would be entitled to proceed against the son's share of the family property to the extent of the balance remaining due after executing the decree against the father's share. *M KANDASAMI GOUNDAN v. There is no presumption of law that property which is in the possession of a Hindu widow and the acquisition of which is not explained, originally belonged to her husband, even though the husband died possessed of considerable property. Impartible estate—Proof of impartibility—Regard, effect of—Amgaon zemindari (Central Provinces)—Onus of proof of special custom modifying ordinary law of succession—"Raj."

A special custom modifying the ordinary law of succession must be ancient and invariable and must be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence.

Where there is a dispute with respect to an estate being impartible or otherwise, the onus lies on the party who alleges the existence of a custom different from the ordinary law of inheritance according to which custom the estate is to be held by a single member and, as such, not liable to partition. In order to establish that any estate is impartible, it must be proved that it is from its nature impartible and descendible to a single person, or that it is impartible and descendible by virtue of a special custom.

If an impartible estate existed as such from before the advent of British rule, any settlement or re-grant thereof by the British Government must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and unless inconsistent with the express terms of the new settlement, be presumed to continue the estate with its previous incidents of impartibility and succession by special custom.

The word 'raj' by itself does not necessarily imply impartibility.

Unless considerable age can be ascribed to any particular zemindari, of whichever class it may be, it cannot claim to be governed by either ancient or invariable custom.

Neither by the terms of the grant, nor by territorial or family custom, any more than by its inherent nature, can the zemindari of Amgaon (in the Central Provinces) be considered an impartible estate subject to the rule of single succession.

In a litigation between two persons as to title to a property one of them was held entitled to it, and during the pendency of an appeal therefrom, the successful party applied in land acquisition proceedings with regard to the property, for reference to the Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. In appeal the property was held to belong to the other party:

Held, that such other party was entitled to avail himself of the reference made at the instance of his opponent who was the person interested at the time in making the application for reference within the meaning of s. 18 (1), Land Acquisition Act.

The proper way to value lands is to ascertain what would be their market value if put to the most lucrative use having regard to their condition. In assessing compensation not only is the present purpose to which the land is applied to be taken into consideration, but any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events the land might within a reasonable period be applied should also be considered. The special adaptability of lands for building purposes is an element to be considered in fixing the compensation even though the lands are used for agricultural purposes at the time of acquisition. *M VENKATA KRISHNAYYA GARU v. — Covenant to repair—New building, whether covered by covenant—General covenant and covenant to repair demised premises only, distinction between.

A general covenant to repair in a lease deed includes not only buildings in existence when the demise is made but all those which may be erected during the term. A covenant to repair the demised premises applies only to those existing at the date of the demise unless the new buildings are made a part of the old ones.

An indenture of lease provided that the lessee shall "at all times during the said term of years keep the said premises in good and substantial repair and the same in good and substantial repair deliver up to the lessor, his heirs or assigns at the expiration or sooner determination of the said term." There was also a subsequent clause which ran as follows: "And it is hereby agreed and declared by and between the parties hereto notwithstanding anything heretofore contained that the said lessee shall be at liberty to make all necessary additions and alterations to the demised premises to improve the buildings with the written consent of the lessor at his own costs during the continuance of the said term and all such changes, additions, fittings and fixtures so made shall become and be considered the property of the said lessor and the lessee shall have no right to remove the same either before or after the expiration of this lease." The lessee erected certain new buildings which formed additions to and became part of the buildings originally demised:

Held, (1) that the covenant to repair was a general one and applied to the new buildings;

(2) that even if it was a covenant to repair the demised premises alone it applied to the new buildings as they were so erected as to become a part of the old buildings. C EZRA MEYER AARON COHEN v. DEBENDRA LALL KHAN, 32 C. W. N. 154; 46 C. L. J. 607; A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 89 86

— Encroachment by tenant—Landlord's right to encroachment—Presumption.

Where during the continuance of the tenancy, a tenant encroaches upon land belonging to a third person, his possession of the land so encroached upon is prima facie for the benefit of the landlord unless it appears by some evidence that the tenant, at the time the encroachment was made, intended it for his own exclusive benefit. —Permanent tenancy—Inference from proved facts—Question of law—Burden of proof of permanency—Mere unaltered rent and transfer of holding, effect of—Permanent structures—Amalgamation of permanent and precarious holdings—Consequences—Admission of permanency by gomashita in rent receipt, whether binding on landlord—Gomashita's powers.

The question whether a tenancy is permanent or precarious is a question of legal inference from proved facts and, consequently, a question of law.

When a tenant of lands in India in a suit by his landlord to eject him from them, sets up a defence that he has a right of permanent tenancy in the lands, the onus of proving that he has such right is upon the tenant.

An entry with regard to the nature of the tenancy in a rent receipt is superfluous and unnecessary in the case of tenancies governed by the Transfer of Property Act and the admission of the nature of tenancy by a gomashita in such rent receipt is gratuitous and not binding on the landlord.

There is no inflexible rule of law that a landlord is bound by every statement made by his gomashita in a rent receipt.

Ordinarily the gomashita is authorised to receive rents, to give a discharge to tenants for such rents and in some cases even to recognise the transferee of an occupancy holding, but it certainly is not usual for a gomashita to confer any permanent right on tenants or to make any admission in respect of tenants' rights which may be binding on the landlord.

Mere unaltered rents for a number of years and a single instance of transfer of the holding are not sufficient to raise the inference of permanency.

The fact that holdings which were not permanent were amalgamated with a holding on which at one time a pucca structure stood cannot give these holdings the character of permanency.

of amalgamation of four holdings not change the respective incidents in the absence of a contract to the effect that it was intended to change those incidents and give a higher status to the tenant of the amalgamated holding.

Land in possession of a trespasser at the date of the registration of a sale-deed is not land which is not capable of physical possession within the meaning of Art. 10 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act. N. MOHANLAL v. SATYABHAMA, 23 N. L. R. 178; A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 89 194

— Sch. I, Arts. 30, 31, 36—Carrier conveying goods without passenger's permission—Loss of goods—Suit for price—Limitation.

For the presumption of an implied contract to carry goods, delivery of the goods to the carrier so as to enable the carrier to acquire lawful possession of the goods for the purpose of carriage, is an indispensable essential.

The plaintiff put certain goods on the defendant's ferry boat for conveyance and himself got on to it but finding that the boat was being overloaded got down and wanted to take down his goods. The defendant refused to allow him to do so. The boat capsized on the way and the goods were lost. The plaintiff sued for the price of the goods:

Held, that the suit was governed not by Art. 30 or Art. 31 but by Art. 36 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act. C. NUJAFAR AHMED v. KARIM BUKSHA, A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 306 723

— Art. 44—Void transfer of minor's property by guardian—Art. 44, whether applicable—Suit for setting aside transfer barred—Defence of invalidity, whether barred.

Where an alienation by a guardian is absolutely void, Art. 44 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act does not apply and the ward can bring a suit for possession against the alienee within 12 years of the date of sale.

The fact that the remedy of a suit to set aside a transfer is barred, does not necessarily bar the defence of invalidity of the transfer. N. MAROTI SURYABHAN v. RAIWANT RAO 897

— Arts. 49, 115, 145—Suit for recovery of gold delivered to defendant for making ornaments, or their value—Limitation—Deposit—Wrongful possession after demand, effect of.

A suit for recovery of gold and ornaments delivered to the defendant for making new ornaments, or the price thereof, is governed by Art. 145 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act and the mere fact that depository continued to retain possession of them after demand was made does not take the case out of the said Article. *C. JAJNESHWAR KARMAKAR v. struction thereof. In a suit for recovery of the unpaid part of the one-third cost of the construction:

Held, that the suit was governed by Art. 115 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act, and not by Art. 61.

Article 115, Limitation Act, is a general provision applying to all actions ex contractu not specially provided for otherwise. The word "compensation" in that Article as well as in Art. 116 has the same meaning as it has in s. 73 of the Contract Act and denotes a sum of money payable to a person on account of loss or damage caused to him by the breach of a contract. *L. Arts. 115, 116, 132—Vendor and purchaser—Amount reserved for payment of prior mortgage—Failure of vendee to pay—Suit by vendor for recovery of amount reserved—Prayer for enforcing lien—Limitation—Cause of action.

Where a sale-deed merely recites that the vendee should, out of the sale price, pay off a prior mortgage, without giving the vendee the option to pay it off at some future time or to pay it off whenever he pleased, the presumption is that the vendee is to pay immediately, or if not immediately, at any rate as soon as is reasonably possible, and limitation for a suit to recover the amounts so reserved from the vendee begins to run from the date of the sale-deed or at least within a reasonable time therefrom.

Article 132 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act applies to a relief for enforcement of a hypothecation lien. A KALLU v. RAM DAS, 26 A. L. J. 53.

Art. 142—Suit for possession—Plaintiff alleging possession and dispossession—Onus of possession within 12 years—Land remaining uncultivated for certain harvests, effect of, on defendant's possession.

Where in a suit for possession the plaintiff alleges possession and dispossession the onus of proving that he has been in possession, within 12 years of the suit lies on him even though the defendants are entered in revenue papers as tenants.

Where a person is shown to have been in possession of land for a number of years, the mere fact that the land was not cultivated during certain harvests does not make him out of possession during that period. L. NUR KHAN v. FAKIR ABDULLAH 779.

alienation of the property belonging to a minor by his guardian.

A pre-emptor of property sold by the managing member of joint Hindu family takes the property pre-empted by him, subject to the right of the minor co-parceners to avoid the transaction on the ground of want of legal necessity.

The Hindu Law doctrine of antecedent debts applies only to father's antecedent debts. It does not apply to those incurred by a managing member other than the father. N WAMAN v. VISHNU, A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 151.

Sch. I, Art. 144—Suit for possession of waste land—Limitation—Presumption of possession from title—Landlord and tenant—Bona fide settlement by de facto landlord—Right of true owner to eject tenant—Actual possession, necessity of.

In a suit for recovery of possession of waste lands if title is found with the plaintiff he must be presumed to have been in possession until he was dispossessed and in the absence of evidence as to entry by some other person on the land beyond twelve years of suit the question of limitation does not arise.

The principle that a tenant who has taken a settlement bona fide from a de facto landlord cannot be ejected by the true owner is applicable only to cases where the person claiming to be the de facto landlord was in actual possession. *G MOHESH CHANDRA v. Madras High Court (Original Side) Rules, r. 5 (a)—Third party procedure—Suit on mortgage—Mortgagor defendant claiming indemnity against another defendant—Procedure, applicability of—Third party application, principles relating to.

The third party procedure is applicable only to claims to indemnity and not to claims to damages.

An application for the issue of a third party notice should be made promptly and as a rule before the defence is delivered, so that the notice may be served within the time limited for delivering the defence, but in special cases the delay may be excused.

If the third party proceedings will prejudice, embarrass or delay the plaintiff, or where the whole dispute between the defendant and the third party cannot be disposed of in the action itself, the court may refuse to give directions, but the mere fact that the case presents some difficulty is not a reason for refusing directions.

On such an application, the question to be considered is, whether on the facts alleged, a right to indemnity exists. If the right is made out, the applicant has a prima facie claim and the Court should not inquire closely into the merits of that claim. M. KRISHNASWAMI ATTAR v. RAGHAVIAH CHETTY, 53 M. L. It was found that the mortgagor paid soon after a default in the payment of the interest, not only the interest payable under the default clause but also portions of the principal amount which under the primary clause was payable only at the end of 5 years;

Held, (1) that the stipulation gave only an option to the mortgagee to call in at once the principal amount and interest due on the mortgage-bond without reference to the period stipulated for payment;

(2) that, from the payments made, a reasonable presumption could be drawn that when the default occurred the mortgagee elected to exercise the option and pressed for payment of the entire amount, viz., the principal and interest due on the bond and that the payments were made in consequence of such demand;

(3) that the creditor having so exercised the option, the cause of action to sue on the mortgage arose from the date of default. M RANGASWAMY PILLAY v. KUPPU-SWAMY DOOKSHATAR, A. I. R. 1928 Mad 637 650

— Simple mortgage—Subsequent delivery of possession to mortgagee—Extinguishment of simple mortgage—Suit for redemption—Plea of outright sale—Burden of proof—Adverse possession.

A executed a simple mortgage to B in 1905. In 1906 A gave possession of the mortgaged properties to B. In 1926, the heirs of A sued B for redemption of the properties alleging that possession was given only for securing payment of interest on the mortgage-debt. B pleaded that the properties were made over to him by way of outright sale in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt and interest.

Held, (1) that whatever be the nature of the transaction of 1906, it had the effect of extinguishing the previous simple mortgage and that the suit for redemption could not be maintained;

(2) that inasmuch as the burden of proving title, regarding the suit as one based on title, was on the plaintiffs, it was for them to show that the defendant came into possession of the lands as alleged by them and that his possession was not adverse to the plaintiffs.

Per Rulledge, C. J.—It cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that when land is mortgaged without possession and possession is subsequently given to the mortgagee the burden of proving that the transaction in which possession was given was an outright sale lies on the mortgagee. In cases, however, where the possession has been for less than 12 years and where title of the previous owner is admitted, the onus may properly be put on the person who alleges an outright sale. *R. — Subrogation—Mortgagee directed to pay off prior mortgage, right of, to subrogation.

The question of subrogation is really one of intention and has to be gathered with reference to the terms of the various documents concerned though there is always a presumption that a person discharging a prior mortgage intends to keep it alive for his benefit.

Where a person raises money to pay off a prior mortgage and the mortgagee pays as the agent of the mortgagor there can be no question of subrogation.

The mere fact that a mortgagee keeps money in his hands to pay off a prior encumbrance and does not run the risk he would otherwise incur if he pays money to the mortgagor to pay off the prior encumbrance and he does not do so, will not make the mortgagee an agent of the mortgagor. *M. Where no dower is fixed at marriage it may be fixed at a later period and sharai dower has to be fixed only where no dower is fixed either at the time of marriage or subsequently.

A Muhammadan husband, some time after his marriage, transferred immoveable properties worth Rs. 2,000 to his wife under a deed which recited that the transfer was for a consideration of Rs. 2,000 due to his wife towards her claim of dower of Rs. 25,000. It was found that the alleged claim of dower of Rs. 25,000 was fictitious and it was contended, on the basis of this finding that the transfer was for an inadequate consideration as the wife would only be entitled to sharai dower:

Held, (1) that the husband must, under the circumstances, be held to have undertaken to pay Rs. 2,000 at least in discharge of his obligation for the dower-debt, that, there was, therefore, no case for fixing a sharai dower, and that the transfer could not consequently be said to have been made for an inadequate consideration;

(2) that the transfer could not be held to be invalid merely because the other creditors of the transferor were defeated thereby. O. GHANI AHAMAD KHAN v. MEHDI BEGAM, Luck. Cas. 645; A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 617 335.

In a suit brought after demand made on a promissory note payable on demand which is silent as to interest and specifies no place of payment, interest is recoverable under the Negotiable Instruments Act from the maker of the note at six per cent. per annum from the date of the promissory note.

Official Assignee—Sale of properties sold by insolvent—Mere right to sue—Validity of sale—Duty of Official Assignee.

Sales by an Official Assignee of lands in possession of alienees from an insolvent are, in substance if not in form, nothing more than sales of the right to litigate, and, assuming that they do not come within the prohibition in the Transfer of Property Act against the transfer of a mere right to sue—which has not been contended—they are open to the same objections and are strongly to be deprecated.

It forms no part of the Official Assignee's duties as an officer of the Court charged with the realisation of insolvent estates either himself to prefer frivolous claims unsupported by reliable evidence or to transfer them to others and thus promote unnecessary and useless litigation. P C V. Where a decree of a Settlement Court in Oudh has, from the necessity of the case, been unable to decide whether a man is or is not an under-proprietor, where a decree of a Settlement Court has left in doubt the fact whether he is or is not an under-proprietor, or where there is no decree of a Settlement Court deciding the point, then the question, as to whether a man has or has not under-proprietary rights, must be decided upon other evidence. But where the decree of the Settlement Court leaves no doubt as to the fact that certain persons are occupancy tenants and not under-proprietors, it is not open to the Civil Courts to go behind it.

Where a Settlement Court of Oudh has clearly decided that certain persons are only occupancy tenants within the meaning of s. 5 of Oudh Rent Act XIX of 1868, no subsequent statements that such tenants are under-proprietors, whether contained in the mouths of witnesses, in receipts for rent or in entries in the Revenue Registers, can avail to show that they are under-proprietors. O MAHABIR BUX SINGH v. ther partners—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230—Signing plaints, and other documents as managing proprietor, whether proof of partnership.

The co-parceners of a joint Hindu family are not necessarily partners in a firm of which one of the co-parceners is interested merely because they are co-parceners. They cannot be held to be partners unless there is evidence to show that they agreed to combine their property, labour or skill and share the profits or losses of the concern.

The fact that a person filed suits in the name of the firm and signed process sheets in its name as managing proprietor does not necessarily lead to the inference that he is a partner inasmuch as even salaried managers in a firm often conduct legal proceedings and sign documents for the firm in their own names signing as managing proprietors. S RAJMAL TRILOKCHAND v. Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 114, 398

—S. 393, whether creates substantive offence—Charge for abetment of offence under s. 393, legality of.

Section 398 of the Penal Code does not create any substantive offence, but only regulates the punishment when certain facts are found to exist in the commission of the substantive offence of robbery.

Section 34 of the Penal Code has no application in the construction of s. 398 of the Code.

Where the accused were charged under two heads, viz., (1) that they committed the offence of robbery and aided and abetted each other in that offence, and (2) that they committed the robbery and at the time of committing such offence were armed with a deadly weapon, and aided and abetted each other in the commission of the said offence:

In order to sustain an indictment for perjury the prosecution must establish, inter alia, two things: (1) that the statement was false, and (2) that it was known or believed to be false or not believed to be true; in other words, the statement must be intentionally false.

A person who has made two contradictory statements cannot be convicted for perjury on that ground unless it is clearly proved that the two statements are wholly irreconcilable.

The mere fact that a person had on a previous occasion made an inconsistent statement does not necessarily prove that the previous statement was true and that the latter statement is false, and does not, therefore, afford a basis in itself for a conviction of perjury in respect of the latter statement.

A deposition which is not read over to the witness in accordance with the requirements of the law under which it was taken cannot be used against him on a charge of perjury.

Where a Court is composed of more than one Judge the deposition of a witness need not necessarily be signed by all the Judges of the Court before whom the witness is examined and the fact that it is signed by only one of them alone does not vitiate the deposition. The object of requiring the Presiding Officer of the Court to sign the deposition of the witness examined by him is to ensure the accuracy of the record and it cannot reasonably be urged that that object can be achieved only if all the Judges composing the Court sign the record. L TAJ MAHMUD v. Where a secured creditor who applies for adjudication of his debtor as an insolvent gives an estimate of the value of his security, the Court will not enquire into its correctness if it is a genuine estimate.

A Court should not allow a creditor who has applied to adjudicate his debtor as an insolvent, to withdraw his application where such withdrawal would result in a fraudulent preference of the petitioning creditor to the detriment of the other creditors. *R. A Court is not bound to accept a composition proposed by an insolvent and accepted by a majority in number and three-fourths in value of creditors who have proved their claim, simply because none of the creditors opposes its approval by the Court. If it is deficient in either of those qualities, it fails.

s. 56—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 54—Singapore Bankruptcy Ordinance, s. 51.
(1)—Fraudulent preference—“With a view to prefer”—Question of fact—Dominant motive of debtor—Onus of proof—Transfer to avert criminal prosecution for breach of trust.

The question whether a transfer by a debtor is to be deemed fraudulent and void as against the Official Assignee in the bankruptcy depends on the answer to be given to the question, was the transfer made ‘with a view of giving a preference over the other creditors’?

The question to be determined is one of fact, namely, was the dominant motive actuating the debtor in making the transfer a desire to prefer the particular creditor or was it of a different character? As the solution of this question involves an enquiry into the state of a man's mind, and as it must very seldom be the case that there is direct evidence on the point, the decision generally depends on the inference properly to be drawn from the circumstances attending the transfer as established by the evidence.

Where the proper inference to draw from the facts is that the dominant motive actuating the debtor was that, in making the transfer to his creditor, he (the debtor) was only doing what he felt himself bound or compelled to do, and where it must have appeared to him that the alternative to handing over, was a prosecution for criminal breach of trust, the case is not one of fraudulent preference within the Statute.

When the Official Assignee in the bankruptcy seeks to establish that a transfer by the debtor is void as a fraudulent preference, the onus of proof is on the assignee to show that the case is within the Statute.

When all the circumstances have been ascertained so far as the parties have thought fit to ascertain them, discussion on the question of onus becomes immaterial and the decision must be come to on the whole of the circumstances so ascertained, and the question of onus only becomes important if the circumstances are so ambiguous that a satisfactory conclusion is impossible without resort to it. *P C Sims Darby & Co. v. s. 50—Revocation of Probate, grounds for—Citation on minor—Procedure—Inference from non-registration of Will—Construction of Indian Statutes founded on English Law—Probate in ‘common form’ and ‘solemn form’—Onus of proof of genuineness of Will.

Where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature, the proper course is to examine the language of that Statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law—or of the English Law upon which it may be founded.

The Succession Act of 1865 and the Probate and Administration Act of 1881 (now consolidated by the Succession Act of 1925), while to a large extent embodying the rules of the English Law, yet depart in many particulars from those rules; and in the progress of the development of the law and practice in testamentary cases, the ecclesiastical origin of this jurisdiction of the Courts in England has been completely discarded; and the Indian Legislature has gradually evolved an independent system of its own, largely suggested, no doubt, by English Law but also differing much from that law, and purporting to be a self-contained system.

In interpreting, therefore, the statutory provisions of the Indian Legislature relating to testamentary cases, the Courts should proceed to examine the language of the Indian Statute uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the English Law upon which it may be founded.

The introduction into Indian practice of the difference in English Law between the grant of Probate in ‘common form’ and in ‘solemn form’, is to be deprecated.

Upon an application for Probate of a Will, the citation issued must be properly and effectively served, that is to say, so served as would give to the person whose interests are, or may be, adversely affected an opportunity either to oppose the grant of Probate or to require the Will to be proved in his presence.

Where a Will of which Probate is sought affects the interest of a minor, the prudent course for the proponent is to take steps to have the Will proved per testes (i.e., in solemn form) in the presence of an independent guardian ad litem for the minor.

Although registration of Wills is not compulsory, non-registration may, when coupled with other suspicious circumstances, throw considerable doubt upon the genuineness of the document.

Probate of a Will having been granted to the defendant, the plaintiff instituted proceedings under s. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, (now re-enacted as s. 263 of the Succession Act, 1925) for revocation of the Probate on two grounds, viz., (1) that citations were not served on her before the grant of Probate, and (2) that the Will was a forgery.

Probate and Administration Act—contd.

The issues raised in the case were: (1) Was no citation served upon the plaintiff? (2) Is the Will propounded by the defendant, genuine or otherwise? :

Held, (1) that if these issues were tried separately and the plaintiff succeeded on the first issue, that, in itself, would be sufficient for revoking the Probate; but it would still be open to the defendant to prove the Will and, if he succeeded, the Probate would stand. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff failed on the first issue, that would not preclude him from proceeding to prove his second ground, viz., that the Will was forged, and the Probate would stand or fall, according to the result;

(2) that the fact that these two issues were not tried separately, and evidence was given by each party in support of their respective cases on both issues together did not, under the circumstances, prejudice either party;

(3) that in view of the finding of their Lordships for the plaintiff on the first issue, the onus of proof on the second issue as to whether the Will was forged or genuine, was upon the defendant;

(4) that the defendant had failed to discharge that onus.

[Independently of any question of onus, their Lordships were of opinion; on the facts of this case, that the Will was a fabricated document.] P C RAMANANDI KUR v. KALAWATI KUR, A. I. R. 1928 P. A sale by a Receiver is not a 'proceeding under the Act' within the meaning of s. 5 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

It is settled law that a Court has no jurisdiction to set aside a sale held or made by a Receiver which is not in excess of his authority in the absence of proof of fraud or collusion or material illegality or irregularity in conducting the sale or misconduct on his part causing injury to the estate. R MAUNG THA DUN v. Where the period within which an insolvent is to apply for discharge has been extended under s. 27 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the words "period specified by the Court" in s. 43 of the Act, mean not the period specified by the Court in the first instance, but the period as extended by the Court under s. 27 (2). L. An order of adjudication in insolvency is not ipso facto annulled by the expiry of the period fixed: for applying for discharge, but has to be determined by an order of annulment, and until the adjudication is so annulled, the Court has seisin of the case and has power to extend the time for making an application for discharge under s. 27 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act regardless of the expiry of the period originally fixed.

Section 27 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is imperative and a Court should, on making an order of adjudication, specify the time within which the debtor should make an application for discharge.

There is no provision of law for issuing a fresh notice upon an insolvent who has failed to apply for discharge within the prescribed period, to show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled.

An order annulling an adjudication on account of the failure of the debtor to apply for discharge within the time fixed by the Court falls within the purview of s. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and cannot, therefore, be appealed from except with the leave of the Court.

The admission of an appeal from such an order by a Division Bench of the High Court may, under proper circumstances, amount virtually to the granting of leave to appeal.

It is open to the Appellate Court to grant such leave even after hearing the case.

An application was presented on behalf of a firm for being adjudicated insolvent. The names of the partners of the firm were disclosed in the application and the Court passed an order that the applicant be adjudicated insolvent. One of the partners was adjudicated an insolvent some years later in another insolvency, and a question arose in respect of an application under s. 72, Provincial Insolvency Act, whether he was an undischarged insolvent with reference to the first insolvency:

Held, that the applicant in the first insolvency was the firm and not the individual partner who filed the application and the order of adjudication was an order against the firm and against each and every partner in that firm.

In considering an application under s. 72, Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court has to consider (a) if the opponent is an undischarged insolvent, (b) if he obtained credit to the extent of Rs. 50 or upwards, and (c) if he in fact informed the person from whom he obtained credit that he was an undischarged insolvent.

The expression "obtaining credit" would include within its ambit the securing of goods on trust that they will be sold and sale-proceeds handed over.

[Different meanings of the expression "credit" considered.]

For the purpose of giving sanction for prosecution under s. 72, Provincial Insolvency Act, against an individual partner of a firm, it is immaterial that credit was obtained by him as a partner of the firm. S. In the matter of UTMA-MALLICK VISHENDAS, A. I. R. 1928 Sind 114 442 —Destruction of goods by fire.

Under s. 72 of the Railways Act, 1890, an agreement (popularly known as a "Risk Note") limiting the liability of a Railway Company as bailee of goods delivered to it for carriage by Railway, is required to be "in writing signed by or on behalf of the person sending or delivering to the Railway Administration the goods." The appellant, who carried on business at Amalner in the name of Tamboli Brothers, delivered certain goods at the Amalner Station of the respondent company for transport to the appellant's business premises at Kurla. The Risk Note in respect of these goods bore the signature of Tamboli Brothers. It appeared, however, that the signature of Tamboli Brothers affixed to the Risk Note was in the handwriting, not of the appellant himself, but of his nephew, Jamsetji (who was admittedly the appellant's duly authorized agent in the matter), and it was contended on behalf of the appellant that a signature in the name of the firm was ineffective unless it appeared on the face of the document that the signature was affixed either by the sender of the goods himself or by the hand of an agent whose agency was disclosed.

Held, (overruling this objection), that as it was plain on the evidence that the nephew, Jamsetji, had full authority to sign the name of the firm, it was unnecessary that he should purport to sign it as agent and that the signature in question was, therefore, a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the Statute.

A form of Risk Note (Form H) approved by the Governor-General in Council under s. 72, sub-s. (2), (b) of the Railways Act, 1890, contained at the end of it space for the attestation of the execution of the document by two witnesses:

Held, that although attestation by two witnesses was contemplated in the form as approved, such attestation was not an essential part of the form and was not a condition precedent to the validity of the Risk Note, inasmuch as the section does not provide that the agreement (i.e., the Risk Note) shall be attested, and while it requires that the form shall be approved by the Governor-General in Council, it does not entrust that functionary with the duty of providing for the attestation of the document.

A Risk Note, in the prescribed form (Form H) and duly signed, protects the Railway Company from liability as soon as the goods are delivered to it for carriage and accepted by the Company. In other words, the Risk Note attaches to the goods immediately on such delivery and acceptance, and not merely from the time when the goods are actually despatched by the Company to their destination. Their Lordships rejected as untenable the contention that "until the goods had been loaded on waggons for transport, or at all events until the Railway Company had given a receipt for the goods specifying that they were to be carried at the reduced rate, the Risk Note had no application to them, and the Railway Company were mere ordinary bailees of the goods."

Where under the express terms of a Risk Note (in Form H), the Railway Company was exonerated from liability for loss, etc., and to goods except where the loss was due to its wilful neglect, and there was (in the present case) ample evidence of negligence on the part of the Company, it was held that the Company could not be made liable merely on this account, in the absence of evidence or finding of 'wilful neglect.' The latter expression means that the act is done deliberately and intentionally and not by accident or inadvertence, but so that the mind of the person who does the act goes with it.

Goods delivered to the respondent Company at Amalner for being carried to Bombay were, while lying on the station platform at Amalner awaiting transport, destroyed by fire. It was found that the respondent Company's servants had been guilty of negligence:

Held, that the Company was protected from liability by reason of the Risk Note (Form H), and as 'wilful neglect' was negatived, it was unnecessary for their Lordships to consider the effect of the final proviso to the Risk Note which declared (inter alia) that "the term 'wilful neglect' shall not be held to include fire." P C ARDESHIR BHICAJI, TAMBOLI v. Non-delivery does not constitute loss within the meaning of s. 77 of the Railways Act and when non-delivery without more is pleaded no notice under s. 77 is required though it may turn out that the suit will fail for want of notice if it be established by the Railway Company that it is in fact a case of loss. If the Railway Company plead want of notice they must show that this case of non-delivery was a case of loss. PAT G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. GOPI RAM-GOURI SHANKAR, 9 P. L. T. 163; 7 Pat. 192; A. I. Right of privacy—Custom in N.-W. P.—Infringement—Mandatory injunction—Equitable considerations—Courts, whether bound to order demolition of constructions where adequate remedy can otherwise be provided—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 55—End and object of law.

A customary right of privacy within certain limitations exists in the North-Western Provinces, and a material interference with such a right is an actionable wrong and affords a good cause of action to the person or persons affected thereby.

In view of the social conditions of this country which prescribe seclusion for females belonging to certain respectable classes of the Hindu and Muhammadan communities in answer to communal sentiment and as the practical result of the custom which has descended from olden times, the right of privacy has taken too deep a root to be dislodged by any a priori reasoning.

Mandatory injunction is essentially an equitable relief and the form in which the injunction is to be granted must necessarily vary with the posture of each particular case. This form of relief being discretionary must necessarily be flexible.

Where the infringement of the right of privacy complained of by the plaintiff can be adequately remedied by any means short of a total demolition of the constructions complained of, Indian Courts, in the exercise of their powers of a Court of Equity are not bound to direct a complete demolition of the building.

The end and objective of law is not vindictiveness but justice. A FAZAL HAQ v. FAZAL HAQ, 26 A. L. J. 49; A. I. R. 1928 All. 201 584

Specific performance—Agreement to sell by father—Possession given—Person in possession, whether can be ejected by son—Part performance, doctrine of.

A contract for sale of immoveable property made by a Hindu father can be specifically enforced against his sons if the father dies intestate and if the prospective vendee has obtained possession in pursuance of this agreement he can successfully resist a suit for ejectment by the sons.

The doctrine of part performance is applicable to such cases and the heir of the person who has benefited by the part performance of the contract will be estopped from taking advantage of the breach thereof.

Under Art. 113 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act 'limitation' for a suit for specific performance begins to run only from the date when the person, in whose favour the agreement is made learns that performance of the contract is refused. N SHEIKH AHMAD v. AMIRKHAN, A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 211 905

Per Ashworth, J.—Where a plaintiff is seeking to take advantage of s. 27 of the Specific Relief Act, it is for him to show that he is entitled under every word of that section to the relief claimed.

Per Sulaiman, J.—In a suit to enforce specific performance against a transferee for value, the burden of proving want of notice in the first instance lies on the defendant transferee. The defect of jurisdiction on territorial or pecuniary ground will not render proceedings in a case void, if objection is not taken at the earliest opportunity and there has been no consequent failure of justice.

A suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts was valued at Rs. 1,100 and filed in the Court of a Sub-Judge, Second Class. No objection was taken by the defendant to this figure with the result that the parties proceeded to trial and ultimately a preliminary decree was passed. No objection as to valuation or jurisdiction was taken in appeal from the preliminary decree which was dismissed. In the meantime the trial Court appointed a Commissioner for examining the accounts who after examining the accounts submitted a report wherein he arrived at a sum of Rs. 14,369-15-9 which was to be distributed as nett profits between the partners. The case was then transferred to Court of competent jurisdiction which passed the decree. On appeal it was objected that the appointment of the Commissioner was without jurisdiction and consequently the whole of the proceedings including the Commissioner's report should have been discarded:

Held, that inasmuch as no objection was taken to the defect of jurisdiction at an early stage and as it was not suggested that the disposal of the case on merits had been prejudicially affected by wrong valuation, the case was covered by s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act. L BUDHA MAL v. Where possession of a certain property becomes the possession of the Court, a person at whose instance the rightful owner may have been deprived of his possession in respect of the property no longer remains liable for any damages that may be caused to it.

Torts—concl'd.

But where an attachment is made by the Police in the exercise of those powers which the Police have for the prevention of a breach of the peace, either with or without reference to a Magistrate, the latter acting not in his judicial capacity, the attachment cannot be said to have been made under an order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction and the person in whose custody the property is kept cannot be said to be in possession on behalf of the Court.

The defendant applied for proceedings being taken against the plaintiff under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code and while the said proceedings were either pending or in contemplation the paddy standing on the land in dispute was attached by the Police and kept in the custody of a third person. There was nothing to show that the attachment was made under s. 146, Criminal Procedure Code. The plaintiff to whom the property was finally restored sued the defendant for damages for injury caused to the crops during the time that it was in the custody of the third person:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the damages claimed from the defendant. C MADHAB CHANDRA DUTTA v. JAINO RAM, A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 231 479

Per Ashworth, J.—A transfer by a Hindu father and manager of a joint family is a valid transfer until it is avoided by the son, and a transferee who has made improvements on the property before the transfer is avoided must be held to have believed himself in good faith to be the absolute owner thereof within the meaning of s. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act even if he has failed to satisfy himself at the time of the sale that it was necessary.

Per Mukerji, J.—It is always a question of fact whether a transferee believes or not that he is absolutely entitled to a property. It is not possible to hold in every case of a transfer by a qualified

A mere contract of sale of immoveable property does not confer any right to the property on the prospective vendee. His right is only to have a conveyance effected in his favour.

The liability of a person who agrees to purchase a leasehold interest in immoveable property to pay rent and charges in respect thereof ordinarily arises only on the date of the actual sale-deed.

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the possession of the defendant was not that of a trespasser but that of a transferee whose title had only to be perfected by the execution of a proper deed, the defendant was bound to pay the rent and charges on the property while he was in possession thereof;

(2) that under s. 69, Contract Act, plaintiff who paid the amounts was entitled to recover the same from the defendant;

Trustee and cestui que trust—Cestui que trust, right of, to indemnity against trustee.

The right to indemnity may arise in several ways, by contract express or implied, or where the position of the parties is such that either in law or in equity there is an obligation on the one party to indemnify the other, or if there is a state of circumstances to which the law attaches a legal or equitable duty to indemnify or where a right to indemnity is given by Statute.

A right to indemnity exists on the part of a trustee against his cestui que trust and likewise on the part of the cestui que trust, against his trustee. M. KRISHNASWAMI AYYAR v. THATHA RAGHAVIAH CHETTY, 53 M. L. J. 679; 26 L. W. 687; 39 M. L. T. 472; A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 43 423

U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), ss. 37 (a), 55—Suit on hundi—Plea that defendant was a ward, —Burden of proof—Application for adjournment granting of.

In a suit instituted on the basis of a hundi the defendant pleaded that under s. 37 (a) of the U. P. Court of Wards Act of 1912 he was not competent to enter into the contract embodied in the hundi and that under s. 55 of the said Act he could not personally be sued. On the date fixed for hearing evidence, the defendant's Counsel asked for a short adjournment of a few hours in order that the Head Clerk of the Court of Wards could be produced with his record. This was refused by the Court, and the suit was decreed on the ground that the defendant had summoned no witnesses for the day and that there was nothing on the record to show that he was a ward on the date of the execution of the hundi or on the date of the institution of the suit.

Held, that the course adopted by the trial Court was too severe and had caused hardship to the defendant.

s. 111—Partition proceeding—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Objection that land is jagir and not sir—No question of proprietary title—Refusal of Revenue Court to decide objection—Civil suit, maintainability of.

Under the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in matters relating to partition is expressly ousted, except in so far as is provided by the provisions of s. 111 of the Act and the conditions and qualifications annexed to the grant of jurisdiction must be strictly complied with.

An objection to partition which merely states that the land in question is not sir but jagir does not raise any question of proprietary or under-proprietary title and the Civil Court has consequently no jurisdiction to determine the matter even though the Revenue Court has erroneously left the question undetermined and referred the parties to the Civil Court. O RAM SINGH v. U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 211, 307—Lease by Municipality—Prosecution of lessee for disobedience of notice under s. 211, before determining tenancy, legality of—Mere resolution of Municipality, effect of—Duty of Municipality to give notice terminating lease, necessity of.

A Municipal Board leased certain plots on a road-side. Subsequently, the Board passed a resolution that the roadside should not be leased and that the lessees then in possession must be told to quit. The Executive Officer of the Board promptly issued a notice to the lessees under s. 211 of the U. P. Municipalities Act treating them as trespassers encroaching on a public road, and the applicant, one of the lessees, was prosecuted for disobedience of the order.

Held, that the notice under s. 211 was illegal inasmuch as the applicant was at the time of the notice a lessee whose lease had not been validly determined, and not a trespasser, and that the applicant could not be prosecuted for disobedience of such notice. A AMINULLAH v. Where the rate of interest is high a Court can give relief under s. 3 of the Usurious Loans Act without considering whether the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower or not. The rate of interest may, by itself, be sufficient evidence that a transaction is substantially unfair. G MOHAR ALI v. ABDUL KARIM SARKAR 742

Vendor and purchaser—Suit by purchaser against trespasser—Trespasser, whether entitled to question bona fides of sale or adequacy of consideration—'Paper transaction', meaning of—Transaction found to be sham—Order for refund of price, whether proper.

A sued B and C for recovery of possession of certain properties alleging that he had purchased the properties from C and prayed that if C was found to have had no interest at the time of the purchase the price paid might be decreed to him. B pleaded that he had purchased the same properties from C's predecessors-in-title long before the alleged sale to A. C contended that he had validly transferred the properties to A. The lower Appellate Court found that the sale set up by B was untrue, and that the sale set up by A was a mere 'paper transaction' created by C to enable A to bring the suit, and, while dismissing A's suit for possession, directed that the amount admitted by C to have been received from A should be refunded to A. In second appeal:

Held, (1) that B, being a trespasser, was not entitled to challenge the validity of the sale to A on the ground that it was a mere 'paper transaction' or was for inadequate consideration;

(2) that C having admitted that he had sold the properties and received the price therefor and A having admitted that he had purchased the properties and paid the consideration therefor, there was no principle of law under which C could be compelled to return the purchase-money to A. C HARA CHANDRA MANDAL v. Wajib-ul-arz—Interpretation—Manure on gowthan right of proprietary body.

The clause in the wajib-ul-arz that any one may collect manure from waste land does not apply to a gowthan, a place where cattle are collected in the morning before they are taken to graze on the waste land or elsewhere. The manure on the gowthan belongs to the entire proprietary body and a managing co-sharer who collects it cannot refuse to account for the profits received therefrom. N DOMAJI v. TULSIRAM, A. I. Will—Construction—Absolute estate in favour of daughters, with provision for devolution of property not disposed of by them—Nature of estate conferred—Santanam, 'If there is issue,' meanings of.

A Will under which a Hindu devised his properties to his two daughters and to his sister's sons provided as follows:

"My daughters, ... and my sister's sons, ... shall each enjoy, ... his or her respective portions of the property devised to them hereditarily and at their pleasure, with right of alienation by gift, sale or otherwise. If out of the said two daughters, to either there is no issue, her property shall after her death pass to the other to whom there is issue. If to neither of them there is issue, then the property remaining at the time of the death of the said two shall pass to the nephews of the testator".

Held, (1) that the Will conferred an absolute estate on the daughters with a provision for the devolution of whatever property may be left at their death, and that such an estate was not unknown to Hindu Law; (2) that the expression "there is issue" meant issue living at the time of the daughter's death and not merely that the daughter should have had a child born to her;

(3) that the reference to the word 'issue' being to the issue of a female, it did not include an adopted son.

The word 'santanam' besides meaning child has a certain implication of succession or heirship. M. POCHIRAJU KANNAMMA v. MANNAYA MACHAMMAL, (1927) M. W. N. 909; 27 L. W. 156; A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 297 497

Construction—Provision for erecting choultry and carrying on worship—Balance of income to be utilised for family purposes—Properties, whether absolutely dedicated to trust or merely burdened with trust—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 4—Properties burdened with trust, whether vest in Official Receiver.

A Hindu, by his Will, enjoined his son to build a choultry to instal the Kula Deivam in it for the purpose of family worship, and to conduct a charity, meeting the expenses from the income of the properties. The patta for the properties was directed to be transferred in the name of the deity worshipped in the choultry. There was a further provision to the effect that the testator's son and his heirs "from generation to generation according to the rule of primogeniture should, without alienating the properties in any manner, enjoy them paying sircar kist therefor and conduct the charity and utilise the balance of the income for family purposes." The last sentence of the Will contained a provision that the testator's son was to inherit all his other properties. It did not appear there were any other properties given to the son, but it was found that the expenditure for the charities even on a lavish scale could not consume any considerable portion of the income and a very large part of it would be left intact for the enjoyment of the family:

Held, on a proper construction of the Will,

(1) that the dominating purpose and intention of the testator in executing the Will was to provide for the members of his family, the maintenance and conduct of the charity having only a subsidiary importance;

(2) that the properties covered by the Will were not properties absolutely dedicated to a trust but were only properties burdened with a trust;

(3) that on the adjudication of the son as insolvent, the properties vested in the Official Receiver for the benefit of the creditors. M. RAMAPPA NAIDU v. LAKSHMANAN CHETTIAR, 27 L. W. 88; (1926) M. W. N. 88; A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 190; 54 M. L. J. 272 786

Probate—Grant of Probate, effect of—Caveat—Sufficient interest to support caveat, what amounts to—Testator dealing with objector's property, whether sufficient.

The function of a Court of Probate is to decide whether the Will propounded is the last Will of the testator and whether the right to represent the estate may be conferred upon an applicant for Probate. The Court of Probate does not profess to decide the disputed title to every item of property mentioned in the Will or the disposing power of the testator or the existence of any disposable property.

In dealing with the question whether a caveator has the necessary interest the test is, does the grant displace any right to which the caveator would otherwise be entitled? If so, he has such an interest, if not, he has not.

On an application for grant of Probate of a Will, a person who alleges that the testator has by the Will purported to dispose of such person's property as if it belonged to the testator himself does not possess sufficient interest to support a caveat and oppose the grant of Probate. *M.
